Dr. David Owen (Plymouth, Devonport): I, like other hon. Members, have listened for a sign of any new policy or hope. Will the Secretary of State at least say that, if the independent review body on nurses' everyone hopes, a substantial recomme above that allowed for in the Gov expenditure White Paper, that settlemen by the Government, as happened in el reassurance is genuinely needed.

Mr. Moore: It is the height of cheel Member who supported a Government record on nurses' pay to make such Government's record on the nurses, the pay review body and the way in which its implemented is second to none.

Mr. Neil Kinnock (Islwyn): Will the now answer the question posed by the ri for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owe addressed before? Will the Government pay increase for the nurses? If they do, time.

Mr. Moore: First, that is factually Government fully funded—[Interruptio Government's record on the nurses, Gentleman knows to his discomfort, is o MEMBERS: "Answer the question."] I an despite the sedentary interruptions.

If the right hon. Gentleman ever sto the Dispatch Box—I hope that that wi am sure that he would not submit to the not only recommendations but the assur that full funding would automatically o not be a recipe for serious debate about serious attempts to achieve proper incen within the service. It would be foolish t

Mr. Kinnock: The word that the right is groping for is "no".

Mr. Moore: No, I am groping for the Government's responsibility and rec

Mr. Barron rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Gen keep rising. The Minister has already Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Moore: All the measures that I sensible and deserve the support of eve about the nation's health. I am glad that debate today and I welcome the wider deb place in the country on the future of the that the whole nation should be involve discussion about health care. What is w discussion degenerates into destructive Health Service.

The National Health Service enters i a proud record. It is wilfully blind not splendid achievements—in particular, t eight years. Worse than that, attacks damage the morale of workers in it an confidence of the public. However, the NH 40th year facing unprecedented demand is so crucial that our debates are inform Fevered attacks will not help the Nationa We stand firmly — I think the hon Livingston wanted me to say this, and I s to do so—as we always have, behind the NHS, which is that adequate health available to everyone no matter what his means. At the same time, the dramatic changes in demography, technology and expectations that I have outlined today mean that we must constantly reconsider how that principle can best be implemented.

The Government have increased the resources that are available to the National Health Service every single year since they came to office. Those increases will continue, but, in the light of the accelerating and unending demand for health care, we must consider even more carefully how resources can best be used and how, like other western countries, we can encourage a greater private sector contribution to enhance and add to the increasing resources that the Government have already committed.

Today, thanks to the Government's excellent record, health care in this country is being provided for more people by more skilled staff in better facilities than at any time in our history. We shall build on these achievements in meeting the challenges of tomorrow. It is in that spirit that I look forward to the contributions of hon. Members to the debate, and in that spirit that I urge the House to reject the Opposition motion.

5.1 pm

Mr. Stanley Orme (Salford, East): The Secretary of State has not answered the central question why the National Health Service is in the biggest crisis since its creation in 1948. Why are hospital beds and wards closing? Why are people having to wait longer for treatment? Why is there a shortage of nurses now?

The Secretary of State referred to the period of the Labour Government. In Salford, part of which I have represented for the past 23 years, we have never known such a crisis. Under the Labour Government we were building a hospital; under this Government we are closing hospitals. Why has the whole country suddenly reached this crisis? It is to be found not only in the inner cities, but everywhere. The basic problem is that since 1981 health authorities have had to face the cuts that the Government have imposed. If there was any fat to cut out before, there is none now, so the authorities are up against it.

Let me discuss my inner-city area. We heard much from the Government after the election. We heard from the Prime Minister that priority was going to be given to inner-city areas. Some of my hon. Friends, like myself, represent inner-city areas. Salford has a large elderly population suffering from chronic medical problems. As a result, my health authority will have to cut £2 million a year right into the 1990s. If the Government make that happen, it will mean that four wards will have to close in one hospital; in another, a children's hospital, two will have to close. Salford royal hospital, a nationally known hospital with a great reputation in the medical world, is now threatened with closure.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman (Lancaster): Does the right hon. Gentleman know that his authority has the second highest administrative costs in the country? Will it now save something in administration rather than close wards?

Mr. Orme: Our costs are high because demand is high in our city. We are very efficient, and I want to quote to the hon. Lady what professor Galasko, operating at the Hope hospital in Salford, has to say:

"The service we give is not ideal, but it is of such a standard that complex cases continue to be referred to our Department in ever increasing numbers. For example, the patients on my own Waiting List have increased April 1986 to 291 now. The waiting time for surg increased. The waiting time for adults on my Wai increased from 51 weeks in April 1986 to 107 n the waiting time for children with complex problems has increased from 82 weeks in April weeks now."

That is the position in my health authority. Th unit, a special unit for young disabled people, are proud, is threatened with closure. Wha Secretary of State have to say about that? Wh have to say to the young people I have seen whom it is a lifeline? They are seriously disa people in their teens and early twenties and thi chance have they when the unit is threatened w

Only last week, a nurse from the Royal children's hospital made a statement. Siste Rickard said:

"No one else will say this. I have been waiting it to be said—now I am going to say it.

A lot of these children are desperately ill. I a ill kids are going to die because there is nowhere be seen."

That is what is happening in a hospital in the c of my hon. Friend the Member for Eccles (M

Throughout the country, from one a authority to another, the story is the Government must answer these charges. But get from the Secretary of State today? He is promises of new resources, nothing concrete fo and no method of dealing with the problem. about 1978 and 1979, but I have never known profession so united and agitated as it is no local medical committees, surgeons, orthopaedi nurses and nursing ancillaries are all saying the They are talking not about what might happen what is happening now. Wards are closing cannot obtain services. From the consultants unionists, the message is the same.

Prestwich hospital is under threat, and the fighting that. What proposal has been put assist with that? Bio-Plan Holdings Ltd. has co to say that it will put some tin-pot private devel a National Health Service property. It says t treat National Health Service patients at cost cent.

There is no answer to the problem of th Health Service. The National Health Service so that people could use it at a time of need a it throughout their working lives. That is philosophy. If we move away from that, we sha the American road of different standards bet who can afford to pay and those who cannot have National Health Service hospitals, but have to wait 12 months, 18 months, or two y they get any service at all.

Mr. Terry Lewis (Worsley): My right hon. Fr about possible ward closures at Pendlebury hospital. Is he aware that on the other si constituency the Astley hospital is under threat This morning, I learnt that two ambulance s threatened with closure. The area has already the number of ambulances, but now there is t closure not only of emergency services, but of stations.

Mr. Orme: It is all cumulative. Wards are being closed. Waiting lists are increasing and hospitals are under threat. I am talking not about Britain, but about Salford. Many of my hon. Friends can give similar examples; and if Conservative Members had had the honesty to do so, they, too, could give similar examples.

The National Health Service needs to be rescued. The money is there. As my hon. Friend the Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) said, money can be injected. Instead of money coming from the contingency fund on a one-off basis, which might suit the right hon. Member for Chingford (Mr. Tebbit), Opposition Members want the funding which is available now to be used for tax cuts to be given instead to the National Health Service in order to give it a new lease of life. We could then consider the matters about which the Secretary of State was speaking.

First and foremost, we must save the National Health Service. That is the battle in which we are engaged. For the first time in my political life, all the forces in the National Health Service are united in that battle. That is the message that we give to the House and to the Secretary of State. The British people want action, and they will demand it.

5.12 pm

Mr. Norman Tebbit (Chingford): I hope to be brief to allow other hon. Members to speak. First, I should declare an interest in that at least one of the companies in which I am involved may in future act as a contractor to the National Health Service. I am glad about that, as I believe that it will benefit the company and the Health Service.

The speeches of the right hon. Member for Salford, East (Mr. Orme) and of the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) were interesting in that they were extremely long on complaints but short on cures. The hon. Member for Livingston was short on answers. He certainly could not answer the crisp and pointed question put to him by my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth).

Implicit throughout the debate has been the acknowledgment that, because of the success of the Government's policies which had always been opposed by Opposition Members, the Chancellor can make available, they say, extra resources which no Labour Government could have provided. It was not a lack of North sea oil that forced Chancellor Healey to go to the IMF with his troubled economy and to slash the Health Service, cut nurses' wages in real terms, close hospitals and lead us into the winter of discontent when almost every hospital in the country was closed.

I welcome the opportunity for a debate — [Interruption.] I see that the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) is debating in his usual style with loud remarks made from a sedentary position.

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton) rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): Order. I do not believe that the right hon. Gentleman is giving way. Is that the case?

Mr. Tebbit: That is quite correct.

Mr. Heffer rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order The right hon. Gentleman is not giving way.

Mr. Heffer: The right hon. Gentleman referred to me.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the right hon. Gentleman giving way?

Mr. Tebbit: No. [Interruption.] All those who know the hon. Member will know the truth about that.

I should like to express my great thanks to Mr. Maxwell and to the Daily Mirror for all that they have done to precipitate the debate. But for the Daily Mirror and others, we might have drifted on without having a proper debate on these issues. Now, if we are to have a debate, let us have an open debate and try to reach some conclusions.

Last Friday, I posed some questions about the National Health Service, and I should like to enlarge a little on those questions. Some of them were inherent in the question put by my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire, which the hon. Member for Livingston could not answer. The House should turn its mind to the question whether there should be any limit on National Health Service expenditure. The hon. Member for Livingston looks puzzled, but he must understand the question—I hope that he understands the question.

Should expenditure be entirely demand-led? We must think of the implications of allowing the Health Service the privilege of demand-led expenditure, which would give the Health Service the right either to unlimited taxation or to require unlimited cuts in other expenditure programmes. [Interruption.] My hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Mr. Beaumont-Dark) says that nobody has asked for that. But it was implied in the speech of the hon. Member for Livingston that the Opposition would deliver it.

I should like to know whether the Opposition favour an absolute limit on Health Service expenditure, or whether they favour a demand-led expenditure. When we have an answer to that question, it would be wise to ask what that limit should be and how it should be expressed. Should we continue to express it as we do now, in public expenditure White Paper money terms, after the Star Chamber and all the trials which Ministers have to go through, or should we express it as a percentage of GDP?

My right hon. Friend rightly took pride in the fact that we have increased the share of GDP going into the National Health Service. Should we set a target or a limit in those terms? That would be a buoyant limit of revenue — unless we had a Labour Government, when GDP would fall and there would be the usual cuts. Should it be a slice of revenue or a percentage of income tax, the product of 15p off the standard rate of income tax which it currently requires, or the product of a rate of VAT, recollecting that the Health Service costs just about all the revenue at present achieved from VAT? Those questions are worth asking and worth answering.

Then we should go on to ask how that cash should be raised.

Mr. Tony Lloyd (Stretford): I follow the drift of the right hon. Gentleman's questions, which will strike a chord with Conservative Members. If he is seeking a more rational way to distribute health care, he would not support the local authority in central Manchester which is talking about voluntary or compulsory redundancies. That is irrational.

Mr. Tebbit: It is clear that I was unwise to give way to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd), who wanted to make a complaint instead of contributing to the debate.

We should then ask how that cash should be raised. Should it continue to be raised almost exclusively from the general burden of taxation out of the Consolidated Fund, or should we look for other methods of raising money? Should we look to the example of West Germany where the service is funded by a payroll tax——

Ms. Harriet Harman (Peckham): No.

Mr. Tebbit: The hon. Lady immediately says no, but she has not even thought about it before reacting. The listening party is leaping to conclusions.

Should we give consideration to a payroll tax for health purposes, as in West Germany, where the current payroll tax is 12 per cent. and has been judged to be too high? Efforts are being made to reduce it because the burden is too heavy. Should we go down that path, or should we denominate some part of income tax? The Chancellor would never agree to a hypothecated tax, but a quasi-tax such as a payroll tax or a slice of VAT may be possible. We should be debating those questions, instead of the shroud-waving exercise which has been going on exclusively for the local press of Opposition Members.

We should look at how we provide the service. We cannot doubt all the statistics, but I will come now to some that I do doubt. The increase of almost one third in real terms, which has been put into the Health Service in cash, the 64,000 more nurses, the 13,000 more doctors and dentists—where are they? When my right hon. Friend the Minister referred to resources, Opposition Members posed an important question, which the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) has not really thought about yet: "Then where has it all gone?" That is a very good question.

Are those nurses standing beside beds and are the doctors standing alongside them, or have they gone into a vast administrative black hole? We hear much about the cancellation of health care due to a lack of nurses or medical equipment, but I have never heard of a committee being cancelled because of a lack of photocopiers, paper or clerks to push the paper around. I sometimes wonder who sets the priorities within the great bureaucracy of the National Health Service.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths (Edinburgh, South): The right hon. Gentleman implies that nothing has been done for the past eight or nine years. What have his Government been doing about it?

Mr. Tebbit: The hon. Gentleman asks a fair question. We have had Health Service reorganisations under various Governments, all within the context of the nationalised provision of service, and none of them has been outstandingly unsuccessful, perhaps because of the very nature of the provision. The listening party, in a leaflet distributed over the signature of the Leader of the Opposition, asks that question. The Leader of the Opposition says that we should ask whether the way we provide health care is the best way. I do not know whether that is a genuine question or he has already closed his mind on the issue, but we should have open minds on it. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will join me in having an open mind on it and will consider it on its merits.

I dealt earlier with the point raised by the hon. Member for Livingston about my remarks on nurses who work extra time for extra money. I recognise that many nurses work overtime without being paid, but if they work overtime they ought to be paid. My criticism of the system is that it precludes them from being paid for working overtime in their own hospitals, but provides for them to work overtime in other hospitals. That seems to be administrative nonsense.

As a London Member, I recognise that the differential between the pay of nurses and others, and between the London rate and the rate in areas where the cost of living is much lower, is too narrow. If I recollect rightly, that was part of the burden of the Government's evidence to the pay review body, which unfortunately was not accepted or acted upon by that body. It is no wonder that medical staff, particularly junior nurses in London, look for other sources of pay, because they find it extremely difficult to afford accommodation unless they can increase their pay. My criticism is overwhelmingly of management and the system.

The Health Service is not just people, although people are the most important part of it. Capital—cash, money—is another part of it. I take issue with the reliance that is sometimes put on some statistics, as to which hospital is cheaper or more expensive than another for an operation because, typical of a nationalised system, there is no balance sheet and capital comes free. Nobody accounts for the cost of capital. Once the investment is made, it is written off. Nobody thinks of putting a cost on the money which must be provided so that the comparisons may be not about the efficient way a hospital is managed but about which hospital has had a huge injection of capital and which has not. The nationalised system has inherent defects, which mean that capital is not properly allocated. All too often it goes in not on the basis of need but on the basis of decibels of squeal, and we have no real idea whether the capital is being effectively and efficiently used.

That leads me to the question posed by the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) and by the Leader of the Opposition—although he is not seriously interested in the answer—has hospital nationalisation been a success? We would be unwise to leap to the conclusion that it has. Is the present system likely to use scarce resources of cash or staff effectively? We should not leap to conclusions; there is time for mature consideration and to do a proper job. We must do our figures carefully, taking into account the cost of capital.

The right hon. Member for Salford, East compared the cost of the public and private sectors in his city. Is the public sector expected to remunerate its capital? Of course not, but the private sector is, so we are not comparing like with like. If capital is free, it is likely to be badly used, and if we do not account efficiently for the cost of it, how can the people in the Health Service know whether they are doing well or badly?

I end with two points: the essence of the Health Service, as my right hon. Friend the Minister said, is that treatment should be available regardless of ability to pay. It is not essential to the Health Service that provision should be made exclusively through either the public or private sector, or that the funds to finance it should come exclusively through the tax system, or exclusively or partially through charges for service at the time of provision.

I have supported the huge increases in national health spending under this Government, and I am glad that expenditure will continue to increase, but I say to my right hon. and hon. Friends that I would strongly object to a policy of drip-feeding £100 million by £100 million, or even £1 billion by £1 billion, to those who complain the loudest.

[Mr. Tebbit]

No doubt if my right hon. Friend the Chancellor were to decide that there are to be no tax cuts, no attempt to reduce public sector borrowing, which he should do—preferably he should have a negative PSBR next year—if he spent the whole amount available on the Health Service, it would not be many years before the demand would rise again, with people saying, "We want more." The more money that is drip-fed in response to complaints which are not always—I emphasis not always—quite rational, the worse the service will become, because it is not an efficient allocation and use of resources. We should seize our chance and re-examine the whole funding and provision of the Health Service and should make that searching review a condition of any more funding. The best comment yet was the sedentary question posed from the Opposition Benches: "Where has it all gone then?" That is what we ought to know before we decide to put any more into the same system.

5.29 pm

Mrs. Rosie Barnes (Greenwich): We have heard much in recent weeks, and today in the House and in the country at large, about the crisis in the Health Service. We have heard continually from the Government that there is no crisis. Today has been no different.

There is nothing new and no hope or enlightenment for people on waiting lists. Statistical answers bring little comfort to people who do not know whether their children will live long enough to have vital operations.

I agree with some of the sentiments that have been expressed by Conservative Members. We must reconsider this problem and open a debate on the state of the Health Service, what it will provide and how we shall fund it.

The Government cannot continue to pretend that there is no crisis, when the country is screaming that there is. Short-term and panic-stricken cash injections and mindless repetition of statistics are not the answer. Equally, it is quite wrong to pretend that an infinite demand for health care can be instantly financed out of the public purse.

There is an important issue that we must face as a country. We should be looking for a consensus and we should put party politics behind us. We must acknowledge the changing circumstances in which the National Health Service makes its decisions. We must acknowledge the increase in the number of elderly people and the demands that they will put on the Health Service. We must acknowledge the fact that technical advances, in many respects, are making the Health Service a victim of its own success.

There is no point in developing new technology if ordinary people do not have access to it. We need long-term answers on which we can all agree. There is no greater sector of need for a national consensus than funding of the National Health Service. Yes, we need a debate, but not only on the expenditure involved or the limits of expenditure; society must make decisions on what level of health service will be provided and how it will be paid for.

What criterion of assessment should we use? It is simple: if it is available, I want it for my family. The rest of the community feels the same. There should be a guarantee of treatment, if it is available, within a reasonable period of time. Patients have rights. Desperate recourse to courts by distraught parents is an indictment of our society.

Mr. Tebbit: What the hon. Lady is saying is in slight conflict with what she said earlier. If she is saying that a treatment—that is, if it exists—should be available when people want it and that they should have it regardless, she is saying that there should be a demand-led service with no financial limit. Which side of the question does she come down on?

Mrs. Barnes: I am saying that society must consider this question and come up with the answer. If treatment is available, I would apply the criterion that people expect their family to be treated; if it is available privately, it should be available on the National Health Service. We must look, as a society, at how we shall pay for this service, and we must take that question very seriously.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: The hon. Lady's exact words—she can check them in Hansard—were:

"There should be a guarantee of treatment . . . within a reasonable period of time."

That rather answers the question that my right hon. Friend the Member for Chingford (Mr. Tebbit) asked.

Mrs. Barnes: I believe that there should be a guarantee of treatment within a reasonable time.

What is needed is a consensus and answers that will last for some time to come. That consensus should be based on three elements.

Mr. Keith Raffan (Delyn): Will the hon. Lady give way?

Mrs. Barnes: No, I shall not give way.

First, there should be increased Government spending in line with growth in GDP. Earlier, the Minister spoke of the importance of the economy and its relationship to the nation's health. There is no direct relationship, but a significant link can be made if a specific portion of the national economic cake is allocated to the Health Service.

Secondly, we must find ways in which to encourage people, individually, to spend more on health care without abandoning the principles of the National Health Service—for example, through rededicating premium bonds and through local health lotteries. There is considerable evidence that people are prepared to spend more indirectly if they know that the money that they are giving is going straight to the Health Service and not being absorbed in general income.

Thirdly, we must realise that we can use existing resources even more efficiently by creating an internal market that matches the internal supply and demand of individual health authorities in a much more effective way. Clearly, if people needing treatment would receive it far more quickly in a different health authority there is no reason why they should not be given the right to take advantage of that authority's facilities and their own health authority should have to pay the bill.

I should like to highlight one less-emphasised but equally important crisis in the Health Service—the crisis caused by the implementation, not the principle, of the Resource Allocation Working Party proposals. The problem is the lack of funding caused by the implementation of those proposals in certain parts of the country.

Ms. Joan Walley (Stoke-on-Trent, North): I should like to point out to the House that there is a myth in this country and in the Chamber that other parts of the country are benefiting from RAWP. In my constituency, the North Staffordshire district health authority is not receiving the benefits of the special deprivation programme. It has been suspended by the Government because of their failure to meet the nurses' pay increase in full.

Mrs. Barnes: I shall refer to the shortfall in some areas in that regard—but in some areas only.

I am completely committed to the principle of reallocating resources from richer health authorities to poorer ones. It is of great concern to us all that people's chances of avoiding serious illness or premature death depend far more than in comparable countries on the social class to which they belong or the area in which they live or were born.

I am concerned about the way in which the RAWP formula is being implemented. It does not take adequate account of social deprivation at regional or sub-regional level. By and large, RAWP overlooks what can be substantial pockets of deprivation in large regions such as the south-east, which generally is wealthier and better provided for than other areas. The result is that many inner-city areas, such as Greenwich, which have a high need for health care because of considerable social deprivation, do not receive the resources they need because RAWP, in terms of South East Thames regional health authority, and sub-regional RAWP, in terms of Greenwich, do not take adequate account of social deprivation, poor housing and low income, which undoubtedly contribute substantially to poor health. The assumption was that, in such areas, there would be substantial cuts in provision.

In my area, it was expected that the demand for acute hospital beds would fall, so the health authority made provision for such a reduction. The exact opposite has occurred, and demand for those beds has substantially risen. The assumptions contained in RAWP may have been true across the board, but in significant patches those assumptions have proved false. That has caused significant hardship to health authorities, and especially for patients in those areas.

I want a RAWP formula that accurately reflects the need for health care at regional and sub-regional level. What matters is how many people in a given area suffer from ill-health and therefore require care. Some of the evidence used to assess health care has been inaccurate. There has been a tendency to rely heavily on standard mortality rates. There is also a clear suggestion that, in areas of social deprivation, chronic illness is far more persistent and far more widespread. Such illness may not be fatal, but it needs treatment.

To rely solely on standard mortality rates is not enough. There are measures afoot to try to reconsider the RAWP allocations to take account of social deprivation. It has been suggested that the ACORN technique should be used to take account of such deprivation. However, that technique has aroused considerable anxieties because it was intended as a marketing tool and not as a measure of the need for health care. ACORN also uses information based on the 1981 census and, in the inner-city areas, that census material is considerably out of date and does not reflect the current position.

The practical effects of the loss of income in certain areas as a result of RAWP have been severe. In my area, we have lost three hospitals and are faced with the prospect of losing two more. Indeed, many of the areas affected by RAWP were not designed to cater for the medical needs of the 1980s and 1990s. Such areas have many small cottage hospitals — perhaps one large hospital—but do not have adequate facilities to cater for the needs of the community. The closure of five hospitals will entail substantial expensive changes. Such changes can be ill afforded and, in the light of severe cash shortages, are poorly carried out. The problems connected with RAWP allocation are the clearest illustration of the paucity of the Government's approach in specific areas.

The Secretary of State constantly tell us that the NHS has never had so much money devoted to it and that all is well, but people are feeling the pinch. They are experiencing hospital and ward closures and long waiting lists. They know that it is a very different story. The perception gap between the people and their Government is breathtaking.

District health authorities' problems have been compounded by the Government's refusal to fund nurses' pay awards in full. The Government cannot continue to evade their responsibilities by only partly funding pay awards and expecting health authorities to make savings to achieve these awards. Such authorities are already under considerable financial pressure.

It is clear that there is no room to make further cost savings. Perhaps there was some fat to be trimmed, but now we are down to the bone. Any further pay increases must be funded in full by the Government. It is clear that some RAWP money that had been reallocated and money that was intended to prioritise certain areas of health care is now used as basic revenue. There is little point in the Government encouraging health authorities to prioritise certain areas of health care or to reallocate resources to areas of greater need if the money provided to achieve those aims is used to provide the basic facilities.

I believe that we should have a national debate and a review of what we expect from our Health Service and how we are to fund it. We also need to consider the subsidiary issues of how we can be sure that the aims of RAWP are fairly realised so that broadly economically successful health authorities, which contain within their larger areas pockets of social deprivation, are not penalised.

5.45 pm

Sir Barney Hayhoe (Brentford and Isleworth): In the November debate I began my speech by regretting the absence of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I hoped that he would soon be fully restored to health. I am delighted that he is now back and that he will be participating in our continuing debates.

I welcome this wide-ranging debate about the NHS and health care. The debate has been raging with great intensity since we last spoke about these matters in the House. However, I deeply deplore the sharply personalised turn that has been taken in the public expression of this debate in the past few days. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has been targeted as some sort of fall guy. It would be wholly inappropriate for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment to claim credit for the steady and welcome reduction in the numbers of unemployed that he is now able to announce to the country each month. Equally it would be wrong for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services to be blamed or held responsible for the financial difficulties now facing the hospitals and community health service.

[Sir Barney Hayhoe]

I agree with my right hon. Friend that there are serious problems deserving rational and well-informed debate. It is right to state—as my right hon. Friend did on a number of occasions during his speech — that a successful economy and sensible economic policies that provide national wealth are absolute requisites to provide money that can be spent on the Health Service and other desirable social objectives and to improve the general standard of living. However, highly emotive questions traded for repeated, well-used statistics — however impressive the statistics — make little contribution to solving the problems.

In November I said that the statistics must be considered carefully. My right hon. Friend the Member for Chingford (Mr. Tebbit) has referred to the number of nurses and asked where they have all gone. What is interesting is to consider when those nurses arrived. The annual report on the Health Service in England published a few days ago shows that there are some 403,000 whole-time equivalent people in nursing and midwifery in England. Since 1979 the number employed has increased substantially, by 44,000. It is clear from the figures that an increase of 38,700 took place before the 1983 general election.

At that election we rightly took great credit for those extra nurses and midwives. However, in the four years since then the increase has been only 5,600. The increase has flattened off. Equally, while substantial extra sums have been spent on the Health Service, the really sharp increases took place in the early years of the Conservative Government and were largely used to restore the pay of National Health Service staff to some sort of reasonable standard from the low level to which it has sunk, leading in part to the winter of discontent of 1978-79.

Mr. Robert B. Jones (Hertfordshire, West): I am most interested in the points that my right hon. Friend makes. However, is it not fair to note that comparable countries can manage with half as many nurses per bed or per head of the population and that our nurses are doing jobs that might well be done by far less well qualified people in other countries? Is not that point worthy of attention?

Sir Barney Hayhoe: My hon. Friend assumes that nurses in this country have the same qualifications as those abroad. They do not. In other countries, nursing is largely a graduate profession. We may be moving towards a graduate profession, but the process will not be completed for many years to come. Over-simplified international comparisons do not really help the debate. One needs to be sure that one is comparing like with like. I certainly do not believe that we are getting particularly poor value for the money that we spend on the National Health Service.

Let me deal with two or three of the major events that have taken place since our debate last November. First, the Government have come forward with an extra £100 million to meet specific urgent requirements in the present financial year. I welcome the decision to add that extra money from the contingency fund.

We have also witnessed a series of strikes and disruptive action by some nurses—not by the Royal College of Nursing, I hasten to add, but by other unions. I d know all the facts, but I question the Governm reaction to those strikes or at least the way in which been perceived by the press. The phrase "Gover climbdown" is often used. That seems to me to be a dangerous message. It is dangerous for it to be th that the Government are responding in that w militant and sometimes irresponsible action by the unions responsible for some National Health Service Certainly, the anti-privatisation strikes in Scotlan wholly unjustified. Of course there should be compe tendering and the money available should be used best possible way.

The £100 million extra is very welcome, but it see have been dragged out of a reluctant Treasury. different the scene would have been if that sum had announced in the wind-up of the debate on 26 Nove One of our problems as a Government is that we spent this additional money in such a way as to get praise for it. Delay has strengthened the arm o Treasury, which will say to the spending Ministers, "I We agreed to that extra money but instead of plaudi are attacked." And this because the announcement been so long delayed. For heaven's sake, when we extra resources available—and I believe that we continue to do so—let us draw credit from it and e that it is to the Government's advantage.

The bulk of that extra money will help with the se over-spending problems that confront so many di health authorities, which stem largely from the underf ing of pay increases made as a result of pay review awards, or negotiations through the Whitley system i case of non-pay review body staff. Tremendous diffic are caused when pay increases exceed the budg provision in cash-limited services. The case of the Nati Health Service illustrates that vividly. The review awards apply both to the hospital and community h service and to family practitoner service. In the case o family practitoner services no problems of implementa arise, apart from complaints from doctors implementation is staged and delayed or when the a is not paid in full. The real problems arise in the hos and community health service because it is cash-limi

What on earth can be done? If the cash limit is t maintained the pay increases have to be staged and app for only part of the year so that the budgeted provisio increased pay is absorbed over seven or eight mo rather than spread over the whole year. That end-load system. I remember from my involvement with Service pay some years ago the strictures laid down by Treasury and Civil Service Committee about end-loa because it raises the base line for the following year. S staging pushes the problem forward into the follo year.

Alternatively the cash limit can be increased with e money coming from the contingency reserve, as, example, in 1987 when the Government decided implement the pay review body awards in full. It wa election year and the Government were not wh unmindful of these important considerations. Even t the Treasury did not agree fully to fund the awards. In evidence to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee Chancellor said:

"£30 million—

I think that he was wrong and that the sum was million——

"had to be found by the health authorities from their cost improvement programmes."

Those self-same cost improvement programmes were also expected to meet non-budgeted pay increases for non-pay review body staff and other additional expenditure that exceeded the budgeted amount. Fine, so that extra spending was being met out of the cost improvement programmes. However, the cost improvement programmes had already been taken fully into account in establishing the public expenditure figures for the hospital and community health service for 1987-88. The House will not think for one moment that when the Secretary of State goes along to see the Chief Secretary or to the Star Chamber those cost improvement programmes are ignored. They are brought into the argument. The Treasury says, "You are to get £150 million a year"—the figure announced by the Secretary of State for the current year and for next year—"and we shall take that into account in arriving at the overall figure." As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said, the cumulative total sum arising from cost improvement programmes over the past four or five years is £1·3 billion. In the current financial year the programmes are running cumulatively at about £600 million. If those sums had not been taken into account by the Treasury in determining the overall finances for the hospital and community health service, we should largely have overcome the funding problems that are besetting so many of our district health authorities at the moment.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State rightly praised and commended the NHS managers and staff concerned for achieving these substantial efficiency savings. However, their motivation to find even more savings in future years must be damaged by their increasing awareness that the Treasury is taking full account of these savings in determining the cash limits for the hospital and community health service.

My hon. Friends and others who are calling for greater efficiency in the Health Service are right to do so. However, they should not be misled into thinking that as a result of that greater efficiency more money will necessarily be available for patient care because what happens is that in the arguments during the public expenditure round between the spending Department—the DHSS—and the Chief Secretary, the Treasury and others, account will be taken of those efficiency savings.

I now look more widely at the general financing of the National Health Service. I am delighted that the Select Committee on Social Services has made that its priority subject. I hope that it will get ahead with the work and produce an authoritative and useful report. I welcome the present wide-ranging public debate, with inquiries by the King's Fund, the Institute of Health Service Management, and the Public Finance Foundation and the flurry of activity from Right-wing pressure groups such as the Centre for Policy Studies, the Institute of Economic Affairs and the Adam Smith Institute. There are many new ideas, or at least re-worked ideas because there has been an awful lot of literature on this subject in the past.

Insurance funding has often been suggested as a way out of the present difficulties. It was investigated by the Government between 1980 and 1982. However, my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Social Services, now the Secretary of State for Employment, announced in a written answer in July 1982 that the Government "have no plans to change the present system of financing the National Health Service largely from taxation".—[Official Report, 30 July 1982; Vol. 28, c. 860.]

That was following the internal review of the insurance system.

It is also suggested that increased charges would bring more money into the Health Service and would also discourage use of particular services. I am often surprised that sometimes those of my hon. Friends who give a greater importance to market considerations than perhaps I do in the general run of things seem to ignore the fact that by their very nature increased charges discourage use. Perhaps, for some, that is even a positive merit. But on considering the Government's proposals for charges for sight testing and dental inspection, one is not encouraged to think that there is much advantage to be gained in pursuing increased charges as a way out of the present financial difficulties.

It is also suggested that lotteries could make a contribution. I ask instantly, "Why not?" Many years ago, Ireland used to have the hospital sweepstake. I gather that it now has a much more modern system which churns in a great deal of money and which follows similar systems used in California, Australia and many other areas. We should look at that suggestion and if it will produce substantial amounts of extra money, why on earth should we not adopt it?

Of course, at the same time we must search for increased efficiency. I remain a firm supporter of the National Health Service. I welcome increased co-operation with the private sector and am totally opposed to those who, for dogmatic reasons, regard any co-operation with the private sector as a betrayal of the cause of the National Health Service.

I am attracted by ideas for developing an internal market within the National Health Service to begin to deal with some of the problems of the enormous difference between the apparent costs of particular operations when carried out in different areas and regions. I should like the internal market concept to be developed.

I am also convinced that clinical budgeting, along the lines suggested by Professor Alan Maynard, will inevitably exert a growing influence on the way in which resources, which will always be scarce whatever arrangements are made, are best used in the interests of patient care.

Although I envisaged that all those suggestions are more likely to take place in the future, within a largely tax-financed service, alternative sources of funds deserve careful consideration. However, I must challenge the naive assumption that runs through much of the present debate about NHS financing—that new money means extra money—because everything that I know about the Treasury goes against it. As soon as new money is found and begins to come in, it will figure in the public expenditure discussions. The Treasury side of the table would, for example, say, "You are getting £200 million to £300 million from the lottery. We shall take that into account, which means that £200 million to £300 million less needs to come out of the tax-borne expenditure than would otherwise be the case." Those who argue that new sources of finance mean extra money for the service must somehow overcome the Treasury's long tradition of taking account of that money. That fact changes many of the arguments.

[Sir Barney Hayhoe]

I am not enunciating a new doctrine. The Royal Commission on the National Health Service reported in 1979. Paragraph 21(13) states:

"It must be understood that there is no escaping government supervision of health service expenditure whatever system of raising funds is adopted. Some advocates of an insurance system evidently see it as a mechanism for automatically increasing expenditure on the NHS as costs rise. They delude themselves if they do. The rising cost of health care is a major concern in most developed countries, and measures to control it may be, and are, introduced whatever the method of financing health services."

The Government will always look at the overall total amount of money going in to the service. So long as there remains a tax-borne element in that overall spending, the Treasury will take account of it. If the Treasury is to change its attitudes to new sources of funding, it might be much simpler and less administratively expensive if that change of attitude occurs under the existing system. However, perhaps that opens up wider considerations.

The fundamental requirements of the National Health Service that face us in this House and in the Government relate to the way in which we can introduce more taxpayers' money—there is no other money available in the short term—into the Health Service in the coming months. I am not suggesting a great deal more money, as have some hon. Members, but there must be more money for 1988-89 to meet the full unbudgeted costs of the 1988 pay increases plus, perhaps, up to £500 million — I certainly would not put the figure any higher—to relieve the mounting pressure on so many health authorities. The generous provision that has been made and the £700 million more that will be given to the health authorities for the coming year, 1988-89, represents a cash increase for next year of 6·3 per cent. according to a DHSS press release.

Inflation is estimated to be 4·5 per cent., and 75 per cent. of overall spending goes in pay. Does anyone think that the pay increases for doctors, nurses and midwives in 1988-89 will be 4·5 per cent. or less? Anyone who thinks that that will be recommended by the pay review body, or that, if it awards more, the Government will stick to their figure, is living in a dream world. Money is washing out, not from the second floor of the Treasury, but from the attics. In such circumstances, it is totally unrealistic to try to hold down nurses' pay to the budgeted level of 4·5 per cent.

The Secretary of State was right to point to the need for extra resources when he met the presidents of the royal colleges. The headlines read:

"Moore accepts NHS cash need . . . Doctors' fear on future of health service allayed . . . Minister pledges action on funds".

The stories in the papers last Thursday morning were very different from what my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary said that evening. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State very properly and loyally tried today to equate the message that came out of his meeting with the presidents of the royal colleges with what the Chief Secretary said when he wound up the debate on the Autumn Statement on Thursday. But I think that the earlier simple message from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State was right: more funds are required in the coming year.

Of course, that does not prejudge the wider questions, many of them posed by my right hon. Friend the Member for Chingford (Mr. Tebbit). However, there is an present need, and the sooner that the Governme that need, the better. The longer that they dela what I believe is now virtually certain to be don is, provide extra money for 1988-89—the more t dissipate the political advantages that should flo such action, and the more they will damage morale the National Health Service.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Before I call the next Back Benc me remind the House that at the beginning of the I appealed for short contributions. The right hon. M for Salford, East (Mr. Orme) set an admirable e Since then, however, we have had a 27-minute spe two lasting for 117 minutes. May I appeal again f contributions.

6.12 pm

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody (Crewe and Nan Normally, when the House debates the National Service, it does so by arguing about how best to a service that is useful to everyone. Such deba usually marked by contributions from both sides House that pay at least lip service to the idea that th is there to provide good health care for ev irrespective of income.

That is not an accident. Although the Conse party opposed the creation of the National Health originally, it realised very rapidly that it was n popular, but essential. We do not need examinat whether the system of payment out of taxation is th one for the NHS. Never was a service more su reported on and generally commented on. The Commission on the National Health Service did pr the best survey, ever, and it remains so, but we ha had the Black report—which told us what is hap to the population as a whole when the privileged what kind of income and housing we shall have— number of other surveys, from the King's Fund an interested groups.

We know, therefore, that a service funded taxation, and free at the point of use, is not only t way of providing health care, but one of the most ef Yet, week after week in the House, we hear the Minister recite numerous statistics — most of meaningless — suggesting that the NHS is no improving all the time, but that a large injection is understood by the population as a whole producing the most wonderful results througho country.

What is really happening in the NHS is obvious population, and it is fundamentally different. constituency, we rely very much on a large hospital. That started closing wards, went on t whole sections and finally changed the way in w operated. Occasionally, it has received a great injec cash from the Mersey authority, because it is so underfunded that it has had considerable pro Nevertheless, health care has gone on declinin waiting lists have continued to get longer.

That is because the Government, since they firs office, have chosen to cash-limit the hospital service never say, when they are talking about the available, that it is in the non-cash-limited practitioner service that much of the money has been spent. The hospital services have tended to suffer most. For example, in the constituency of the right hon. Member for Shropshire, North (Mr. Biffen), there is a specialised hospital—a fully equipped orthopaedic hospital—whose theatres are to be kept empty for three months. What contempt would be shown by Conservative Members if it were suggested that a fully equipped manufacturing unit, with high standards and expensive equipment, should be kept empty for three months, while retaining its staff and equipment. My goodness, we should hear about something like that. In the NHS, however, such action is regarded as perfectly acceptable.

We have problems in Oswestry with the district general hospital and with the family practitioner services, which are increasingly finding it impossible to obtain the back-up staff that they require. There is also a growing and frightening habit of suggesting that the reality can be changed with words. Nowadays, when people discuss decanting mentally handicapped patients into the community, they talk about "fast-track" and "slow-track" decanting, as if those patients were Norfolk turkeys being shoved through on a production line. We are talking about people, not turkeys. That means that we do not say, "How much of this land can we sell off? Where can we get a nice section to put money back into the Health Service? We will not use it to provide better services for people who were in institutions before. Oh, no; we shall simply put the money back into the Treasury." That is what is consistently happening, and happening consistently. It is mildly hypocritical for Conservative Members to come here and say, "Of course, we should be looking at other means of funding and improving the service", when what they really mean is, "In my constituency, I want you to spend more money, but elsewhere I want you to cut back."

Many of the smoke-screens relate to things that do not matter a damn in relation to overall finance. We can alter the administration as much as we like. Really the organisation was a disaster, and, although there have been larger cuts in administration than in other services, it still costs less to administer the NHS than it would to administer any comparable insurance-based scheme. We can alter the general way in which patients are moved from one list to another, and suggest that the provision of computer waiting lists will make a difference; but it will make no difference if the staff and funding for those specialised units are not there.

We should be asking one question of the Secretary of State tonight: what undertakings did he give to the august gentlemen who came to him, the presidents of the royal colleges, about funding? Why did the Chief Secretary make it clear the next day that in no circumstances was he prepared to support even the suggestion that the NHS was lacking in money? That is a question that the Secretary of State somehow did not find time to answer today, but it is relevant to this whole debate.

There is no better way of funding the National Health Service than by direct taxation. We know that because we have considered it time and again. There is no better way of providing health care than when people need it and letting them pay for it out of taxation. We do not solve the problems, as suggested in my district general hospital, by building a private unit of 12 beds which is supposed to produce a mythical answer that will encourage consultants to stay on the site, as if they were for ever running off. If consultants are not doing their job, machinery exists fo disciplining them and it is time the people in charge d something about it.

The real truth is that the NHS needs large amounts money now. It needs proper back-up for the staff no Anything that detracts from that is hypocritical, mealy mouthed and uncaring. Those are the points that shoul be made time and again until the electorate understan what the Government really mean by health care.

6.20 pm

Sir David Price (Eastleigh): I am glad to take up th general challenge made by my right hon. Friend th Member for Chingford (Mr. Tebbit) and by the hon Member for Greenwich (Mrs. Barnes) to consider th long-term funding problems of the National Healt Service. I was interested in the arguments put forward b the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mr Dunwoody), but she will forgive me for not commentin on the immediate position. As she knows, and as my righ hon. Friend the Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Sir B. Hayhoe) pointed out, we who are on the Selec Committee are examining the immediate funding problem Indeed, tomorrow, if the hon. Lady would like to come t the Committee, we will be meeting the three augus presidents; I do not wish to anticipate their replies.

The long term is a much more serious problem. I believe that there are solutions to the immediate problem, some of which have been suggested by my right hon. Friend the Member for Brentford and Isleworth. The long term problem is getting increasingly difficult intellectually, le alone politically. I put it in these terms. It is the exponential nature of our expectations of the Health Service. The demand consequences of those exponentia expectations are likely to run increasingly ahead o available resources, even if the resources put into the National Health Service expand at the same growth rate as the economy.

The chairman of Wessex regional health authority, the distinguished mathematician who is known to some hon. Members, Sir Bryan Thwaites, demonstrated in a telling lecture at Southampton university that the demands on the NHS, projected over the next 20 years, are likely to grow at an annual rate of 5 per cent. I think I carry hon. Members with me when I say that it is equally likely that available resources will not increase by 5 per cent. a year. Indeed, I argued, when I spoke in the debate on the Loyal Address, that we should commit ourselves to a growth rate in resources from public funds to the NHS equivalent to the growth rate in our gross domestic product. Experience shows that 2·5 per cent. is the most that one can reasonably assume. That has been achieved by this Government. I do not see any alternative Government sustaining over a decade more than a 2·5 per cent. economic growth rate. Anyone who suggests more can point to no historical experience to support his hopes. Of course it would be nice to have a higher economic growth rate, but I do not see that happening.

Therefore, we must expect a growing gap between—I will be optimistic—a growth rate of 2·5 per cent. in resources and a growth rate in demand of 5 per cent. Such is the nature of exponential growth that the gap grows; so what starts at 2·5 per cent. becomes 29 per cent. over 10 years but over 20 years—that is not very long in the lifetime of a health service—it becomes 62 per cent. That is the nature of geometric progression. That is the real problem to which the House has to address itself.

[Sir David Price]

The House may think that I am exaggerating when I hypothesise, as Bryan Thwaites did, a 5 per cent. growth rate. Following your instructions to be brief, Mr. Speaker, I suggest, almost in synoptic form, some factors that have led Bryan Thwaites and myself to that view. Indeed, I think we are being conservative in putting as low a figure as 5 per cent. on the growth of expectations.

The first factor is the continuing advance in medical knowledge and in medical practice which makes possible what was hitherto impossible. We have heard all the arguments about the Birmingham hospital and about hole-in-the-heart surgery. When I first came to the House—a long time ago—hole-in-the-heart surgery was not an issue, because it did not happen.

Secondly, following that advance, there are more sophisticated treatments for more conditions. That increases the demand upon available resources. More people get more treatment. That is admirable in itself, but the process is self-generating. I need only refer to hip replacement operations as an example.

My right hon. Friend touched on the third factor, that more people are living longer. The old, and especially the very old, are heavy users of the National Health Service—surprise, surprise. So an increase in the numbers of the very old leads to a disproportionate increase in the demands upon the National Health Service. Today those aged 80 and over total 1·8 million. In 20 years they will have increased from 1·8 million to 2·3 million, or from 3·2 per cent. to 4 per cent. of the population. God willing, I shall be one of them.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): And still here?

Sir David Price: An ancestor of mine remained a Member until he was 96. He had served the House for 64 years. I have only done 33.

Going to the other end of the age scale, the fourth factor is the survival of more severely handicapped children. A great plus for society is that many are surviving today who in previous generations would have died at birth or shortly afterwards. Many of them are multiply handicapped and for their entire mortal existence will require help. I do not think that we have begun to face up to the resource consequences.

The fifth factor is the technological advances in equipment which follow the almost explosive rate of development in science. I point only to microelectronics to illustrate the point. As a result, equipment within the service rapidly becomes technically obsolescent. Of course, the consequences affect both the capital budget and the revenue budget.

Another factor, number six, is professional expectations, which again put an increasing demand on resources. It can be summed up in the simple phrase, "My patient must get the best." That is totally honourable and right, but it is very demanding on resources. To put it another way, the more cynical might say that it is keeping up with the professional Joneses.

The seventh factor is the public's expectations, which are self-perpetuating. They are encouraged by a growing public awareness of the potential of modern medicines. These expectations apply not only to the practice and the delivery of medicine, but to the general st patient care and patient comfort, which some to call the hotel aspect of hospital treatment.

Factor number eight is the general determin 1 million or so people who work for the Natio Service in the four countries within the Unite that they should share in the growing prosp nation as a whole. Nurses, as well as other gr the NHS, wish to push their position up in pecking order of pay and remuneration. That growth factor within demand on the service remembers that staff costs represent roughly 7 of total revenue costs within the NHS.

That is a factor that my right hon. Friend We underestimate staff expectations at our pe also a desire to share in working less anti-socia to have more leisure and holidays, which ha taken into account sufficiently in forward cost

The ninth factor is the potential threat of n that might make heavy demands upon reso year, in the Social Services Select Committe looking at what could happen to this country i epidemic really took off. I do not wish to go AIDS, because everyone is probably bored subject and has heard enough about it. But dise remain static, nor do viruses cease to muta because they are not recognised in the Treasury model of the economy.

We must take it into account and not be s there is a new virus or, as we have with AID virus, which I have described as an "Alice Th Looking-Glass" virus. It behaves in the oppos a normal virus. We must expect this outcome, thrown by it. Indeed, it could well be that some comes back with a new and much stronger form of mutations. We should be ready for the une that is not too Irish a thought for the House a of the evening.

I hope that I have said enough to explain to that there is a growing gap between expecta resources, which will be present under any Go The sooner we realise it the better. I hope that Committee will be able to throw a little light on come back in a few months with a thoroughly co report. Whatever the Government do, we shall solutions to the problem.

Certainly, in playing my own part in the w Select Committee, I am very conscious of the c words of the Royal Commission on the Natio Service, which reported in 1979, as my right ho the Member for Brentford and Isleworth remind report said:

"it is important for any Health Service to carry its it, given that it can never satisfy all the demands n it. It is misleading to pretend that the National Hea can meet all expectations. Hard choices have to b is a prime duty of those concerned in the provisio care to make it clear to the rest of us what we can expect."

I remind the House that this Royal Commissi up by a Labour Prime Minister, so let us aband party skirmishing and try to work together, as Member for Greenwich (Mrs. Barnes) invited us us find a solution to this very real problem. There of gold at the end of the rainbow for the NHS, play silly partisan politics with the NHS, the rainbow of hope will disappear and our constituents will be left only with the bitter tears of disappointment.

6.34 pm

Mr. Barry Jones (Alyn and Deeside): The hon. Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) has quoted some chilling figures. I hope that he achieves his century. It seems from this side of the House that there is plenty of life in him yet.

I agreed with the right hon. Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Sir B. Hayhoe) when he called for urgent money in the short term for the National Health Service. I thought that he spoke with some insight into the Treasury. He should know; he was speaking from experience.

Yesterday, 17 Labour Members of Parliament from Wales met the Secretary of State for Wales, and also his junior Minister, and senior health advisers. It was a serious session and a businesslike encounter. We told the Secretary of State for Wales of the problems in the south and north of Wales, in the urban and rural areas and in the industrial valleys of the south-east.

We said that every health authority in Wales claimed that it was underfunded. Each Welsh Member of Parliament gave convincing examples of underfunding. There were reports of low morale among ancillary workers and of consultants being told to treat fewer people. There were calls for more hospitals, and for more nurses in special and intensive care units. We urged the Secretary of State for Wales to put a paper to the Cabinet, and use it to argue for more and urgent funding to deal with the very pressing and real problems in the Principality. We said that he had a crisis on his hands and that he would need much new money to cope with the problems that we reported to him from our constituencies.

The people of Wales have special needs. We still suffer from major unemployment. Nobody would deny, that, arising out of mass unemployment, there are greater demands on the Health Service. We still have in Wales an unenviable reputation for ill health, specifically for heart disease, which may come top of the league in Europe, and, arguably, in the world, and for other diseases related to smoking.

We gave the Secretary of State some woeful instances of the cycle of deprivation. There are many deprived, under-nourished, under-privileged and unemployed communities in Wales. We pointed to the problems of the economy, where basic industries are declining. We know that in mining there are special health problems, and we are having to cope now with mine-working throughout this century.

We know that our housing problem is the worst in Britain; we have more houses that were built before 1917 than any other region. We know that housing conditions are directly related to health.

Major steel closures have taken place in the 1980s. Some of the steel communities are still reeling from those closures. There are consequences for their health and demands for health care. We could argue that the Health Service might have been conceived or invented in Wales. Certainly, it was the great Aneurin Bevan who put the Health Service together for the people of Britain. His achievements have been great and lasting. He said that preventable pain is a blot on any society and that a society is spiritually healthier if it has access to the best of medical skills.

I shall briefly instance the difficulties faced b Health Service in Wales by specific reference t constituency. Many people in north-east Wales who from cancer cannot get treatment there. My consti have to travel to Mersey hospitals. This year, as befo were promised a major new community hospital, was to have been started in 1985. It will probably n started until next year.

The neighbouring district health authority is Ch and thousands of my constituents receive treatment But I have received letters from consultants in Cheste complain of the worrying situation because the required to cut back their care. There is a major ho in Shropshire, which was referred to by my hon. Frien Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwood Gobowen. Beds are being taken out of service there wards closed. That hospital serves north-east Wales the consequence of cuts there is very real to constituents and the people of Clwyd.

I can tell the House of a young woman in constituency who had trouble with her ear. She had to for two years before she could have treatment, when i discovered that she had a hole in her ear-drum.

We have a special school in my constituency. T have been complaints about there being insuffi incontinence pads available for the daily working of school. Cuts are planned in a much cared for hospit Holywell, the Lluesty hospital; and many of constituents have complained bitterly to me abou likely consequences of those cuts.

The Secretary of State in his speech—not a h speech—said that he wanted to see the use of s capacity. The experience of my constituents is that t is insufficient capacity. Indeed, there are cuts not on my area, but in neighbouring health authorities. I instance the result of a very distressing one. On the e Christmas, the Daily Post, a newspaper in north W reported as follows:

"Chester district health authority is facing a demand a government inquiry over the hospital transfer of el orthopaedic patients in a huge van."

The front page has a picture of that four-ton red Bed van. The article goes on:

"Said one hospital employee: 'The van was dirty, free and smelt of something like stale cheese. Nurses were cr openly. They could not believe that this was actu happening.'"

That was also reported extensively later in the Ma Sunday. I bring it to the attention of the House becaus very unfortunate manner in which two elderly citizens patients were transported between hospitals on the ev Christmas was the consequence of cuts, how temporary. That does not sit well with the posture of Secretary of State for Social Services. I go further and that it is vital to maintain the quality of our social serv and to ensure that they are fully available to those most need them.

"Governments exist to ensure that the strong do tyrannise over the weak. It is necessary to care for the nat for the whole of society, and to express that care."

Those are not my words. They are the reported word the former right hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, So East, a former Cabinet Minister, now ennobled an another place, Lord Pym. That was perhaps one of toughest and most bitter speeches made by a for Cabinet Minister in the autumn of 1983, but I think he summed up the situation.

[Mr. Barry Jones]

Social justice demands that Her Majesty's Government should provide more financial support for the beleaguered National Health Service. It is my fear that before very long, unless there is urgent Government action, we shall have two forms of health service: one for the rich of our land, a Rolls-Royce service that can provide miracles, the best of health services for the very privileged; and the second, which we are in danger of getting, for poor people—a system that is shabby and does not deliver the best and most needed services.

That is the drama of the situation in which Britain finds itself today, and unless the Government, in their remaining years in office, are prepared to find the funds and take the decisions, our Health Service may be lost to all the nation as a free service giving the best of care, as the great Mr. Bevan would have wanted it to do.

My demand is that we avoid the temptation of tax cuts to buttress the political standing of the Government among the upwardly mobile. Indeed, Her Majesty's Government should realise that the divisions in British society which are now manifest and growing could be narrowed and partly eliminated if our Health Service were made better. The Health Service in Britain can be a unifying factor for all our people. Major tax cuts would put massive pressure on the balance of payments problem that will face our country for the immediate future.

Huge investment or even urgent investment in the Health Service would create work and give greater happiness and security to countless families.

I urge the Government to think again about their attitude and strategy and, when the Budget comes along, or even before, to give massive new funding to help our National Health Service.

6.45 pm

Dame Jill Knight (Birmingham, Edgbaston): Perhaps I should begin with the charges. The charges made against my right hon. Friend and the Government today deserve to be rebuffed with energy, determination and, indeed, contempt. I say contempt because of the disgraceful personal attack on the Secretary of State over his recent medical treatment. The Opposition really have it both ways on this. Had my right hon. Friend not used some of his salary to pay for his own medical attention and therefore had taken up a bed in an NHS hospital he would have been under attack for that. I have always understood that the Labour party believed in rich people paying for what they get and not getting it for nothing.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North) rose——

Dame Jill Knight: No. Mr. Speaker is anxious that all Members be very swift in their speeches, and I intend to be so. The hon. Member can make his own speech.

When people are in receipt of a fairly high salary for the job that they do, it seems to me to be absolutely right that they should pay for their own health care and leave a bed available for someone who is less well off.

As for the remarks made a moment ago by the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones), who seems to be about to leave the Chamber, he is quite wrong about the private sector. All too frequently the National Health Service is the one that provides the highest standard of very complicated care. In many cases, if v cancer or other treatment is needed there the NHS to get it. For that, too, I salute

We affirm that our Government hav good record. We are not saying that ever been done, every last "t" crossed and every But we are saying that there is an extrem to talk about. Almost unimaginable ex already been made available.

The hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr does not grace the Chamber with her pr long, said that the Secretary of State amount of money spent and said that all w not say that all was well. None of us on t side of the House would say that all is well Service. We are as anxious and worr difficulties that come to our notice as any Opposition. But we are entitled to say that of money have been made available inefficiency have been tackled as neve goodness knows action was very badly nee would never have been tackled by the La

The recruitment of doctors and nurs substantial extra money being paid out in s There are far more patients going int treatment and far more being dealt with clinics as well. Of course, it is also true people waiting for treatment, but we are much more money on extra treatments, ext extra nurses, and all of these are being used in the NHS. And we are to a certain exten own success. We are short of money beca being done. If so much were not being done be short of money.

The press seems to concentrate exclus people who have not had treatment. Th emotional mileage in postponed operatio wards. Some papers with more space th pictures of funerals, wreaths and tears. If t is fair enough, but surely something s sometimes about the tremendous number are getting treatment. Is there no emotio someone having a cornea transplant and able to see, or having any of the other tra miraculously, although expensively, are such as coronary artery bypass grafts? Sure be some human interest in that, but we stories of that kind in the press. The onl those of people who have not immediatel have treatment.

Statistics do not count very much to th treatment. It is rather like being unemploy not unemployed, it is not nearly such a 100 as when you are unemployed. Many peo treatment and the media should highlight th the alleviation of their conditions.

The press and some Opposition Memb everything is fine everywhere else in the w only the NHS is in terrible trouble, but is th have been reminded, heavy cuts in expendi made in West Germany where there is hu in many hospitals. There was an estimate o of 50,000 beds lying empty at great expen Members will be riveted to hear that in Russ even provide lavatory paper in the hospitals drugs. In Italy, hospital patients have to pro food and strikes by nurses and doctors are common. In France, the Health Service is described as being on the verge of bankruptcy. Although I warmly recommend Greece as a delightful place for a holiday, I do not advise hon. Members to become ill there because its health service treatment is appalling. We all know what happens in the United States where many people are literally bankrupted when a member of their family is ill.

I was disappointed that my right hon. Friend did not say very much about future funding of the National Health Service. As is apparent from many of tonight's speeches, there is real concern about getting more money for the National Health Service. The figures need careful examination, given that inflation in Health Service technology is far higher than it is in the outside world. We need new pieces of equipment and we want to buy them when they come on stream, but they are extremely expensive. There are growing numbers of elderly people and the problems that we shall have to face on that score are very severe. We do not know how much we shall have to spend on AIDS. The amount we spend on abortion is amazing. We must consider all these matters when discussing funding.

The cost of drugs has increased very much. The Government deserve a bouquet for having brought in the restricted list. Let nobody deny that that has given an extra boost of money to the National Health Service. Although, at first, there was an immense row and the Opposition were in there fighting, we hear nothing about it today because the idea has been a great success and has saved a lot of money. The Government do deserve credit for that.

We need two sorts of cash. First, we need an immediate cash increase because we all know places where more cash is needed. The trouble is that it is virtually impossible to be told how much is needed to end the problems. Secondly, we must consider long-term funding. The Opposition attack us on the Health Service because there is nothing else on which to attack us, but they are on a false trail.

6.54 pm

Mr. Robert Litherland (Manchester, Central): The Opposition make no excuse for highlighting the starvation of resources and finance in the National Health Service and its contribution to hospital problems. Not a day passes without reports of hospitals facing extreme problems of finance and manning levels in their attempts to provide a medical service to people in need in their catchment areas. Rural cottage hospitals and major inner-city hospitals are in a state of crisis unknown since the introduction of the National Health Service.

I shall take one hospital which epitomises the situation in the National Health Service. The Manchester royal infirmary in my constituency is a hospital whose management continually strives to achieve a balanced budget. It has sold land and property belonging to the hospital, introduced privatisation, reduced general nurse training, reduced midwifery nurse training, consolidated operating sessions in one fewer theatre and saved through early retirement and changes in shift work patterns, yet it still faces an overspend of £1 million. The Government are coming back for further cuts. In fact, the hospital is a victim of its own efficiency.

What have been the consequences of this budget balancing? The Manchester royal infirmary now faces the worst crisis in its 200 years of existence, because the word "bankruptcy" is being bandied about. This is c letters being sent to 2,500 hospital staff, say hospital may not be able to pay their wages.

Mr. Favell: Will the hon. Gentleman give

Mr. Litherland: I shall not give way, bec from experience that the hon. Gentleman's will be longer than my speech, and shorter sp been requested.

Balancing budgets by delaying paymen suppliers has resulted in a debt of £5·6 m suppliers are now demanding payment and th cut off these vital medical supplies. Wh consequences of this situation? Just before C was informed that babies are dying because t care system has collapsed; five cots for prem were closed at Christmas. The electricians ca off the oxygen supplies. These are not th politicians making political capital out o situation. They are the words of the head of care baby unit at North Manchester general

Mr. Stephen Day (Cheadle) rose——

Mr. Litherland: Young women with abnorm cervix are turned away because the hospital c with an increasing waiting list. Women are alr a six-month wait for treatment and, because funds, there is no possibility of cutting that There are cuts in nursing and closures of operating theatres. Babies are turned away women with cancer of the cervix are refused t

All this is happening in one hospital in ar area that has suffered enormously becau Government's policies. The area is more relian on a good hospital service. There is a correlati unemployment, deprivation and bad health. C these are not the words of politicians, but the a report by eminent people in the medical profe expectancy in my constituency is well below th average. The child mortality rate is higher national average.

In an article in the Manchester Evening N Thatcher—I shall not hold his unfortunate na him—reminds us:

"In South Manchester, all the cost-efficiency s can be made have been made, and we are now d bone. There's basically no money for new develo this means the so-called contingency plans are d and we've seen this happen before in the last fi and the wards are closed about four to six month the contingency plans have a lot of adverse publ dies down, and then, usually around May or Ju closures are put into operation. We've lost over medical and surgical beds in South Manchester in

He goes on to point out how two-faced the G are. They are consistently praising the hospital being more efficient, which means more patient treated. He says:

"Wythenshawe Hospital has the highest clini mance indicator of any major acute hospital, th definition it is highly efficient. But because it is so e attracts patients throughout the North West r elsewhere, we are to be penalised by the administr say they haven't got the money to treat all these The patients come to Wythenshawe and Manche infirmary for special treatment that they c anywhere else.

In this debate we have talked about other finance, but what has the hospital service com

[Mr. Litherland]

90 per cent. of the equipment in the intensive care unit at Manchester royal infirmary has been bought with money raised by its staff? What has the hospital service come to when ultrasound scan pictures of unborn babies are sold at £3·50 a time to raise money? Hospitals cater for weddings and other functions, sell babywear, even book trips on Concorde and develop shopping malls, all in an effort not to increase the hospital service, merely to maintain it and to ensure that it continues to provide a service. That is happening in what the Prime Minister and Chancellor inform us is a buoyant economy, when consideration can be given to a further cut in income tax. It is the Government who are sick to allow this unnecessary predicament to exist. Babies are turned away to die when tax handouts can be given to the rich.

The Government should listen to the leading doctors when they inform us that the NHS is on a downhill slide. They should listen to the dean of the medical school at Manchester university when he informs us of the dangerous impact of the cuts on undergraduate medical education. They should listen to the nurses who are forced to strike because they cannot exist on a pittance and with poor service conditions.

For their pains, the nurses receive snide insults from Conservative Members about lining their own pockets. The former chairman of the Conservative party, the right hon. Member for Chingford (Mr. Tebbit), referred to nurses moonlighting. That is rich coming from a man with so many directorships. From being held in high esteem as angels of mercy, nurses suddenly become devils of greed. There has been talk about shroud waving and whingeing.

Above all, I ask the Minister to listen to the people who are in desperate need of treatment—to listen before it is too late for them and too late for the NHS.

7.4 pm

Sir Rhodes Boyson (Brent, North): The genesis of the Health Service came in the Labour Government after 1945 at a time when, after total war, there was a feeling on both sides — more strongly on the Socialist side than the Conservative side — that, having won the war by a concentration of resources and people, one should win the peace in the same way. The National Health Service represented that.

The National Health Service is a nationalised, not a national service. I shall define the difference between the two shortly. The Health Service was nationalised at the same time as the railways, the coal mines and all the rest. It involved the nationalisation of 1,000 voluntary hospitals, 500 municipal hospitals and many private hospitals.

At the time, nationalisation was popular. The general climate of opinion in Britain among Socialists was strongly in favour of it and the Conservative party was half-heartedly in favour of it, if I may put it that way after reading speeches of the time. The National Health Service grew out of a time when nationalisation was a popular policy in Britain.

Since 1948, 40 years have passed and three things have happened which have led to the crisis in the Health Service. This is a crisis not just of resources, but of design—whether the service now meets the needs of the present time. That must be said to Opposition Members, each of whom I respect.

It is interesting that no other country example. If ours was the best service in would be coming here to see it. The NI general belief at that time and out of the as all of us know.

Nationalisation, in the view of the entirely different now from what it was 1951. That is why the Conservative party elections on denationalisation and has from all classes in our society. Nationalis seen as a great frontier advance. It something to be rid of, so that we can ret of competitive enterprise for the benefit groups in our society.

The second difference is the rising st
Rationing was all around us between 194 has gone. People then were used to w making a virtue of that, but people were
The war meant that rationing continued
time.

That time has gone. Now, 16 millio abroad. People buy videos and cars. Th to wait. They do not go to the travel agen
there is a queue and that they should c years' time when they may get a holiday i of Turkey. People read their brochures, and go away when they want for as lon

The outcry about queues in the NHS do not exist in any other area. Peo important health is. All hon. Members d many have been present for the deb Government must be given credit fo people's expectations. The Government for the economic advance and, in particul better off those in work are now than ev are no longer willing to join queues for Thirdly, great technical advances hav the cost of medicine has increased.

advances were unheard of 40 years ago.
to go back to first principles, and o Beveridge report an estimate of what expected to cost. In 1945 it was estimated Index that for inflation and we now are s more in real terms than Aneurin Beva those who brought it in—thought it wo
time.

First, nationalisation is no longer po a denationalising age. Secondly, people to queue because the consumer goods people a taste of getting things when Thirdly, technical medicine has become

Let me define the difference between a a national Health Service. A National one in which the Government somehow parts of society, including the poorest, ge one in this House would disagree with th Government do not need to provide that need to ensure that it is available to authorities now use competitive tend services, and they do not provide them.
expect that the best service available longer do we need a nationalised Health

My right hon. and hon. Friends and continuing debate. Often, these days, w have to provide our own debate within is sad, but I am glad to contribute to th is something wrong with the design of the system. I shall not throw figures around; I shall be brief. We now know that we have more than twice as many nurses as we had in 1960—480,000 as against 236,000. We have fewer hospital beds, and a shortage of nurses that we did not have then. The ordinary man or woman in the street might say that that looked odd, and he or she might have a point. I have some odd figures to illustrate this, which are interesting but do not require deep analysis. On one set of figures—many are going around—510,000 more people are employed in the Health Service now than were employed in 1970. Since 1970, the population of this country has risen by 500,000. So we are employing 510,000 more staff for a population that has grown by 500,000. Thus, on a straight-line graph projection, there will come a time when more people are employed in the Health Service than live in this country. It will not happen in our lifetimes, but the man or woman in the street or in the public bar—on second thoughts, we are all in the saloon bar now, thank goodness—may say that that is odd. And I say that he or she may have a point.

Because of the lack of time, I cannot advance a detailed scheme now; nor do I have one ready. Bright lights in dark corners, I always say, and one must start looking at what must be done to improve things now. Money must follow the patient. Wherever there is a service in which the money drips down from the top there will be massive numbers of administrators, and a lot of the money will go to the wrong places. Money following the consumer is the basis of denationalisation, and consumer control has transformed so much of the economy of this country which before was an economic dinosaur.

Some form of insurance will have to come. The Government's job will be to ensure that all the people can properly insure themselves. It will cost somewhere between £300 and £500 per person. Three booklets that have come out recently — the author of one is sitting on the Conservative Benches now — on the subject all give different figures, so if I average the lot, we shall say that it will cost £400. Every person in the country could be given a voucher for £400 for health insurance. It is the same system as we have for car insurance, which is not done by the Government. One insures the car, and the insurance company has to provide the service so that one is not bankrupted. That is one way of doing things.

The trade unions began as benevolent——

Mr. David Hinchliffe (Wakefield) rose——

Sir Rhodes Boyson: I have no intention of giving way. I have made up my mind on that, which is a good thing to do in society. The hon. Gentleman is a good man and I have the greatest respect for him. Long may he remain up there on the Back Benches. No: why not welcome him to the Front Bench in a generous-hearted way?

The trade unions, which are losing their meaning these days, could go back to being the benevolent societies that they began as. In France, one can insure with a trade union. After getting the bill, one goes along and expects to pay something oneself, and the trade union pays the rest. If people cannot pay, they go to social security. It is a relatively effective system, and I inspected it when I went to France in the course of my ministerial duties.

The Government lack the wisdom—even more now that I am no longer a member—to run 1,800 hospitals effectively by means of Ministers, civil servants, regional and area boards, trades unions and profes all battling for control. It is no wonder t lost somewhere along the way. So why n many of these hospitals and, as happ Wembley hospital, which began under lo them back under local control? They would of money. Why cannot the trade unions t hospitals? Why cannot the churches? T them something to do at last. They spen talking about social events. Why cannot th the hospitals over? It would give them so Why do not the workers take some of t
Opposition believe in that until it happen these people take over the hospitals and market?

The hon. Member for Livingston mentioned me in his speech, and I am alw that. He talked about whether the chur something, mentioning the Church of E
Methodist lay preacher, I never mentioned England; I think that the non-conformists share. On behalf of them, I make that poi

I have said it outside the House, and I n
this problem is the Government's Achille who has suffered from that trouble, I kno it can be until it is cured. The House, in i allow me to mix metaphors. This problem the Government's albatross, with the ancie different garb, sitting outside each hospital will have to be dealt with. It is no good doin either. While sorting out the immediate pro has come to change the whole basis of the H design. It is antiquated and will have to hope that the Conservative party, of which be a member, will be as radical in social m been in economic matters. The Governmen market in control in economic matters to th everyone in society, and I trust that we sha for health, so that everyone, from the p richest, can be dealt with, not by a natio Service but by a national Health Service.

7.18 pm

Mr. Sam Galbraith (Strathkelvin and contrast to that of the right hon. Member fo (Sir R. Boyson), I enjoyed the contribution hon. Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) an analysis of the stresses and demands on the H and I agreed with part of the reason he problem. He outlined the numerous thi pressure on the Health Service, but I want with one part of his analysis. He spoke ab
There is an important distinction to be m demands and needs. We should try to me demands. Demands do not necessarily c needs.

The advantage of the Health Service is t related to need, which it can control and private system, such as that suggested by t Member for Brent, North, leads to a sy demand-led. Then there are difficulties people's expectations from available resource the hon. Member for Eastleigh will take that Only the NHS deals with need; private syst demand, which has only a tenuous relationsh

[Mr. Sam Galbraith]

I want to address some other points about the market and the National Health Service that have been made by hon. Members. I shall deal, first, with another factor that is used as an excuse for the problem. We have heard that the consultants, the nurses and, finally, the Minister himself were to blame. Another factor is known as the bottomless pit. We always hear about it, but I do not think that health care is a bottomless pit. It is certainly true that health care expenditure can and does increase rapidly, but that is true of every country and health care system in the world.

If Health Service expenditure is to be controlled and used correctly, the most fair—and the only—way of doing that is to have a National Health Service. In the National Health Service, which is a system based on need rather than demand, staff examine new techniques and treatments. Doctors and nurses in the NHS agonise whether treatment is needed. They must go through the whole system before eventually deciding that treatment would be appropriate under the National Health Service. During the past few years, having looked at new techniques and systems of care and decided that they will meet a need, doctors and nurses find that there is no money with which to meet it. That is the crisis in the National Health Service.

We have heard a lot from Conservative Members about the market philosophy and the National Health Service. It is not appropriate to look at the National Health Service and the health care system in those terms. Silly statistics were quoted by the right hon. Member for Brent, North. He said that we have many more nurses but fewer beds. I will tell him the reason for that. Intensive care units, which we did not have in the 1960s, require about 50 nurses. Before the 1960s those nurses could have looked after seven or eight wards with 40 or 50 patients.

The market economy does not apply to the NHS, for a number of reasons. The first relates to consumer knowledge. I cannot make an absolute statement that within the health care services consumer knowledge is limited, but it is not easily defined. The lack of consumer knowledge is part of the reason for not applying a simple market philosophy to the NHS. Secondly, there is no competitive advertising, because advertising is against the General Medical Council's code of practice. There can be no advertising within the NHS. I suspect there would have to be some arm-twisting to get the GMC to change that.

The right hon. Member for Brent, North likened health care to choosing a holiday from a range. However, when we choose a holiday, we must look at our finances to see whether we can afford a holiday in a far-flung part of the world or whether we will have to take a holiday nearer home. That choice is based on resources. However, if someone needs an important operation, such as a gastrectomy or a neurosurgical operation, there is no such range of choice. A person cannot say, "I have limited resources, so can I have only half of my brain tumour removed?" That is an important reason why the market philosophy is not relevant to the National Health Service.

We constantly hear the Secretary of State talk about better value for money, and in particular about clinical efficiency. First and foremost, that is not a new concept for me or for other Opposition Members who have been campaigning for years that resources should be used much more efficiently. The Government have not listened. We recognise the great discrepancies in the use of operating theatres, beds and investigations. The Minister must realise that improved clinical efficiency will cost more money. It is not a substitute for putting money into the NHS. It will cost more money if a bed is used by five patients in a week instead of by one patient. If an operating theatre is used by more patients, it will cost more money. We need more money to treat more patients. We do not want clinical efficiency because it will save money. We want the correct and proper use of resources that have been under-used to benefit the patients and eliminate waiting lists.

The right hon. Member for Brent, North and other hon. Members spoke about alternative systems. I want to clear up a few fallacies about the United States and various European systems. First, the administrative charges in those systems are much higher than ours. We hear all the nonsense about the National Health Service being a lumbering bureaucracy. It is not. In the National Health Service 5 per cent. of the costs are used for administration. In some parts of the United States that can be up to 31 per cent. of the costs. Is that what Conservative Members want?

When we examine the care provided in those systems which are demand-led, not need-led, we find that many more operations are done. I shall give some examples of that from Mr. K. McPherson in Social Sciences and Medicine:

"Regional Variations in the Use of Common Surgical Procedures."

It says:

"Hysterectomy rates in the US and Canada were around three times greater than for England and Wales. Similarly Prostatectomy was around two and a half times more common in the United States and Canada than in England and Wales, while tonsillectomy was around twice as common."

That is what happens in a private, demand-led system. I understand the reasons for that. I have worked in such a system. If a difficult clinical decision is involved as to whether an operation is needed, in a demand-led private system an important aspect is that it will receive £1,000 for the operation. That is a reason for the discrepancies. That is why those systems are subject to such pressure.

In Britain, doctors agonise too much about whether to carry out an investigation or an operation. In demand-led private systems they do not think about that. They go ahead with the investigation or the treatment. I have worked in both systems, and that is what happens. It is part of the reason for the escalating costs in private systems, and that cannot be controlled in a demand-led system as opposed to a need-led system such as the National Health Service.

Mr. Ray Whitney (Wycombe): I wonder whether the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) saw the report in The Sunday Times which compared the experiences of a man in Bristol with that of a man in Germany. They had both had heart attacks, but the man in Bristol had to wait 15 months for his operation and was out of hospital within a week. The German was immediately given his heart operation and was given three weeks for recuperation in hospital and another six weeks of convalescence. That is another example of the service enjoyed by Germans compared with the British system.

Mr. Galbraith: The hon. Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney) has highlighted our case for the need for more money within the NHS to provide a better service.

Finally, the Minister made great play about primary care and how it is a way forward. The primary care sector is the backbone of our system. If we change to a demand-led system, we will eliminate primary care and people will be pushed off to specialists. For all those reasons, I should like us to consider no further the question of demand-led, private health care.

We cannot apply market forces to health care. The correct and proper system is the National Health Service. Resources are limited and we have to ration and use them properly. We want that rationing to be based on medical need, not on some nebulous demand stimulated by private finance. The most cost-effective and cost-efficient way of doing that is through the National Health Service. That is why Opposition Members wish to sustain the National Health Service, and ask that it be given more money.

7.28 pm

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman (Lancaster): In Lancaster we do not fear but welcome the Secretary of State's determination, put forward so forcefully, to compare costs and achievements in the regions, because we would do well on any tests so far devised and any he may put forward. We welcome the extra £100 million that the Government gave on 16 December. Contrary to the local gloomy forecast that Lancaster's share of the additional £5·8 million allocated to the north-west would be "negligible if anything", we got the largest district allocation of £600,000. That was good news for Lancaster and it goes some way towards meeting my plea that we need more money because 23 per cent. of our population are aged and need a great deal more care.

Twenty years ago in Lancaster the decision was taken to centralise hospital services on the Royal Lancaster infirmary site for midwifery, elderly services and acute services. Since then our programme has gone ahead steadily, except for the unfortunate check in 1978 referred to by many hon. Members when all hospital building was halted abruptly by the Labour Government because of the financial crisis. That delayed our progress, but phases 1 and 2 for maternity and elderly persons have been successfully completed. Phase 3 for acute services is at the planning stage, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health when he came to Morecambe in the autumn.

As new facilities are provided, old ones must close, and regrettably that leads to much heartache. The Beaumont hospital, which is to be closed, was built as a fever hospital with widely spread buildings to insure against cross infection. It is unsuited to modern needs and is wasteful of the time of doctors and nurses. It is definitely not in the best interests of the health services in Lancaster to campaign for it to remain open when the specialist facilities can be provided elsewhere. Discussions are now under way in the health authority to decide where to reprovide the specialist facilities currently provided at Beaumont. It is still in the melting pot, but if it is decided to provide them at the RLI—which, I believe, is the best place for them, because all the advanced support facilities are available on the spot—the building of a new ward block for ear, nose and throat, dental and neurology services could begin in April, and the £600,000 additional funding will cover most of the cost.

At the same time, the accident, emergency and intensive care facilities at the RLI will be upgraded. When I saw those facilities yet again at Christmas I was horrified by them. Given that we are near the motorway, where, sadly, many multiple accidents have occurred, it is absolutely essential to upgrade our emergency and intensive care services.

On Friday I received news that services will have to be reduced in the orthopaedic and accident and emergency departments, not because of a shortage of funds, but because we are short of six junior hospital doctors, for whom we have been adverising since October. We recruited one on Friday and we hope to fill the other posts in February. When we do, the facilities will again be opened. Another hospital in the north-west has had to close its maternity ward, for the excellent reason that 11 midwives are on maternity leave.

In Lancaster we are proud of our leading role in many aspects of health care. We lead in the proportion of our children who are immunised. Having a large elderly population, a year ago we purchased laser equipment for eye surgery. Because our citizens are intensely proud of our reputation for health care, since for many generations we have been the primary hospital area for the whole of the north of Lancashire, up to Cumbria, we have raised £10,000 to buy another keratometer to use in the eye unit, and the local service for cataract sufferers has been revolutionised. No longer must we send patients to Liverpool or Manchester for the measurement and supply of customised lenses. Some eye patients, who had to spend lengthy stays in hospital, can now return home the same day, or after only two days, and up to 160 patients per week can be dealt with at clinics.

The new techniques have reduced the numbers of beds required from 24 to 14. That is a reasonable way to reduce beds. Nobody can say that we have lost the beds; we have made them unnecessary because of the rapid treatment in that specialty. But I do not intend to let the Government off the hook. In our large district, which covers 170,000 people, we have only one orthoptist, and we would like another to detect the early stages of glaucoma and to treat squints in children

We are an efficient health district and our treatment costs compare favourably with those of other areas. Our good housekeeping keeps waste to a minimum. We had a limited list for drugs long before the Government brought it in. We are always looking for ways to improve efficiency and reduce unit costs. We never rest on our laurels. We believe in cash generation and, before it became the fashion, we were winning orders for outside laundry contracts to keep our modern machinery fully occupied and reduce the cost of our own laundry. Money allocated to Lancaster is never wasted. We would dearly like to build on the immense progress we have already made and to cut our waiting lists for miraculous treatments that we could not even have attempted a few years ago. We are determined to provide for our citizens in the future, as we have in the past, the highest standard of health care that modern techniques can achieve. We are looking to the Minister and his colleagues to ensure that we get a fair share of the health cake.

7.35 pm

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): Despite the crystal ball gazing of my friend from past years, the right hon. Member for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson), I agree with the [Rev. Martin Smyth]

Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry which said that for the foreseeable future health care will spring predominantly from the Health Service. It is important to put on record the words of the association's director of public and economic affairs, who said:

"But ideologically based criticisms of the NHS and/or its funding and performance from both the extreme left and the extreme right which exaggerated . . . its failings should not be allowed to obscure the successes of the British health care system."

I believe that would be the view of most people and most hon. Members.

In the light of the pressures on the Health Service, the only real grain of comfort I got from the Secretary of State was when he said that this is the 40th anniversary of the Health Service. I was reminded of the old saying that life begins at forty, so there is hope that we can build on the success of the past.

The question from the right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen), which was not answered, was not whether the recommendation should be funded but, if the Government decide on a salary increase, whether that would be funded fully by the Health Service rather than the health authorities. That has been the source of tremendous discontent and problems in the past.

It is difficult to find factors to assess efficiency. Some authorities and hospitals are seeking to change the system of health care by providing more day care in hospitals, but the National Audit Office did a survey at midnight, so those hospitals that were efficiently using beds during the day were penalised. It would be better to take audits at midnight and noon to establish the real use of beds. The National Audit Office has taken figures on the use of operating theatres which showed that some hospitals had a high usage of theatres. On closer scrutiny it may have been discovered that the nursing staff and theatres were ready for the operations, but on many occasions the surgeon was not in post, so the theatres, as well as the equipment and staff, were not being used efficiently. I make that point to remind us all that it is not just a simple matter of assessing efficiency; other factors must be borne in mind.

I hope that when the Minister replies to the debate there will be an understanding that the funding of the National Health Service should not only keep pace with the growth of GDP — if I understood the Secretary of State's statement correctly—but should raise the proportion of GDP to meet need throughout the nation.

I am speaking particularly as a representative of Northern Ireland. The hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) said that Wales was the most deprived area of Britain. I do not wish to bandy figures, but the region that I represent suffers from the highest number of deaths from cancer of the colon, which is 30 per cent. higher than other regions, diabetes is 25 per cent. higher and ischaemic heart disease is 60 per cent. higher. Unemployment is also higher than in any other region, which accordingly has a health impact.

I know that expenditure on health in the region is 25 per cent. greater than that for England and Wales, but professionals in the service say that it does not meet the present need.

I regret that recently there was a public dispute between the Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for health care in Northern Ireland and the chairman of the Eastern Health and Social Services Board, who is a careful economist. He judiciously chooses his words, and during his chairmanship there has been a tremendous increase in efficiency. The area caters for more people than in any other region in the United Kingdom not only in the health sector, but in social services as well.

It is necessary to take a hard look at the facts. In Northern Ireland, between June 1981 and June 1987, not in exotic surgery or treatments but in everyday medical care, there was a 16 per cent. increase in ear, nose and throat cases, a 56·5 per cent. increase in plastic surgery and a 51·7 per cent. increase in general surgery waiting lists, despite the acknowledged efficiency of the Province. We are faced, as is every other part of the nation, with the challenge of our own success. It is to that that we must direct our attention.

I used normal surgery as an illustration rather than what I called exotic surgery because those who can paint a dramatic picture of need in particular specialist cases —heart surgery, renal treatment and such like—often use emotional blackmail, which catches the imagination of some of the media, and indulges in a bit of queue-jumping. I find some measure of concern in that practice.

I have no axe to grind about the use of private medical care. It is obnoxious, however, that a person can be admitted to a National Health Service hospital because of clinical need and great pain but be told by the specialist at the hospital who is attending him, having obtained him that bed, "I cannot operate on you for 15 months, but if you go private I can do it very shortly."

There is something equally obnoxious in the case of a young man who had private insurance that covered his mother as an elderly person who managed to obtain treatment for her, without difficulty, in a National Health Service hospital. We may quibble about the use of a private bed in that instance, but when that insurance ran out, the specialist said, "I can no longer treat you." That is a reflection on the tension between the National Health Service and private health care.

I agree with the right hon. Member for Brent, North that where the treatment is given does not matter as long as we ensure that it is given. However, in many cases, it has not been given as it should have been.

The Eastern Health and Social Services Board has been told that the Government have said that the increase in services for Northern Ireland will be 5·3 per cent. That is 1 per cent. less than England and Wales are receiving, even though the board has made efficiency savings of 1 per cent. With a higher level of provision than England and Wales, it is discovering that it will run into greater difficulties in the coming year.

At a time when the Treasury is reporting tremendous surpluses, the House should reflect the views of the nation. The average citizen would prefer not to have his tax reduced if cutting taxes meant that the level of health care would not be maintained.

7.46 pm

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): I am delighted to follow the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. M. Smyth). He and I have campaigned politically together and as members of the Social Services Select Committee.

As has been mentioned once already during the debate, the Committee will tomorrow be taking evidence from the presidents of the three royal colleges — Messrs. Todd, Hoffenberg, and Pinker. Perhaps one of the questions that we shall put to those three distinguished members of the medical profession is whether they believe that the doctors and consultants in the Health Service honour to the letter their contract with the Health Service. I hope that we shall receive a truthful answer, because while some members of the medical profession have been highly critical of Government — the Government have a major role to play in solving the current resourcing crisis in the Health Service — the medical profession, the doctors and consultants, have a major role to play in contributing to the solution of the problem with which the Health Service is faced.

My speech will be short. It will contain few sterile statistics, which unfortunately have been the hallmark of debates such as this and exchanges across the Dispatch Box. Having spoken to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, I know that he hopes that solutions to the problems, and perhaps an element of all-party agreement on some of those solutions, might be the order of the day in the future rather than trading statistics about who did what and when. While statistics were relevant in the debate last November if one is comparing what Socialist and Conservative Governments have done, this debate is not the time for trading statistics. This is the time for solutions that will help to cure the severe resourcing problems of the Health Service.

I take my responsibilities as a member of the Select Committee on Social Services extremely seriously. My uninterrupted service of some 13 years to that Committee has given me contacts with those who work within the Health Service at all levels. Those contacts have been extremely useful to me and, I hope, have given me an understanding of the problems faced by the Health Service.

Perhaps it would be appropriate at this stage and an illustration of the all-party approach if I said that the new Chairman of the Social Services Select Committee, the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), would normally be here wishing to participate, but he has had to attend a funeral in the West Midlands. The hon. Gentleman will be back in the House tonight but, sadly, he and I may be in different Lobbies.

I believe that the Select Committee, by undertaking its new inquiry into the resourcing of the NHS, will play a vital role in seeking to find some of the solutions to the problems facing the Health Service. Those problems are serious. I only wish that, when my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister exchanges remarks, questions and statistics with the Leader of the Opposition, she said, "We are proud of what we have done in the Health Service. We have provided more money than any other Government in the Health Service, but there are serious problems. I recognise that, but how can we solve them?"

Mr. Christopher Gill (Ludlow): Does my hon. Friend agree that so far in this debate there has been a presumption—evident on both sides of the Chamber—that additional funding is the only answer to the problems? Will the Committee give serious consideration to the structure and management of the Health Service?

Mr. Winterton: Certainly there is an assumption that more money is required and I must tell my hon. Friend that I intend to urge the Secretary of State—I am sorry to see that he has left his place, no doubt for just a moment —that, in the short term, the only way to solve the severe crisis in resourcing that exists in many district health authorities is a further amount of money from central Government.

I note that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State is taking prolific notes at this moment. I am seeking an assurance from the Front Bench that the necessary money will be available. I also believe that the Government should set up, as a matter of urgency, an inquiry into the long-term resourcing of the Health Service and that that inquiry should report before the end of the year. I do not believe that there should be a Royal Commission, because that would take far too long—a minimum of two years. I do not believe that the inquiries taking place within the Department will be enough to deal with the fundamental problems facing the Health Service.

As a member of the Select Committee, may I give my hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) the catetorical assurance that the matters to which he referred — the management of the Health Service and its structure—will be part of the inquiry undertaken by the Committee. My hon. Friend's question has brought me to other matters of consideration because I believe that we must look at alternative forms of resourcing the NHS.

We should consider whether that funding would include the extension of private medical assurance and the additional involvement of the private sector in the operation of the NHS. Such involvement is already taking place to some extent in some district health authorities. We must also consider whether we should extend the contracting-out of services that are currently undertaken in-house within the NHS. We should consider further privatisation and hotel charges. I also believe that we should consider—the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mrs. Barnes) made a similar suggestion—the use of national and local lotteries to raise additional funds.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Sir B. Hayhoe) spoke at some considerable length on the basis of his experience in various Government Departments. I believe that the Government must control the Treasury rather than the Treasury control the Government. If we raise extra money for the Health Service I believe that it is wrong that the Treasury should automatically deduct that sum from the money that it would otherwise give towards the running of the NHS. I hope that the Chancellor and other Ministers are of the right calibre and competence to counter any such activity at the Treasury.

Mr. Ian Taylor (Esher): When the Select Committee is considering this problem, will it also take into account the attitude of the Treasury to splitting out a tax charge as part of the tax system? I hope that my hon. Friend would agree that, if we continue with a tax-based financing of the NHS, it remains almost impossible for the public to understand what it is that they are contributing to health care.

Mr. Winterton: I am delighted to have the opportunity to answer that question. Perhaps I could refer my hon. Friend to an excellent article that appered in the Sunday Telegraph on 17 January. A five-nation survey was undertaken and reports were produced on Germany, France, Russia, America, Italy and the United Kingdom. Mention was also made of New Zealand. In the introduction to the survey, Martin Ivens said:

"Like Britain, New Zealand is one of the few countries to pay public hospitals for their costs, not what they actually do. An official report to be published soon"—

[Mr. Winterton]

in New Zealand, I understand—

"is expected to recommend privatising the hospitals and making patients pay for treatment."

I am not suggesting such a policy for the United Kingdom because I remain convinced that, in the main, the NHS should be free at the point of delivery—it is not free as such, because we pay for it in taxation and other ways.

May I pick up a point made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson)? I do not go along with many of the things that my right hon. Friend said about marketing the NHS and denationalising the Health Service. However, my right hon. Friend did warn the Front Bench—we should take note of such warning —that the Health Service is the Achilles heel of the Government. Indeed, to pick up an expression that my right hon. Friend used, the Health Service could become the albatross for the Government unless we are seen not only to understand the problems, but also to tackle them in a meaningful way.

I hope that my suggestions will come out in the recommendations from the Select Committee. Indeed, we will be producing interim reports because we are undertaking a major inquiry into the NHS. We must provide additional resources for the NHS.

The hon. Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Litherland) spoke with great passion about the Manchester royal infirmary. I have a number of constituents who are consultants at that hospital. I have visited the MRI in a private capacity; otherwise I would have notified the hon. Gentleman, and have spoken not only to the management, but to some of the leading consultants. That hospital faces a serious crisis in resources and it must be tackled by Government. The Under-Secretary may turn away in disgust at what I have said, but I assure her that there is a crisis.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mrs. Edwina Currie): I am noting down what my hon. Friend says.

Mr. Winterton: I am glad that some of what I have said is being noted.

The MRI is a centre of excellence and a leading teaching hospital in the centre of Manchester and part of the central Manchester health district, which is part of the North Western regional health authority. Its catchment area is relatively small. However, that hospital draws in from a wide area because it is a teaching hospital and a centre of excellence. I believe that the Government must pay special attention to hospitals such as that.

I believe that the Government mean what they say when they speak of value for money. Can it be right that in the Macclesfield district health authority an expensive and excellently equipped first phase of a district general hospital, costing some £18 million, should have two of its important acute wards closed at this time? Is that value for money? Is that bringing a return on the substantial capital investment? No, it is not.

However, there is more that is wrong. The consultants have been co-operating with the management of that district to bring about the savings that the Government have urged all district health authorities to make, but is it right that the management should say to those consultants that they must reduce their theatre sessions? Are they going to go out on the golf course or undertake m private practice? I urge them to fulfil their National He Service contracts to the letter. However, what happen they cannot fulfil their NHS contracts to the le because, for example, they cannot use the operat theatre to carry out the operations for which there waiting lists? The Government did well on waiting until last October when the crisis developed. Waiting li which were falling, are now beginning to increase ag That is a very serious matter.

I pay tribute to my right hon. Friend the Minister Health, who met a delegation led by me just bef Christmas. He heard at first hand of some of the proble with Macclesfield health district. In spite of what media and some hon. Members say, the problems fac the Health Service have arisen not because of cuts because of the Health Service's outstanding success. I because of the success of the managers — follow Griffiths — consultants, doctors, nurses and all N staff. Medical techniques have advanced so fast in rec years that we can now carry out operations that were m pipe dreams a year or two ago. We are now treating m patients in our hospitals. The replacement of joints— just hips but ankles, knees, elbows and wrists—is n possible but the operations cost a great deal.

The Health Service is precious to all the people of t country and to most Conservative Members. I urge Government not only to provide a further sum to help Health Service through the present crisis but to set up urgent inquiry into the long-term resourcing of the Hea Service so that we can continue to be proud of the fin health service in the world.

8.1 pm

Mr. Eddie Loyden (Liverpool, Garston): I listen carefully to the remarks of the hon. Member Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton). It is encouraging to n that there are Conservative Members who recognise value of the Health Service.

It is important that we should remind ourselves that legislation that brought the Health Service into being 1948, introduced by the then Labour Government, v probably the most progressive for many years. In th respect, it may not have been superseded since. Like oth hon. Members, I can remember when there was National Health Service and compare the health care the pre-war period with that following 1948, when Health Service was established. It is because they are a to make such comparisons that people outside the Hou recognise the importance of the Health Service and prepared to defend it at all costs. That is why there been such an outcry from the public at large. As they it, and indeed as we perceive it, the recent deterioration the National Health Service has reached cri proportions.

The establishment of the Health Service largely end the appalling and unacceptable pre-war divisions in administering of health care. We must remember how working classes were treated during that period. T poverty of the working classes and the environment which they lived resulted in almost daily visits by hears arriving to carry away young children or their mothers fathers. The life expectancy of such people was drastica shortened because the conditions that prevailed caus widespread and serious disease and illnesses. We saw t great value of the Health Service and the benefits that accrued from it when we watched the first generation of post-war babies growing up.

Especially after having listened to the Secretary of State this afternoon, Opposition Members are concerned at the way in which statistics have been to the fore in our debates on the National Health Service. Those outside the House who are worried about the Health Service are not concerned about the accusations or statistics that have been bandied about every time that the NHS has been debated in this House — particularly by the Prime Minister, who has ignored Opposition, and sometimes Conservative, warnings that the statistics disguised the reality at the coal face of the National Health Service.

Many hon. Members are more sensitive about this subject than they were, because there have been clear signs of the decline in standards in the areas that they represent. That decline cannot be measured by statistics. It is seen in the number of people waiting for hospital treatment, in the number of beds that have been withdrawn, in the closures and in a whole range of factors which are recognisable and which have been identified by patients and their families —those who are directly involved. They know about the decline in the National Health Service.

I do not want to bandy statistics around to verify the argument that the crisis exists. I am glad that the hon. Member for Macclesfield recognised that the Health Service is a regime. That regime includes people who may not be directly associated with medical care but who are as necessary as nurses, doctors and other hospital staff. It includes those who provide patient care in other ways— who keep our hospitals clean or provide direct services to hospitals. Frankly, those people have been treated most callously by this Government, with the result that this concept of patient care has changed. Patient care must include the role of the person who pushes the trolley that takes patients to the treatment room.

Let me give an example from my constituency. An 83-year-old woman waited for three and a half hours to be moved to the place where the ambulance would pick her up. That is one of many examples of the stresses unnecessarily caused to patients and arising from the changes that have taken place among ancillary staffs in hospitals, whose role is as important as the role of anyone else in the hospital. It is paramount that we should view the Health Service as a total regime. The decline started with the privatisation of cleaning and other services, which has left a bad taste in most people's mouths and has led to a deterioration of standards.

Those of us who sought the establishment of the Health Service saw the great benefits that derived from it. Opposition Members recognise the importance of the steps taken to end the scandalously poor health care available to hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of people in this country. The first post-war generation exerted pressure on the Government and made it clear that they were not prepared to return to local authority hospitals. It is ironic that Conservative Members should argue for a return of the control of hospitals to the local authorities, while at the same time slashing local authority funding. When hospitals were under local authority and charitable control, the care given most people was of a very low standard indeed. We all have a responsibility to ensure that that legislation that transformed the health care of people in this country, which, quite frankly, has been in decline for several years, must be arrested.

Statistics cannot alter the fact that there is a w ranging crisis in the National Health Service which n to be tackled now, not in a year or two or later, follow inquiries. The Government must respond to wha happening. They must recognise that people are wai for treatment but not getting it; that people have b moved out of hospital too quickly, only to return, and t many people, especially old people, are waiting cataract operations that they cannot have for the nex months or two years. My wife attended Clatterbri hospital as a cancer sufferer. She was turned back times because the machines were not functioning. Tha the state that the National Health Service has got into o the years.

I hope that this debate will not be meaningless but t the Secretary of State will take it on board. I hope tha will end the jargon of statistics and that the Governm will recognise the reality of the situation in the Hea Service and the fact that it needs immediate and urg attention—which means funding to ensure that peo who are waiting for treatment get that treatment. T Government should ensure that hospital services brought back to the standards that those who establish it envisaged, not only for that time but for the future. was envisaged that there would be constant improvemen rather than constant decline, in the National Hea Service.

We believe that the National Health Service is not o worth defending, but that standards should rise. should ensure the standard of health care to which c people are entitled. I advise Conservative Members th the most important investment that any country can ma in its people is the investment in their health care. Witho that, all else is meaningless. One cannot achie production or the type of society that one wants if one do not provide the Health Service and health care that t people of this country need.

8.11 pm

Mr. Roger King (Birmingham, Northfield): The city Birmingham and, I suppose, the West Midlands regio health authority have been much in the news recently f various reasons, which centre, possibly almost exclusivel on the role of the Birmingham children's hospital.

It was apposite of my right hon. Friend the Secreta of State to say in his opening speech that much has be achieved by the Health Service during the past nine yea under the Conservative Government. Indeed, a great de of evidence is available in Birmingham and the we midlands to support that achievement. We can boast many successes in terms of extra doctors and nurses a the number of family doctors has increased during the pa few years. There has also been a reduction in the chi death rate and in the number of stillborn births.

In Birmingham the improvement that has been broug about by the £4 million reduction in costs has meant th that sum is available for improving patient care. Th number of staff has increased. In Birmingham, fo example, the hospitals now employ over 800 more nurs than in 1979. The statistics are fairly substantial and mo people, whatever their view, would accept that a enormous amount has been achieved since 1979. Th trouble is that politicians jump on certain bandwagons t try to point out and identify areas in which there a problems.

[Mr. Roger King]

The Birmingham children's hospital does have problems. It does not have its full complement of nurses for intensive care. Such nurses are not available, despite national advertising. Training such nurses takes time and there is nowhere else, outside London, where such training takes place. The West Midlands regional health authority has taken the initiative and is to start to train its own nurses in the hope that out of the 12 who start to train shortly, provided agreement can be reached with the nursing unions, most will stay in the west midlands area and at the Birmingham children's hospital.

Operating on young children is not a straightforward task. One cannot simply say that on 25 February one will give a certain child a major operation on his or her heart. Whether the operation takes place is dependent on the state of the child when the operation day arrives. The child may not be well enough to take the difficult and intricate operations that are carried out at that hospital.

Some of the publicity during the past few weeks has perhaps put hospital staff under tremendous pressure when making decisions which may not always be in the interests of the child, but are certainly in the interests of responding to widespread public feeling. The decision to operate is difficult for consultants and it is not pleasant for them to see television cameras and news reporters outside the children's hospital waiting for the latest crisis to emerge.

It is not helpful for Members of Parliament to place great emphasis on the problems in their community. I draw attention to the outrage that occurred in this House during prayers on the first day that we were back when the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Hughes) made a great crusade. Obviously he felt strongly about a child, presumably in his constituency, who was being denied an operation. It was a life and death situation. One would have hoped that the hon. Gentleman might have been present today to give us further background on his problems and that he would not have had recourse to such cheap publicity. As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said during Question Time this afternoon, the consultant of the child in question does not want to operate for another 12 months or so. That decision has been made to ensure that the child stands a good chance of recovering from a difficult operation when he or she has the strength to undergo it, not when a politician demands it. We are owed an explanation by that Member of Parliament.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North) rose——

Mr. King: No, I shall not give way. Time is pressing and other colleagues want to have a say, so I must get on.

When one considers the funding of the National Health Service, there are obvious opportunities to improve the resources available to the Health Service. We want to know where our money is going. We want to be absolutely certain that a pound that is given to the Health Service is a pound that is spent on hospital and patient care. Arguments are made about tax cuts versus extra resources for the Health Service. We need to be reminded that 1 million people work for the Health Service. Unfortunately, those people usually receive a low income. I am certain that they benefit enormously from the tax cuts that we have given during the past few years and that they will benefit again when my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has his say at Budget time. It is right to point that because Opposition Members are always saying t Health Service workers receive low pay. However, w the Government try to bring their pay up to an accepta level, using the mechanism of tax cuts, that is acceptable either.

I recently appeared on the Kilroy-Silk programme fr an excellent private hospital in Birmingham to talk ab the problems of the NHS. Following that programm mother who was having difficulty obtaining an operat for her child asked me, "Where has all the money gone the Health Service?" I explained to her that we w putting record sums of money into the Health Servic told her that she was in a building that had been crea because of resources that had been taken out of the He Service because private patient treatment used to be p of the National Health Service responsibility many ye ago. Those private patients were thrown out of National Health Service as a result of doctrinaire decisi by the then Labour Government. Their money has g into the creation of new private hospitals. Therefore, t large extent, many of the resources that the Health Ser used to have have gone elsewhere, to the detriment of Health Service.

Miss Mowlam rose——

Mr. King: I repeat that time is pressing and many h Members wish to speak, so I must get on.

The concept of free health, as we have understoo since 1948, when disposable incomes were non-exist because people had a job to house, feed and clo themselves, is inapplicable now. They could not decid have a new car or a continental holiday or anything like that. Therefore, a free Health Service at the point receipt was well received at the time. However, things h changed. Although we need extra resources in the He Service, I want those resources to be bought by prospective patients themselves. National insura contributions could be reduced by a significant amou provided that we established the principle that those w could afford it—not those of pensionable age, those low incomes and the unemployed—would pay 50 cent. towards the cost of their operations.

What would those people do in turn? To guarantee t they did not pay the 50 per cent., they would take out insurance policy. And who would offer the best insura policies? I hope that the hospitals themselves would o competitive opportunities and treatments to patients their areas and regions. I see no reason why such a syst could not be introduced.

We should also look at reorganisation of the He Service. To a degree, the service is too closely attached this Parliament. Perhaps we should look at a British he corporation, which could operate at arm's length, whose board and chairman could be given the money told to get on with the job of running the Health Serv

I also believe that some of our specialist hospit which are wrapped up in the general morass of the He Service — examples are the Birmingham childr hospital, the Queen Elizabeth hospital, the orthopa hospital at Oswestry and the Great Ormond street hosp —could be taken out of the existing organisation areas, regions or districts in which they now operate, put under a single national hospital organisation. organisation of hospitals of excellence could well extr a substantial income from voluntary contributions through a national lottery. The trouble with a national lottery is that the £100 million or so that it would raise for the National Health Service would go a very short way to providing extra services all over the country. However, if the resources went only to hospitals of excellence, they would go a substantial way.

The challenge that now faces us is neither an Achilles heel nor an albatross around our necks. It is an exciting opportunity for us to get the Health Service right. We need to start a series of debates such as this, in which we can debate new ideas and exchange our visions of the future.

We are not talking about updating the service, or reverting to 1948. We are planning for a Health Service for the year 2000 and for the next century. This debate should form the groundwork for a national debate on what future structure the Health Service should take. It is a great challenge for the Government.

8.21 pm

Mr. Dennis Turner (Wolverhampton, South-East): It is said that we live in hope and die in despair. I further despair after listening to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King). What he said shows clearly the dilemma faced by the Government and their supporters in their attitude to, and philosophy on, the National Health Service.

The hon. Member for Northfield demonstrated, to me at least, that he is echoing one of the views of the Conservative party that is the most worrying to people in this country who cherish the National Health Service and wish us to address ourselves to the problems that it faces, not to misrepresent the difficulties of sick people who should be receiving our attention tonight.

Since I was elected in June, rather than thinking in party-political terms, I have sought to represent the interests of the people of Wolverhampton and the west midlands in facing up to our health problems. In my maiden speech, I mentioned that, in the last few weeks before the general election, 85 people in Wolverhampton had been turned away from hospitals in the town. I also said—and it was not challenged, then or subsequently, by the Minister—that we had lost £3·9 million from our budget since 1983. A more local issue, but a very deeply felt and sensitive one, was the reduction by 50 per cent. of the provision of incontinence pads for the elderly and the disabled.

On 7 December, I was kindly allowed to contribute to the debate on the Health and Medicines Bill. I was able then to illustrate the problems that faced Wolverhampton by pointing out that three people had died in recent weeks as a result of not being admitted to hospital, because no beds were available. Four hundred people had been refused admission, although, again, they were seriously ill. I also pointed out that we were experiencing considerable difficulties with the temporary renal unit, which could not meet the needs of kidney patients.

The Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), was present at that debate on 7 December; indeed, she wound up for the Government. She did not challenge the point that I made, although she had the opportunity to do so.

Miss Mowlam: The hon. Lady is not even listening now.

Mr. Turner: I do not believe that she was listening when I spoke last time. Perhaps there is something wrong with me. I do not know. However, my voice is coming acr more clearly tonight. In any case, I shall continue, ever the Minister is not listening.

One can imagine how people in Wolverhampton felt. contrast to the argument that, while we know that thi are bad, they are getting better, I am trying to illustr that, in Wolverhampton, things are getting worse. I kn that we have certain views about the accuracy of the pre however, on one occasion the press reporting w accurate. Let me give the House a picture of developme in our hospital service during the Christmas period. Fi we saw:

"114 more beds to close".

They were at the Royal and New Cross hospitals. Ne we read:

"All admissions to town's hospitals temporar suspended".

"Patients threaten to chain themselves to beds to preve closure."

"Surgeons in scathing attack on Heath Service funding

The hon. Member for Northfield talked abo Birmingham, and said that the focus was on the childre hospital. No doubt he saw the headline announcing th 18 cancer sufferers at the Queen Elizabeth hospital h died as a result of not being able to receive the treatme that they needed. We met many parents and little childr yesterday whom the Prime Minister did not see. We ha seen the cases of David Barber and Matthew Collier, a we are all very pleased——

Mr. Winnick: In view of what was said by the hon Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King), does m hon. Friend agree that the reason that my constituents M and Mrs. Collier went public was that the child was give an appointment—not admission—only at the end February? The only reason that he was not admitted w that there were no beds available. It was agreed th Matthew should have an operation as quickly as possib and, in those circumstances, the parents decided that the was no alternative but to go public. They were right to d so. If I was of any assistance, I am very pleased. I hop as we all do, that Matthew will recover fully and will li a long life. As to the Queen Elizabeth hospital, is he awar that when I visited the hospital on the same day two week ago that I visited the children's hospital, I was told that 2 beds in the section dealing with cancer patients had bee closed last year?

Mr. Turner: My hon. Friend has made a valid poin that the problem in both hospitals is a shortage of bed Wolverhampton hospitals in all the acute specialties, wit the exception of ophthalmics, are short of beds. As I sai on 7 December, in some cases the shortage is as great a 50 per cent. The case has been made for Birmingham a it has been for Wolverhampton.

The Department belatedly and reluctantly responded t the crisis by giving the non-recurring £700 million, whic we were told was equivalent to £6·7 million for the wes midlands and £200,000 for Wolverhampton, which wi have to meet a deficit of £650,000 by 31 March. How ca that contribution of £200,000 be reconciled to the crisi that we will face at 31 March and, indeed, the impossibi task of meeting the 1 per cent. efficiency demands tha apparently will be made for 1988-89?

There is non-reality about where we are moving i 1988. We can see no hope, only despair, for the people w represent in Wolverhampton. It is not a party-politica issue. We are stating the case on behalf of the people tha we care about. The greatest contribution that the Minister could make for the Government would be to give us a full and total commitment to the principles and values of a national, centrally-funded Health Service available to all at the point of need. We should start to restore the faith and confidence of all who work in the Health Service. We should acknowledge properly their skills and ability. Further, we need at least £1 billion to begin the process of putting the heart back into our National Health Service.

[Mr. Turner]

8.33 pm

Mr. Robert McCrindle (Brentwood and Ongar): My basic approach to the debate is that there are no simple solutions to the dilemma in which we find ourselves in the National Health Service. Anyone who speaks to the contrary is misleading the people whom we represent. There is certainly no point in pouring funds in without a real understanding of the nature of the problems that confront us. I was struck by the fact that the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) talked about nothing else but the need to provide additional funds. Many of us would concede that that has a part to play in solving the problems, but to say that that alone is the matter to which we should turn our attention is wholly misleading.

I find it equally unacceptable to contemplate what I think my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson) calls the privatisation of the National Health Service if by that he means the selling of hospitals and the provision of health vouchers to the population. That is unacceptable, although it is different altogether from saying that I am other than a firm supporter of the private sector in health care. I want to see that expanding and playing a more vital role in total health provision. Apart from believing that the proposals of my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North are politically unsaleable, I believe that in 1988—things may change in the years ahead—the majority of the people continue to support a National Health Service which is funded predominantly by taxation. I repeat that that is different from saying that there is no argument for additional sources, but I do not believe that we should lose sight of the fact that the National Health Service as we have known it for 40 years remains basically acceptable to the vast majority of people.

As in most things, the likeliest solution to the problems of the NHS may lie in what I shall probably be ridiculed for calling the middle way. That means that sufficient funds must be made available in the short term but that Her Majesty's Government must simultaneously take a grip on the many administrative difficulties which in turn may require the establishment of a swift, meaningful examination by an impartial body. I listened with interest to the suggestion of my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton). He is correct in saying that we do not need a Royal Commission, but I am less persuaded about whether we can be so certain that we understand all the basic administrative problems.

I suspect that sufficient funds are available — they have already been allocated — but there are two immediate areas of concern to which the Government should pay attention and for which funds must be provided, if they are not available, within the additional sums that will come forth in the next financial year—a point, incidentally, to which very few hon. Members have paid attention. We keep pressing for more expen the next financial year without recognising that w know that a substantial amount of addition expenditure will be forthcoming as a result of the Statement.

The Government must accept that if there is pay award in the next few months at the same l as that for last year of 8 per cent., they must pay cent. They must not accept the award and pass the responsibility for meeting it to regions authorities. If they do that this year, as happened the additional 4 per cent. which will have to co existing budgets can be found only by a red patient care. We should not countenance that.

There is a strong case for the restructuring c pay so as to provide incentives to attract people i specialties where, as the popular press has been over the past few weeks, there is an acute short

In the short term, there is also a strong argu again targeting a limited amount of funds at the of waiting lists. The success of last year's effo minimal resources, was such that I recommend to Friend the Under-Secretary of State that consideration be given this time, not to targetin lists in general, but to taking note that in some pa country the waiting lists for kidney and operations are in all conscience far too long. Wh this occasion we should target the additional reso to waiting lists as such but to the ailments in r which we know there long waiting lists is w exploration.

Beyond that, additional funds may still be That will be so only after we have cleared our ov as to exactly where money is required. I repeat t is no advantage in saying indiscriminately that w invest more in the Health Service without being to the reasons why the Health Service is in diffi

Let me give the House some examples of the c I believe must be answered before we have a clea the direction of additional funds. Why, for ex there such a disparity in the efficiency of distri authorities? Why are waiting lists in one area so from waiting lists in another? It cannot b accidental. Is bed management better in some ar there bed managers in some areas but not in oth should they be a requirement? Do we need—d it in quite basic terms that I know will provo people outside the House—regional health auth all? We seem to have survived perfectly well with health authorities, which were considered to be before 1974.

What future role is there for the private sector there not be more cross-fertilisation with the N should we not have more choice within the NHS development of an internal market? We need an all these questions, but they need not necessarily additional resources. If the answers to these point more money, then I would willingly go along w This is again a personal viewpoint, but I would forgo some of the tax cuts to which we can look if that is the way to achieve it. I believe that we ca desirable tax cuts and the desirable increase in exp necessary for the Health Service.

What we must not do is convince ourselves tha is needed is to throw money at the problem. We n establish priorities. Again I say to my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State that there seem to be a myriad of inquiries within the Department of Health and Social Security, and within health regions and health districts. It is high time that there was some co-ordination of all these inquiries. Indeed, if I were to send just one message to the Secretary of State, it would be that it is time for him to take a grip of the National Health Service, and no longer to be pushed around and fobbed off by some of the representations made in recent months by the health regions and districts and by trades unions. If in the process he can come close to taming the bureaucratic monster, as my hon. Friend the Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) has rightly described it, so much the better.

I should like to add some random final thoughts. The blood transfusion service, a main centre of which is in my constituency at Brentwood, provides and has provided in the past a great service to the people of this country. I was alarmed to notice, however, during the recent King's Cross disaster that we only just managed to cope with what was by some measurements a fairly small disaster. I wonder whether there is a case, as I see suggested in the press today, for greater centralisation of the supply of blood so that we can co-ordinate it to a greater extent and make sure in the event of such disasters that there is never a suggestion of a shortage of these necessary supplies.

Mrs. Currie: I hesitate to interrupt the excellent flow of my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle). I have been listening to him with great interest. As he knows, I attended the hospitals on the night of the King's Cross disaster, and I was repeatedly assured that there was no problem with the supply of blood. The patients there did not require blood; their problem was that, because they were burnt, they needed albumin. That is a highly specialised material which tends to be produced only on demand in small quantities. That is why the hospitals had to call for the material from Scotland. I was never at any time told that there was a problem with the supply of blood.

Mr. McCrindle: My hon. Friend had the advantage of being there, and I have had to rely on press reports, which I hope she has seen in the past few days. They show that my point was valid, but if it was not I am happy to withdraw it.

I do not think my hon. Friend's remarks invalidate what I have said — that, while the blood transfusion service has done a lot for the country in the past few years, there is perhaps a case for seeing whether greater centralisation is called for.

Another hobby horse to which I must turn my attention is the funding for the Thames regional health authority. It is high time that RAWP was overhauled. When it was introduced, many of us were prepared to accept that our level of provision was good, whereas that was not the case in Liverpool, Huddersfield or Manchester. With the greatest respect, and bearing in mind that my hon. Friend the Minister represents a Derbyshire constituency, I say that we are now suffering after several years of the operation of RAWP. I also remind the Minister that the former Secretary of State for Social Services promised me in October 1986 that a report would shortly be received concerning the revision of RAWP. So far, that report does not seem to be forthcoming. It is an inordinately long time to wait, and the level of patient care has endangered as a result of the progressive funding parts of the country in preference to the Thames

I do not suggest for one moment that we should provision that we make for other parts of the coun if it means that we need additional resources so four Thames regions can obtain some advantage, would have to say to my hon. Friend that it is hi consideration was given to that.

I repeat my fundamental conviction that mor are required in the short term, but much more be required if we are to reshape our National Health to meet the requirements of 1988. It is crucial to re that. If more funds are needed, then so be it, having willed the end we must will the means.

8.46 pm

Mr. David Hinchliffe (Wakefield): One of m Friends, who unfortunately is not in the Chambe refers to the "clockwork parrot" from Downing stre appears twice weekly to churn out endless cold sta I prefer to regard her as a heartless, aged ostric comes here, with her head in the sand, denying th that are presented to her daily about what is happe the National Health Service under the Government.

The vital issue in the debate is how to g Government to accept what is happening througho land at local level to the National Health Service. refer briefly, Mr. Deputy Speaker — I apprecia need to be brief — to the situation that prevails constituency, and the difficulty that I have experien getting a response from the Government.

I am passed from the district health authority regional health authority, and from that authority Government. The Government blame the DHA a RHA. It is a buck-passing exercise second to certainly in my area, and, I have no doubt, elsewh the country.

On 11 September, I wrote a six-page letter to the U Secretary, who never listens when I am speaking, sick and tired of addressing the hon. Lady who cons and deliberately ignores the points I am making. I in September a six-page letter about the cuts packag affected people in my constituency. I saw the hon. subsequently and she promised to reply to me. I letter back on 5 October referring to what she calle proposed changes" in health services in Wakefield, n fact that the Health Service was being systematicall down before my very eyes.

On 26 November we had a debate in the House, was told off for speaking too long. I spoke for abo minutes detailing the situation facing my constitue should like to remind the House of those points, be the situation has not changed. If anything, it is wors are talking about the closure and sell-off of Snapet hospital, the most modern hospital in my constitu and the failure to open a ward at Clayton hospital. E this week, I did receive an answer from the Mi saying that it was nothing to do with her. The auth cannot open the ward, which has had thousands of po spent on it in an improvement programme, beca cannot afford the staff.

We have also seen the introduction of an alle unsafe cook-chill system of catering, again to bring a saving with the local health service. Within the past year, 38 acute beds have been closed when there is a 25 per cent. increase in the waiting list for these beds.

[Mr. David Hinchliffe]

When the cuts package was agreed, the consultant representative on the health authority said that, quite clearly, that action would increase morbidity and mortality rates. That will affect my constituents.

I had no response from the Minister to the points that I made in a 20-minute speech. There was not one comment from the Minister in her wind-up at half-past nine. I went up to her afterwards in front of the Prime Minister, and she will recall that I asked her why she had not responded to my problems in Wakefield. She said that she had not got enough time to respond.

So I wrote to her on 3 December asking for detailed responses to the points I had made about the problems in my health service in Wakefield. I have had no response six weeks later—not one letter back from her about the situation we are facing in the health authority in my area. Since the last debate, we have had an additional allocation of some £4·7 million to the Yorkshire regional health authority, but I have made the point to the hon. Lady in the Health and Medicines Bill Committee that that will not even restore the cuts that have been agreed in my health authority during the last few years directly as a result of Government underfunding.

My hon. Friend the Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) made the point that there has been a directive for a further 1 per cent. reduction in health services within the Yorkshire region. I understand that it was prised out of the general manager of the Wakefield health authority at the last meeting—the chairman was not aware of it—and that it is a directive to make a further 2 per cent. reduction in the present year's allocation within the local health service.

I want answers tonight. I want to know from the Minister why she has since September refused to respond to the problems that my constituents face about the rundown of the National Health Service in Wakefield. I should also like to know why she refuses to meet the leader of the Wakefield metropolitan council to discuss the clear implications for the council of the cuts and closures that have been agreed by the Wakefield health authority. The Wakefield council estimates that these cuts and closures in the acute sector and in other parts of the health service in Wakefield will mean that it will have to spend an additional £529,000 on the provision of community care, on top of home helps and that sort of thing, to cover the problems arising from the cuts in the National Health Service.

Having referred to the local issues that directly concern me—I hope that I shall get some response from the Minister today—I think that it is even more important that we look at what the Government's real agenda is for the National Health Service. I am delighted to have sat through about five hours of different speeches, because it has given me the opportunity to hear at first hand the real agenda of the Tory party.

I listened to the right hon. Members for Chingford (Mr. Tebbit) and for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson), and it is quite clear that the real intention of the Tory party is to transform the solid and, I am proud to say, Socialist values of the National Health Service into a free market, with the buying and selling of health care as a commodity. Quite clearly, that is the intention of the Governm cuts are a deliberate attempt to force pe private sector. Increasingly, people are mee the need to bribe—I use that word becaus it is the only explanation of the action—a treat them, to enable them to jump the H queue. That is the kind of situation that Members want, because they want delibera an expectation of paying for treatment, wholesale changes in the Health Service tha to generate before very long.

I want to digress to raise one small person I was reminded of when the Secretary attempting to defend his period of time hospital prior to Christmas, referred to the mother, when she was dying of cancer, wa National Health Service hospital. I had the my father waiting for a year for admission heart operation to Killingbeck hospital in Le got into hospital, he was dying, and the blo next to him told me that he had exactly the as my father but had got into hospital wit because he had paid. Where is the morality i situation?

When I hear the right hon. Member for talking about competitive enterprise, that i situation that I look at. What happens handicapped people, physically handicappe chronically ill people, those whom insuran will not touch with a bargepole, under th system? He has forgotten about them, and care less about them.

Sir Rhodes Boyson rose——

Mr. Hinchliffe: No. I will return the comp not give way either.

The Secretary of State said that all the O for is more money, and I do not think that true. We ask for an honest response on wh happening within the National Health Servic a Secretary of State and a Government National Health Service, not the bunch of jumpers that we face in the mob across the H for a return to a commitment to the underly of the National Health Service, the right regardless of individual ability to pay.

When are we going to get some answers to about Wakefield and the wider points that in the debate tonight?

8.56 pm

Mr. Sydney Chapman (Chipping Barnet) but rightly, as the hon. Member for Wa Hinchliffe) has reminded us, Back Benche occasions to raise constituency anxieties re issues being debated. I intend to be no exce great parliamentary tradition tonight, not last Friday it was announced that the loc hospital just round the corner from where constituency was to close temporarily at th month — not because of lack of funds because there are insufficient properly qual give that hospital the attention it needs.

I think that it would be quite wrong to tal problems without mentioning that we are dis matters in the context of the Government's having provided significant extra resources to our National Health Service. They have done that, at least over the last eight years, not in finance alone. There are many thousands more nurses working in the Health Service, and we needed thousands more, because we cut their working week from 40 to 37½ hours. There are 13,000 more doctors and dentists working in the NHS. We are treating many millions more patients a year than in 1978. About 240 major capital building programmes have been completed, having been planned by this Government, and another 100-plus are in the pipeline, and the news is good.

The twin problems and the twin challenges facing the National Health Service are these: that demand is escalating, and demand always will escalate; and that one of the causes of that is that new treatments are being devised and expensive new prescriptions and drugs are being introduced. These are the problems we face, but they arise from the success of the National Health Service, not in any way from its failure.

One other thing must be said: we have increased NHS expenditure, which is now running at £21,000 million a year. That is an increase, as many hon. Members have said, in real resources of almost one third in the last eight years. It is incumbent on the Government to continue to increase those resources, as they have patently done in the last eight years, and to ensure that they are used in the most effective way. We are discussing a level of expenditure on the Health Service which represents £375 per year for every man, woman and child in our country.

One of the problems that we face in the Barnet health authority area is a shortage of nurses. I want to spell out precisely why this situation has arisen. If the Government increase the resources to our Health Service by, say, 2 per cent. a year in real terms, under the RAWP formula, to which my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) referred, the London regions receive only 0 per cent. to 1 per cent. Health authorities such as Barnet, which was perceived to be the third most over-endowed district health authority in the most over-endowed regional health authority, usually receives minus 1 per cent. to 2 per cent. That is the situation this year. The latest figure for cash revenue limits for Barnet health authority in this financial year, which I got from the general manager this morning, is about £70 million. In 1986-87, it was about £68·5 million. That is an increase of 2·6 per cent., but there has been an inflation rate of about 4 per cent. to 4·5 per cent.

Mr. Corbyn: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Chapman: No, I shall not give way because we are up against time and I have been here for every minute of the debate.

In real terms, therefore, we are suffering a loss of almost 2 per cent. Seventy-five per cent. of the budget goes in wages and salaries, but wages and salaries have increased by much more then 2·6 per cent. Many NHS employees will say that they have not increased sufficiently, but they have gone up considerably more than 2·6 per cent. Barnet has had to cut not the number of nurses—they have left for other reasons — but some patient services. That situation cannot continue year after year.

We must have a more intelligent system for dealing with this problem. Barnet health authority is short of the equivalent of 200 full-time nurses. It is Catch 22, because the nurses cannot be recruited, even if the h authority could afford to have them, because housing and other costs of living in the area. I that there is a London weighting allowance fo £930 per annum, but I remind my hon. Friend th that the major clearing banks in London pay a allowance to their staff of about £3,000 a ye leave for other jobs which pay comparatively they leave the area because they cannot afford t costs.

I apologise for having gone on so long about but it is crucial to the future successful working health authority. There are 191 district health areas in England. We must have, if not differ according to area, a much more sensitive an London weighting allowance. The present anachronistic and inadequate. The litmus te simply that the matter is urgent. I hope very muc Victoria maternity hospital will reopen in April to close at the end of this month. It can do, if grapple with this problem now.

I look forward with confidence to my right hon. Friends on the Treasury Bench dealing matter and helping to continue the great and u progress that we have made in the National Heal in Barnet and other parts of the country.

9.3 pm

Ms. Joan Walley (Stoke-on-Trent, North): reason for today's debate is the severe crisis in the Health Service. It affects just about every consti every hon. Member who has spoken in the deb

People are dying who need not die. People w them and their families and live with them communities feel strongly that people are dying not be dying. They feel helpless. I blame the Go for not making available to the NHS some of money that we know to be available.

We are also here today because, against th judgment, people have had to resort to publici only way to get something done.

They do not like doing that. They find it distas those of us who represent constituents who have able to obtain health care have chosen the cri NHS as the subject for debate because we established the principle that health and treatme be available to everybody through the promotio health and through a National Health Servi provides treatment for people when they need than because they can afford to pay for it.

We are here today also because of the many staff throughout Britain who work at all levels hospitals, whether as nurses, ancillary workers o paid consultants. They feel that it is about time t is happening in their daily work experience is ex the general public. They cannot tolerate the conditions and the lack of care for their patients Government are forcing them to adopt. I almos whether the NHS is being deliberately run down to force people to turn to the private sector.

The final reason for our being here is because w week, before and after the recess, at Prime M Question Time, the Prime Minister—who, perha than anybody else, is responsible for our Health —has come to the Chamber and repeated statistic after statistic. That has not helped the people who are waiting for treatment.

[Ms. Joan Walley]

To add insult to injury, when families from my area went to Downing street yesterday to plead with the Prime Minister to do something about their problems, she refused to see them. I can only hope that she did so because she was having urgent discussions with the Secretary of State so that a major decision could be announced today to assure the nation that the extra money that is so urgently needed, over and above existing resources, will be made available. I hope that we shall have that announcement.

Like every hon. Member who has spoken, I want to refer to my constituency. The last time that we debated the NHS, the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), said:

"Many hon. Members from the west midlands have spoken tonight. It is probably worth remembering that Birmingham is not the whole of the west midlands".

I agree with that. However, I did not agree with her when she went on to say that the House had not heard much from hon. Members representing other areas, including Stoke,

"because they do not have much to whinge about." — [Official Report, 26 November 1987; Vol. 123, c. 472.]

Those of my hon. Friends who represent north Staffordshire have a great deal to whinge about. We have had meetings with the Under-Secretary of State, and she is fully aware of our problems. The hon. Lady is aware that a brand-new surgical block is due to be opened in Stoke-on-Trent at the end of the year, for which an extra £4 million is needed. If she cannot assure us that that money will be available, the Government will have a lot of explaining to do all over the country.

Secondly, we have a lot to whinge about because of RAWP, about which we have heard a lot this evening. Many hon. Members have complained that hospitals in their areas are closing because of RAWP, which means that money is being spent in other areas of Britain. I want to put on record the fact that the money that we in north Staffordshire should be getting as a result of the RAWP formula is not being spent in north Staffordshire — [Interruption.] It is not being spent in Birmingham because our special deprivation programme, which should have been £500,000 last year, and an additional £500,000 this year, was suspended last Wednesday simply because the money is no longer there. The reason for that is that the Government have refused point-blank to fund the nurses' pay award in full.

How can anybody plan the National Health Service with such uncertainty? The staff who are working in the Health Service are being given undertakings by the Government that certain money will be made available, but that pay increase is not being met in full and money is being taken away from other aspects of the NHS.

Another reason why we have much to whinge about in north Staffordshire is our orthopaedic waiting lists. I have been told—I have no doubt the figures are correct—that our waiting lists for orthopaedic hospitals are the longest in the west midlands, in the country and even in the universe — and this nation supposedly cares about health. A constituent of mine, a young man with a family, is now likely to have to wait for more than two years for an essential hip replacement operation. He will probably lose his job while he is waiting. In north had a capital programme that was to g million, to be spent on rebuilding ortho replacing beds. Unfortunately, like psychiatric hospital service, that was an the cuts in the Health Service, and I am capital programme has been suspended.
when it will be reinstated.

Mr. William Cash (Stafford) rose—

Ms. Walley: I have been waiting all ni
I do not intend to give way now.

The levels of deprivation concern me agree with the Secretary of State and the of State when they say that nothing is mo prevention. I know as well as anyone tha deaths from lung and stomach c Staffordshire are possibly the highest i support any measure to prevent that a occurring in the first place. I want some we can solve the problems facing the Service in both the short and long term.

All these issues, and many more, are in north Staffordshire, but my final p Government must accept the views of work in the National Health Service. I re in Manchester who have already bro strongly they feel about proposals to intr payment for overtime; to the blood tra who rightly said that enough was enough the special duty payments that they were to be taken away; and to all the work strongly that the work they do is crucial Health Service and who will not be s
Government, having examined the nurse only recommend that its proposals shou but make more money available. Such i Government tonight.

The father of Claire Wise, my co waiting for an operation at the Birmin hospital, told me when we were waiting Prime Minister yesterday that people wh and new homes may think that everythin
if they do not have their health, their po
I should like to think that the country words and that some progress could be m
The Government climbed down befor giving us extra money, because they reco was an overspend this year, and they cli
the flat-rate pay increases and the ext blood transfusion workers. I hope that th their need to climb down from their fa extra funding for the National Health S heard that the Treasury will have ex constituents want that money to be spent Health Service so that Claire Wise, like th can have the treatment that she needs at t it—when she is well—before it is too la of life and death. The Government have to act now. If they fail, it will be to ever

9.14 pm

Dr. David Mudd (Falmouth and Cam Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (N absolutely right when she said that these to people. There has been too much of a tendency for politicians to consider their perceptions of the National Health Service, forgetting that the NHS involves members of the public and professional people working in the National Health Service. We should constantly be listening to those people, and doing our best to answer their demands.

Much has been said tonight about the RAWP formula. For the Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly health authority, that has led to a shortfall of about £30 million during the past 10 years. Now Nemesis is upon us. I shall speak briefly and bitterly of the effects in my constituency which has made the National Health Service virtually an endangered species.

Falmouth casualty unit, which treats more than 5,000 cases a year, is to be closed. Of course, the closure of that casualty unit will not stop 5,000 people needing attention for minor injuries and ailments. It will not make life more convenient for them in the height of summer when there are delays on the crowded roads between Falmouth and Truro, or in the winter when the roads are blocked by fallen trees. It will not help the manpower situation as the same number of staff will be required to deal with the same number of casualties. It will not help to increase the effective availability or use of ambulance services in critical cases.

Tehidy hospital is to be closed, causing, in the words of one consultant, "catastrophic consequences", in that the ensuing reallocation of beds will ultimately mean the loss of 23 surgical beds in the Royal Cornwall hospital in Truro. The highly successful stroke rehabilitation unit will be moved to what the consultant described as "unacceptable" accommodation in Truro and which even the local health authority admits to being "less than satisfactory". It means the loss of the highly successful mobility scheme which has assisted stroke-afflicted patients to become competent drivers.

Tragically, the Tehidy savings come when the Redruth Methodist community programme agency and the local league of friends of Tehidy hospital are pouring more practical support into the increased value of that distinguished and important hospital.

Paradoxically, Tehidy's finances could be improved by adding to its use rather than axing it. Thought should be given to it being partly used as a general practitioner hospital, catering for patients who do not need the high technology of the Royal Cornwall hospital at Truro. That would utilise the high commitment of local doctors, with the continuing dedication of the staff, and stimulate even more voluntary support from local agencies to create a lower cost per patient bed.

During the past six weeks, I have listened carefully to the views and suggestions of consultants, doctors, nurses and staff of the National Health Service in Cornwall, because, with the greatest respect, they know better than any of us that health cannot be quantified in profit and loss terms as easily as other economic issues. Some of the things that they have told me are food for thought—practical and compassionate thought, not political and insensitive thought. They told me that there is something wrong with the National Health Service when a highly trained anaesthetist is restricted in his professional choice of drugs. There is something wrong with the National Health Service when, in Cornwall, with an estimated 10 per cent. increase in confinements over the predictable future, maternity beds are being closed. There is something wrong with the National Health Service w urgently in need of check-ups, follow-ups or scr denied the hospital car service to keep their app There is something wrong with the Nation Service when facilities are closed before alter replacements are available.

There is something wrong in the Nation Service when an incontinence adviser is add management structure to decide how many in pads a patient should have. Above all, there is wrong with a Government who cannot in any w the public belief that the cuts are designed deli ease the burden of those wealthy enough to pay in Cornwall many people either do not earn eno tax or, sadly, are unemployed and so do not eve dignity of work.

9.19 pm

Ms. Harriet Harman (Peckham): This year anniversary of the Health Service. I understand member in the Department of Health and Soci has been appointed to arrange celebrations, but year of the Health Service there is great fear fo and growing recognition that there is a crisis lack of resources. People know from their own and the experience of their friends and relatives is a crisis in the Health Service. Nothing that Minister or Health Ministers say and no amoun they reel out can change that, because people it takes longer to get the treatment they need, an in pain with their condition deteriorating. They when they finally get into hospital they are nurses and doctors who are hard pressed and d enough time, and they are discharged from ho quickly—often before they are well enough home.

Not only patients recognise the crisis in Service. The recognition has spread to docto whom there has been an unprecedented outcr have taken out advertisements in local new Oxford and west Berkshire. The British Association has said that the National Health S terminal decline and the presidents of the colleges have talked about patient care deterio services reaching breaking point. There petitions from doctors to Downing street and of regional and district health authorities.

Nurses have been warning the Governm ticularly the 30,000 nurses who vote with their the Health Service every year by leaving. Recr nurses is dangerously low. For the first time, gone on strike in Manchester and Edinburgh relatively demoralised because they cannot p care that they joined the Health Service to p make matters worse, district health auth imposing recruitment freezes because they cann nurses they have.

Health Service organisations are unanimous developing crisis. The National Association Authorities has said that the work of the Hea is being jeopardised and community health co said that they are on the brink of collapse. Na local newspapers are overflowing with tragi people dying before they get their operatio mothers condemned to watch young children breath as they wait and wait for heart operati

[Ms. Harriet Harman]

The Government are now slowly and reluctantly beginning to acknowledge that there is a crisis only in order to join the Right wing of the Conservative party in urging us to ditch the Health Service and start looking for alternatives. They say that we should look for an alternative system because the National Health Service is too expensive, but alternative systems are more expensive than ours. We spend £364 per head on health care, whereas in America £1,300 per head is spent on health care. The Institute of Actuaries has said that if our health system were run like that in America, we would overnight spend 10 per cent. more on health without getting any improvement in the service.

The Government try to make out that, whereas in the rest of Europe the percentage of GDP spent on health care is higher, the contribution from the public purse is lower in those countries than here. That is not the case. Our public sector contributes 5 per cent. of GDP on health, which is less than the public sector contribution in France, Belgium and Ireland. It is therefore a travesty to label the Health Service as greedy and out of control, when it is already substantially underfunded compared with health care systems abroad.

The Health Service treats patients more cost-effectively than the private sector. In the west midlands it costs the private sector £450 more to do a hysterectomy than a National Health Service hospital, and it costs the private sector £700 more to do a hip replacement operation than the National Health Service.

I expect that the right hon. Member for Chingford (Mr. Tebbit) would say that no account is taken of capital, but no account is taken in the private sector of the training of staff by the National Health Service, who then leave for the private sector.

We are told that we must have an alternative system because we cannot control Health Service costs, which are somehow spiralling out of control. It is true that costs are increasing, but that is partly because of the large number of elderly people. We should welcome that as an advance. I welcome the fact that my parents have been able to live to a ripe old age. I want to live to a ripe old age, and I want my children to do so. That should be welcomed as an advance in health and well-being, and should not be complained about by Conservative Members as being a problem. Costs have increased because of medical advance. We should be welcoming that rather than complaining and wishing to return to a system in which we cannot treat people and send them home without hope.

No lessons can be learnt from abroad about curtailing cost increases. The free-market or insurance-based system has a far greater rate of increase in costs. Last year, in the United States—in one year alone—costs rose by seven times more than the rate of inflation. Germany, which was given as an example by the right hon. Member for Chingford, has similar problems with runaway costs.

Alternative foreign systems are more expensive and less subject to cost control. If the Government are looking for alternatives to control costs, they are barking up the wrong tree.

Mr. Tebbit rose——

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): What are you doing, Mr. Speaker, letting the moonlighter in?

Mr. Tebbit: If the hon. Gentleman did a little moonlighting he might learn something. With a bit of luck, he might find someone willing to employ him.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Questions to the Front Bench, please.

Mr. Tebbit: Is it the hon. Lady's premise that we have nothing to learn from anyone overseas—that our system is perfect, we know it all, we know it better, we have got it all right and they have got it all wrong? Is she willing to learn something from other people's experience?

Ms. Harman: What I have learnt from other people's experience is that other systems are more expensive, more unfair, more bureaucratic and more costly.

The Government say that we need an alternative to the Health Service because it is bureaucratic. It has been described as a bureaucratic monster, but a certain amount of administration is necessary for a system to run properly. We want doctors and nurses to be free to care for patients, not to be bogged down with administration.

The Health Service demands less in administration than other systems abroad because it is simpler. We spend 6 per cent. of our health budget on administration. France, in which there is a large insurance element in its health service, spends 12 per cent. on administration—double the amount that we spend—and America spends 21 per cent. of its health budget on administration.

Mr. Whitney: Will the hon. Lady quote the source of that remark? She will know, if she has read anything about the matter, that academic studies show that the administrative costs of the United States health service account for 10 per cent. of its health budget. Our figure is so low because it does not include the cost of collection and because we have a centralised system. I invite the hon. Lady to tell the House where she obtained that figure of 21 per cent., which is one of the many bogus statistics that she is reading from her schoolgirl essay.

Ms. Harman: I am quoting internationally recognised OECD statistics. In some states of America the administrative costs amount to 30 per cent.

I should like to give the example of a friend of mine in America who took her son to hospital because he had to have a grommet placed in his ear. His operation was due at 9 am, but he was called in at 6 am so that staff could do three hours of administration and paper work. That is the way the system runs.

In Britain the private health care companies are far more expensive to administer than the NHS. Compared with the 6 per cent. that is spent by the NHS on administration, BUPA spends 10 per cent.. Therefore, the message is clear: insurance-based schemes are far more expensive to run than the NHS.

Another idea promoted by the Government is that the NHS is inefficient. It is true that underfunding is starting to reduce the efficiency of the Health Service and to cause unit costs to increase. Of course it is a waste of capital resources to have 50 per cent. of operating theatres—valuable capital resources—lying idle. Of course unit costs are increased if wards are closed and beds in wards are closed. Of course it increases staff costs to allow the nursing work force to decline to such a level that hospitals must increasingly rely upon expensive agency nurses. But that is not to say that we do not think that we should have a continuous review of performance within the NHS. Of course we want value for money because we want value for patients.

All the evidence suggests that insurance-based or open-market systems of health care are far less efficient than the NHS in allocating resources. The absence of any coherent planning framework in the United States has led to an oversupply of hospital beds. It is estimated that between one in three and one in two of American hospital beds are surplus to requirements.

The medical director of BUPA in this country recently backed the idea that the Health Service is a good mechanism for planning and use of resources. He said:

"Due to the structure of the NHS, the distribution of health services is reasonably good and there is relatively little waste—particularly when this is compared to America."

Perhaps the most important question is the access to care and the quality of care delivered by our Health Service compared with foreign systems. It is relatively well understood in Britain that the poor get a third-rate health care service in America. When an ambulance arrives at an accident in the United States, what the team is really interested in when deciding whether or where a victim should be treated is not where the nearest hospital is or where the appropriate facilities are available, but whether the person has got insurance.

There is no doubt that less well off people in the United States suffer because they delay seeking treatment and discharge themselves dangerously early because of the cost of health care. That is widely understood in Britain. It is also beginning to be understood that an insurance system is bound to allow gaps. It is estimated that more than 40 million people in the United States have no health insurance because insurance companies will not accept them because they are too old, because they have a chronic illness or because they are regarded as being an AIDS risk.

It is not as though someone is home and dry if he has an insurance policy, because there are also gruesome stories of insurance running out. When insurance runs out against a person's medical interest, he must move to a cheaper hospital. What is less well known, but extremely chilling, is that it is not only the poor who are the victims of the American health care system. The rich are also the victims of that system. It is a commercial system, and the doctors do what is profitable rather than what is medically necessary. For example, a doctor will not make much money from telling a patient with a headache to take an aspirin and lie down in a darkened room for an hour. Big money is made if the doctor starts brain and neurological investigations.

My hon. Friend the Member for Strathkelvin and Beardsden (Mr. Galbraith) has said that medicine in the United States is distorted by the profit motive. An American woman is three times more likely to have her womb removed than a British woman. An American man is four times more likely to have his prostate removed than a British man. An American is three times more likely than a Briton to have a hernia operation and twice as likely to have his tonsils removed. That is what happens in a health system in which the profit motive comes into play. An American woman is twice as likely as a British woman to give birth by caesarean section than by spontaneous delivery. A Congressional study estimated that 2·4 million surgical procedures had been carried out unnecessarily and that 11,900 deaths had been caused by unnecessary intervention.

That cannot be explained away by reference to different medical traditions or legal systems—although different medical traditions and different legal systems there are — because parallel differences exist in this country between the Health Service and the commercial medical sector. A woman in a private hospital is twice as likely to give birth by caesarian section as her counterpart in a National Health Service hospital. The alternatives that we are being offered by the Government are more expensive, more bureaucratic and more wasteful. They are unfair to the poor and they do no favours to the rich.

The central question is whether we want health care on the basis of people's ability to benefit from treatment or on the basis of their ability to pay for the treatment. The Health Service is fairer and more humane than commercial, insurance-based, profit-motivated systems. To any Government interested in acting sensibly, the obvious course of action would be to give the National Health Service a reasonable and fair allocation from public funds. We could then release all the enthusiasm and commitment that remain among doctors, nurses and other Health Service staff—enthusiasm and commitment that have not been stifled—who not only want to do more of what they are doing now but want to push back the boundaries of medical science, to make breakthroughs with new diagnostic techniques and treatments and so to improve our Health Service.

The Government and Conservative Back Benchers tell us that the money is available but that the Government are simply unwilling to use it for the Health Service. They prefer, as a matter of priority, to use it for tax cuts. The Government are considering abolishing the top rate of tax, which will benefit only 4 per cent. of people in this country but with a windfall of £850 million. They are considering abolishing inheritance tax, which will benefit only 35,000 people, but to the tune of £1 billion. The Government are considering plans to abolish capital gains tax to give a further windfall of £1·3 billion. Those amounts total more than £3 billion. While the Government pursue the theory that cuts in taxes encourage the rich to work harder, cuts in the Health Service are threatening people's lives.

In the year of the 40th anniversary of the Health Service, people will be paying particular attention to the Chancellor's treatment of the Health Service in his Budget. The real choice is not between the National Health Service and foreign systems, but between tax cuts and a soundly-based, well-resourced Health Service. Instead of forcing the Health Service to resort to flag-day finance, the Budget should use public finance to relieve the pain and suffering of the growing number of patients on the waiting lists. The Secretary of State tells the presidents of the royal colleges that the Health Service should get more money. The Chief Secretary to the Treasury says that it will not. People are expecting Budget day to be Health Service day. On 15 March, the eyes of all who care about a fair and effective health care system will be on the Chancellor.

9.38 pm

The Minister for Health (Mr. Tony Newton): In many ways, this has been a more thoughtful and constructive debate than most of us expected at the outset—at least until the last few moments. The hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) appeared to be setting up nine-pins of her own making simply to knock them down. However, with that exception, hon. Members on both sides of the House have recognised—that recognition may be strategically significant in terms of the whole political debate on the NHS—the complexity of the problems and pressures involved in the controversies and arguments that surround the National Health Service.

[Mr. Tony Newton]

I want to comment on some of those themes and on the constructive points that have been made. However, before I come to what I take to be the central theme of the debate, it is right for me to comment on some of the specific points raised by right hon. and hon. Members from the Opposition Front Bench and by hon. Members of all parties, although inevitably I shall be unable to take up every point, especially some of the local ones.

I give an undertaking to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) that I shall not rehearse all the statistics that obviously leave him uneasy. One striking thing about his speech was what I took to be his extremely defensive comments when he sought to suggest that the statistics were not presenting a true picture of what is happening in the Health Service. Without seeking to repeat the statistics which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State set out clearly in his opening speech, I challenge the hon. Gentleman to provide me with any significant measure of the outputs of the Health Service in terms of patient care which do not show the marked and dramatic increase that has taken place during the eight years that this Government have been in office.

However, I must challenge the hon. Member for Livingston on some statistics that I understood him to take from the report of the Select Committee on Social Services. I say in the presence of my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton)—[Interruption.]—unfortunately, he is not here—that I normally have the greatest respect for that Committee. However, I challenge the hon. Gentleman's statistics about the effect of demography on the pattern of Health Service expenditure in recent years because, in my judgment, there has been persistent misrepresentation of the position on the basis that the picture has remained steady and that a regular 1 per cent. per year has been needed to cope with demographic pressures. So much of the attack on our suggestions and our view that there has been a real increase in expenditure on the National Health Service rests on that statistic, and, frankly, it rests on a misapprehension. The run of statistics——

Mr. Robin Cook rose——

Mr. Newton: May I first finish my point?

The run of statistics, which I can go through although I had not intended to, shows marked variations, down as low as 0·3 per cent., for example, for demographic factors in 1981-82. Over the period as a whole, the average is significantly less than 1 per cent. It is important that people should recognise that fact when making some of the wilder generalisations about the real increase in Health Service funding.

Mr. Cook: I invite the Minister to contemplate the answer that he gave to the House on 13 July 1987 when he set out the annual increase in the pressure of demographic change on the hospital sector alone. He is absolutely right—it is not 1 per cent. per annum; the figure varies. Over the period at which the Select Committee looked, there was a 4·3 per cent. additional requirement on the hospital sector. The Select Committee estimated the increase in the volume terms of expenditu on the hospital sector as 3·2 per cent.—a clear 1·2 p cent. less. For next year it is a clear 2 per cent. less. Th is why our hospitals cannot meet the demand on ther That is why they are in crisis and are turning aw patients.

Mr. Newton: As I understand it, at least we agree th the 1 per cent. figure is an exaggeration as an average ov the period concerned. Just as the hon. Gentleman and t hon. Member for Peckham have persistently refused take account of the gains in efficiency in the service, so d the Select Committee. When account is taken of tho factors, the increase in resources for the hospital an community health services represents a real increase whic can be seen in the increases in patient care which all t statistics demonstrate.

I should like to make one other point to the hon Member for Livingston, on a purely statistical issue. H referred to the representation of the British Cardia Society about the number of cardiologists, quoting th society's reported view that some 10 million people we living in districts without the appropriate cardiologic consultant care.

The number of consultant cardiologists has increase from 110 in 1979 to 152 on the latest available figure, a increase of more than 50 per cent. Although I have no been able to do all the maths involved, if 10 million peopl were living in districts without such consultants in 198 that is a whole lot fewer than were living in such district in 1979.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: What consolation are thos statistics to parents whose children are dying because o shortages?

Mr. Newton: Their consolation is that the increase resources for the hospitals and services involved create fo their children a very much better chance of proper healt care than they had eight years ago, when the Governmen came to office.

As the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr Griffiths) has incited me, let me give one more statistic [Interruption.] Let him listen: he raised the subject. Let m give the hon. Gentleman the statistics for the number o hole-in-the-heart operations carried out on youngster under one year old. In 1978, there were 333; in 1985— this is the latest figure that I have—there were 469 That is the scale of the increase.

I can give the House, and the hon. Member fo Peckham, some helpful, up-to-date information. In th course of several references to nurses, the hon. Lady implied that the number had been falling. As it happens I placed in the Library of the House yesterday the latest figures on NHS staff. I am glad to be able to tell the hon Lady and the House that, in the year from September 198 to September 1987, the number of nurses employed— excluding agency staff—rose by a further 3,400. That reflects the continuing increase that has taken place in the lifetime of the present Government.

There will always be legitimate public discussion and debate about the balance between expenditure and taxation at any one time, and about the balance in that expenditure between different desirable objectives—whether in health, education, housing or, for that matter, matters other than social policy such as defence, law and order or any other objective to which we attach collective importance. What is not in doubt, however, is the commitment that the Government have shown by their decisions since 1979——

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): What about nurse training?

Mr. Newton: The hon. Gentleman wishes me to go into the subject of nurse training, which was raised by the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) in an intervention. The hon. Lady is right to say that there has been a modest decline in the total expenditure on nurse training over the past few years. There are two reasons for that. One is that there has been a reduction in the number of nurses leaving training before they complete that training which obviously tends to reduce the costs.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Why?

Mr. Newton: There has been a reduction in the wastage. Why? Because no doubt they find it more attractive to be nurses now than they did when this Government came to office. Other factors are involved as well.

The Government have demonstrated by their decisions since 1979 the commitment they have to the Health Service, not only in the fact that expenditure has risen by 33 per cent. in real terms but that Health Service expenditure as a proportion of total public expenditure has risen by 2 per cent. in that period and, as my right hon. Friend said at the outset of the debate, the percentage of public expenditure on health in relation to the gross domestic product has risen from 4·7 per cent. to 5·4 per cent., after falling when the Labour party was in office.

The other point that has so far attracted less attention than I might have expected is that during the present year it is likely that health expenditure and personal social services expenditure, taken together, will overtake defence as the second largest item in Government expenditure after social security.

Mr. Anthony Beaumont-Dark (Birmingham, Selly Oak): Before my right hon. Friend moves away from the main thrust, can he help many of us who are genuinely his friends—[Laughter]—that is true—because many of us are perplexed? In Birmingham we are surrounded by great hospitals, good surgeons and good physicians who tell us —unless they are charlatans and liars, which I doubt but the Minister may convince me otherwise—that they are short of resources, that cancer beds are being closed and that kidney dialysis is rationed to those under 55 years of age. Either there are enough resources, or there are not. Who is right? Are those at the sharp end of public health right or is the Minister right?

Mr. Newton: The statistics that I have used — relatively few — and the figures that my right hon. Friend gave in his opening speech measure the increase in funds which has gone throughout the Health Service and not least to the West Midlands regional health authority, which has consistently gained under the process of resource allocation.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Answer the question.

Mr. Newton: One point that I wish to deal with, because it is part of the core of the problem which both sides of the House face in talking about and dealing with these issues, is that——

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister is trying to answer a question which has been put to him. It is no good the hon. Gentleman shouting across the Chamber at him.

Mr. Newton: I recognise that there is always more that people would like to do whether they are Health Service workers, Ministers or those to whom my hon. Friend has been speaking in Birmingham.

Whatever view is taken of spending, whether capital or current, present or past, one thing that should surely be clear to everyone who has participated in the debate is that there is no single, simple answer in anything that the hon. Member for Livingston suggested or, dare I say, in any of the many suggestions from hon. Members on both sides of the House.

It is right that we should examine the extent to which some of the proposals may be able to contribute, as indeed we are doing and will continue to do. The inescapable conclusion outlined by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is that the pattern of steadily rising demand, from factors that he described and above all from a combination of rising numbers of elderly people and the rapid pace of medical advance, is that we need to pursue steadily and consistently a range of measures of the sort that we have already embarked upon, not as a substitute for proper support from taxpayers nor a retreat from the responsibilities of Government, but in straightforward and practical recognition of the fact that, however much is contributed by taxpayers, there will always be more that all of us who are concerned with health would like to do.

Mr. Roland Boyes (Houghton and Washington): A man came to my office recently to canvas my support to raise cash for Freeman hospital in Newcastle. He had written to a number of people, one of whom was the Prime Minister, to raise £50,000. He had a letter back from an aide to the Prime Minister, saying, in effect, "Find enclosed an autographed photograph of the Prime Minister, which has been used by many organisations to raise a considerable amount of money." How many autographed photographs does it take to run a Health Service?

Mr. Newton: Mention of Newcastle reminds me of my visit there, when I saw at the Freeman hospital undoubtedly the finest heart transplant unit in this country. It was designated and paid for by funds allocated by this Government since 1979.

The sad thing about the debate today is that the Opposition have not only sought to deny their past, but have resolutely ignored the real issues and practical problems that must be faced. A smile came to my face——

Mr. Campbell-Savours rose——

Mr. Newton: No, I shall not give way to the hon. Gentleman. A smile came to my face when I heard the hon. Member for Livingston challenge us on the basis that no problems had occurred in the Health Service under the previous Labour Administration. I have in my hand copies of some headlines from newspapers in 1978 — [Interruption.] In March 1978, the headlines were:

"Patients sent home early to release beds, doctors say; NHS morale falling, MPs told; Minister told of threat to nursing standards; Big injection of money essential to resuscitate National Health Service, doctors told; Heart patients will die, warning in hospital dispute".

Then, most telling of all, there is a headline from The Times of August 1978 in the "Home News", which says:

[Mr. Newton]

"NHS in crisis; doctors complain of chronic under-financing."

That was what happened under the previous Labour Government. If we do not go down the track that they urge of taking yet more money from taxpayers, it is because we are conscious that down that track lies the same failure to fund the Health Service properly that marked the whole of their period in government. What we can and will do is to build on the expansion that we have already brought about.

Question put, That the original words stand part of the Question:—

The House divided: Ayes 233, Noes 338.

Division No. 144] [10 pm

AYES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Adams, Allen (Paisley N)
Allen, Graham
Alton, David
Archer, Rt Hon Peter
Armstrong, Ms Hilary
Ashdown, Paddy
Ashley, Rt Hon Jack
Ashton, Joe
Banks, Tony (Newham NW)
Barnes, Harry (Derbyshire NE)
Barnes, Mrs Rosie (Greenwich)
Barron, Kevin
Battle, John
Beckett, Margaret
Beith, A. J.
Bell, Stuart
Benn, Rt Hon Tony
Bennett, A. F. (D'nt'n & R'dish)
Bermingham, Gerald
Bidwell, Sydney
Blair, Tony
Blunkett, David
Boyes, Roland
Bradley, Keith
Bray, Dr Jeremy
Brown, Gordon (D'mline E)
Brown, Nicholas (Newcastle E)
Brown, Ron (Edinburgh Leith)
Bruce, Malcolm (Gordon)
Buchan, Norman
Buckley, George
Caborn, Richard
Callaghan, Jim
Campbell, Ron (Blyth Valley)
Campbell-Savours, D. N.
Canavan, D[illegible]
Carlile, A[illegible]ont'g)
Clark, D[illegible]vid (S Shields)
Clarke, [illegible] (Monklands W)
Clay, Bob
Clelland, David
Clwyd, Mrs Ann
Cohen, Harry
Coleman, Donald
Cook, Robin (Livingston)
Corbett, Robin
Corbyn, Jeremy
Cousins, Jim
Cox, Tom
Crowther, Stan
Cryer, Bob
Cummings, J.
Cunliffe, Lawrence
Dalyell, Tam
Darling, Alastair
Davies, Rt Hon Denzil (Llanelli)
Davies, Ron (Caerphilly)
Davis, Terry (B'ham Hodge H'l)
Dewar, Donald
Dixon, Don
Dobson, Frank
Douglas, Dick
Dunnachie, James
Dunwoody, Hon Mrs Gwyneth
Eadie, Alexander
Eastham, Ken
Ewing, Harry (Falkirk E)
Ewing, Mrs Margaret (Moray)
Fatchett, Derek
Faulds, Andrew
Fearn, Ronald
Field, Frank (Birkenhead)
Fields, Terry (L'pool B G'n)
Fisher, Mark
Flannery, Martin
Flynn, Paul
Foot, Rt Hon Michael
Forsythe, Clifford (Antrim S)
Foster, Derek
Foulkes, George
Fraser, John
Fyfe, Mrs Maria
Galbraith, Samuel
Galloway, George
Garrett, John (Norwich South)
Garrett, Ted (Wallsend)
George, Bruce
Gilbert, Rt Hon Dr John
Godman, Dr Norman A.
Golding, Mrs Llin
Gordon, Ms Mildred
Grant, Bernie (Tottenham)
Griffiths, Nigel (Edinburgh S)
Griffiths, Win (Bridgend)
Grocott, Bruce
Hardy, Peter
Harman, Ms Harriet
Hattersley, Rt Hon Roy
Haynes, Frank
Healey, Rt Hon Denis
Heffer, Eric S.
Hinchliffe, David
Hogg, N. (C'nauld & Kilsyth)
Holland, Stuart
Home Robertson, John
Hood, James
Howarth, George (Knowsley N)
Howell, Rt Hon D. (S'heath)
Howells, Geraint
Hoyle, Doug
Hughes, John (Coventry NE)
Hughes, Robert (Aberdeen N)
Hughes, Roy (Newport E)
Hughes, Simon (Southwark)
Illsley, Eric
Ingram, Adam
Janner, Greville
John, Brynmor
Jones, Barry (Alyn & Deeside)
Jones, Ieuan (Ynys Môn)
Jones, Martyn (Clwyd S W)
Kaufman, Rt Hon Gerald
Kilfedder, James
Kinnock, Rt Hon Neil
Kirkwood, Archy
Lambie, David
Lamond, James
Leadbitter, Ted
Leighton, Ron
Lestor, Miss Joan (Eccles)
Lewis, Terry
Litherland, Robert
Livingstone, Ken
Livsey, Richard
Lloyd, Tony (Stretford)
Lofthouse, Geoffrey
Loyden, Eddie
McAllion, John
McAvoy, Tom
McCartney, Ian
McCusker, Harold
Macdonald, Calum
McKelvey, William
McLeish, Henry
Maclennan, Robert
McNamara, Kevin
McTaggart, Bob
McWilliam, John
Madden, Max
Mahon, Mrs Alice
Marshall, David (Shettleston)
Marshall, Jim (Leicester S)
Martin, Michael (Springburn)
Martlew, Eric
Maxton, John
Meacher, Michael
Meale, Alan
Michael, Alun
Michie, Bill (Sheffield Heeley)
Millan, Rt Hon Bruce
Mitchell, Austin (G't Grimsby)
Molyneaux, Rt Hon James
Moonie, Dr Lewis
Morris, Rt Hon A (W'shawe)
Morris, Rt Hon J (Aberavon)
Mowlam, Marjorie
Mullin, Chris
Nellist, Dave
Oakes, Rt Hon Gordon
O'Brien, William
Orme, Rt Hon Stanley
Patchett, Terry
Pendry, Tom
Pike, Peter
Powell, Ray (Ogmore)
Primarolo, Ms Dawn
Quin, Ms Joyce
Radice, Giles
Randall, Stuart
Redmond, Martin
Rees, Rt Hon Merlyn
Reid, John
Richardson, Ms Jo
Roberts, Allan (Bootle)
Robertson, George
Robinson, Geoffrey
Rooker, Jeff
Ross, Ernie (Dundee W)
Ross, William (Londonc)
Rowlands, Ted
Ruddock, Ms Joan
Salmond, Alex
Sedgemore, Brian
Sheerman, Barry
Sheldon, Rt Hon Robert
Shore, Rt Hon Peter
Short, Clare
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, Andrew (Oxford)
Smith, C. (Isl'ton & F'bu)
Smith, Rt Hon J. (Monk)
Smyth, Rev Martin (Bel)
Snape, Peter
Soley, Clive
Spearing, Nigel
Steel, Rt Hon David
Steinberg, Gerald
Stott, Roger
Strang, Gavin
Straw, Jack
Taylor, Mrs Ann (Dewsb)
Taylor, Matthew (Truro)
Thomas, Dafydd Elis
Thompson, Jack (Wansb)
Turner, Dennis
Vaz, Keith
Walker, A. Cecil (Belfas)
Wall, Pat
Wallace, James
Walley, Ms Joan
Wardell, Gareth (Gower)
Wareing, Robert N.
Welsh, Andrew (Angus E)
Welsh, Michael (Doncas)
Wigley, Dafydd
Williams, Rt Hon A. J.
Williams, Alan W. (Carm)
Wilson, Brian
Winnick, David
Wise, Mrs Audrey
Worthington, Anthony
Young, David (Bolton SE)

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Frank Cook and
Mr. Allen McKay.

NOES

Adley, Robert
Aitken, Jonathan
Alexander, Richard
Alison, Rt Hon Michael
Allason, Rupert
Amery, Rt Hon Julian
Amess, David
Amos, Alan
Arbuthnot, James
Arnold, Tom (Hazel Grove)
Ashby, David
Aspinwall, Jack
Atkins, Robert
Atkinson, David
Baker, Rt Hon K. (Mole Valley)
Baker, Nicholas (Dorset N)
Baldry, Tony
Batiste, Spencer
Beaumont-Dark, Anthony
Bellingham, Henry
Bendall, Vivian
Bennett, Nicholas (Pemb)
Benyon, W.
Bevan, David Gilroy
Biffen, Rt Hon John
Biggs-Davison, Sir John
Blackburn, Dr John G.
Blaker, Rt Hon Sir Peter
Body, Sir Richard
Bonsor, Sir Nicholas
Boswell, Tim
Bottomley, Peter
Bottomley, Mrs Virginia
Bowden, A (Brighton K'p)
Bowden, Gerald (Dulwich)
Bowis, John

Boyson, Rt Hon Dr Sir Rhodes
Braine, Rt Hon Sir Bernard
Brandon-Bravo, Martin
Brazier, Julian
Bright, Graham
Brittan, Rt Hon Leon
Brooke, Rt Hon Peter
Brown, Michael (Brigg & Cl't's)
Browne, John (Winchester)
Bruce, Ian (Dorset South)
Buchanan-Smith, Rt Hon Alick
Buck, Sir Antony
Budgen, Nicholas
Burns, Simon
Burt, Alistair
Butcher, John
Butler, Chris
Butterfill, John
Carlisle, John, (Luton N)
Carlisle, Kenneth (Lincoln)
Carrington, Matthew
Carttiss, Michael
Cash, William
Channon, Rt Hon Paul
Chapman, Sydney
Chope, Christopher
Churchill, Mr
Clark, Hon Alan (Plym'th S'n)
Clark, Dr Michael (Rochford)
Clark, Sir W. (Croydon S)
Clarke, Rt Hon K. (Rushcliffe)
Colvin, Michael
Conway, Derek
Coombs, Anthony (Wyre F'rest)
Coombs, Simon (Swindon)
Cope, John
Cormack, Patrick
Couchman, James
Cran, James
Currie, Mrs Edwina
Curry, David
Davies, Q. (Stamf'd & Spald'g)
Davis, David (Boothferry)
Day, Stephen
Devlin, Tim
Dickens, Geoffrey
Dicks, Terry
Dorrell, Stephen
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord James
Dover, Den
Dunn, Bob
Durant, Tony
Emery, Sir Peter
Evennett, David
Fallon, Michael
Farr, Sir John
Favell, Tony
Fenner, Dame Peggy
Field, Barry (Isle of Wight)
Finsberg, Sir Geoffrey
Fookes, Miss Janet
Forman, Nigel
Forsyth, Michael (Stirling)
Forth, Eric
Fowler, Rt Hon Norman
Fox, Sir Marcus
Franks, Cecil
Freeman, Roger
French, Douglas
Fry, Peter
Gale, Roger
Gardiner, George
Gill, Christopher
Gilmour, Rt Hon Sir Ian
Glyn, Dr Alan
Goodhart, Sir Philip
Goodlad, Alastair
Goodson-Wickes, Dr Charles
Gorman, Mrs Teresa
Gorst, John
Gow, Ian
Gower, Sir Raymond
Greenway, Harry (Ealing N)
Greenway, John (Rydale)
Gregory, Conal
Griffiths, Sir Eldon (Bury St E')
Griffiths, Peter (Portsmouth N)
Grist, Ian
Ground, Patrick
Grylls, Michael
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hampson, Dr Keith
Hanley, Jeremy
Hannam, John
Hargreaves, A. (B'ham H'll Gr')
Hargreaves, Ken (Hyndburn)
Harris, David
Haselhurst, Alan
Hawkins, Christopher
Hayes, Jerry
Hayward, Robert
Heathcoat-Amory, David
Heddle, John
Heseltine, Rt Hon Michael
Hicks, Mrs Maureen (Wolv' NE)
Hicks, Robert (Cornwall SE)
Higgins, Rt Hon Terence L.
Hill, James
Hind, Kenneth
Hogg, Hon Douglas (Gr'th'm)
Holt, Richard
Hordern, Sir Peter
Howard, Michael
Howarth, Alan (Strat'd-on-A)
Howarth, G. (Cannock & B'wd)
Howe, Rt Hon Sir Geoffrey
Howell, Ralph (North Norfolk)
Hughes, Robert G. (Harrow W)
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunt, John (Ravensbourne)
Hunter, Andrew
Irvine, Michael
Irving, Charles
Jack, Michael
Jackson, Robert
Janman, Timothy
Johnson Smith, Sir Geoffrey
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert B (Herts W)
Kellett-Bowman, Mrs Elaine
Key, Robert
King, Roger (B'ham N'thfield)
Kirkhope, Timothy
Knapman, Roger
Knight, Greg (Derby North)
Knight, Dame Jill (Edgbaston)
Knowles, Michael
Knox, David
Lamont, Rt Hon Norman
Lang, Ian
Latham, Michael
Lawrence, Ivan
Lawson, Rt Hon Nigel
Lee, John (Pendle)
Leigh, Edward (Gainsbor'gh)
Lennox-Boyd, Hon Mark
Lester, Jim (Broxtowe)
Lightbown, David
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Sir Ian (Havant)
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lord, Michael
Luce, Rt Hon Richard
Lyell, Sir Nicholas
McCrindle, Robert
Macfarlane, Sir Neil
MacKay, Andrew (E Berkshire)
Maclean, David
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, M. (Newbury)
McNair-Wilson, P. (New Forest)
Madel, David
Major, Rt Hon John
Malins, Humfrey
Mans, Keith
Maples, John
Mariand, Paul
Marlow, Tony
Martin, David (Portsmouth S)
Mates, Michael
Mawhinney, Dr Brian
Mayhew, Rt Hon Sir Patrick
Mellor, David
Miller, Hal
Mills, Iain
Miscampbell, Norman
Mitchell, Andrew (Gedling)
Mitchell, David (Hants NW)
Moate, Roger
Monro, Sir Hector
Montgomery, Sir Fergus
Moore, Rt Hon John
Morris, M (N'hampton S)
Morrison, Sir Charles (Devizes)
Moss, Malcolm
Mudd, David
Neale, Gerrard
Nelson, Anthony
Neubert, Michael
Newton, Rt Hon Tony
Nicholls, Patrick
Nicholson, David (Taunton)
Nicholson, Miss E. (Devon W)
Onslow, Rt Hon Cranley
Page, Richard
Paice, James
Parkinson, Rt Hon Cecil
Patnick, Irvine
Patten, Chris (Bath)
Patten, John (Oxford W)
Pattie, Rt Hon Sir Geoffrey
Pawsey, James
Peacock, Mrs Elizabeth
Porter, Barry (Wirral S)
Porter, David (Waveney)
Portillo, Michael
Price, Sir David
Raffan, Keith
Raison, Rt Hon Timothy
Rathbone, Tim
Redwood, John
Renton, Tim
Rhodes James, Robert
Rhys Williams, Sir Brandon
Riddick, Graham
Ridley, Rt Hon Nicholas
Rifkind, Rt Hon Malcolm
Roberts, Wyn (Conwy)
Roe, Mrs Marion
Rossi, Sir Hugh
Rost, Peter
Rowe, Andrew
Rumbold, Mrs Angela
Ryder, Richard
Sackville, Hon Tom
Sayeed, Jonathan
Scott, Nicholas
Shaw, David (Dover)
Shaw, Sir Giles (Pudsey)
Shaw, Sir Michael (Scarb')
Shelton, William (Streatham)
Shephard, Mrs G. (Norfolk SW)
Shepherd, Colin (Hereford)
Shepherd, Richard (Aldridge)
Shersby, Michael
Sims, Roger
Skeet, Sir Trevor
Smith, Sir Dudley (Warwick)
Smith, Tim (Beaconsfield)
Soames, Hon Nicholas
Speed, Keith
Speller, Tony
Spicer, Sir Jim (Dorset W)
Spicer, Michael (S Worcs)
Squire, Robin
Stanbrook, Ivor
Steen, Anthony
Stern, Michael
Stevens, Lewis
Stewart, Allan (Eastwood)
Stewart, Andrew (Sherwood)
Stokes, John
Stradling Thomas, Sir John
Sumberg, David
Summerson, Hugo
Tapsell, Sir Peter
Taylor, Ian (Esher)
Taylor, John M (Solihull)
Taylor, Teddy (S'end E)
Tebbit, Rt Hon Norman
Temple-Morris, Peter
Thompson, D. (Calder Valley)
Thompson, Patrick (Norwich N)
Thorne, Neil
Thornton, Malcolm
Thurnham, Peter
Townend, John (Bridlington)
Townsend, Cyril D. (B'heath)
Tracey, Richard
Tredinnick, David
Trippier, David
Trotter, Neville
Twinn, Dr Ian
Vaughan, Sir Gerard
Waddington, Rt Hon David
Wakeham, Rt Hon John
Waldegrave, Hon William
Walden, George
Walker, Bill (T'side North)
Walker, Rt Hon P. (W'cester)
Waller, Gary
Walters, Dennis
Ward, John
Wardle, C. (Bexhill)
Warren, Kenneth
Watts, John
Wells, Bowen
Wheeler, John
Whitney, Ray
Widdecombe, Miss Ann
Wiggin, Jerry
Wilkinson, John
Wilshire, David
Winterton, Mrs Ann
Winterton, Nicholas
Wolfson, Mark
Wood, Timothy
Woodcock, Mike
Yeo, Tim
Young, Sir George (Acton)
Younger, Rt Hon George

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Robert Boscawen and
Mr. Tristan Garel-Jones.

Question accordingly negatived.

Question, That the proposed words be there added, put forthwith pursuant to Standing Order No. 30 (Questions on amendments):—

The House divided: Ayes 336, Noes 236.

Division No. 148] [10.16 pm

AYES

Adley, Robert
Aitken, Jonathan
Alexander, Richard
Alison, Rt Hon Michael
Allason, Rupert
Amery, Rt Hon Julian
Amess, David
Amos, Alan
Arbuthnot, James
Arnold, Tom (Hazel Grove)
Ashby, David
Aspinwall, Jack
Atkins, Robert
Atkinson, David
Baker, Rt Hon K. (Mole Valley)
Baker, Nicholas (Dorset N)
Baldry, Tony
Batiste, Spencer
Beaumont-Dark, Anthony
Bellingham, Henry
Bendall, Vivian
Bennett, Nicholas (Pembroke)
Benyon, W.
Bevan, David Gilroy
Biffen, Rt Hon John
Biggs-Davison, Sir John
Blackburn, Dr John G.
Blaker, Rt Hon Sir Peter
Body, Sir Richard
Bonsor, Sir Nicholas
Boswell, Tim
Bottomley, Peter
Bottomley, Mrs Virginia
Bowden, A (Brighton K'pto'n)
Bowden, Gerald (Dulwich)
Bowis, John
Boyson, Rt Hon Dr Sir Rhodes
Braine, Rt Hon Sir Bernard
Brandon-Bravo, Martin
Brazier, Julian
Bright, Graham
Brittan, Rt Hon Leon
Brooke, Rt Hon Peter
Brown, Michael (Brigg & Cl't's)
Browne, John (Winchester)
Bruce, Ian (Dorset South)
Buchanan-Smith, Rt Hon Alick
Buck, Sir Antony
Budgen, Nicholas
Burns, Simon
Burt, Alistair
Butcher, John
Butler, Chris
Butterfill, John
Carlisle, John, (Luton N)
Carlisle, Kenneth (Lincoln)
Carrington, Matthew
Carttiss, Michael
Cash, William
Channon, Rt Hon Paul
Chapman, Sydney
Chope, Christopher
Churchill, Mr
Clark, Hon Alan (Plym'th S'n)
Clark, Dr Michael (Rochford)
Clark, Sir W. (Croydon S)
Clarke, Rt Hon K. (Rushcliffe)
Colvin, Michael
Conway, Derek
Coombs, Anthony (Wyre F'rest)
Coombs, Simon (Swindon)
Cope, John
Cormack, Patrick
Couchman, James
Cran, James
Currie, Mrs Edwina
Curry, David
Davies, Q. (Stamf'd & Spald'g)
Davis, David (Boothferry)
Day, Stephen
Devlin, Tim
Dickens, Geoffrey
Dicks, Terry
Dorrell, Stephen
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord James
Dover, Den
Dunn, Bob
Durant, Tony
Emery, Sir Peter
Evennett, David
Fallon, Michael
Farr, Sir John
Favell, Tony
Fenner, Dame Peggy
Field, Barry (Isle of Wight)
Finsberg, Sir Geoffrey
Fookes, Miss Janet
Forman, Nigel
Forsyth, Michael (Stirling)
Forth, Eric
Fowler, Rt Hon Norman
Fox, Sir Marcus
Franks, Cecil
Freeman, Roger
French, Douglas
Fry, Peter
Gale, Roger
Gardiner, George
Gill, Christopher
Gilmour, Rt Hon Sir Ian
Glyn, Dr Alan
Goodhart, Sir Philip
Goodlad, Alastair
Goodson-Wickes, Dr Charles
Gorman, Mrs Teresa
Gorst, John
Gow, Ian
Gower, Sir Raymond
Grant, Sir Anthony (CambsSW)
Greenway, Harry (Ealing N)
Greenway, John (Rydale)
Gregory, Conal
Griffiths, Sir Eldon (Bury St E')
Griffiths, Peter (Portsmouth N)
Grist, Ian
Ground, Patrick
Grylls, Michael
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hampson, Dr Keith
Hanley, Jeremy
Hannam, John
Hargreaves, A. (B'ham H'll Gr')
Hargreaves, Ken (Hyndburn)
Harris, David
Haselhurst, Alan
Hawkins, Christopher
Hayes, Jerry
Hayhoe, Rt Hon Sir Barney
Hayward, Robert
Heathcoat-Amory, David
Heddle, John
Heseltine, Rt Hon Michael
Hicks, Mrs Maureen (Wolv' NE)
Hicks, Robert (Cornwall SE)
Higgins, Rt Hon Terence L.
Hill, James
Hind, Kenneth
Hogg, Hon Douglas (Gr'th'm)
Holt, Richard
Hordern, Sir Peter
Howard, Michael
Howarth, Alan (Strat'd-on-A)
Howarth, G. (Cannock & B'wd)
Howell, Ralph (North Norfolk)
Hughes, Robert G. (Harrow W)
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunt, John (Ravensbourne)
Hunter, Andrew
Irvine, Michael
Irving, Charles
Jack, Michael
Jackson, Robert
Janman, Timothy
Johnson Smith, Sir Geoffrey
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert B (Herts W)
Kellett-Bowman, Mrs Elaine
Key, Robert
King, Roger (B'ham N'thfield)
Kirkhope, Timothy
Knapman, Roger
Knight, Greg (Derby North)
Knowles, Michael
Knox, David
Lamont, Rt Hon Norman
Lang, Ian
Latham, Michael
Lawrence, Ivan
Lawson, Rt Hon Nigel
Lee, John (Pendle)
Leigh, Edward (Gainsbor'gh)
Lennox-Boyd, Hon Mark
Lester, Jim (Broxtowe)
Lightbown, David
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Sir Ian (Havant)
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lord, Michael
Luce, Rt Hon Richard
Lyell, Sir Nicholas
McCrindle, Robert
Macfarlane, Sir Neil
MacKay, Andrew (E Berkshire)
Maclean, David
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, M. (Newbury)
McNair-Wilson, P. (New Forest)
Madel, David
Major, Rt Hon John
Malins, Humfrey
Mans, Keith
Maples, John
Mariand, Paul
Marlow, Tony
Martin, David (Portsmouth S)
Mates, Michael
Mawhinney, Dr Brian
Mayhew, Rt Hon Sir Patrick
Mellor, David
Miller, Hal
Mills, Iain
Miscampbell, Norman
Mitchell, Andrew (Gedling)
Mitchell, David (Hants NW)
Moate, Roger
Monro, Sir Hector
Montgomery, Sir Fergus
Moore, Rt Hon John
Morris, M (N'hampton S)
Morrison, Sir Charles (Devizes)
Moss, Malcolm
Mudd, David
Neale, Gerrard
Nelson, Anthony
Neubert, Michael
Newton, Rt Hon Tony
Nicholls, Patrick
Nicholson, David (Taunton)
Nicholson, Miss E. (Devon W)
Onslow, Rt Hon Cranley
Page, Richard
Paice, James
Parkinson, Rt Hon Cecil
Patten, Chris (Bath)
Patten, John (Oxford W)
Pattie, Rt Hon Sir Geoffrey
Pawsey, James
Peacock, Mrs Elizal
Porter, Barry (Wirra
Porter, David (Wave
Portillo, Michael
Price, Sir David
Raffan, Keith
Raison, Rt Hon Tim
Rathbone, Tim
Redwood, John
Renton, Tim
Rhodes James, Rob
Rhys Williams, Sir
Riddick, Graham
Rifkind, Rt Hon Mal
Roberts, Wyn (Conw
Roe, Mrs Marion
Rossi, Sir Hugh
Rost, Peter
Rowe, Andrew
Rumbold, Mrs Ange
Ryder, Richard
Sackville, Hon Tom
Sainsbury, Hon Tim
Sayeed, Jonathan
Scott, Nicholas
Shaw, David (Dover)
Shaw, Sir Giles (Pud Shaw, Sir Michael ( Shelton, William (Str
Shephard, Mrs G. (N Shepherd, Colin (He Shepherd, Richard (
Shersby, Michael
Sims, Roger
Skeet, Sir Trevor
Smith, Sir Dudley (W
Smith, Tim (Beacons
Soames, Hon Nichol
Speed, Keith
Speller, Tony
Spicer, Sir Jim (Dors Spicer, Michael (S W
Squire, Robin
Stanbrook, Ivor
Steen, Anthony
Stern, Michael
Stevens, Lewis
Stewart, Allan (Easte
Stewart, Andrew (Sh
Stokes, John
Stradling Thomas, S
Sumberg, David
Summerson, Hugo
Tapsell, Sir Peter
Taylor, Ian (Esher)
Taylor, John M (Solih
Taylor, Teddy (S'end
Tebbit, Rt Hon Norma
Temple-Morris, Peter
Thompson, D. (Calde
Thompson, Patrick (N
Thorne, Neil
Thornton, Malcolm
Thurnham, Peter
Townend, John (Bridl Townsend, Cyril D. (
Tracey, Richard
Tredinnick, David
Trippier, David
Trotter, Neville
Twinn, Dr Ian
Vaughan, Sir Gerard
Waddington, Rt Hon D
Wakeham, Rt Hon Jo
Waldegrave, Hon Will
Walden, George
Walker, Bill (T'side N
Walker, Rt Hon P. (W
Waller, Gary

Walters, Dennis
Ward, John
Wardle, C. (Bexhill)
Warren, Kenneth
Watts, John
Wells, Bowen
Wheeler, John
Whitney, Ray
Widdecombe, Miss Ann
Wiggin, Jerry
Wilkinson, John
Wilshire, David
Winterton, Mrs Ann
Winterton, Nicholas
Wolfson, Mark
Wood, Timothy
Woodcock, Mike
Yeo, Tim
Young, Sir George (Acton)
Younger, Rt Hon George

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Robert Boscawen and
Mr. Tristan Garel-Jones.

NOES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Adams, Allen (Paisley N)
Allen, Graham
Alton, David
Archer, Rt Hon Peter
Armstrong, Ms Hilary
Ashdown, Paddy
Ashley, Rt Hon Jack
Ashton, Joe
Banks, Tony (Newham NW)
Barnes, Harry (Derbyshire NE)
Barnes, Mrs Rosie (Greenwich)
Barron, Kevin
Battle, John
Beckett, Margaret
Beith, A. J.
Bell, Stuart
Benn, Rt Hon Tony
Bennett, A. F. (D'nt'n & R'dish)
Bermingham, Gerald
Bidwell, Sydney
Blair, Tony
Blunkett, David
Boyes, Roland
Bradley, Keith
Bray, Dr Jeremy
Brown, Gordon (D'mline E)
Brown, Nicholas (Newcastle E)
Brown, Ron (Edinburgh Leith)
Bruce, Malcolm (Gordon)
Buchan, Norman
Buckley, George
Caborn, Richard
Callaghan, Jim
Campbell, Ron (Blyth Valley)
Campbell-Savours, D. N.
Canavan, Dennis
Carlile, Alex (Mont'g)
Clark, Dr David (S Shields)
Clarke, Tom (Monklands W)
Clay, Bob
Clelland, David
Clwyd, Mrs Ann
Cohen, Harry
Coleman, Donald
Cook, Robin (Livingston)
Corbett, Robin
Corbyn, Jeremy
Cousins, Jim
Cox, Tom
Crowther, Stan
Cryer, Bob
Cummings, J.
Cunliffe, Lawrence
Dalyell, Tam
Darling, Alastair
Davies, Rt Hon Denzil (Llanelli)
Davies, Ron (Caerphilly)
Davis, Terry (B'ham Hodge H'l)
Dewar, Donald
Dixon, Don
Dobson, Frank
Doran, Frank
Douglas, Dick
Dunnachie, James
Dunwoody, Hon Mrs Gwyneth
Eadie, Alexander
Eastham, Ken
Evans, John (St Helens N)
Ewing, Harry (Falkirk E)
Ewing, Mrs Margaret (Moray)
Fatchett, Derek
Faulds, Andrew
Fearn, Ronald
Field, Frank (Birkenhead)
Fields, Terry (L'pool B G'n)
Fisher, Mark
Flannery, Martin
Flynn, Paul
Foot, Rt Hon Michael
Forsythe, Clifford (Antrim S)
Foster, Derek
Foulkes, George
Fraser, John
Fyfe, Ms Maria
Galbraith, Samuel
Galloway, George
Garrett, John (Norwich South)
Garrett, Ted (Wallsend)
George, Bruce
Gilbert, Rt Hon Dr John
Godman, Dr Norman A.
Golding, Mrs Llin
Gordon, Ms Mildred
Grant, Bernie (Tottenham)
Griffiths, Nigel (Edinburgh S)
Griffiths, Win (Bridgend)
Grocott, Bruce
Hardy, Peter
Harman, Ms Harriet
Hattersley, Rt Hon Roy
Haynes, Frank
Healey, Rt Hon Denis
Heffer, Eric S.
Hinchliffe, David
Hogg, N. (C'nauld & Kilsyth)
Holland, Stuart
Home Robertson, John
Hood, James
Howarth, George (Knowsley N)
Howell, Rt Hon D. (S'heath)
Howells, Geraint
Hoyle, Doug
Hughes, John (Coventry NE)
Hughes, Robert (Aberdeen N)
Hughes, Roy (Newport E)
Hughes, Simon (Southwark)
Illsley, Eric
Ingram, Adam
Janner, Greville
John, Brynmor
Jones, Barry (Alyn & Deeside)
Jones, Ieuan (Ynys Môn)
Jones, Martyn (Clwyd S W)
Kaufman, Rt Hon Gerald
Kilfedder, James
Kinnock, Rt Hon Neil
Kirkwood, Archy
Lambie, David
Lamond, James
Leadbitter, Ted
Leighton, Ron
Lestor, Miss Joan (Eccles)
Lewis, Terry
Litherland, Robert
Livingstone, Ken
Livsey, Richard
Lloyd, Tony (Stretford)
Lofthouse, Geoffrey
Loyden, Eddie
McAllion, John
McAvoy, Tom
McCartney, Ian
McCusker, Harold
Macdonald, Calum
McKelvey, William
McLeish, Henry
Maclennan, Robert
McNamara, Kevin
McTaggart, Bob
McWilliam, John
Madden, Max
Mahon, Mrs Alice
Marshall, David (Shettleston)
Marshall, Jim (Leicester S)
Martin, Michael (Springburn)
Martlew, Eric
Maxton, John
Meacher, Michael
Meale, Alan
Michael, Alun
Michie, Bill (Sheffield Heeley)
Millan, Rt Hon Bruce
Mitchell, Austin (G't Grimsby)
Molyneaux, Rt Hon James
Moonie, Dr Lewis
Morley, Elliott
Morris, Rt Hon A (W'shawe)
Morris, Rt Hon J (Aberavon)
Mowlam, Marjorie
Mullin, Chris
Nellist, Dave
Oakes, Rt Hon Gordon
O'Brien, William
Orme, Rt Hon Stanley
Patchett, Terry
Pendry, Tom
Pike, Peter
Powell, Ray (Ogmore)
Primarolo, Ms Dawn
Quin, Ms Joyce
Radice, Giles
Randall, Stuart
Redmond, Martin
Rees, Rt Hon Merlyn
Reid, John
Richardson, Ms Jo
Roberts, Allan (Bootle)
Robertson, George
Robinson, Geoffrey
Rooker, Jeff
Ross, Ernie (Dundee W)
Ross, William (Londonderry E)
Rowlands, Ted
Ruddock, Ms Joan
Salmond, Alex
Sedgemore, Brian
Sheerman, Barry
Sheldon, Rt Hon Robert
Shore, Rt Hon Peter
Short, Clare
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, Andrew (Oxford E)
Smith, C. (Isl'ton & F'bury)
Smith, Rt Hon J. (Monk'ds E)
Smyth, Rev Martin (Belfast S)
Snape, Peter
Soley, Clive
Spearing, Nigel
Steel, Rt Hon David
Steinberg, Gerald
Stott, Roger
Strang, Gavin
Straw, Jack
Taylor, Mrs Ann (Dewsbury)
Taylor, Matthew (Truro)
Thomas, Dafydd Elis
Thompson, Jack (Wansbeck)
Turner, Dennis
Vaz, Keith
Walker, A. Cecil (Belfast N)
Wall, Pat
Wallace, James
Walley, Ms Joan
Wardell, Gareth (Gower)
Wareing, Robert N.
Welsh, Andrew (Angus E)
Welsh, Michael (Doncaster N)
Wigley, Dafydd
Williams, Rt Hon A. J.
Williams, Alan W. (Carm'then)
Wilson, Brian
Winnick, David
Wise, Mrs Audrey
Worthington, Anthony
Young, David (Bolton SE)

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Frank Cook and
Mr. Allen McKay.

Question accordingly agreed to.

MR. SPEAKER forthwith declared the main Question, a amended, to be agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House applauds the achievement of the Nation Health Service in providing a record level of patient care recognises that this achievement rests on the substantia additional funds from the taxpayer which a strong econom has made possible and which has supported the dedicate work of the National Health Service staff; and welcomes th Government's continued commitment to the most effectiv use of all the Service's growing resources to bring about further rise in the standard of health care, both in hospital and in the community.

Rating and Valuation (Scotland)

10.27 pm

Mr. Archy Kirkwood (Roxburgh and Berwickshire): I beg to move,

That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that the Non-Domestic Rates and Community Charges (Timetable) (Scotland) Regulations 1987 (S.I., 1987, No. 2167), dated 15th December 1987, a copy of which was laid before this House on 17th December, be annulled.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I understand that it will be convenient for the House to deal with the second motion:

That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that the Abolition of Domestic Rates (Domestic and Part Residential Subjects) (Scotland) Regulations 1987 (S.I., 1987, No. 2179), dated 16th December 1987, a copy of which was laid before this House on 18th December, be annulled.

The first statutory instrument deals with the timetable for the implementation of the poll tax and the second deals with domestic and part residential subjects. Because the abolition of the rating system does not extend to non-domestic rates, the valuation roll will have to be maintained for non-domestic premises. The regulations dealing with residential and part residential subjects address that problem.

The regulations are technical and fairly detailed. I confess that I had some difficulty making sense of the regulations on domestic and part residential subjects. It is perverse of the parliamentary draftsmen to produce regulations of this complexity. It is difficult to make sense of them. I am sure it must have been possible to use plainer English to explain what the regulations were setting out to do. The regulations are the first of their kind to be discussed on the Floor of the House, and it is in the interests of all hon. Members that the regulations to implement the community charge provisions are fully discussed, because, although they are detailed and technical, they are very important. There are no fewer than 70 matters in the primary legislation to be discussed and dealt with by way of regulations, and these are the first two sets—dealing with domestic and part residential subjects and the timetable dates for the enactment provisions.

There are a number of major regulations still outstanding. We have not yet even seen them in draft form. They include statutory instruments to deal with the question of how students are to be provided for under the community charge, registration and appeals, although we have seen a draft regulation on that, the collection procedures, the revenue support grant and the vital matter of the rebate system.

With regard to what we have been able to see and the extent of the preparations that the Government have made for the regulations and draft regulations, there is a fear that the Government will not be able legally to collect the charge on 1 April 1989.

Mr. John Home Robertson (East Lothian): That may be a good thing.

Mr. Kirkwood: Even if they are able to collect the charge, they may simply be pushing the hassle, confusion and chaos further down the line into the hands of local authorities, because, although the regulations may be in place, the Government are still unable to give local authorities and registration officers and those organising the appeal systems that must be put behin and secondary legislation a proper chance the system in a sensible and thought-out m

The reality of the background to these fi is that the Government are not at this s organised to implement the charge sensibly.

As I have already said, the abolition system does not extend to non-domestic valuation roll will have to be maintained for or commercial premises. Paragraphs 3 a Abolition of Domestic Rates (Domesti Residential Subjects) (Scotland) Regula exactly what will stay on the valuation therefore liable for non-domestic rates, and other hand, will be deleted from it, and therefore, liable for the poll tax.

In the main, the purpose of the dome residential subjects regulations is fairly str They remove from the roll private car ports, g and ancillary buildings to sheltered accomm a non-domestic basis, caravans and huts that as primary residences for the whole year are the valuation roll.

There are four or five questions to which the Minister to address his mind. First—I he is familiar with this point, because it was Scottish Council for Single Homeless—is th definitions. The view that is taken by those these matters closely north of the borde opportunity has been missed to revise comp host of definitions included in the regulation from the primary legislation on the commun . It is important to recognise that these provided an opportunity to update definition current thinking and practice. For exam regulations definitions of the words "h "residential care home" serve to reinforce the individual should be treated differently just b she happens to live in a certain category of tion by choice or necessity. The logic behind legislation is that when exemptions and ex being considered, the decision should be b individual's present circumstances rather tha property in which he or she lives.

It is surprising to hear the Department's new definitions had been adopted and this had been taken to clarify these matters an thinking up to date, it would have served matters. The evidence is to the contrary. T Development Department, the Housing Corp other authorities have begun to move traditional, old-fashioned definitions in their d and guidance to local authorities an associations.

Let me give the Minister an example of results. Under the definitions in the regulatio the best-supported accommodation provided associations would be defined as "hostels". W many hostels are well run and do a good jo that definition links accommodation schemes housing associations with the image of the ver of hostel. Similarly, community homes, satell ted, core and cluster housing could be classe I am not sure whether that is a sensible way and I believe that an important opportunity been missed.

The Minister will also be aware that a "residential care home" as defined in the regulations could be so small as to provide home for only two people. Indeed, I have had examples of this kind in my constituency. Such residents would be exempt from the poll tax under the existing regulations. I believe that that makes a mockery of the care in the community concept, because those residents will be treated differently, despite the fact that they are encouraged to be full, ordinary members of the community.

I seek an assurance from the Minister that we will have a proper and correct assessment of properties. The Minister should give us the commitment that guidance instructions will be given to registration officers to examine the individual circumstances of premises and residents to ensure that the recorded valuation will in fact be "non-domestic". Indeed, the officers should not necessarily assume that the existing recorded valuation is always correct. Blanket decisions about categories of properties should not be made given the variation in valuation and rating practices. The Minister will be aware that there is a widely different and inconsistent approach to discretionary rates relief taken in Scotland within the different regional areas. It is not good enough if the registration officers simply accept the definitions and classifications that have served the rating system in the past.

There is also much concern regarding communal areas in sheltered housing. I am sure that the Minister is aware of that concern because the Scottish Council for Single Homeless has also raised the matter with the Scottish Office. We recognise that the regulations have been changed from the earlier draft to ensure that common rooms in sheltered housing developments for the elderly are excluded from rates, and that is welcome. However, regulation 31*(c)* specifies that the provision applies only to sheltered housing for the elderly.

It is not clear whether all other types of sheltered homes and schemes, for example for the mentally handicapped, are covered by legislation such as the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978. I believe that the whole question of shared facilities and other concepts related to sheltered housing should not simply refer to physical design features. I believe that the facilities could include a shared support worker. I believe that those matters should be clarified. Where communal areas are rated separately, residents would have to pay both the poll tax and the rates for that area.

Another concern that merits consideration is the question of live-in staff in residential accommodation. [HON. MEMBERS: "Oh!"] I am not surprised that this matter was anticipated, because the Labour party has followed it carefully. If the Oppostion start teasing me about what I may or may not be doing this evening, I may start teasing them about what they did or did not do to get this debate. [Interruption.] I expected the frisson of antipathy that is coming from the Labour Front Bench.

Mr. Home Robertson: Is the hon. Gentleman going to speak to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan)?

Mr. Kirkwood: Do not tempt me.

The live-in staff in residential accommodation will be expected to pay the personal community charge. In certain circumstances that would be fairly simple to administ Many buildings have a separate warden's flat or house that flat or house would not be included in the rate value of the residential establishment. However, mat will be much more complicated in cases where one or staff share a house with two or three people with spe needs. Assessors should use objective criteria determining what proportion of the rateable value sho be deducted from the total when certain facilities shared. It would help if the Minister would clarify matter.

There is a real worry about the impact of regulations on voluntary organisations and chari which have enjoyed relief under the rating system. new provisions will have a serious effect on them. So voluntary or charitable institutions that benefit fr exemptions under the rating system will get clobbe under the poll tax because they will be expected to the community charge for each of their workers. T will significantly increase the costs of some charities run charitable homes to look after people who mentally handicapped or mentally ill. That runs cou to the Government's stated policy of trying to swi from the state to the voluntary sector and from tax charitable donations, which is part of the Governme political ambition. Many small charities doing v valuable work may be forced out of business by the ex on-cost of paying the community charge for memb of staff.

On the timetable provisions, the Minister owes House and local authorities an assurance that, if he is bring forward the timetable for the setting of the dates which they must achieve targets—for example, the d by which they must issue bills to enable people to pay community charge in 12 monthly instalments — Department will meet its own targets in time to allow th to meet those deadlines. The local authorities and rat authorities that collect and enforce the charge depend many decisions and announcements made by Minister's Department. Therefore, it is essential that assures us that, if the process is to be brought forward five weeks, he will ensure that his Department's work done in time to allow local authorities to make necessary decisions in proper order.

These are technical matters and it takes a lot of read and careful study to understand them. I have tried simplify them as much as I can. I think that the Minis will accept that the regulations are important. They are first of many, and it is right for the House to spend an ho making sure that the Government understand the fe and apprehensions of those north of the border who involved in these matters before the Minister gives Government's view on the operation of the regulation

10.43 pm

Mr. Allan Stewart (Eastwood): I agree with the h Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwoo that these are important regulations, and I have no dou that my hon. Friend the Minister will answer the h Gentleman's detailed questions. The hon. Gentleman h undoubtedly done a considerable amount of research.

The prayer carries the names of a number of h Members, headed by the right hon. Member Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel), the lea of the Liberal party, and the hon. Member for Caithn and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan), who were both pres for the last vote. It is a disgrace and an insult to the people of Scotland that hon. Members should put their names at the top of a prayer on a matter of importance to the people of Scotland and, having been present for our proceedings before this debate, should not even have the courtesy to stay for a few minutes to listen to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire.

[Mr. Allan Stewart]

It would have been of assistance for the House to know whether this was one subject on which the Social Democratic party and the Liberal party agreed. I hope that this short debate will also enable the Scottish National party and the Labour party—in addition to answering detailed questions about the regulations—to make their policies clear on the implementation of the community charge.

The House may have been puzzled to see early-day motion 503, in the names of several Opposition Members, which states:

"That this House condemns the Scottish National Party for calling for a campaign of non-registration for, and non-payment of, the poll tax".

That has been amended by the hon. Members for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) and for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond). I think that is the first time that two thirds of the parliamentary representatives of that party have condemned that party on the Order Paper.

As I understood it, that was the policy of the Labour party, or at least of a substantial number of people who are leading spokesmen of that party, such as Mr. Michael Conochie, and others. However, I appreciate that that might not necessarily be the policy of the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar). This debate therefore gives him an opportunity to clarify his position.

Turning in detail to the regulations, I should like to ask the Minister a question about regulation 4 of statutory instrument No. 145, which specifies the date by which district councils must give certain information to regional councils. What will happen if, regrettably, they do not? My hon. Friend will be aware that several Labour-controlled district councils have intimated that they will not co-operate with the community charge legislation. One hopes that common sense will eventually prevail in those district councils, but that may not be the case. What happens if they do not co-operate with these and other regulations? I put forward the fairly simple suggestion that my hon. Friend should ensure that they do not receive revenue from the community charge unless they co-operate. The revenue could be held by the regional councils until they do co-operate. That seems a fairly simple financial incentive, which would doubtless be effective.

Finally, I welcome the regulations for another reason. They show that, despite some disinformation to the contrary, the programme for the implementation of the community charge in Scotland is on target. There is no doubt that many people are trying to confuse the people of Scotland by suggesting that in some way or another the community charge will not replace domestic rates on the timetable as laid down in the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987. As the House knows, it is of considerable importance to the Eastwood constituency that the domestic rating system is abolished and replaced by the community charge. I congratulate my hon. Friend on sticking to the timetable.

10.48 pm

Mr. Donald Dewar (Glasgow, Gars considering two instruments tonight wh poll tax. That gives them a certain reflected notoriety. They are highly techn matters of substance.

The first is the timetable for imple perhaps a reminder of the complexity of that lies behind what the Government al a simple concept—a flat-rate personal to forget the joys of the water rate, t sewage rate—the collective standard a tax—all of which will remain to pl create administrative difficulties. When State is dead and gone—I am talki political death—few will shower b memory.

It is a difficult first year for local go timetable is to be held to, a great deal of crammed into a very short space of tim that famous exercise that takes us from do and relentlessly, through the streets of understand, due to start on 1 April, and by 1 October. It is a bit difficult to kno work, because we have not the necessar which the details are laid out—which coming from a Government who are alwa the need to make haste. What we do kn that ratepayers and taxpayers are being considerable additional burdens as they computers and organise all the paraphern Oppression, I fear, is built into the very

The order lays down that poll tax bill 31 March in any year. That will start a ma the like of which we have seldom seen in I believe, the report by the Chartered In Finance and Accountancy that suggested was organised by the normal instalment mean some 47 million bills anually being that is not too inelegant a phrase—by th machine.

I recognise that there will be a lengthe this ridiculous tax is forced through. Peop instalments, rather than the 10 that are under the rating system. There seems litt dates that have been set out. If mishap occur, or, indeed, if it is not possible to g time, the whole system will be in real dif

I am a little curious about one point. W that bills must be out by 31 March: the here and deadlines there for unfortunat ment. There are, however, few signs of d Secretary of State, I gather, for examp declined a pressing invitation to set a dead by which he must produce the rate settlement—which, after all, is an essentia for those who must calculate the poll tax. Secretary of State seems to be takin "Prussian corporal" approach to the activities of local government, while rema himself. That, I fear, is all too typical.

The second instrument is, perhaps, mo is certainly more recherché. A fine administrative nit-picking, it will delight substantial number of barrack-room law usually be found in parliamentary or other company. Indeed, when I come to think of it, not just barrack-room lawyers, but professional lawyers as well will obtain considerable entertainment from the prospects.

I thought that the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) handled the complexities remarkably smoothly; however, it may be that in recent days he has had plenty of experience of obscure and Delphic documents, and I have some sympathy with him. My fear is that people will be invited to plunge into a jungle—a jungle in which many an administrator will disappear without trace.

Let me say in passing that I see with a certain sadness that all the work about which we heard — all the arguments about the definitions of a bicycle, and whether four wheels were good but two wheels were better—has come to naught. There has been a masterly compromise: we need not decide on the number of wheels, because in the regulations the bicycle has become a cycle. I suppose that that shows a certain amount of mental agility. Indeed, it is probably the most useful thing that the Minister of State has done in the past three months.

In any event, I predict that the regulations will be an outing for the vexatious litigant. Some points have already been raised by the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire. He was using, as I have used, some very useful briefing material that came from COSLA and from the Scottish Council for Single Homeless. It points to many of the difficulties. They are marginal difficulties. Many people may not bother to chase up these points; they will shrug their shoulders and accept the broad brush approach. But if I remember the obsessive interest in rating law that has always been shown by the most unlikely people, I suspect that that is an unsafe assumption.

It is perfectly straightforward that a garage which is detached from a domestic property, a lock-up perhaps some distance away, may still be treated as domestic and therefore outside the rating system when it is merely used to house the family car or the legendary cycle. But without expending much ingenuity, one can think of many difficult halfway—I was about to say "houses" but I suppose a better word would be "garages". Let us say that it is used, for example, for a taxi or to garage a delivery van. I know many people who have a vehicle which they use at their work to deliver goods; then they take it home and run it into the family garage at the end of the working day. Let us assume that a driving instructor uses the family car on a part-time basis for his trade and garages it in a detached lock-up garage. Is that part of the domestic hereditament, or is it commercial, in which case it would remain in the rating system and ought to be rated? I do not know whether there will be a great deal of litigation on such questions, but the possibilities are almost endless.

Then we have the whole question of the huts, the bothies and the doocots which the House will remember remain commercial properties, which are not considered to be domestic and which are therefore rated. In paragraph 4 (c) of the abolition regulations, caravans are not to be classed as domestic and within the ambit of the poll tax if they are "not allowed to be used for human habitation throughout the whole year".

I am not sure what "throughout the whole year" means. What happens if the caravan is used throughout the whole year even if it is not technically allowed to be so used? At that point, does the caravan become domestic and to poll tax? Perhaps the Minister could say a wo whether caravans will be rateable properties.

Mr. Geoffrey Dickens (Littleborough Saddleworth): I understood that the local authori have control over the rating of caravans in its area if a caravan was used only for holidays, weekend on, it could be charged up to two whole co charges. The likelihood is that it would be community charge. Clearly, if somebody is li whole year in a caravan, that is his home and it i for the community charge to be levied. That seems to me.

Mr. Dewar: I have every sympathy with t Member. His confusion on this occasion understandable than it is on others. If he reads pa 4 of the abolition regulations he will see that cara not treated as a homogeneous mass but that there species of caravan in the world of the poll tax. It is sometimes to know what one is looking at. One a box upon wheels. Would the hon. Gentleman k difference between caravans which are on a fixed on which the dwellers will have to pay a poll caravans accepted under regulation 4, which

"in accordance with any licence or planning permiss are not allowed to be used for human habitation thr the whole year"?

If a person lives in one of those, he is not subjec poll tax, but presumably the caravan is liable for

So the song goes on endlessly. It will be nightmare from which you, Mr. Deputy Speake would run away and pass by on the other side, b lived in such a caravan we would have problems. T matter illustrates the problems which will be shortly to the constituency of the hon. Mem Littleborough and Saddleworth (Mr. Dickens) if not do something about it in the course of the legislation.

I also draw the attention of the House to the p of communal dwellings, which are rated and wh within the domestic sector and not rated. Th Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire very fair attention to some problems, and I have much sy with the points that were made originally by the S Council for Single Homeless about hostels, lodging and refuges. They will be liable to the community There is also a plethora of other types of residential that will be classed for rating purposes.

Mr. Alistair Darling (Edinburgh, Central): I whether, in considering this dog's breakfast of an my hon. Friend will speculate on what are subst different facilities when considering sheltered h premises? Will he not agree with me that thi breakfast legislation will benefit only lawyers? Perh right hon. and learned Secretary of State for Scotla the hon. and perhaps not quite so learned Mem Edinburgh, West (Lord James Douglas-Hamilto anticipating a return to practice in 1990 or 1991, wh will have to get to grips with this legislation.

Mr. Dewar: In the presence of learned counsel, I not disagree with any of those propositions. It is point that there are great problems with definition, position will be confused and ambiguous at times

[Mr. Dewar]

I shall remind the House of what was said by the Scottish Council for Single Homeless, which has much experience. In its view, the regulations

"will lead to distress for individual payees, more appeals to the courts, greater difficulty in implementing the legislation and inevitable amendments to the regulations, and possibly the Act in the very near future, at considerable expense and bureaucratic hassle for all concerned."

That is an excellent phrase that we might take into the parliamentary vocabulary—"bureaucratic hassle". The case has been well made out.

Regulation 3(1)(c) deals with communal sheltered houses, and lists a series of sheltered houses with communal facilities such as a lounge or dining facility used in common; they will not be rated, but the occupants will pay a poll tax on the dwelling house part of the complex. That is sensible and is welcomed by everyone. But the point has been made, and I want to stress it—the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire mentioned it in passing—that the concession is tied, or appears to be tied, to sheltered housing premises for the elderly.

There is also sheltered housing for the mentally handicapped. In my constituency, there is a special complex of scatter flats for the young single homeless. It is a series of individual dwellings with communal lounges and social facilities attached. If one takes the restriction to sheltered housing to refer to the elderly, one might well envisage a situation where other groups pay poll tax individually as occupants of the properties and are also responsible on some basis for the rates levied on the common parts.

Paragraph 3(1)(d) provides that staff houses attached to residential accommodation are to be treated as domestic premises, and the inmate will pay a poll tax. The staff house will not be rated in the same way as the rest of the premises. That is simple enough in relation to a warden's flat where the warden will pay poll tax in the way that I have described. It is self-evidently complicated, and perhaps on the margins of the debate, but it might become important.

What happens when a group of, say, handicapped people is living communally with staff who are helping them and giving them support—living in a room but sharing their communal facilities? There might be a kitchen that clearly has to be rated because it is part of a residential home that is regarded as being outwith the poll tax system. The warden, who is paying a poll tax, uses that kitchen. Will the kitchen's rateable value be reduced to take account of the use of that kitchen by the warden? How will that apportionment be made, and what criteria will be applied? No doubt the Minister will be glad to comment on that kind of important point when he sums up.

I have been dealing with some detailed points, but sometimes principles of importance lurk behind even detailed points. We are talking about homes for the elderly—nursing homes—and the fact that these are going to be rated under the new system. What has come out of that is the much commented on, and rightly commented on, extraordinary distortion whereby, if an elderly person is living at home, he or she will pay the poll tax, while if he or she is living in a nursing home or a home for the elderly, he or she will not have to pay the poll tax.

The present system is neutral. There is no penalty for offering shelter and succour. But now we are building a disincentive into the system. I would n suggesting that that disincentive is like who has a feeling of duty towards an el that duty, but it means that the re financial reason for hesitating. The fa to bear an additional financial burden t to pay under the rating system. Th consequence that cannot be easily shru

I am aware that there has been corr issue. I have here a letter from the Sc 18 December 1987, from a Mr. Muir R the Convention of Scottish Local A with exemptions, he says that any other present flat-rate approach "would weaken the concept of the com personal tax levied on all adults over t justification for exempting residents residential care homes, and hostels prov level of care is that they are by reason mental frailty unable to take an activ community, to the extent that the argume personal community charge as a means accountability does not apply."

But exactly the same sort of people to go into a residential home but are b home, with exactly the same degree of same mental and physical difficulties, asked to pay the poll tax. It does seem a quite miserable anomaly, and one of should not be proud.

We have built into the system, as the knows, for example, a method of ce severely mentally handicapped. I do n many of us like it, but at least there is t when a doctor is prepared to certify that exists in regard to his patient. I would that it would be beyond the bounds of p that to those who are frail, who have and are being maintained, often at e sacrifice, by their families. [Interruptio

My hon. Friend the Member for Ja says that that is not a good road to go al prepared to have a debate, but I think th with me that, whether or not that is the ought to be found. On that I think the unanimity. The present anomaly, wh asked to pay because they remain w although they may be physically in the those who are in a home and have been e unsatisfactory.

I will leave it there, because one o Members will obviously wish to speak. is an unpleasant series of regulations. unjust and unacceptable. It is part of implementation of the poll tax, which w high-cost, totally unwanted tax. In the l Secretary of State has been saying a gr virtues of listening to public opinion. H in education he listened to the condemnation and rightly—he makes abandoned most of the plans that he ha for discussion.

I am prepared to give the right h Gentleman credit for that, if he promis precedent. I suggest to him that there condemnation is more universal or widespread than that of the poll tax. We insult anyone by to stop someone rly relative doing ive will have a ly unit will have t it does not have is an unhappy ged off.

pondence on the tish Office dated ell, addressed to norities. Dealing proach than the

nity charge as a age 18 . . . The nursing homes,
ng an equivalent their physical or part in the local for imposing the increasing local no have not had g maintained at ility, exactly the re going to be o me that this is which the House

ecretary of State
fication for the think that very re an exemption certain situation
ot have thought ibility to extend ysical problems,
rmous cost and

ow (Mr. Dixon)
g. I am perfectly he would agree ght road, a road would be total eby people are their families,
me situation as mpted, is totally

two other hon.
believe that this elieve that it is e fabric of the
be a low-yield,
day or two, the deal about the has told us that nost universal virtue of it—out on the table

n. and learned that it will be a no area where position more pose it root and branch. We believe that he is becoming increasingly isolated and alienated. In debates such as this, we will continue our attempt at least to make contact with the beleaguered garrison in the Scottish Office. I believe, and I think that I speak for most people in Scotland, that the whole miserable and misguided exercise should be abandoned.

11.9 pm

Mr. Alex Salmond (Banff and Buchan): The statutory instruments should be rejected, not because they are technically incorrect but because they are democratically indefensible.

The debate takes place against the backcloth of the complete rejection of the poll tax by the Scottish population. In the last Parliament the vast majority of Scottish Members of Parliament voted against the legislation. If these statutory instruments are voted on tonight, an even larger majority of Scottish Members of Parliament will vote for their annulment. The issue has been tested in Scotland at the general election and the Conservative party's case in favour of the poll tax was found wanting.

It is possible to implement the poll tax. It is clumsy, convoluted and expensive. It will cost about an additional £25 million, twice the extra resources given to the Scottish Health Service at the end of last year. It is possible to implement the poll tax, but that does not make it right, nor does it make it certain.

There will be a large measure of support for a campaign of non-payment against the poll tax. I was interested in a BBC television programme on Friday night, where, despite the joint efforts of the hon. Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth) and the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) in arguing for payment of the poll tax, some 50 per cent. of the audience said that they were prepared to consider non-payment.

There will be a campaign of non-payment against the poll tax. The only question is whether it will be organised and effective or isolated and then suppressed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. The hon. Gentleman is taking the debate very wide of the regulations before the House. We cannot have a general debate about the community charge. I hope that he will address his remarks to the regulations.

Mr. Salmond: I was arguing that the statutory instruments should be annulled because democratically they are in question.

Mr. Harry Ewing (Falkirk, East): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Salmond: I shall extend to the hon. Gentleman the courtesy that he did not extend to me last week in the debate on the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs.

Mr. Ewing: I did not do too badly last week. I extended the courtesy to two or three Members, and that is not bad going on any terms.

The hon. Gentleman is arguing that there should be a campaign of non-payment of the community charge. If that is the advice that he is giving to the people of Scotland, is he committing Gordon Wilson, the chairman of the Scottish National party and a lawyer, and any other lawyer in the SNP, to give their services free of charge to any person in Scotland who accepts the advice to break the law and then finds himself in court?

Mr. Salmond: If the hon. Gentleman serv legislation, he will find that one of the great pro it is that there is no defence. The SNP is co providing a spearhead and leadership.

The question is not whether there will be a of non-payment; it is whether it will be organi

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. That may w question, but not for our proceedings at this tim
The hon. Gentleman should address his rem closely to the regulations.

Mr. Salmond: It is legitimate to argue a statutory instruments because they are democ question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is in order against the statutory instruments as long as Gentleman confines his arguments to their con is what he is not doing, and I hope that he wil

Mr. Salmond: I am arguing reasonably statutory instruments should be annulled becau democratically in question. I am seeking to buil to show why they are democratically in qu
Scotland.

To answer the hon. Member for Falkirk, Ewing), the Scottish National party has argu campaign must be waged against the poll tax. W the leadership of such a campaign to COSLA STUC. The response that we received fro organisations was less than favourable, al understand that the STUC's position is now ch

There are two requirements for such a campa successful. First, it must be organised. There is to believe——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gen
paying no regard to the advice that I have offi Either he must return to the substance of the re or I must ask him to resume his seat.

Mr. Salmond: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speak
I close my remarks by saying that the campa be organised effectively. Secondly, there must b

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gen clearly completely disregarding my advice.
therefore advise him to resume his seat. I call Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker.)

Mr. Salmond rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentlem not challenge my ruling. I have instructed him t his seat, and that he must now do.

Mr. Salmond rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I ordered Gentleman to resume his seat when I was on m
he does not respond to the instruction that I ha him, I shall have no alternative but to exer disciplinary powers.

11.18 pm

Mr. Bill Walker (Tayside, North): The hon.
for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) properly House's attention to the fact that barrack-room might well emerge. What has already happen today shows that in Scottish affairs we have barrack-room lawyers but people who are deter destroy any sort of objective debate—whatever

[Mr. Bill Walker]

The speech by the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) was fascinating. The House will certainly feel that we were fortunate that the Liberals were not responsible for drawing up the regulations. The hon. Gentleman said that definitions give them problems. We know that the Liberals and their SDP colleagues—they are noticeable by their absence this evening, and they were absent for yesterday's debate, too—find difficulty in reaching any kind of agreement. The hon. Gentleman's speech clearly showed that if they were ever given the opportunity to bring forward regulations, in the House or anywhere else, they would spend all their time talking about their disagreements and get nowhere.

The regulations are essential. They are part of the programme that we need if we are to move towards getting the community charge into operation by the given date. The hon. Member for Garscadden rightly drew attention to areas that he believed needed to be clarified, which is what the debate should be about.

The hon. Member for Garscadden was right, too, to draw attention to the problems of caravans. Their position must be clarified. But the hon. Gentleman knows only too well that, in the past two Parliaments, we have had to deal with and amend caravan legislation brought in by the Labour Government. Caravans have always caused problems of clear definition in matters of rating.

I welcome the timetable, which clearly shows by what date and by whom things must be done. It will make it possible for local authorities to plan properly and meet the deadlines. No one has ever suggested that the transition from the rates to the community charge would be easy. Substantial changes such as this are never easy. Therefore, it is right to include the timetable in the regulations.

I welcome the regulations, because the community charge will give the country a real opportunity, based on the regulations and the timetable, to introduce a measure that will be seen to be fair, just and preferable for Scotland.

11.20 pm

The Minister of State, Scottish Office (Mr. Ian Lang): We are all in the debt of the Liberal party for initiating the debate. It is appropriate that Liberal Members should take such a close interest in praying at a time such as this. Of course, I had hoped that they might favour us by revealing a policy. I recall that, throughout the consideration of the Bill in Committee — the hon. Member for Glasgow, Cathcart (Mr. Maxton) will remember this vividly—in 125 hours the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan), who is not in his place, utterly failed to deliver even the tiniest nuance of what his policies would be. He said that he could do business with me. That was a greater compliment than I knew at the time. He has now revealed that he can do business with almost nobody else.

It has been an interesting debate, if only to reveal the fact that the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond), who wants the people of Scotland to break the law on the community charge, is not prepared to contemplate breaking the laws of the House.

The regulations are an important although essentially technical part of the process of implementing the community charge in Scotland. As the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) said, they are complicated. I shall try to simplify them.

It was indeed a pleasure to hear the subtlety of r that the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden Dewar) deployed on this occasion. It gave us a tantali glimpse of what we might have enjoyed in those 125 h in Committee had he joined us. He mentioned a cer obsession with doocots. I hope that he is contemplating paying his community charge in piece eight. If time permits, I shall try to cover some of the o points that he raised.

It may be helpful if I explain the policy backgroun the two sets of regulations. In doing so, I shall try to with the technical measures that have been raised regard to the domestic and part residential sub regulations, from 1 April next year the valuation roll not include domestic subjects, and rates will no longe paid on them. The basic definition of domestic subje which is set out in section 2 of the Abolition of Dome Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, is dwelling houses. Th is provision in that section for additions and exception the definition, and the main purpose of the dome subjects regulations is to set out such additions exceptions in detail.

A particularly important effect of the regulations i provide exemption from liability to pay a perso community charge for residents — other than resid members of staff—of private hospitals, nursing hon residential care homes, and certain hostels providing equivalent level of care. That is achieved by ensuring t the subjects, other than the accommodation used resident staff, remain within the rating system so th under section 8 of the 1987 Act, personal commu charge liability does not arise. The regulations ensure t certain properties, such as beach chalets and holi caravans, remain within the rating system to avoid liabi to the standard community charge.

Many changes were made to the draft regulations in light of responses to the consultation exercise, wh involved bodies such has the Scottish Assess Association, COSLA, the Royal Institution of Charte Surveyors, the Law Society of Scotland, and many oth Most of the changes were of a technical nature. I draw attention of the House to one substantive addition. T regulations, as made, provide for the removal from rat of the communal parts of sheltered housing developmer That point was raised by the hon. Member for Roxbu and Berwickshire. He inquired whether that change wo apply only to sheltered housing for the elderly. That what the representations sought.

That removal was in response to a representation fr the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations. argument was that, if individual sheltered housing un were to be removed from rating because they fell with the category of dwellinghouses, it would be inconsistent leave within rating the communal areas — typica comprising laundries, common rooms, and guest roo — since, for all practical purposes, such ancill accommodation forms an integral part of the everyd living space available to residents for their exclusive u That argument seemed to us to be entirely reasonable, a the regulations now give effect to the point in paragra 1(c) of regulation 3.

Any comparison between the draft of the regulatio and the regulations in the form as now made provid ample evidence that the consultation process was entire genuine.

The regulations are also consistent with the explanations that we gave during the passage of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Bill last year of the intentions underlying the powers of prescription in clause 2 of the Bill, and also with the commitment that the Government gave that residents of nursing homes, residential care homes and similar establishments were to be exempted from having to pay the personal community charge through the mechanism of leaving such property subject to non-domestic rates.

The provisions of the timetable regulations are also essentially technical.

Mr. Dick Douglas (Dunfermline, West): How can the Minister possibly justify the fact that if somebody is severely mentally handicapped and is in hospital he will be exempt from the personal community charge but that if a similar individual lives in the family home within the community he will have to go through the paraphernalia of vexatious and disturbing information-gathering in order to gain a similar exemption?

Mr. Lang: The hon. Gentleman attempts to clothe his point with an emotional coating by referring to the severely mentally handicapped. That is outwith the regulations. If somebody leaves hospital and returns home, he will be liable to rating.

As I have already said, the provisions of the timetable regulations are essentially technical. Their main importance lies in defining for local authorities the capability which needs to be built into the computer systems they are designing in terms of handling the information necessary for the setting of non-domestic rates and community charges, the issue of demand notices and so on.

The timetable contained in these regulations differs in detail from the corresponding requirements under the rating system. The main reason for this is that the normal method of payment of community charge will be 12 monthly instalments beginning in April each year, rather than the 10 monthly instalments beginning in May by which rates are payable. This means that decisions have to be taken and demand notices issued before the start of the financial year, so the process has to start somewhat earlier.

Our proposals were issued for consultation in mid-September last year. A number of detailed comments were made about relatively minor parts of the timetable, and account has been taken of these in the final version of the regulations.

Mr. John Maxton (Glasgow, Cathcart): I understand what the Minister is saying about the timetable and the programme, but how can local authorities or anybody else decide the billing processes and the computer systems when they have no idea about the particular rebate scheme that will govern the collection system? Does the Minister intend to make an announcement about that in the near future?

Mr. Lang: I assure the hon. Gentleman that we are in no way departing from the critical path for implementation of the regulations and provisions in the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987. The programme allows plenty of time to deal with all those matters. The hon. Gentleman should bear in mind that the broad thrust of the system will not be so different from the broad thrust of the administration of domestic rates.

The only significant concern expressed related to the proposal in the consultation draft that there should be a cut-off date in March for the issue of demand notices. Some of those consulted were concerned that this requirement would leave insufficient time for the work to be done, bearing in mind that there will be twice as many community charge payers as domestic ratepayers—hence the explanation of the increase in cost to which the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan referred.

In the final version of the regulations, the deadline was put back to 31 March, so that there are now two clear months to issue demand notices after the determination of the non-domestic rate and the community charges. I cannot believe that this provides insufficient time for local authorities to get the job done. We have, as I have already made clear, provided substantial additional resources for local authorities to acquire and install the necessary equipment to handle community charge registration, billing and collection and it is up to authorities to design systems which can meet the requirements of the new system in this as in other respects.

Last night the House debated the Rate Support Grant (Scotland) (No. 3) Order and approved the generous grant settlement for local authorities for 1988-89. During that debate there were calls for the abolition of guidelines and for the abolition of grant penalty—both inventions of previous Labour Governments. The introduction of the community charge will achieve both those objectives. It will introduce a system that will be fairer and that will create greater accountability between local authorities and the residents in their areas. It will force local authorities into the open and make them justify their spending levels to the electors who will have to pay them. That will create a new realism and responsibility, and that cannot come too soon.

We are well down the path, through the process of consultation, towards the smooth, orderly implementation of the community charge, on target and on time. The local authorities are quietly and competently getting on with the job of preparation. These two sets of regulations are two more milestones along that road, and I commend them to the House.

Mr. Kirkwood: I judge that the House would like to vote on this issue. I move therefore that the two instruments that we have been discussing be annulled, and I invite hon. Members to vote accordingly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The House can vote on only one, and that is the first one on the Order Paper.

Question put:—

The House divided: Ayes 218, Noes 271.

Division No. 146] [11.30 pm

AYES

Abbott, Ms Diane	Bermingham, Gerald
Adams, Allen (Paisley N)	Bidwell, Sydney
Allen, Graham	Blair, Tony
Archer, Rt Hon Peter	Blunkett, David
Armstrong, Ms Hilary	Boyes, Roland
Ashdown, Paddy	Bradley, Keith
Ashley, Rt Hon Jack	Bray, Dr Jeremy
Ashton, Joe	Brown, Gordon (D'mline E)
Banks, Tony (Newham NW)	Brown, Nicholas (Newcastle E)
Barnes, Harry (Derbyshire NE)	Brown, Ron (Edinburgh Leith)
Barron, Kevin	Buchan, Norman
Battle, John	Buckley, George
Beckett, Margaret	Caborn, Richard
Beith, A. J.	Callaghan, Jim
Bell, Stuart	Campbell, Ron (Blyth Valley)
Benn, Rt Hon Tony	Campbell-Savours, D. N.
Bennett, A. F. (D'nt'n & R'dish)	Canavan, Dennis

Carlile, Alex (Mont'g)
Clark, Dr David (S Shields)
Clarke, Tom (Monklands W)
Clay, Bob
Clelland, David
Clwyd, Mrs Ann
Cohen, Harry
Coleman, Donald
Cook, Frank (Stockton N)
Cook, Robin (Livingston)
Corbett, Robin
Corbyn, Jeremy
Cousins, Jim
Cox, Tom
Crowther, Stan
Cryer, Bob
Cummings, J.
Cunliffe, Lawrence
Dalyell, Tam
Darling, Alastair
Davies, Rt Hon Denzil (Llanelli)
Davies, Ron (Caerphilly)
Davis, Terry (B'ham Hodge H'l)
Dewar, Donald
Dixon, Don
Dobson, Frank
Doran, Frank
Douglas, Dick
Dunnachie, James
Dunwoody, Hon Mrs Gwyneth
Eadie, Alexander
Eastham, Ken
Evans, John (St Helens N)
Ewing, Harry (Falkirk E)
Ewing, Mrs Margaret (Moray)
Fatchett, Derek
Faulds, Andrew
Fearn, Ronald
Field, Frank (Birkenhead)
Fields, Terry (L'pool B G'n)
Fisher, Mark
Flannery, Martin
Foot, Rt Hon Michael
Foster, Derek
Foulkes, George
Fraser, John
Fyfe, Mrs Maria
Galbraith, Samuel
Galloway, George
Garrett, John (Norwich South)
Garrett, Ted (Wallsend)
George, Bruce
Gilbert, Rt Hon Dr John
Godman, Dr Norman A.
Golding, Mrs Llin
Gordon, Ms Mildred
Grant, Bernie (Tottenham)
Griffiths, Nigel (Edinburgh S)
Griffiths, Win (Bridgend)
Grocott, Bruce
Hardy, Peter
Harman, Ms Harriet
Hattersley, Rt Hon Roy
Haynes, Frank
Healey, Rt Hon Denis
Heffer, Eric S.
Hinchliffe, David
Hogg, N. (C'nauld & Kilsyth)
Holland, Stuart
Home Robertson, John
Howarth, George (Knowsley N)
Howells, Geraint
Hoyle, Doug
Hughes, John (Coventry NE)
Hughes, Robert (Aberdeen N)
Hughes, Roy (Newport E)
Hughes, Simon (Southwark)
Illsley, Eric
Ingram, Adam
Janner, Greville
John, Brynmor
Johnston, Sir Russell
Jones, Barry (Alyn & Deeside)
Jones, Martyn (Clwyd S W)
Kaufman, Rt Hon Gerald
Kennedy, Charles
Kirkwood, Archy
Lambie, David
Lamond, James
Leadbitter, Ted
Leighton, Ron
Lestor, Miss Joan (Eccles)
Lewis, Terry
Litherland, Robert
Livingstone, Ken
Livsey, Richard
Lloyd, Tony (Stretford)
Lofthouse, Geoffrey
Loyden, Eddie
McAllion, John
McAvoy, Tom
McCartney, Ian
Macdonald, Calum
McKay, Allen (Penistone)
McKelvey, William
McLeish, Henry
McNamara, Kevin
McTaggart, Bob
McWilliam, John
Madden, Max
Mahon, Mrs Alice
Marshall, David (Shettleston)
Marshall, Jim (Leicester S)
Martin, Michael (Springburn)
Martlew, Eric
Maxton, John
Meacher, Michael
Michael, Alun
Michie, Bill (Sheffield Heeley)
Millan, Rt Hon Bruce
Mitchell, Austin (G't Grimsby)
Moonie, Dr Lewis
Morley, Elliott
Morris, Rt Hon A (W'shawe)
Morris, Rt Hon J (Aberavon)
Mowlam, Marjorie
Mullin, Chris
Nellist, Dave
Oakes, Rt Hon Gordon
O'Brien, William
Orme, Rt Hon Stanley
Patchett, Terry
Pendry, Tom
Pike, Peter
Powell, Ray (Ogmore)
Primarolo, Ms Dawn
Quin, Ms Joyce
Radice, Giles
Randall, Stuart
Redmond, Martin
Rees, Rt Hon Merlyn
Reid, John
Richardson, Ms Jo
Roberts, Allan (Bootle)
Robertson, George
Robinson, Geoffrey
Rooker, Jeff
Ross, Ernie (Dundee W)
Rowlands, Ted
Ruddock, Ms Joan
Salmond, Alex
Sedgemore, Brian
Shore, Rt Hon Peter
Short, Clare
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, Andrew (Oxford E)
Smith, C. (Isl'ton & F'bury)
Smith, Rt Hon J. (Monk'ds E)
Snape, Peter
Soley, Clive
Spearing, Nigel
Steinberg, Gerald
Stott, Roger
Strang, Gavin
Straw, Jack
Taylor, Mrs Ann (Dewsbury)
Taylor, Matthew (Truro)
Thomas, Dafydd Elis
Thompson, Jack (Wansbeck)
Turner, Dennis
Walker, A. Cecil (Belfast N)
Wall, Pat
Walley, Ms Joan
Wardell, Gareth (Gower)
Wareing, Robert N.
Welsh, Andrew (Angus E)
Welsh, Michael (Doncas
Williams, Rt Hon A. J.
Williams, Alan W. (Carm
Wilson, Brian
Winnick, David
Wise, Mrs Audrey
Worthington, Anthony
Young, David (Bolton SE

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. James Wallace and
Mr. Malcolm Bruce.

NOES

Aitken, Jonathan
Alexander, Richard
Alison, Rt Hon Michael
Allason, Rupert
Amos, Alan
Arbuthnot, James
Arnold, Tom (Hazel Grove)
Ashby, David
Aspinwall, Jack
Atkins, Robert
Atkinson, David
Baker, Rt Hon K. (Mole Valley)
Baker, Nicholas (Dorset N)
Baldry, Tony
Batiste, Spencer
Beaumont-Dark, Anthony
Bellingham, Henry
Bendall, Vivian
Bennett, Nicholas (Pembroke)
Bevan, David Gilroy
Blackburn, Dr John G.
Blaker, Rt Hon Sir Peter
Body, Sir Richard
Bonsor, Sir Nicholas
Boscawen, Hon Robert
Boswell, Tim
Bottomley, Peter
Bottomley, Mrs Virginia
Bowden, A (Brighton K'pto'n)
Bowden, Gerald (Dulwich)
Bowis, John
Boyson, Rt Hon Dr Sir Rhodes
Brandon-Bravo, Martin
Brazier, Julian
Bright, Graham
Brittan, Rt Hon Leon
Brooke, Rt Hon Peter
Brown, Michael (Brigg & Cl't's)
Browne, John (Winchester)
Bruce, Ian (Dorset South)
Buchanan-Smith, Rt Hon Alick
Buck, Sir Antony
Budgen, Nicholas
Burns, Simon
Burt, Alistair
Butcher, John
Butterfill, John
Carlisle, John, (Luton N)
Carlisle, Kenneth (Lincoln)
Carrington, Matthew
Carttiss, Michael
Cash, William
Channon, Rt Hon Paul
Chapman, Sydney
Chope, Christopher
Clark, Sir W. (Croydon S)
Clarke, Rt Hon K. (Rushcliffe)
Colvin, Michael
Conway, Derek
Coombs, Anthony (Wyre F'rest)
Coombs, Simon (Swindon)
Cope, John
Couchman, James
Cran, James
Curry, David
Davies, Q. (Stamf'd & Sp
Davis, David (Boothferry
Day, Stephen
Devlin, Tim
Dickens, Geoffrey
Dicks, Terry
Dorrell, Stephen
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord
Dover, Den
Dunn, Bob
Durant, Tony
Eggar, Tim
Emery, Sir Peter
Evans, David (Welwyn H
Evennett, David
Fallon, Michael
Favell, Tony
Fenner, Dame Peggy
Field, Barry (Isle of Wigh
Finsberg, Sir Geoffrey
Forman, Nigel
Forsyth, Michael (Stirling
Forth, Eric
Fowler, Rt Hon Norman
Franks, Cecil
Freeman, Roger
French, Douglas
Fry, Peter
Gale, Roger
Gardiner, George
Garel-Jones, Tristan
Gill, Christopher
Glyn, Dr Alan
Goodlad, Alastair
Goodson-Wickes, Dr Cha
Gorman, Mrs Teresa
Gorst, John
Gow, Ian
Grant, Sir Anthony (Cam Greenway, Harry (Ealing
Greenway, John (Rydale)
Gregory, Conal
Griffiths, Sir Eldon (Bury Griffiths, Peter (Portsmou
Ground, Patrick
Grylls, Michael
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hampson, Dr Keith
Hanley, Jeremy
Hannam, John
Hargreaves, A. (B'ham H Hargreaves, Ken (Hyndbu
Harris, David
Haselhurst, Alan
Hawkins, Christopher
Hayes, Jerry
Hayhoe, Rt Hon Sir Barne
Hayward, Robert
Heathcoat-Amory, David
Heddle, John
Heseltine, Rt Hon Michael
Hicks, Mrs Maureen (Wol Hicks, Robert (Cornwall S

Higgins, Rt Hon Terence L.
Hill, James
Hind, Kenneth
Hogg, Hon Douglas (Gr'th'm)
Holt, Richard
Hordern, Sir Peter
Howard, Michael
Howarth, Alan (Strat'd-on-A)
Howarth, G. (Cannock & B'wd)
Howell, Ralph (North Norfolk)
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunt, John (Ravensbourne)
Hunter, Andrew
Hurd, Rt Hon Douglas
Irvine, Michael
Jack, Michael
Jackson, Robert
Janman, Timothy
Jessel, Toby
Johnson Smith, Sir Geoffrey
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert B (Herts W)
Kellett-Bowman, Mrs Elaine
Key, Robert
King, Roger (B'ham N'thfield)
Kirkhope, Timothy
Knapman, Roger
Knight, Greg (Derby North)
Knight, Dame Jill (Edgbaston)
Knowles, Michael
Knox, David
Lamont, Rt Hon Norman
Lang, Ian
Latham, Michael
Lawrence, Ivan
Lee, John (Pendle)
Leigh, Edward (Gainsbor'gh)
Lennox-Boyd, Hon Mark
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Sir Ian (Havant)
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lord, Michael
Luce, Rt Hon Richard
Lyell, Sir Nicholas
Macfarlane, Sir Neil
MacKay, Andrew (E Berkshire)
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, M. (Newbury)
McNair-Wilson, P. (New Forest)
Madel, David
Mans, Keith
Maples, John
Marland, Paul
Martin, David (Portsmouth S)
Mates, Michael
Mawhinney, Dr Brian
Maxwell-Hyslop, Robin
Mayhew, Rt Hon Sir Patrick
Miller, Hal
Mills, Iain
Mitchell, Andrew (Gedling)
Mitchell, David (Hants NW)
Moate, Roger
Monro, Sir Hector
Morris, M (N'hampton S)
Moss, Malcolm
Neale, Gerrard
Nelson, Anthony
Neubert, Michael
Newton, Rt Hon Tony
Nicholls, Patrick
Nicholson, David (Taunton)
Nicholson, Miss E. (Devon W)
Onslow, Rt Hon Cranley
Page, Richard
Paice, James
Parkinson, Rt Hon Cecil
Patnick, Irvine
Patten, Chris (Bath)
Patten, John (Oxford W)
Pawsey, James
Peacock, Mrs Elizabeth
Porter, Barry (Wirral S)
Porter, David (Waveney)
Portillo, Michael
Price, Sir David
Raffan, Keith
Raison, Rt Hon Timothy
Rathbone, Tim
Redwood, John
Renton, Tim
Rhodes James, Robert
Rhys Williams, Sir Brandon
Riddick, Graham
Ridley, Rt Hon Nicholas
Rifkind, Rt Hon Malcolm
Roberts, Wyn (Conwy)
Roe, Mrs Marion
Rossi, Sir Hugh
Rost, Peter
Rowe, Andrew
Rumbold, Mrs Angela
Ryder, Richard
Sackville, Hon Tom
Sainsbury, Hon Tim
Sayeed, Jonathan
Shaw, David (Dover)
Shaw, Sir Giles (Pudsey)
Shaw, Sir Michael (Scarb')
Shelton, William (Streatham)
Shephard, Mrs G. (Norfolk SW)
Shepherd, Colin (Hereford)
Shersby, Michael
Sims, Roger
Skeet, Sir Trevor
Smith, Sir Dudley (Warwick)
Smith, Tim (Beaconsfield)
Speed, Keith
Speller, Tony
Spicer, Sir Jim (Dorset W)
Spicer, Michael (S Worcs)
Steen, Anthony
Stern, Michael
Stewart, Allan (Eastwood)
Stradling Thomas, Sir John
Summerson, Hugo
Taylor, Ian (Esher)
Thorne, Neil
Thurnham, Peter
Tracey, Richard
Trippier, David
Trotter, Neville
Twinn, Dr Ian
Vaughan, Sir Gerard
Waddington, Rt Hon David
Waldegrave, Hon William
Walker, Bill (T'side North)
Waller, Gary
Wells, Bowen
Wheeler, John
Widdecombe, Miss Ann
Wiggin, Jerry
Wolfson, Mark

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. David Lightbown and
Mr. David Maclean.

Question accordingly negatived.

PETITIONS

Rating Reform (Scotland)

11.40 pm

Mr. John Home Robertson (East Lothian): I grateful for the opportunity to present a petition on beh of my constituents against the Government's threat impose a poll tax in Scotland. It is appropriate tha should have the opportunity to do so immediately after Government have once again used their English major to force through an instrument associated with th legislation.

The petition is signed by 457 residents of neighbourhood of the royal burgh of Haddington whi is the county town of East Lothian. They recognise th the crisis in the rating system has been caused by success Government cuts in rate support grant and the gr unfairness of a poll tax that is likely to be set at £361 head in East Lothian.

Under such a medieval taxation system, many peo on modest means will have their local taxation burd doubled, while prosperous citizens will bene spectacularly.

The poll tax legislation is unfair, undemocratic a unworkable. It is an insult to the nation of Scotland a I wholeheartedly support my constituents in Haddingt in their petition to the House to repeal this vicio legislation.

To lie upon the Table.

Birmingham Children's Hospital

Mr. Jeff Rooker (Birmingham, Perry Barr): I, wi some anger and a good deal of bitterness, present petition of 2,500 signatures from the patients, parents a friends of Birmingham children's hospital to draw to t attention of this honourable House the crisis in treatme —or lack of it—there.

My constituents know that those children ha treatable conditions that are not being treated. They s to the House — they have been refused access to t
Prime Minister — that we should do everything in o power, which we have not done so far, to suppo improvements in staff and equipment to make treatme available for those who need it at the time that they nee it.

It was with some sadness and bitterness that paren came to the House yesterday and presented a petition 40,000 signatures to 16 hon. Members who met ther
They expect some answer from the House, and they wil n take silence from the Government or the House a longer.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Before I ca
the next hon. Member to present a petition, it may hel
hon. Members if I remind them of what our manual procedure says about the presentation of petitions:

"If a Member rises in his place to present a petition, h must confine himself to a statement of the persons from whos the petition comes, the number of signatures attached to and the material allegations contained in it, and to reading th prayer of the petition."

I hope that hon. Members will bear that in mind.

Mr. Robin Corbett (Birmingham, Erdington): In common with my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), I rise in sadness to present a petition from 2,500 people in Birmingham and the west midlands who are concerned about the lack of facilities at the Birmingham children's hospital that serves the regional needs of the people of the west midlands.

It must be a shame on all of us in the House that parents with children who need treatment at that hospital are denied it. The petitioners say that the Birmingham children's hospital has insufficient resources to give the treatment required to treatable conditions in young patients from Birmingham and the West Midlands.

The petitioners pray that we will all do all in our power to support improvement in staff and equipment so as to make treatment available to those who need it at the time they need it.

If the House does nothing else today, I hope that it will respond to this petition.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Dennis Turner (Wolverhampton, South-East): I rise to present a petition on behalf of 2,500 people who request that our honourable House should do everything in its power to support improvements in staff and equipment so as to make treatment available at Birmingham children's hospital for those who need it and at the time they need it.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Bruce Grocott (The Wrekin): On behalf of 2,500 people from the west midlands, I rise to present a petition on behalf of Birmingham's children's hospital. Although the hospital is called Birmingham children's hospital, I must emphasise that people across the west midlands region are dependent upon the services provided by the hospital.

The petition includes signatories from all parts of my constituency of the Wrekin — people from Hadley, Oakengates, Ketley, Dawley, Madeley, Donnington and Wellington. It also includes people who were represented yesterday by a delegation which came to London, but which was unable to see the Prime Minister. Indeed, many of them had great difficulty in getting access to Downing street.

I present the petition on behalf of the people who are making a simple request, which can be met by the Government, to see that the funds are properly made available for children desperately needing treatment.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Peter Snape (West Bromwich, East): I rise to present a petition on behalf of the 2,500 patients and friends of the Birmingham children's hospital.

That hospital provides a service both in Birmingham and to my constituency. The petitioners plead that hon. Members do everything in their power to ensure that patients of the hospital and others in the west midlands have the treatment that they need, when that treatment is needed, carried out by a surgeon who has been treating them at a hospital at which they have been treated and at a time that they feel that treatment is necessary.

The petitioners believe that that right should be extended to patients of the Birmingham children's hospital and to others in the west midlands. Surely it is the duty of hon. Members to represent the pleas of sick people either in our constituencies or in others.

To lie upon the Table.

Ms. Clare Short (Birmingham, Ladywood): I present a petition on behalf of 2,500 people throughout the west midlands who ask th Birmingham children's hospital, which is constituency, but which serves children from thro the region, should have sufficient resources t treatment required for treatable conditions in young patients from Birmingh the West Midlands.

The hospital is loved and respected by throughout the west midlands because of the qu care that it provides for our children. What is goin the hospital and the harm that is being done to c is an outrage and disgrace that makes people thro the region, of all backgrounds and political persu furious.

The view in Birmingham is that the package t recently been put together by the regional health a to pretend to deal with the problem is too late inadequate. People are not satisfied that children be sent to other hospitals or sent to the private sec want resources for our hospital, so that our child be treated by the doctors who know them and hospital that they love.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): I rise on b those in the west midlands who believe that it wrong for children such as Matthew Collier to hav a long time for the urgent operations that they They believe that it is right and proper that ther be far less delay. It is appropriate that this petitio be presented following today's debate on the Health Service and my Adjournment debate last F the difficulties created by the fact that there are ins nurses in the intensive care unit at Birmingham c hospital.

The parents and children who came to Londo the Prime Minister yesterday—but whom she w see—should know that we shall continue to r matter and the problems of the hospital opportunity——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope that Gentleman will bear in mind what I said to th earlier.

Mr. Winnick: We shall raise the matter opportunity—through debates, questions and — until the children's hospital in Birmingh sufficient resources to prevent delays such as the Matthew Collier had to endure.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Anthony Beaumont-Dark (Birmingha Oak): It is not without significance for me that ago next month the Birmingham children's hosp my life. It is good, if sad, to be able to present on behalf of Birmingham children's hospital and who go to it, as I did, for treatment. The petition the hospital has insufficient resources to give the that I had then, which remains necessary to th hope that it will be noted in the circles that ma in Government that I am proud to argue th resources should be made available so that peop cured.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Dave Nellist (Coventry, South-East): The House is already aware of the case of my constituent, seven-year-old Adrian Woolford, who has been repeatedly denied heart operations at the Birmingham children's hospital. I am having to present this petition, carrying the signatures of 2,500 citizens of the west midlands, because the Prime Minister refused to meet children and parents and accept it from them herself yesterday. It is about the 90 Adrians in our region who have been denied life-saving operations because of under-funding in the National Health Service.

The petition says:

the Birmingham Children's Hospital has insufficient resources to give the treatment required to treatable conditions in young patients from Birmingham and the West Midlands. Your petitioners pray that your . . . House will do everything in its power to support improvement in staff and equipment so as to make treatment available to those who need it at the time they need it.

It is with anger, weeks after the announcement that £38 million had been spent on the refurbishment of the DHSS headquarters in Whitehall, with its walk-in jacuzzis and crystal chandeliers, that I note that the Birmingham children's hospital has still been given insufficient funds. We need that money for the hospitals that serve our people.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. John Hughes (Coventry, North East): I rise to present a petition on behalf of 2,500 patients, parents and friends of the Birmingham children's hospital. Unlike the childhood of the petitioners' children, mine was blessed with good health. Like every child, I read my fairy tales. I can recall only one woman as cold as the Prime Minister, who treats lightly the chronic condition of Matthew Mulhall while selfishly demanding instant surgery for her minor complaint. That woman was Hans Andersen's snow queen, whose domain was melted by the warmth of a child's tear. I desperately pray that the warmth of the petitioners' children's innocent tears will have the same effect on the domain of the Commons snow queen.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Roy Hattersley (Birmingham, Sparkbrook): I rise to present a humble petition on behalf of 2,500 patients parents and friends of Birmingham children's hospital, calling on this honourable House to take note of the gross inadequacy of resources available to the hospital. It calls on the House to do all in its power to provide sufficient resources to end the suffering and the anguish that the shortage of resources is now causing.

The petitioners are aware of the devoted service that is being rendered to the children of the entire region by the staff who are employed in the Birmingham children's hospital, but they are equally conscious that the hospital is desperately under-staffed and that the nurses, doctors, ancillary staff and all the others who are employed there are unable to meet the demands on their time. The petitioners are particularly conscious of the position in the intensive care unit where there are spaces where there should be beds, and beds vacant that should be occupied by children receiving necessary surgery.

We offer this humble petition in the hope that pressure can be brought on the Government to bring what is no more than justice to those suffering children and to end a desperate need.

To lie upon the Table.

Mrs. Llin Golding (Newcastle-under-Lyme): I rise to present to the House a petition on behalf of 2,500 patients, parents and friends of Birmingham children's hospit wish to bring a simple plea to the House — that death of baby Barber, who lived in my constitue should not have been in vain.

To lie upon the Table.

Ms. Joan Walley (Stoke-on-Trent, North): I rise behalf of 2,500 constituents in the west midlands, man them from north Staffordshire, who pray that this Ho will recognise the need to provide proper resources for Birmingham children's hospital.

I gave my pledge to the parents of Claire Wise th would do everything in my power, as would any par to make sure that those operations and treatments co be available when needed. Therefore, I pray that we s do everything in our power to support improvemen staff and equipment to make treatment available to th who need it at the time they need it.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Jack Ashley (Stoke-on-Trent, South): I beg support the petition with one signed by 2,500 people. petition is both a plea and a condemnation. It is a plea more money for the Birmingham heart hospital children. It is a plea for cash for that hospital to pro resources, facilities and treatment. It is a condemnatio the Government for failing to provide that.

The petition is staggering in so far as in 1988 we h to plead for life-saving treatment for children. I there offer the petition because those children are in urgent n of treatment.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Mark Fisher (Stoke-on-Trent, Central): I ris present a petition on behalf of 2,500 parents, patients friends of the Birmingham children's hospital, many fr Stoke-on-Trent and north Staffordshire, who are appa by the insufficient resources at that hospital and inability of the hospital to respond to the needs of th children, especially in the cardiac surgery and inten care units. Although the hospital has sufficient surge and theatre time, it is unable to treat the children could be treated in the way that they need because of l of room in the intensive care unit.

The petitioners, my constituents, cannot underst how children like Michelle Knight of Bentilee and J Ball, who is still waiting for heart surgery after weeks weeks in Abbey Hulton, cannot be treated. The peopl Stoke-on-Trent are amazed that the Government can and will not respond to the pleas of those parents, pati and friends of the hospital.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Terry Davis (Birmingham, Hodge Hill): I too w to present a petition from 2,500 parents and friends Birmingham children's hospital. The signatories incl several people who live in my constituency, and in ot parts of the city of Birmingham. It also includes pe who live in other metropolitan districts in the w midlands, and in an area stretching from Telford Coventry.

As a father whose daughter's life was saved by operation at the age of four, I understand and share feelings of my constituents and the other signatories of petition. I commend it to the House, on the very even on which I am told that the Central Birmingham he authority has decided to consider closure of Birmingh general hospital, and of the medical school at Queen Elizabeth hospital—proposals which, if put into effect, will only exacerbate the problems at the Birmingham children's hospital.

[Mr. Terry Davis]

To be upon the Table.

Young Domestic Workers

Motion made, and Question proposed, That do now adjourn.—[Mr. Peter Lloyd.]

12.1 am

Mr. Peter Hardy (Wentworth): Young peo taught at school that slavery was abolished British empire a century and a half or more major step was largely credited to the effort Yorkshire's most celebrated Members, Wilberforce, who represented our county be and 1812.

Unfortunately, there are still parts of the w slavery is practised, and it is saddening developments in our own country seem litt from those inhumanities of the past. The exper constituent Miss Ellen O'Neil, of Thryb Rotherham, should be seen as an example o unsatisfactory position and as a warning that f this debate.

Like the majority of our young people, Miss little prospect of suitable or normal employme for our economic position is very grave. Vigor and keen determination are displayed in persis to create jobs, but each step forward seems to by rearward strides.

It is sad that, in our schools, young peo decent education but see little opportunity. Tha at Thrybergh school, which Ellen attended. But of my constituency schools—a good school, just 8 per cent. of last year's leavers secured n last year. Since then we have seen an announc Kilnhurst colliery has come to the end of the Friday I received the news that Canning Tow my constituency, is to close in April. That closu nearly 480 jobs. The point is made to establish of Ellen's experience, but it also illustr unreasonable conduct on the part not only of t employer, but of a substantial British compan

The Canning Town Glass closure has been despite full assurances given to me on behalf o at the time of the takeover in 1985, and expre letters by the then chief executive. Becaus assurances, I did not seek to join the campaign matter to the Monopolies and Mergers Comm I known then what I know now—that the were worthless—I, and perhaps my hon. Frie have joined in that demand.

I am glad that my hon. Friends the Membe Valley (Mr. Redmond) and for Rother V Barron) are here. One of my hon. Friends accor on a visit to the Under-Secretary of State for In morning. I hope that the Government will honourable conduct is required; otherwise, demonstrating that, in relation to the direct commerce and industry, an Englishman's w longer his bond. That lack of reliability and t for distrust are particularly shocking whe people are concerned. Miss O'Neil's case illu position dreadfully.

My constituent wished, and still wishes, to children. Some time before her experience M studied at Rockingham college of further ed Wath-upon-Dearne where I live. It is a establishment which seeks to serve local comm considered relevance and to meet the developing needs. A course, sometimes called a nanny course, is run effectively at the college. A number of young ladies have been equipped to work as nannies, and I believe that many of them have had satisfactory experiences. The course is a proper one, although I do not care for the implications for my area. I accept that the girls have had relevant training and that some of them have secured work which is not available in the locality.

Ellen saw an advertisement in the local newspaper, the Rotherham and South Yorkshire Advertiser. It sought a mother's help to care for a family with three children in Surrey. Ellen applied and was appointed, commencing work on 16 January last year. She was to live in and work from 7.30 in the morning until the parents, her employers, returned home from their work or from their dinner engagements. Ellen stayed just under six weeks and she tells me that the parents stayed at home only about five evenings. That meant that my constituent bore substantial responsibility for long hours from early in the morning usually until very late in the evening. The three children were 6, 9 and 14 years of age. I gather they attended primary day schools, returning home at 3.30 and 4.30 pm.

Ellen was due to be paid £25 per week for those long hours. During the first week her employers borrowed £13·79 from her. Despite Ellen's requests, that debt was not repaid, although her employers were always just about to do so. At first Ellen was to be paid monthly. Then her employers said that they would pay her weekly. She received £25 on 30 January. There was no wage slip or wage packet; perhaps that point could be considered by the Minister.

During her period of work Ellen had just one day and one weekend off, during which she returned home. After further absence of payment and further lack of repayment of debt, she returned home on 24 February. Ellen tells me that she is owed £105·45. Her employers said that they would send the sum on by post. They did not. In March Ellen telephoned her former employers to ask about the money due and was told that it was in the post. Ellen did not receive it.

Ellen consulted a local solicitor who acted properly. The case was heard in Reigate court and was successful. However, on 14 October Ellen was told, almost incredibly, given her experience, that her former employers possessed nothing of sufficient value to cover the costs of removal and sale. So Ellen has not received any of the outstanding sum.

Ellen returned to Thrybergh. Not surprisingly, she has not been able to find another job, so she became dependent upon state benefits, like thousands of my constituents. This is a major point to which I hope the Minister will attend; under the rules, she was assumed voluntarily to have surrendered her employment, so benefit was suspended for six weeks.

Ellen did not come to see me immediately. Perhaps she hoped that the court would secure justice for her. Perhaps she felt that her former employers would act honourably. She exercised a gentle patience, for she has not an aggressive or unpleasant personality. After I had heard Ellen's story in November, I wrote to her former employers. There was no reply. I heard other similar stories and felt that I should seek a debate. I wrote to the employers again on 29 December. There has been no reply to either letter.

There has been not a word in response, not explanation, not a word of regret for o treatment. The people may have difficulties; know. They could have said so, but they did n assume that they have acted in a disreput scandalous manner. They did not respond to th official inquiry made after Ellen had left. They c done; that would have eased the difficu experienced.

That leads to another major point. We oug structure our social arrangements so that pen placed upon an employee who can no longe utterly unreasonable conduct from an employe this case cannot even be bothered to respond questions.

Ellen was told that the outstanding sum and h form would be sent to her. They were not. What taken against negligent employers who m difficulty to their employees by failing to provide information to official sources? The Ministe consider that.

We have a good careers office in our area, whi the best of an astonishing and difficult task corresponded with the principal officer, Mr. Pap is an able and most experienced official. He conf when a local domestic position is notified it is ch his service. However, increasingly these jobs offered through the careers service or even thr more reputable agencies. The result of private is, I fear, that we may have far more serious cases

The careers service takes the view that thes people are vulnerable and that the paucity of l creates a need for information and guidance. O our local careers service can help in South Yorks it is largely powerless in the southern counties.

I understand that the Government are keen t young people entering the service sector, domestic service. This situation was a frequent e in the days portrayed in the television series "Downstairs". However, if this change devel Minister should accept that not all such emplo likely to be honourable, as Ellen's case demo Perhaps the recipient areas should provide a careers service to assist incoming young workers

I have always viewed the privileges of Parliam essential right that should be exercised after delib To use privilege lightly is wrong. However, I bel I am wholly right to use it now. Ellen's employ borrowed from her but did not repay, and who e her but did not provide her with the salary t promised, ought to be the subject of the exercis right. Ellen's employers agreed to pay her £25 They paid her that sum once, and no more. employers were seeking domestic service at a d low wage, given the long hours that she was req work. It seems that they required her to be on du they were at work, and in the evenings, which th enjoyed.

Clearly, Ellen worked for very long hours, prob much longer than her employers. I suspect th incomes were very much higher than Ellen co dream of securing. Her employers failed to discha responsibilities. I do not yet know whether they employer's national insurance contributions. I und that two other local girls, who returned from a experience, found that their employers had failed those contributions. I shall be interested to learn, in due course, whether the contributions have been paid in Ellen's case, and what action will be taken if there has been any employer's negligence.

[Mr. Peter Hardy]

Does the Minister consider that such negligence should apparently pass without remark or penalty? Ellen's employers were due to pay her £25 a week; they paid her once, and they owe her more. I do not know how much they were paid while they failed to pay her. Her employers were Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson of Field road, Charlwood, Surrey. They have not replied to my letters, although Ellen tells me that Mr. Atkinson is a professional surveyor. I wonder whether that profession really considers £25 to be reasonable payment for a very long week, or whether the relevant professional body has grounds for pride in its member.

I am told that Mrs. Atkinson was employed by Dan-Air, a reputable airline. I wonder whether that or any other reputable airline would regard £25 a week as reasonable pay. Perhaps it should consider that one of its employees obviously considers £25 a week to be a reasonable, fair wage. Of course, wages in Surrey are more than £60 a week higher than they are in South Yorkshire, so presumably the employers thought that they were doing Ellen a favour.

Wentworth is now grievously hurt by economic change, which may be rather welcome in Charlwood, Surrey. Perhaps people there have become so materialistic that they even feel pride and approval that among their number are people who behave as these employers did. I do not know. But once upon a time people, even in such areas, subscribed to the view that we were one nation. We may have been; we are not now. The economic condition of South Yorkshire and Ellen O'Neil's experience demonstrate that.

In this case and in others, the Government and society seem eager and swift to punish or penalise our young people, who give up work, even when they have good reasons for doing so, as Ellen's case reveals.

Am I not entitled to ask the Government to provide a rather better balance in our social arrangements and to respond much more effectively to negligent or disreputable employers? There have been substantial changes in industrial relations law since 1980. More obligation is being placed upon workers and their organisations. Such cases as Ellen's show that there is now an obvious need for action in regard to the defaulting and irresponsible employer. Ellen did not receive her pay. Other girls were not credited with appropriate insurance contributions. There had been no contract of employment, no readily available advice, no wage packet, no proper documentation. Yet, when she gave up her job, there was immediate application of penalty.

I know that good organisations such as our careers service, and good establishments such as the Rockingham college, advise young people to secure an employment contract. But young people desperate for work, operating in isolated conditions, may not feel able to insist upon that provision. Perhaps the Government should do so on their behalf.

Ellen and others of her generation may already have had to tolerate far too much. But it seems that society is determined that they should continue to do so. I find this insistence deplorable, especially when it seems that some of the yuppies and people like them in our community are prepared to allow regional imbalance outrageous levels which we now face. Thes intolerable burden not least upon our yo I must ask the Minister whether he would one is justified in suggesting that Britain h a pass that justice and morality must no mercy of market forces, as they appear Ellen's case.

12.16 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary Employment (Mr. John Lee): I should l commending the hon. Member for W Hardy) quite genuinely on his success in g raised on the Adjournment. The case of Miss O'Neil, which has prompted him to issue of young domestic workers, is inde distressing one. On the facts presented, M employers have behaved in a disgrace unacceptable fashion. But I do not be behaviour is typical of the majority of emp on nannies or mothers' helps. In m employers behave honourably towards and many go so far as to treat them as pa But, sadly, there is a small minority of bad Miss O'Neil had the misfortune to come such a one.

Before I go into the detail of Miss should like to say a few words about the general approach to contract of employm a well-established principle that terms an employment, including rates of pay and are, in general, matters for agreemen employer and the employee concern representatives. This enables them to agre contract of employment to suit the job i their particular circumstances and preferen neither right nor practicable for the intervene in this area. This flexibility give employee a chance to consider, for examp hours he or she is going to have to work acceptable.

A contract of employment does not ha down: by starting work the employee ac and conditions offered and there is an im But within 13 weeks of starting work a entitled by law to be given a written statem terms and conditions of work by his or h the employer fails to provide such a written employee concerned may apply to have heard by an industrial tribunal.

In addition, most employees are entitled itemised pay statement by their employer time of payment. This has to include deta amount paid and a note of the deductions w made. Again, failure by the employer to statement may result in a case before tribunal.

The main employment protection measu the right not to be unfairly dismissed, and, whom this right applies may take their case tribunal. There is a qualifying period employment for this right: those who work hours per week qualify after two yea employment; and for those who work less per week but more than eight the qualifyin years. A qualifying period is necessary to give employers a chance to test whether the person concerned is right for the job and to demonstrate the employee's commitment to the employer. Without such a qualifying period, employers would be reluctant to take on new staff because of the possibility of having to defend an unnecessary tribunal case.

An employee who believes that he is being treated so badly by his employer as to amount to a fundamental breach of contract, and providing he has the appropriate qualifying service, may resign and claim constructive unfair dismissal before a tribunal.

The argument that there is insufficient employment protection is regularly advanced by Opposition Members, but we regularly receive correspondence from employers and others complaining that there is so much employment protection regulation that it puts them off recruiting new employees. Indeed, that complaint has been substantiated by evidence from a number of research projects, and we have some sympathy with it.

Our strategy of deregulation is designed to create the conditions in which enterprise and initiative may flourish and to reduce red tape wherever possible and where it makes sense to do so. That does not mean that we intend to sweep away all employment protection measures; far from it. But we are concerned that we should strike the right balance between the need to protect employees from the most unscrupulous employers and the need to avoid excessive burdens on employers. This will encourage the creation of more jobs and help to tackle the problem of high unemployment to which the hon. Gentleman referred. The consistent fall in the level of unemployment in recent months is evidence of the success of the Government's policy in this area.

Some might suggest that a contribution to the improvement of the terms and conditions of those employed as nannies or mothers' helps would be the introduction of a statutory national minimum wage. However, the Government's view is that such a move would not help the position of domestic workers or the low paid generally.

There are a number of reasons for that. First, it would directly raise the wages of those below the statutory minimum without any change in output. This would not only add to employers' costs and reduce competitiveness, but lead to a loss of jobs, as the rate of pay fixed might be more than some employers could afford. My officials estimate that a national minimum wage of £80 a week could result in job losses ranging between 60,000 and 600,000 over a period of time.

In addition, all experience shows that pay differentials cannot be artificially compressed. As soon as the wages of the low paid are raised, attempts are made by workers with higher rates of pay to press for similar increases to maintain pay differentials, leaving the less well off in the same relative position as before. The pressure to restore differentials would itself add to general wage costs and erode competitiveness. We see no signs that the higher-paid workers are prepared to hold back their claims to help the low paid.

Moreover, a national minimum wage would be inconsistent with our firmly held view that pay is a matter for determination by employers and employees or their representatives. They are in the best position to decide what enterprises can afford or need to recrui staff with the right skills and experience. The do not intervene.

The specific case of Miss O'Neil has alrea subject of correspondence between the hon. and my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary o Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls).

I have already explained at some length th of employment are matters for negotiation an between the parties concerned and that it is in for the Government to interfere. It follows fro should either party decide subsequently th unhappy with the terms of the contract as ag to them to take the necessary action to ter contract.

That, I believe, is precisely what Miss Moreover, when, as it turned out, her former e not pay her the wages which were due to h properly took a case in the small claims se county court. I must congratulate Miss O' determination in sorting out her predicamen that many other people in a similar situation given up at that point. But she continued to rights and obtained a county court judgment former employer. That covered not only wage which had not been paid, but money borrow by her employer and not repaid, as well as the incurred in travelling from her home in th England to Reigate to attend the court heari

I should say a word here about the unfo that, although she has obtained a county cou against her former employer, Miss O'Neil has so far to recover what is owed to her. I Members of this House will sympathise with in which Miss O'Neil finds herself. She may in mind that in addition to a warrant of execu she has already tried, there are other means of e open to her. If she approaches the court in obtained the judgment, she will be able t booklet, produced by the Lord Chancellor's D entitled "Enforcing Money Judgments in Court", which gives details of various alternati of enforcement. At the risk of stating the obvio I should add that no method of enforcement ca payment of a debt from a debtor who does n means to pay.

I come now to the unemployment benefit Miss O'Neil. Unemployment benefit is, of cour for those people who become unemployed fault of their own and remain so throughout t their claim. It is a long-established principle th a person who leaves his employment voluntar just cause, or loses his job because of miscondu his entitlement to benefit, currently for up to

The question whether a person had just leaving his job voluntarily is a matter for the i adjudicating authorities to consider in the light over the years. The independent adjudicating specially appointed for this purpose under Security Act 1975 are the adjudication officer instance; on appeal, the social security appe and there is a further right of appeal, circumstances, to the social security commissi

I understand that Miss O'Neil first claimed ment benefit at the beginning of March Entitlement to unemployment benefit depends on the satisfaction of two contribution conditions. The first is that class 1 national insurance contributions must have been paid on earnings of at least 25 times the weekly lower earnings limit—currently £39—in any one tax year since 6 April 1975.

[Mr. John Lee]

The second condition is that class 1 national insurance contributions must have been paid or credited on earnings of at least 50 times the weekly lower earnings limit in the last complete income tax year before the benefit year in which the spell of unemployment begins. The benefit year starts on the first Sunday in January and ends on the first Saturday of the following year. Claims made during 1987 are therefore based on contributions paid during the 1985-86 income tax year. Since Miss O'Neil's employment in Reigate was her first employment, she had not paid sufficient contributions to become entitled to unemployment benefit. I understand, however, that she has been receiving supplementary benefit since the end of March last year.

I have already explained the circumstances in which unemployment benefit may be suspended. When a doubt arises on a person's claim for unemployment benefit, the Department is obliged to seek confirmation from the employer of the reason why the employment ended. In cases in which the employer fails, after reminders, to respond to inquiries about the reasons why the claimant left his employ, consideration is given to lifting the suspension. In such a case, when the suspension is lifted, payment would be made from the date of claim.

I understand that in Miss O'Neil's case her employer failed to return the form sent to establish the circumstances in which her employment had ended. As a result, disqualification of unemployment benefit or contribution credits because she had voluntarily left her employment or had lost it because of misconduct was not considered.

Although I am not aware that in Miss O'Neil's case there was a failure on the part of the employer to pay national insurance contributions, the hon. Gentleman has suggested that that has arisen in other cases that he knows about. I understand from the DHSS, which is, of course, responsible in this area, that it has seen little evidence of any national problem in relation to of the Inland Revenue that nan employment. An individual who ha this should go to his or her local which will of course investigate the

Finally, I should like to refer underlying the matters that we h tonight—unemployment. Despite t in recent months, it remains a seri Government are making a signifi overcoming the problem by fosterin which enterprise and initiative may f
the creation of new jobs, by helpi enough to be unemployed to relearn a spell on a training course or a designed to help the unemployed ba

I am particularly pleased to see tha has been a decrease of almost 13 numbers of unemployed in the 12 1987. It is therefore all the more sad hear of the impending closure of Ca which the hon. Gentleman referre emphasise that the full facilities of th
the Manpower Services Commission redundant people to find new jobs, businesses of their own, and those fac to the attention of those involved.

In concluding, perhaps I might started and the particular case o anything be done to prevent that so again? However much we legislate, be able to eradicate the sort of behav
had the misfortune to experience unscrupulous employers in this cou unfortunate fact of life. Individuals c with unfavourable working conc committing themselves to a particula to be satisfied that the conditions on
When it is only after starting the jo realises that it is not suitable, then, remedies are available.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twent
Twelve o'clock.

nnies. It is the view es are in class 1 a complaint about
cial security office,
mplaint.
o the wider issue
e been discussing encouraging signs
s problem and the
it contribution to an environment in irish. That leads to those unfortunate e skills of work by cheme specifically to work.
n Wentworth there cent. in the total nths to December
d disheartening to ng Town Glass, to
I should like to Department and of e available to help train or set up in ties will be brought turn to where we Miss O'Neil. Can of thing happening are never going to ir that Miss O'Neil

There are a few
ry, and that is an not need to put up ons, and before ob, it is up to them
ffer are acceptable.
that the employee
I have explained,

nine minutes past

House of Commons

Wednesday 20 January 1988

The House met at half-past Two o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

Oral Answers to Questions

ENVIRONMENT

Hazardous Waste

1. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the extent of the importation of hazardous wastes into Greater Manchester for treatment or disposal in the last two years, and the routes used for the movements of these wastes.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Colin Moynihan): Details of hazardous waste imported into the United Kingdom are not held centrally. However, I am advised by the Greater Manchester waste disposal authority that the total amount of foreign waste imported into its area was 7,770 tonnes in 1985 and 11,937 tonnes in 1986. Figures for 1987 are not yet available.

The authority records the point of entry into the United Kingdom and the final destination of each consignment, but not the route taken.

Mr. Litherland: Is the Minister aware that because other European countries are placing restrictions on the import of hazardous waste materials the United Kingdom in general, and Greater Manchester in particular, are expressing concern that we are becoming the dustbin of Europe? With this extra workload the site operatives may well be flouting the rules and regulations that apply to waste disposal.

Mr. Moynihan: The hon. Gentleman will be aware that waste imports amount to a small percentage of the total waste disposal in the United Kingdom—0·5 per cent. annually. He will also agree that the critical factor is that we should have the right facilities and the capacity to handle hazardous wastes. I hope that he will welcome the directive on trans-frontier shipment of hazardous waste, to which we are hoping to adhere as soon as possible. It will increase the amount of information that is available across boundaries and thus help to ensure safe handling and the effectiveness of the regulations that are currently in force.

Mrs. Peacock: Is my hon. Friend examining ways in which to improve controls over the handling of hazardous wastes?

Mr. Moynihan: We are looking at ways of improving controls; for example, by extending the special waste regulations to cover all pollution risks, improving the consignment note procedure and intro code of practice to put greater resp producers of waste to ensure its safe examining the possibility of registering extending the powers of licensing autho ways of improving control, and deep being given to every one of them.

Mr. Allan Roberts: Is the Minist answers will be thought amazingly con we importing any hazardous waste into we have enough of our own to dispose told me in a parliamentary answer imported 14,824 tonnes of hazardous w
By 1986 that had escalated to 53,000 escalation continued? Why does the Department not know what happens to arrives in this country, or how it is disp it goes? Surely we do not need to economy, which the Government clain buying the rest of Europe's hazardous

Mr. Moynihan: The hon. Gentleman
we have a long history of waste control, that the treatment and disposal operat achieve the highest standards. The e disposal service is an important indust continue to have the right facilities and handle hazardous wastes properly.
complacent, the Government are dedi that every possible control is exercis effective, well-managed and highly prof

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: Does agree that there are a limited number o high skills required for controlling was therefore better to concentrate on a few the waste scattered hither and yon over

Mr. Moynihan: I completely agree wi that this country has the highest compe should utilise it, so I agree with the thru

Local Authorities (Land Ho

2. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the for the Environment what representatio regarding the introduction of a compul for local authorities to schedule and p ownings.

The Minister for Local Governme Howard): My right hon. Friend has rece representations from my hon. Friend a subject.

Mr. Taylor: Does my hon. and lear that local authorities are trustees of r
Does he further agree that this registe voluntary, but should be compulsory?

Mr. Howard: I agree with the first Friend's question. He asks that the compulsory. We are presently awaiting working group made up of CIPFA, th associations and the Audit Commis considering this matter and we intend conclusions before taking any further de

Mr. Tony Banks: What about Government-held land? For example,

Defence is holding land like some sort of medieval land baron. It has over 500,000 acres. What efforts is the Minister making to put pressure on some of his colleagues, such as the Secretary of State for Defence, so that land that is not necessary for such Departments is released for more useful social purposes?

Mr. Howard: The Ministry of Defence has particular needs which lead to its land holdings, and the Government are taking every step to ensure that it does not hold any land that it is not necessary and desirable for it to hold.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: In our campaign for inner-city regeneration the availability and ready development of land is an important component. While local authority land is important, surely inner city land held by statutory undertakings and by private owners is equally important. Perhaps a register giving an overall picture would go a long way towards helping us in the campaign to regenerate our cities.

Mr. Howard: I am sure that my hon. Friend will not overlook the role of market forces in making that land available. As time goes on we expect more and more of that land to become available.

Mr. Simon Hughes: Does the Minister accept the overwhelming case for a land register of all land held by all private and public bodies? That was recommended by the Law Commission and there is a Land Registration Bill in the other place proposed by Lord Templeman. One way for everybody to know what is available, to prevent speculation and to develop the inner cities is open access to information about the identities of landlords. Will the Government say that they are willing to support that principle and do something about it?

Mr. Howard: The Government support the Bill to which the hon. Gentleman refers. I have written to him today on that very subject.

Planning Policy

3. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals for reform of the planning system.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mrs. Marion Roe): We have made many improvements to the planning system in recent years. We expect to make an announcement shortly about our conclusions on the future of the structure and local plan system.

Mr. Baker: Does my hon. Friend agree that the planning system is failing to prevent the over-development of our countryside and failing to encourage development in the inner cities, where we want it? Does she also agree that at the moment our planning system is developer-driven and is allowed to be driven by bodies such as Consortium Developments? Will she now look at the task of revising the planning circulars?

Mrs. Roe: Later today we will give the House details of two new series of planning policy guidance and mineral planning guidance notes that are published today. I do not wish to anticipate the detailed written answer that will be given later, but the purpose is to make our planning advice clearer and more accessible. That should increase certainty for developers and others, and I think that it will be widely welcomed.

Mr. Andrew MacKay: Does my hon. Friend agree that, in the interests of good planning, the views of local people should be taken into account, and that the way to take them into account is to listen to what locally elected representatives have to say to the local planning committee? Again and again planning applications are overturned on appeal, and that is disillusioning for elected councillors, who are doing their best for local people.

Mrs. Roe: I have read with interest my hon. Friend's views on changes in the planning system, which were published in "This Pleasant Land". I do not think that everything he proposes is practical or desirable, but there is widespread agreement about the need to encourage development in urban areas and to protect our countryside as much as possible. It is encouraging that nearly half the land for house building is now found from reused sites or vacant urban areas. I draw my hon. Friend's attention to "The Future of Development Plans", which was published by the Government in September 1986.

Mr. Skinner: Is the Minister aware that the argument on the Tory Benches will make very interesting reading? It seems that the two strong interests within the Tory party — first, City financiers and developers and, secondly, farmers and those who represent the rural interest—are having a battle royal. Opposition Members, happily, are in favour of planning, but I must say that we look on this skirmish with more than a little amusement.

Mrs. Roe: I cannot comment on any specific proposal for a new settlement for which an application may have been made, or is being prepared. [HON. MEMBERS: "No one asked the hon. Lady to do so."] The hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) mentioned new consortia.

The argument is basically about the green belt. We have made clear how important we consider the green belt and its protection against inappropriate development. We have gone so far as to say that if developers propose schemes that are manifestly inappropriate in the green belt and there is an unnecessary planning inquiry, they risk an award of costs against them. I remind the House that the area of approved green belt has been more than doubled since 1979, from 1·8 million acres to 4·5 million acres.

Mr. David Nicholson: Does my hon. Friend agree that the proposals, when they come forward, need to include developments by gipsies? Does she recall, from correspondence that I have had with her on behalf of Taunton Deane borough council, that the borough council and my constituents are embarrassed and affronted by the fact that, under existing regulations, gipsies may make developments which other citizens are prohibited from making?

Mrs. Roe: It is for county councils to make provision for the number of gipsies in their area, and to bring to the Secretary of State proposals to find appropriate accommodation for them.

Dr. Cunningham: Whether or not we have a new planning Act, what is the purpose of planning controls if the present Secretary of State for the Environment, having followed the procedures, then overrules the decision of inspectors? That has happened twice recently. The first instance was in Cumbria, at North Stainmore—an area of outstanding natural beauty — when the right hon. Gentleman overruled the inspector's report from the inquiry and allowed the Ministry of Defence access to and use of land, against the inspector's specific recommendation. More recently, in county Durham, when the inspector reported that it would be entirely against the environmental interests in the area to allow an application for opencast mining, the right hon. Gentleman again acted contrary to the inspector's recommendations and report.

What is the purpose of any planning controls, when that sort of thing is going on?

Mrs. Roe: We have made it absolutely clear that we have no intention of dismantling any planning system. Our approach is purely to simplify and improve the system. Every application is decided on its merits. The inspector's role is to advise the Secretary of State for the Environment, and the ultimate decision lies with him.

Mr. David Martin: On the theme of taking local views into account, will my hon. Friend consider the reform of the planning procedures? When local authorities give themselves planning permission for a particular development, should there not be a right of appeal to her Department if, say, 20 or 25 local electors wish for one? Should not local authorities and private individuals be considered on an equal basis in that regard?

Mrs. Roe: As I have already informed the House, the future of development plans is under consultation and consideration, and no doubt those points will be taken into account.

Legal Services

4. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to privatise legal services provided to his Department.

The Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Nicholas Ridley): My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 14 January that Sir Robert Andrew will undertake a review of the Government legal services. Sir Robert will take account of our policies of privatisation and contracting-out, and will cover legal services provided to my Department.

Mr. Dalyell: Is the Secretary of State aware that, for once, I had no notion of the answer to my question? Could he be a bit more explicit about the Andrew terms of reference? What exactly does he mean by "take account"? What is to be the future of the parliamentary draftsmen? Whereas nobody in his right mind would begrudge the Secretary of State the services of the best counsel—heaven knows, he could have done with it in the past and might need it again—is there not a real problem for civil servants in the legal services available to the Government? What is their future?

Mr. Ridley: I understand that the terms of reference are:

"To consider: what legal services are needed by the Government; how those services can most effectively and economically be provided and organised, taking account of the Government's policies of privatisation and of contracting out; what changes are needed in the management of legal staff in Government service, including their recruitment, retention, training, deployment and remuneration, so as to make best use of them".

I welcome the hon. Gentleman's conversion to the virtues of private sector provision. I must warn him in his enthusiasm that the private sector occasionally does not make a success of it — after all, he was privately educated.

Mr. Heddle: As my right hon. Friend's Department is responsible for the legal services provided by local government, does he share my grave concern at the length of time that a number of Left-wing Labour local authorities take to reply to local search inquiries by solicitors? Is he aware that the Law Commission suggested that 10 days is a reasonable time, but that the London boroughs of Hackney, Islington, Camden and many others take up to three months to reply to simple inquiries? Is that not an affront to nurses, teachers and first-time buyers who want to buy their own homes simply and without delay? Will my right hon. Friend consider imposing sanctions or possibly privatising such services when local authorities offend the code?

Mr. Ridley: I agree that it is very important to reply to searches as quickly as possible. I shall consider my hon. Friends suggestions. They could even be the subject of the contracting-out policy in the Local Government Bill. I shall have a look at what my hon. Friend has suggested.

Water Meters

5. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost of installing water meters in multi-storey flats and in properties on a common supply pipe.

Mr. Moynihan: No such estimate has been made. One of the objectives of the proposed metering trials is to help the industry assess the costs and practicality of metering multi-storey flats and properties served by a common supply pipe.

Miss Lestor: Is the hon. Gentleman aware that discussions which are presently taking place about the future of the water industry are causing a great deal of concern in constituencies such as mine where there are common supply pipes in multi-storey flats? Will he therefore give me an assurance that any costs associated with converting those properties—should the devastating proposals concerning water and privately-owned meters go through—will not be borne by the consumer?

Mr. Moynihan: The hon. Lady will be aware that in the Committee considering the Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Bill we are discussing amendments to ensure that the cost burden moves from owners to undertakers, thus reforming the Water Acts of 1845 and 1951. The major changes will require owners to have separate joint supplies explicitly for the purpose of metering. I can give the hon. Lady an undertaking that the burden will not fall on them.

Mr. Jack: Is my hon. Friend aware that those in privately owned sheltered accommodation who have opted for water metering have achieved substantial savings?

Mr. Moynihan: Some consumers have indeed benefited from metering. One of the important issues involved with the compulsory trial schemes that are being proposed is the effect of metering on a range of consumers in a certain locality. Schemes will enable undertakers to identify technical difficulties associated with putting meters in properties.

Mr. Boyes: The Minister knows that there are tremendous cost and technical difficulties associated with putting meters into multi-storey flats. How does he square that with the fact that, for 70 hours or more of consideration of the Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Bill, he has tried to convince us that water meters will be fairer because consumers will be able to control how much water they consume? Is he not getting himself into an awful problem and a difficult contradiction?

Mr. Moynihan: I am glad to say that we have encountered no problems so far in the 70 hours of Committee proceedings to which the hon. Gentleman referred. Indeed, I thank him for his perceptive and useful analysis of the problems, including the problem that he has just mentioned. A lot of satisfactory work has been done on the matter that he raised. In reply to his first point, undertakers will have to consider the effect of metering and the effect of charges on metering, which will range beyond the single option referred to by the hon. Member for Eccles (Miss Lestor) and raised by the hon. Gentleman in Committee yesterday.

Homelessness

6. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sums he has allocated to local authorities for the relief of homelessness in the current financial year and the next.

Mrs. Roe: Gross provision for local authorities' capital expenditure on housing will rise from £2,920 million in the current financial year to £3,048 million next, an increase of 4 per cent. It is for local authorities to decide what resources to devote to the homeless, but the Government have urged that priority should be given to those in special need, and £25 million of the special supplementary allocation announced in December last was targeted on authorities with the greatest homelessness needs.

Mr. Cohen: Has not the cost of housing the homeless rocketed over the past year to well over £100 million? Has not the Government's response been much too late and much too little? My borough, which is in the top 20 boroughs with housing problems, according to the Department's survey, has allocated all its available homes to homeless families at the expense of desperate waiting list families and it has not received an extra penny from the Government. Are not the Government hopeless with the homeless?

Mrs. Roe: While there has been a reduction in local authorities' allocations, from £136 million in 1987-88 to £129 million in 1988-89, that is more than offset by the increase in capital receipts available to local authorities. Overall, local authorities' capital spending will increase by 4 per cent. Many councils have only themselves to blame for such a high cost of meeting their obligations to the homeless. Often they place the homeless in bed-and-breakfast accommodation needlessly when there are cheaper ways to deal with the problem. Authorities should be spending more of their receipts from the sale of council homes on bringing empty properties back into use. It is a scandal that 112,000 council homes are lying empty of which about 28,000 have been vacant for more than one year.

Mr. Kilfedder: As a considerable percentage of the homeless people in Britain, and as many as 50 per cent. of the young homeless in London, come from the Irish Republic, will the Minister seek to raise at the next meeting of the Anglo-Eire Conference the question of conditions in the Republic which force so many in the Republic seek sanctuary in Britain, where indeed they are welcom Will the Minister also raise the question of a financi contribution towards accommodation in Britain for tho young people?

Mrs. Roe: I shall draw the hon. Gentleman's remark to the notice of my right hon. Friend. However, I mu stress that it is for a local authority to decide how to carr out its statutory duties regarding the homeless.

Mr. Corbyn: Will the Minister concede that her repl to my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohe was an insult to the many homeless people in London wh are forced to live in bed-and-breakfast accommodation o where they are denied such accommodation—as man are—are forced to sleep on the streets of this capita city? My council received only £800,000 towards its cost for bed-and-breakfast accommodation. Will the Ministe assure the House that in future the full extra burden o bed-and-breakfast costs on local authorities will be met b the Government, instead of the Government imposin penalties on councils that seek to alleviate the problems o homelessness?

Mrs. Roe: It is for local authorities to decide how t accommodate the homeless people for whom they accep responsibility. Our code of guidance advises the use of bed and breakfast accommodation only as a last resort. Tha accommodation is extremely expensive. On average i costs £30 per family per day and it is particularly unsuitable for families for any length of time. It is very surprising that some authorities such as Camden, Bren and Tower Hamlets use bed and breakfast accommoda tion extensively, while others, such as Greenwich, whic suffer similar problems, manage to avoid it.

Sir George Young: Does my hon. Friend recall th thoughtful speech made by the Minister for Housing an Planning at the party conference? He said that he wa considering an extension of the transferable discoun scheme to make more impact on tackling homelessness i London. When does the Department hope to come to a conclusion on an extension of that scheme?

Mrs. Roe: I remember the comments that my hon Friend made at the party conference. We are stil considering that proposal.

Mr. Winnick: In view of the reply that the Minister gave me just before Christmas, that it was no longer the function of local authorities to build, is it not the case that there will be far more homelessness and more people living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation? The Minister criticises local authorities for putting homeless people into bed and breakfast accommodation, but where are they expected to go — on the pavement? It is absolutely essential that local authorities should once again be able to build accommodation for people who cannot afford mortgages. The only way that such people can have decent accommodation is through the local authorities.

Mrs. Roe: Local authorities must make far better use of their existing housing stock. As I said earlier, local authorities now have more than 112,000 empty properties, and no fewer than 25 per cent. of those have been empty for more than a year. The number of local authority properties empty for more than a year is nearly three times the number of families in bed-and-breakfast accommoda- tion. We have sought to help local authorities to take empty properties back into use through the estate action scheme. We have approved schemes totalling nearly £5·5 million for some 1,200 dwellings since August 1986, and, more recently, through our £25 million supplementary allocations.

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: Is my hon. Friend aware that the London borough of Camden, with its problems of homelessness, has admitted to paying out between £1 million and £5 million to the owners of bed and breakfast accommodation for accommodation that has never been occupied? What steps does she propose to stop that ineptitude, and worse, occurring in other Labour-controlled London boroughs?

Mrs. Roe: I am aware of the press reports about the bed-and-breakfast problems in Camden. We are now awaiting the borough's official report on the matter. Clearly there has been a significant waste of ratepayers' money. Might I also add that that authority has more empty properties within its total housing stock than families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation. Indeed, 423—or 40 per cent.—of its empty dwellings have been empty for more than a year. Rent arrears in Camden were £4·4 million at the latest count. Those figures show that if Camden made better use of its housing stock by sorting out its housing management system it would be able to meet its responsibilities for homeless people without resorting to bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Mr. Soley: The Minister's reply was a disgraceful insult to homeless people and to Conservative and Labour local authorities. Local authorities have a smaller percentage of their properties empty than have the Government, who have three times as many empty properties. When will the Government bring those properties into use? Local authorities have fewer empty properties than have housing associations or the private sector. What will the Minister do about that? What will she do about the fact that it is cheaper for the country to build a new home — the Government have cut housebuilding by two thirds since 1979 — than to keep a family in bed-and-breakfast accommodation for a year? When will she alleviate the crisis of homelessness in Britain?

Mrs. Roe: Government Departments own residential property for operational reasons, and they need to preserve their operational flexibility. Those Departments with significant numbers of empty dwellings are urged to bring them back into use, and, when they are no longer needed, to sell them as quickly as possible. Where they have no immediate operational need for them, but where disposal is not practical, they are encouraged to let them temporarily to local authorities or housing associations to help with the problem of homelessness.

I draw the attention of the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) to the Housing Bill. All the Bill's proposals will benefit homeless people and those in poor quality housing. I urge the hon. Gentleman to support the Bill.

Rating Reform

8. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Leicester city council about the effect of the poll tax on the residents of Leicester.

Mr. Howard: Leicester city council responded to the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government". It has made no subsequent representations.

Mr. Janner: Is the Minister aware that, as a result of the poll tax, some 65 per cent. of Leicester citizens will pay more rates than they used to and that the average household, instead of paying £180 as now, will pay £220 —[HON. MEMBERS: "Reading"]—and that a household with two adults is likely to pay 21 per cent. more tax? In such circumstances, all the figures should be read out, not only by me, but by Conservative Members.

Mr. Howard: The hon. and learned Gentleman's point would have a little more force if it was not based on a report that was flawed in certain fundamental respects, as was the report recently produced by Leicester city council. The figures that I announced last week show that, over the country as a whole, 53 per cent. of households will benefit from the introduction of the community charge. The charge will be of wider and greater benefit to everyone in this country because it will introduce a much fairer and more accountable method of paying for local government.

Sports and Leisure Facilities

9. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responses he has received to the consultation exercise on competition in the management of local authority sports and leisure facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Three hundred and fifty two responses have been received to the consultation paper issued by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment, for Scotland and for Wales on 28 September 1987. The paper invited comments by 11 December 1987 and the responses are now being considered in detail.

Mr. Pike: Will the Minister recognise the widespread concern among local authorities about the possible introduction of competition in the provision of such important services, bearing in mind also a parallel consultation paper that suggests that some local authorities may have to invite tenders for such services in April 1989? Will he give an assurance that he will reach a decision on this as soon as possible? Indeed, will he say now that the Government do not intend to proceed in that direction?

Mr. Moynihan: The hon. Gentleman will be aware that the Government are committed to consider all the representations that they have received, and for me to pre-empt that consultation exercise would be wrong. However, I give him the undertaking that, as soon as possible, we shall make an announcement, and I hope that that will take place early in February.

Mr. John Carlisle: Does my hon. Friend accept that the majority of Conservative Members believe that competitive tendering can bring substantial savings to ratepayers? Does he further accept that the majority of leisure and sports facilities run by local authorities are losing enormous amounts of money? If that money can be saved my hon. Friend will be doing a great service to sport, ratepayers and the sports industry.

Mr. Moynihan: I fully endorse that view.

Mr. Douglas: The Minister has no direct responsibility for Scotland, but will he take into consideration the fact that examples of the Government's financial strictures in Scotland include the possible closure of the only swimming pool on the Western Isles—[Interruption.] Conservative Members may think that is funny, but it represents an important local provision. Will the Minister state to the House how many local authorities in England and Wales, and possibly in Scotland, support the thrust of that particularly obnoxious policy?

Mr. Moynihan: I do not believe that the results from the proposals currently being considered by the Government will be those anticipated by the hon. Gentleman. For the record, I place before the House the fact that we have had many responses from a widespread group of interested parties, not least the governing bodies of sport. If one considers the views of those groups, it is clear that, from greyhound racing to sea anglers, from badminton to squash, from the Jockey Club to the Lawn Tennis Association, all are fully supportive of the Government's proposals.

Mr. David Evans: Is my hon. Friend aware that the extensive sporting facilities at Luton Town football club are widely used by the local authority?

At the weekend my hon. Friend spoke of English clubs being allowed back into Europe at the end of this season. Does he agree that his view was vindicated by the fact that last night Luton Town allowed visiting fans back into the stadium for the first time in 18 months? That resulted in three arrests and one policeman being taken to hospital. That suggests that my hon. Friend's view is absolutely right and that English clubs should not be allowed back into Europe until the season comes to an end.

Mr. Moynihan: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that contribution. I should like to add a strong message of support to those who are now negotiating in UEFA if they are negotiating on the basis that re-admission of English clubs must be conditional on the behaviour of our fans, not only throughout the rest of the domestic season, but throughout the European championships, which will take place in West Germany. Any decision that is not conditional upon that is wrong.

May I congratulate my hon. Friend's club on the important community initiatives that it has developed? I recommend that other clubs use their facilities for similar community purposes.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I appreciate that we do not often get sports questions, but the question is about local authority sporting facilities.

Mr. Pendry: Will the Minister make a firm decision to stop the nonsense of privatising sports and leisure facilities, especially in view of the many submissions that he has had? Certainly he has had one from the Amateur Swimming Association, whose patron is no less a person than Her Majesty The Queen, which states clearly:

"Any attempts to make learning to swim more difficult and more expensive must be a retrograde step."

Will the Minister stand tall for sport on this occasion at least?

Mr. Moynihan: We have no proposals to privatise local authority recreational facilities. The privatisation of management contracts, as the hon. Member well knows, is sought to improve competition in the running of facilities. That has been our main task throughout the consultation exercise. The hon. Gentleman referred governing body whose patron is Her Majesty The Qu I refer him——

Mr. Speaker: Order. We do not bring the royal fa into our arguments in the Chamber.

Mr. Moynihan: The Lawn Tennis Association, w the hon. Gentleman knows well, and which widespread support throughout the country, is supportive of the concept and would see it as opportunity to increase and improve the utilisatio facilities in the public sector.

Mr. Harry Greenway: Does my hon. Friend agree there is real unfairness between local authority prov sporting amenities, which do not pay rates, and priva provided sporting amenities, where rates are paid? Is not totally unfair, and should not the position be rect soon?

Mr. Moynihan: One of the important reasons bringing forward the consultation document was to en that the private sector had an opportunity to bid fo management of local authority facilities. I am certain the introduction of competition into the running facilities would be a major improvement and w provide the answer to my hon. Friend's point.

Mr. Denis Howell: Is it not the case that overwhelming majority of local authorities and sp organisations are opposed to the proposition that sp facilities and swimming baths which have been prov by the community should be handed over to pri management? That is a prescription that will ensure no local authority will ever again build another swimn pool or sports facility. Since this ludicrous policy conceived before the hon. Gentleman took office, wi understand that he has our full support for burying soon as possible? Will he ensure that if schools opt ou the state system they should not take with them the use sports facilities which were provided by the commu for the benefit of the whole neighbourhood? Will he in those cases to protect the use of those facilities fo sporting organisations?

Mr. Moynihan: The right hon. Gentleman will note in the consultation paper it was specifically stated th is not intended that the competitive tender regime sh apply to sports facilities which form an integral par educational establishments and which are provi principally for the use of pupils and students at t establishments. I fully appreciate the importance of thrust of his argument with regard to dual use facilitie sensitive reappraisal of the management of facilitie local authority control will lead to an increase in use

Mr. Holt: While my hon. Friend is considering problem, would he care to consider the ice rink Billingham, which is currently run by private managem under licence from the local authority? The local autho has said that it will not renew the licence, not because rink does not provide a good service for the peopl because it does—and not because it is making mone because it is not — but because it says that councillors in the town hall can run a sporting facility the local community.

Mr. Moynihan: If my hon. Friend cares to send me details, I shall consider the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have allowed a good run on that question. We must now proceed more rapidly.

Property Fraud

10. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to combat property fraud within the areas of development corporations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Urban development corporations take all reasonable action to detect fraud. If cases of alleged fraud are discovered, it is a matter for the police.

Mr. Hughes: Is the Secretary of State aware that there has been at least one conviction of a property developer dealing in docklands property recently, and that there have been at least two investigations by the Metropolitan and City police of allegations of complaints about property fraud and abuse in docklands? Given that the Secretary of State is now setting up further development corporations and that there have been major abuses, will he have serious discussions with the National Audit Office, which is preparing a report on accountancy controls, to be published in April, with the police forces and with the corporations themselves, so that we can ensure that the regime for dealing with property and its handling in docklands and other development corporation areas is not subject to such widespread abuse in the future?

Mr. Ridley: The hon. Gentleman makes allegations of widespread abuse and fraud which are not substantiated. I resented bitterly the last time that he raised this point, when he mentioned an individual by name. If he has any complaints against any individual and believes that there is any evidence of fraud, he should immediately tell the police, and not mention names in the House.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: In view of the attempt by the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) to smear the London Docklands Development Corporation and the whole marvellous movement that has done so much for central London, will my right hon. Friend confirm that the development corporation has done a remarkable job? Many houses for local people have been built, many jobs have been created and a tube line has been built, all of which flies in the face of what was claimed by the Opposition parties. They claimed that none of this would be achieved, and all that they are trying to do now is to denigrate what is being done and what will be done in the future.

Mr. Ridley: I entirely agree with my hon. Friend. What has been done is striking and astonishing and has been done in the face of hostility from both Opposition parties. I hope that they will now recognise that the London Docklands Development Corporation has been scrupulous in ensuring standards of professional conduct at every level throughout its organisation.

Rating Reform

11. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the average poll tax bill in England and Wales that is likely to be faced by a young single person with an annual income of £2,500 compared with the figure for someone earning £25,000 per year.

Mr. Howard: If the community charge had been fully in force in 1987-88, the average charge in England and Wales would have been £219. A young single person wit an income of £2,500 per annum would be likely to receiv a rebate.

Mr. McAllion: The Minister should know that the cu which the Government are implementing make rebat schemes of very limited benefit. The Low Pay Unit ha estimated that single people under the age of 25 will los their entitlement to rebate when their annual incom exceeds the princely sum of £2,380. Given that th Minister told the Daily Telegraph in July 1986 that, unde the current system of local government finance, someon earning £25,000 per year would be paying 20 times a much as someone on £2,500 a year towards the cost o local services, how can he describe it as fairer that thes two groups should now pay exactly the same, when i means that those earning £25,000 per year will pay muc less and those earning £2,500 per year will pay more?

Mr. Howard: The hon. Gentleman has misunderstoo what I said in the article to which he referred. It is the cas that the highest 10 per cent. of households by income wil continue to contribute about 16 times as much as th lowest 10 per cent. of households by income to the cost o local authority services when the community charge is i force.

Mr. Squire: Has my hon. and learned Friend noted tha the number of people who are unhappy with th community charge has apparently risen to nearly 70 pe cent.? Is he satisfied with that level, or does he have an proposals to bring forward that will have some effect i reducing the community charge's current unpopularity?

Mr. Howard: I certainly saw the poll to which my hon Friend referred. The conclusion was based on a clea misunderstanding of the effect of the proposals. Only 2 per cent. of those who responded to the poll thought tha their households would be better off as a result of ou proposals. In fact, 53 per cent. of households will be bette off. If that fact had been more widely understood, th results of the poll would have been rather different.

Mr. Allen McKay: As the legislation reads, it appear that a person with a dual residence or a static caravan wil pay two poll taxes. In that case, does it mean that the Prime Minister will pay one charge for a residence i Dulwich, one for the tied cottage at 10 Downing street and another for her holiday home at Chequers?

Mr. Howard: We have made it perfectly clear tha people with second or third homes will pay standard community charges in respect of such homes to a maximum of twice the community charge for the local authority in the areas in which such homes are situated.

Mr. Riddick: Will my hon. and learned Friend take this opportunity to give us some more details concerning the rebate scheme that will be available for people on modest incomes and for pensioners? Does he not believe that a £6,000 savings limit will hit those pensioners who have actually been prudent enough to save during their working lives? Will he reassure me that people in my constituency —for example, pensioners and those on modest incomes —will be properly protected under the proposals?

Mr. Howard: I cannot give my hon. Friend details of the rebates. We are talking about a scheme that will not be enforced until April 1990. He will not expect final decisions about such rebates to have been made at this stage. I can tell my hon. Friend that 80 per cent. of single pensioners will pay less under the community charge than they pay in rates.

Mr. Rooker: Will the Minister therefore confirm that one in five single pensioners will pay more under the poll tax system than they pay under the rates system? Will he confirm what he said in answer to the original question asked by my hon. Friend the Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion)? The Secretary of State said that a person who is earning £25,000 a year will pay 20 times as much to a local authority as a man on £2,500 a year. That is exactly the same figure as the Minister used in the Daily Telegraph article.

For the avoidance of doubt, will the Minister confirm that a young single person on £2,500 a year, who, because of fear of physical violence, happens to seek refuge, will be required to pay the poll tax, but, because of such fear, will be able to have his name excluded from the poll tax register? However, the person who earns, say £25,000 a year and is the head of the security services will not even pay the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: The hon. Gentleman's point is based on a misunderstanding. Those who, for security reasons, will be exempt from payment of the community charge will be obliged to make a contribution in lieu to the armed forces. That payment will be allocated in due course to the local authority concerned. It is not the case that they will not have to pay.

The answer to the first part of the hon. Gentleman's question is simple. I should have thought that a change that benefits four out of five single pensioners would be widely welcomed by those who have the interests of pensioners at heart.

Vacant Land

12. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres of land are currently in the Government land register of public vacant land; and how many acres of public land have been removed from the register since its inception.

Mr. Ridley: On 31 December 1987 the registers of unused and underused land owned by public bodies contained details of 91,000 acres. Since the first registers were compiled in 1981, 66,000 acres of land have been removed from them.

Mr. Steen: As the planning process seems to create a situation in which more vacant public land continues to be placed on the register, does my right hon. Friend agree that, even at the present rate of disposal, which is commendable, and even if he speeds it up, which will be better, there will still be many tens of thousands of acres of public land on the register by the turn of the century? Is not some new initiative now required to get rid of surplus public land? I refer to initiatives such as privatising land, handing it over to private companies to market and sell, or handing to public authorities the lion's share of it once it has been disposed of.

Mr. Ridley: I agree with my hon. Friend that there is far too much vacant urban land. He will be encouraged to know that in 1986, 46 per cent. of all new development in England took place on previously used or vacant urban land, which was a good use of that vacant land. I am awaiting the report of the Audit Commission, which is looking into this matter, which may give some on how to proceed. Further powers that will operation of the registers are being sought Government Bill.

Mr. Hardy: Does n the disposal of pu land become absurd if su h a policy leads to r development but the relevant local aut prevented from providin schools and other such development makes necessary?

Mr. Ridley: If that conjunction of ci occurred it would be abs d, but it does no many ways whereby such elopment can fol bringing into use of vacant land.

Mr. Gow: With regard to the figure of 91 much of which is in urban areas but suitable —does my right hon. Friend think that into use of that land is of great importance, in relieving the huge housing problems and rural areas? Will my right hon. Friend take fu to bring those acres of land into use?

Mr. Ridley: I agree with my hon. Friend. as are necessary are being taken in the Local Bill. However, not all that land is in places w a demand for it. Some of it is. There is acquiring land in an area where there is no industrialist who wishes to use it. We must those who want to use the land can do advertise that if there is any develope housebuilder or housing association that w vacant land in the ownership of various au that he has to do is to apply to my Departm is truly vacant, we will ensure that it is made him.

Radioactive Waste

13. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the State for the Environment what representat received about the management of nuclear w

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend ha number of representations, which have been Nirex.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Is the Minister awa British Nuclear Fuels offered up West Cu sacrificial lamb in a quest to find a national disposal of intermediate-level nuclear waste mandate from the district authorities, no ma the county authorities and no mandate for do the industrial development auhorities resp creating jobs in West Cumbria? Will the Mini assurance that this decision will be taken o objective of criteria and will not be influen whims of the monopolist employer and domi West Cumbrian economy—British Nuclear F

Mr. Moynihan: I can give that categorical

Mr. Michael Brown: Is my hon. Friend a have a certain amount of sympathy with the h for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours), imagine what his constituents must be going th my hon. Friend draw the hon. Gentleman's the fact that if the Labour party were in arrangements would now be in hand for shallow facility for the disposal of intermediate and low-level waste? Have we not made some improvement, in that the hon. Gentleman's constituents have an opportunity of consultation and are being consulted at the present time?

Mr. Moynihan: There is no doubt that opportunities for full consultation in such an exercise are essential. I give a categorical assurance to my hon. Friend that there will be the fullest and most comprehensive consultation exercise once Nirex has come forward with a proposal for the Government's consideration.

Dr. Cunningham: Does the Minister recall the unanimous report of the Select Committee on the subject of nuclear waste, which was chaired by the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi)? It recommended that site—specific research was essential before any site could be properly indentified, let alone used? Does he recall that a great deal of waste is accumulating on the surface of the British Nuclear Fuels site at Sellafield and that the Labour-controlled Copeland borough council has made it clear to British Nuclear Fuels that the continuing proliferation of surface buildings to house intermediate-level waste is unacceptable to the council and the community? How can we ever develop a long-term strategy for the storage of intermediate-level nuclear waste if no research and discussions are allowed to get off the gound?

Mr. Moynihan: The hon. Gentleman knows that in no way would it be right or proper for me to pre-empt what Nirex will come forward with. All I can say is that I a certain that the consultation exercise that is under way w be rigorously looked at and that the proposals that cor forward will take account of the sort of points raised the hon. Gentleman.

Nirex

14. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of Sta for the Environment when he last met the chairman Nirex; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend last met t chairman of Nirex on 22 October 1987. They discussed number of matters relating to Nirex.

Mr. Jones: In view of the massive opposition to t quest by Nirex to identify potential sites for the dispos of low and intermediate-level nuclear waste, is not t consultation procedure now undertaken by Nirex doom to failure? In view of the Government's stated aim saving money, does the Minister not think that it wou be far better to cancel that consultation procedure?

Mr. Moynihan: No, I do not. It is vital that Nir should fully investigate the three options for a deep, dua purpose disposal facility — deep burial on lan tunnelling under the sea from the shore and disposal in the sea bed from an offshore structure. It is vital that many technical assessments as possible are made so th Nirex can give full and comprehensive answers to t Government as soon as possible.

Radio Broadcasting (Written Answer)

3.31 pm

Mr. Roy Hattersley (Birmingham, Sparkbrook): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It concerns the rights of the House and the Government's conduct of business in the House. Yesterday, the Home Secretary gave a written answer—No. 150—on the future of the BBC. In his answer he described what he was proposing as a "major change" in policy and went on to justify that claim with descriptions of the introduction of national commercial radio and deregulation of local radio. The significance of that announcement is obvious and clear, and I do not think that the House would argue about its importance.

This major statement — "major" by the Home Secretary's admission and description—was provided by means of a written answer which was available to hon. Members several hours after it was available to newspapers. I do not make a great point about the usual courtesies offered to the Opposition, but the Opposition's copy was delivered at 10 o'clock this morning, whereas the Press Gallery copy was available some time during the middle of yesterday afternoon. It is a denial of our proper rights if a statement of such major importance is issued by way of a contrived written answer when, according to all the standards of normal parliamentary procedure, the Home Secretary should have had the courage to make the statement in the House and subject himself to parliamentary inquiry and proper parliamentary scrutiny.

I make the point of order in the hope that two forms of progress will be possible. First, I hope that we will begin to consider guidelines by which there is a distinction between those subjects that can be announced by written answer and those that are so important that they must be the subject of ministerial statement. Secondly, I hope that, if that general rule cannot be pursued by you, Mr. Speaker, or some other authority, the Leader of the House—who has an obligation to us all, not just his own party—will tell the Home Secretary that a statement described by him as a "major change" in policy should not have been made by way of written answer and suggest that the Home Secretary remedy his mistake by offering a statement to the House so that we may comment on it.

Mr. Speaker: This matter was raised yesterday and I said then that the alternative would presumably have been a statement, which is not under my control. I can only say that, because there was no statement yesterday, about 25 Back Benchers were able to take part in the debate. However, a further 30 still failed to get in. I suppose that it is question of balance.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am on my feet.

I am sure that the Leader of the House will have heard what has been said; but this is not remotely a matter of order for me.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): On a point of order Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am not taking the hon. Member.

Mr. Skinner: Later.

Mr. Speaker: Not even later.

Mr. Norman Buchan (Paisley, South): I point of order, Mr. Speaker. We have to well-furnished duty of protecting hon. Mem well as any technical aspect involved. I wa this issue. I learned about the written answe past 10 last night. I would hope that, in t hon. Members — quite apart from courtesies of the House—you would mak view on the conduct of major matters of this.

As we see it, the proposals represent the the public service concept of broadcasting, w the great jewel in the crown of Britain in the past 60 years. They would mean the handing of our broadcasting to potential monopolies of Maxwell, Murdoch and Stevens in the They would mean a lightly regulated broadc in which the participants competed in trivia a any genuine diversity of programmes——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I called the hon because of his former direct interest in this

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not taking any of order.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not a matter

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West)

Mr. Speaker: It is not a matter of order. T Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr addressed his question not to me but to the House and the Government.

Mr. Hattersley rose——

Mr. Banks: It is a matter of order.

Mr. Speaker: It is not a matter of order control of——

Mr. Banks: Let me raise it.

Mr. Speaker: No. I shall take the spokesman. Mr. Hattersley.

Mr. Hattersley: I believed that I was maki point of order for you, Sir, in asking you t House from the Government's behaviour. Ho your point and I have no wish to argue with y recall that such points of order have often be opportunity for the Leader of the House to r the right hon. Gentleman's duty to respond i He knows that this is a genuine problem and statement—the Government's own descripti been made in the usual way and he owes it something, even though it may not be adequ

The Lord Privy Seal and Leader of th Commons (Mr. John Wakeham): I have hea right hon. Gentleman has said and I shall l matter. I believe that the Home Secretary a properly, but I remind the House that we h questions tomorrow.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): On order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am not having a point of point of order.

Hong Kong

3.37 pm

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Sir Geoffrey Howe): I beg to move,

That this House takes note of the White Paper on the Annual Report on Hong Kong 1987 (Cm. 293) and endorses the policies which the Government is pursuing to maintain Hong Kong's future prosperity and stability.

Her Majesty's Government and the Opposition both attach great importance to the subject of today's debate. It is both a product and a symbol of Parliament's commitment to Hong Kong. The Government's commitment to the publication of annual reports on the territory was itself a response to the wishes expressed in Hong Kong and taken up by hon. Members. The Government and Parliament alike are equally determined to fulfil our responsibilities to Hong Kong. Indeed, this House has already considered Hong Kong on a number of occasions since it endorsed overwhelmingly the signature of the joint declaration on Hong Kong's future. I have always been encouraged by the strength and quality of the interest shown on both sides of the House. We all seek a future for Hong Kong that will be in the best interests of the territory and its people.

Today, I want to concentrate on three separate themes: the implementation of the joint declaration; our consultation with Hong Kong and its people; and the issue of confidence. Britain and China are engaged in Hong Kong in a unique enterprise. We are creating conditions for the transfer of responsibility for an entire community, while preserving its present systems, human rights and lifestyle.

The relationship between the British and Chinese Governments is close and cordial. That is as it should be. It cannot be emphasised too strongly that that relationship is vitally important to the people of Hong Kong; but, at the same time, the success of the Hong Kong enterprise is critical to it. Hong Kong therefore lies at the heart of that relationship.

Throughout the complex process of negotiating the joint declaration, we bent all our energies to securing a good deal for Hong Kong. I believe we succeeded. Now we are working, with the same determination, for the full and faithful implementation of that joint declaration. The Chinese Government, I believe, have an equal commitment.

During the past year I have met my Chinese colleague, Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian, on three occasions and Hong Kong has been a major theme at each of those meetings. I look forward to continuing that discussion—as well as to considering other international and bilateral questions—when I welcome Mr. Wu Xuequian on an official visit to Britain in the spring.

The British and Chinese Governments have developed a pattern of close and pragmatic co-operation over the implementation of the joint declaration. We recognise the need for the utmost sensitivity to the circumstances of Hong Kong and the concerns of its people. Understandably, they look for reassurance. One important element of that reassurance is and will be a high degree of continuity in Hong Kong's institutions and systems of government across the change of sovereignty in 1997.

The watchwords for the future remain "prosperity and stability"; and stability requires institutional continuity. That has been much in the minds of those who are work intensively together, for example, in the Joint Liai Group and the Land Commission.

During the past year that work has resulted in fur solid achievements: a series of agreements on H Kong's continued, separate participation in internatio organisations; agreement on further steps enabling H Kong to protect its own commercial interests before after 1997; further steps in securing continuity over tr and identity documentation; and good progress discussion on defence and public order.

At the same time, valuable work has been done on drafting of the Basic Law. It is that Chinese law which enshrine for post-1997 Hong Kong the constitutio provisions set out in the joint declaration. The draftin the Basic Law is, of course, a matter for the Chin Government, but, equally naturally, we are following process with the greatest interest.

We welcome the extent to which China has sough involve Hong Kong people in the drafting process. Alm half the members of the Basic Law drafting commi come from Hong Kong. The Basic Law consulta committee in the territory has a vital role in reflect Hong Kong views. For our part, we have the right satisfy ourselves that the eventual provisions of the Ba Law fully and accurately reflect the joint declaration.

Without our present constructive relationship w China, we could not have made such progress implementing the joint declaration. I believe that that is widely understood in Hong Kong.

However, there are also certain misconceptions t should not be allowed to persist. One myth is that Brit seeks good relations with China at the expense of interests of Hong Kong. Nothing could be further fr the truth, and anyone who went, as I did, through lengthy and strenuous negotiations with the Chinese wh led to the joint declaration knows that is a grotesq distortion. There is no question of putting Hong Ko second: we have upheld and will uphold Hong Kon interests to the full, not only because that is right, because it would be an illusion to suppose that we co create good relations with China at the expense of interests of Hong Kong.

All the evidence makes it plain that Hong Ko prospers when London and Peking are in harmony. T central fallacy is to suggest that there is a choice betwe the interests of Hong Kong and good relations betwe Britain and China. One cannot have one without the oth The single question that needs asking—it is important is how to secure the firmest possible foundation for future stability and prosperity of Hong Kong. It certai cannot be founded on confrontation between Britain a China.

In Hong Kong, a lively and articulate commun ensures that its concerns are heard. Successive governe have stood up for Hong Kong's interests m persuasively, both in London and in Peking.

The death of Sir Edward Youde at the end of 1986 w a tragic loss. The whole House will wish to join me paying tribute to the wisdom and dedication that showed in shaping Hong Kong's future, both administrator and as my adviser during the negotiation the joint declaration. His successor, Sir David Wilson, h brought to the office unparalleled experience; I am glad say that that has been widely acknowledged. He uniquely qualified to administer and champion t interests of Hong Kong. He has my fullest confidence, and he has shown admirable steadiness and clarity of purpose during his first year in office.

[Sir Geoffrey Howe]

The Government attach the highest importance to the process of consulting Hong Kong. There are close and intensive contacts between the British and Hong Kong Governments on all matters related to the implementation of the joint declaration. Officials of the Hong Kong Government play a full part in the work of the Joint Liaison Group.

Where consultation with Hong Kong people is concerned, one of the major events of the past year has been the review of developments in representative government. An earlier review took place in 1984. It resulted in important measures of reorganisation, including the introduction of 24 indirectly elected members into the Legislative Council. A commitment was made then to conduct a further round of public consultation in 1987. That commitment has been carried out in full.

The review is now nearing its end. A wide range of options was put forward for public debate, with none ruled out in advance. It has been scrupulously objective and impartial. Hong Kong people were encouraged to express their views, and their response has been on an unprecedented scale. An independent Survey Office has recorded the submissions made and views expressed by members of the community. Its report is comprehensive: no view, from whatever source, has been excluded. Two individuals of integrity and high standing in the community were appointed as independent monitors to oversee the work of the office. They have testified that the Survey Office recorded public views impartially and accurately.

The outcome of the review will be recorded in a White Paper, to be published by the Hong Kong Government next month. The House will understand that I cannot today anticipate details of the eventual decisions that will be announced. But I should like to explain some of the background.

In the first place, Her Majesty's Government and the Hong Kong Government alike wish to see the development towards more representative government in Hong Kong continue steadily. Neither we nor they would wish to impose any particular form or model. Hong Kong is unique in many ways, and it will need to develop its own system of government suited to its own requirements. Such a system should respect the wishes of the community as a whole and reflect Hong Kong's special circumstances and conditions, in the future as in the past.

We should acknowledge all the relevant factors: the range of views expressed by the community; the relevant provisions of the joint declaration; and the work now in hand to draft the Basic Law for post-1997 Hong Kong. We must ensure that any measures taken are accepted by the community as a whole and are consistent with the maintenance of stability.

Above all, we should remember that what we are building is not merely a temporary structure, but something which can and will endure in the years beyond 1997, and so carry Hong Kong forward into the 21st century. That is why our work must be set in the context of the establishment with China of arrangements for the future, and alongside the drafting of the Basic Law. There is nothing new about this. Through existence, its identity has evolved i realisation of its unique historical, international circumstances. It is again that we must work to preserve it.

The Hong Kong Government's Gre wide range of issues, but, as the Hous aware, the main focus of public del question whether a directly elected introduced into the Legislative Counci This issue was the subject of the submissions to the Survey Office. It also in the Legislative Council and other fo

The Survey Office report shows th views expressed have been in favour introducing some directly elected m Legislative Council. Of course, man express any view. None the less, I thin accurate to speak of a strong trend in p supports taking that step well before 1

On the question of timing, the repor be sharply divided. Some people b elections should be introduced this year the Legislative Council are due. Others about moving forward so quickly. They introduction at a later date, with some subsequent round of elections in 1991 most appropriate opportunity.

Mr. Jerry Wiggin (Weston-super-M sure that my right hon. and learned F what is common parlance in Hong Kon to say that representations were rec 137,000 people out of a population of 5 that the Government will bear in mi Chinese with residential qualification democratic Government. That shoul account.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: That is why th only one of the factors that have to be ta The report encompasses representation debates of many kinds in all the repr That is why the question is not suscep simple analysis. The division about whi has been reflected in debate, sometimes level from the Legislative Council down argued views are not always the most in most strident are not always the most the most likely to achieve the desired re

I have spoken of the need for co preliminary draft of the Basic Law, recen Basic Law drafting committee, all the composition of the legislature provide for element. That is very welcome in Hong of the considerations that should guide u conclusions. The views expressed by Ho help to establish the parameters within plan to move ahead on a steady and acceptable to the community as a whole. noted the general feeling in Hong Kon Paper should contain a clear statemen intended that direct elections should understand the widely expressed wish tha should bring an end to uncertainty.

In view of the short time that is availab I should like to give other hon. Members possible to speak. However, I cannot exclude from my opening remarks a few words about the position in Hong Kong of the so-called boat people from Vietnam. On that topic as on any other, I shall be ready in winding up to address specific concerns raised by hon. Members.

I am acutely conscious of the concern felt in Hong Kong about the problem of the boat people. We are doing all we possibly can to relieve Hong Kong of this burden. We have accepted a further quota for resettlement in the United Kingdom, and we are urging other countries to follow suit. We are also discussing with all those concerned how those Vietnamese not qualifying as refugees might be returned to Vietnam against suitable assurances about their treatment. None of these matters is easy to discuss or to carry forward. It will be a long haul, but I assure the House and the people in Hong Kong that we shall persist in trying to find a way forward to solve this problem. In all that we do for Hong Kong, our overriding concern is to sustain confidence in the future.

Mr. Andrew Faulds (Warley, East): Would it not be advisable to make a very strong reservation in terms of the comments that the right hon. and learned Gentleman was making a moment or two ago, that there will of course be no compulsory repatriation to Vietnam while the unhappy circumstances in Vietnam still prevail?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I understand the force of the hon. Gentleman's point. That is why I said that, when we were making representations and inquiries, suitable assurances about the treatment of anyone who might return to Vietnam were absolutely essential.

We are trying to reconcile two or three almost irreconcilable factors. It is plainly necessary to reduce the numbers in camps in Hong Kong; but there is clearly a limit to the places that can be found for them elsewhere. The third channel must certainly be sought: an acceptable way of returning them to their land. The hon. Gentleman is right to remind the House of the difficulties.

Mr. Churchill (Davyhulme): Is my right hon. Friend aware that during the past five years, while there have been closed camps in Hong Kong and on the islands, not one of the refugees — not a single family, although some have been behind barbed wire for more than five years — has asked to be repatriated to Vietnam? Will he take that into account? Furthermore, will Her Majesty's Government redouble their efforts to persuade other Governments to accept refugees for resettlement?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My hon. Friend is right: he directs his focus to the other components. I have taken up that point in virtually every meeting that I have had with any other Government who could possibly be a candidate to receive refugees. I do not think that my hon. Friend is right to say that not one refugee has sought repatriation; I am sure that some have tried to return to Vietnam. He is, however, right to say that the numbers have been very small. [Interruption.] As my hon. Friend the Member for Christchurch (Mr. Adley) says, an underlying feature is the achievement of more balanced policies in Vietnam. That would make it a more acceptable home to return to.

Mr. Chris Mullin (Sunderland, South): Where was the right hon. and learned Gentleman when the Americans bombed Vietnam?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I shall halt my digression rather than be distracted by that sedentary intervention.

Let me reiterate that our overriding sustain confidence in the future, both in t Hong Kong and in the wider internal co course there are uncertainties, but I beli should be seen in perspective.

Hong Kong people have always been h there is a strong tradition of travel overseas or training. Recently there has been som emigration. Uncertainty about the future factor in that, although it is by no means Moreover, many Hong Kong people, havi foreign nationality or residence qualificati return to Hong Kong. They are attracted lifestyle, the rewards and the sense of ident the community there. We and the Government will do our utmost to ensure attractions remain.

The House is, of course, well aware of recently connected with the Hong Kong stoc exchange. Hong Kong exchanges were no effects of the worldwide downturn in stock the Hong Kong Government moved deci ordinate financial support — to which, I a note, the Chinese authorities made contribution. They have also set in hand ac the longer-term problems connected with su operation of the exchanges.

Equally firm action has been taken mo ensure that allegations about the conduc individual office-holders of the stock exch pursued, without affecting the smooth ope exchange. The Hong Kong Government ar that the territory's position and reputatio international financial centre should be safe

The problems that emerge are being tackl On the credit side, we have much cause for en There is the joint declaration itself, and th certainty embodied in that legally binding treaty; there is China's commitment to work us over the implementation of the joint decl there is the efficiency and drive of the local ad creating conditions in which enterprise can

We are encouraged, finally, by the excepti performance of the local economy: a growth of over 12 per cent., bringing the 20-year aver 8 per cent. per annum; an increase in domes 26 per cent. over the year; virtually full empl a strong property market and high levels o Few economies in the world could match None of it suggests a lack of confidence in H prospects on the part of those who trade and

The Hong Kong Government are plann fully for the territory's future. Ambitious p hand to take the territory into the next quality of life is being steadily improved. Opp the next generation are being opened up.

The transitional years up to the change o in 1997 are bound to bring uncertainties, but has shown an admirable ability to adapt to sustained by the resilience and dynamism of is sustained, too, by the good will of the Chinese Governments and their joint commi successful implementation of the joint decla confident that all these advantages will keep steady on its course.

[Sir Geoffrey Howe]

It is the solemn responsibility of the British Government to administer Hong Kong up to 30 June 1997 in the best interests of its people. We shall discharge that responsibility to the utmost of our abilities.

4.4 pm

Mr. Gerald Kaufman (Manchester, Gorton): I join the Foreign Secretary in paying tribute to the late Sir Edward Youde. I knew Sir Edward well and worked closely with him for a time. I was well aware of his many qualities and, of course, of his heroic past. It is right that we should remember him now.

The Opposition are grateful to the Government for agreeing to the Labour party's request for a debate on the annual report. We are grateful for the annual report itself. The useful availability of these reports seems somewhat at odds with the adamant rejection by the Foreign Secretary almost three years ago today—it was 21 January 1985—of requests by my right hon. and hon. Friends for annual reports on progress in Hong Kong following the agreement of 1984.

Hansard for 21 January 1985 is littered with categorical rejections of the need and scope for such reports and the damage that they might inflict. The Foreign Secretary said:

"Such reports tend to be a repetition of previous reports in form . . . Although designed with the best intentions, they often have the opposite effect of that intended . . . My instinctive reaction to the annualisation of reports is to regard that practice as often diminishing the importance and value of the reports."

He said with enormous vehemence:

"one can become depressed by the wearisome familiarity of the structure of annual reports. They can fall into an annual rhythm, even when the scene is changing as rapidly as it is in Hong Kong. I am anxious not to condemn the reality of the subject to being encapsulated in a wearisome annual framework."—[Official Report, 21 January 1985; Vol. 71, c. 734 and 745.]

I am pleased that the right hon. and learned Gentleman repented of that view, because I think that the whole House will agree that the series of annual reports is of great value to the House and the people of Hong Kong. I hope that the right hon. and learned Gentleman's change of mind is a forerunner of even more valuable mind changes on this and other matters.

The report contains much encouraging information. We congratulate the Joint Liaison Group on the agreed involvement of the Hong Kong special administrative region, as it will become in 1997, in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the multi-fibre arrangement, the Customs Co-operation Council and the Food and Agriculture Organisation. We are sure that, as a member of the International Labour Organisation, Hong Kong China will pursue more enlightened employment policies than do the present British Government.

We are pleased to learn of the air service agreement with the Netherlands and of the anticipated air service agreement with Switzerland. All this makes encouraging progress in the evolution of the unique experiment on which the Chinese People's Republic has agreed to embark with such breadth of mind and vision.

We greatly applaud other aspects of the report. In particular, we congratulate the Hong Kong housing authority on its plans in the coming financial year to complete a record 52,000 public housing units. That

52,000 in Hong Kong contrasts to 25,000 public sector complet year. Hong Kong, with one tent is building twice as many pub
Government are permitting.

This remarkable achievemen
Britain by 500,000 new counci knows, we badly need. Perhap could persuade the Secretary of S to take a trip to Hong Kong a —that would be most unfair
Kong; warlords are completely — but to learn much-needed provision for public need.

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend (Bexle
hon. Gentleman is far too soph argument to the House. Does h Kong has absorbed a very large mainland China who are utterly Hong Kong are entirely differe Britain.

Mr. Kaufman: I accept that Hong Kong has serious difficul dismiss or underestimate for a serious difficulties, too. We also homeless people who would admirable public sector housing which Hong Kong is participatin

I thank the Foreign Secretar about the boat people. I acknowl difficulty of the problem. It is f and a solution is not easy to finc
the Foreign Secretary and discu partisan way, potential ways in w dealt with in an attempt to find a those unhappy people.

As the Foreign Secretary has a is especially important as it come White Paper which is due for pu very much hope that it is not a that is ready for the printer. I hop today will have an effect on its co is an empty charade and goes ag
the Government and the Oppositi important issue.

I hope that the Foreign Secreta about direct elections. I thought the hon. Member for Weston-su was curious. He drew attention to small number of submissions by th on this issue. There were 125,83 have thought that if the Governm country with 10 times the populat received 125,000 submissions on would acknowledge that there wa country about it. I cannot un remarkable manifestation of con apparently, as trivial.

As the Foreign Secretary has sa elections will play a part in th Legislative Council after 1 July 19 agreement — the elaboration, a Government of the People's Repub policies regarding Hong Kong—st

"The Legislature of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region shall be constituted by elections."

We welcome the clarity and forthrightness of that pledge. In his statement of 25 October 1984, the Foreign Secretary confirmed that commitment when he said:

"The agreement provides for the Legislature of Hong Kong in the future to be on an elective basis".

In response to questions, he said:

"the legislature . . . must be developed and established, after proper consideration, on a due time scale." — [Official Report, 25 October 1984; Vol. 65, c. 822 and 826.]

I must confess that it is not immediately apparent to me what those words are supposed to mean. That phraseology may be a characteristic example of the Foreign Secretary's occidental inscrutability. However, I take it that that was a circumlocutory way of saying that the Foreign Secretary was keeping his options open. I say "his options" because, as he properly said this afternoon, although the Chinese Government naturally have a legitimate and important interest in that fundamental decision, it is a decision for Her Majesty's Government alone as they have sole responsibility for the administration of Hong Kong until 30 June 1997.

The question therefore is not whether there should be direct elections for the Hong Kong Legislative Council, but when and for what proportion of those seats the election should take place. The Chinese make no bones about that. A most formidable and brilliant representative of the Chinese embassy addressed a meeting of my right hon. and hon. Friends earlier this week. She categorically committed the People's Republic of China to direct elections for Hong Kong. She acknowledged that an overwhelming majority of the people in Hong Kong are in favour of direct elections. Those of us who listened to her welcomed the sincerity of that statement as well as the consummate skill with which the Chinese approach was described. We were also told that, while naturally China had the right to its own point of view about timing and proportions, the People's Republic of China is not opposed to direct elections before 1997.

I acknowledge immediately that the question of when direct elections should start is not straightforward or simple. One argument is that no action should be taken that would pre-empt the Basic Law for Hong Kong which, as the Foreign Secretary said, is now in preparation by the Chinese Government. The first draft of that Basic Law will be made public in April. It will be subject to five months of consultation and revised in the light of that consultation. It will then be made available in its revised form for additional calculation. It is due to be ratified by the National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China for publication in 1990. That is a powerful argument and it could weight the balance against action in direct elections in advance of 1997 which would pre-empt the contents of the Basic Law, which is solely a matter for China.

I could have been strongly influenced in favour of a delay in holding direct elections until 1991 after the Basic Law has been passed were it not for the clear statement from the Chinese that they are in favour of direct elections. In those circumstances, it is not the principle of direct elections and whether direct elections are acceptable to the People's Republic of China which is in question. The People's Republic of China has clearly accepted the principle. However, the timing and the modalities of such elections are in question. That being so, I believe that the arguments for starting with some proportion of direct elections this year are compelling. I trust tha Secretary will take those arguments into considering the final contents of next m Paper.

It is unquestionable that, if direct electio until after the handover in 1997, they will nc immediately. Preparations will have to be next scheduled year for a change in the comp Legislative Council after 1997 is the year 200 mean that even a start on the basic experienc and the practices and conduct of elected m not be made until into the new century. If point were to be made with 25 per cent., as s accepted proportion for a start, progress tow cent. elected Legislative Council might not until well into the 50-year period guaranteed Kong special administrative region.

There are no arguments in favour of wai changeover, and the People's Republic of Ch said that it wants to wait until the char question arises whether the direct elections before or after the Basic Law is approved important point is that time is already passi of the time between the signing of the agree and the handover in 1997 has already elapse until 1991 for the introduction of some p direct elections, more than half of the time signature of the agreement and the handov elapsed. There will not be much time for th to be assimilated and for experience to be g elections are conducted and how elected me employ their opportunities and status.

I believe that there is an even more import their great wisdom the Chinese Government two opportunities for public consultation in about the contents and provisions of the Ba is being drafted. It must be said that circumstances reactions to that Basic Law available from persons who are clearly representative of the people of Hong Kon distinguished and knowledgeable persons wi views and those will be important. Possibly e made to guage the views of the people of H a whole, perhaps through the use of opinion have already been employed. However, t distinguished and knowledgeable people will views and the findings of opinion polls are al challenge and interpretation, as indeed ha findings of the polls seeking the views of t Hong Kong on the question of direct electio

It would be invaluable for the Chinese Go have people available for consultation who ar to be the properly elected representatives of t Hong Kong. The availability of such elect tatives would be most helpful in securing clea of the Basic Law by the people of Hong Kon that that is in the interests of the Chinese Go this remarkable experiment on which t courageously embarking.

Mr. David Howell (Guildford): I am sure t hon. Gentleman is correct to be concerne development of representative and robust go Hong Kong, and that concern is shared by m and learned Friend the Home Secretary and Government. Does the right hon. Gentlema there is a danger in putting too much weight on 1988 as the starting point because, if that weight is too great, it will create undue anxieties in Hong Kong that will undermine all the work that lies ahead and the progress that has already been achieved? Will the right hon. Gentleman use his considerable influence to try to allay some of those fears?

[Mr. David Howell]

Mr. Kaufman: That is the last thing that I want to see. The problem is that there is already a great deal of concern. It is impossible to say how representative is that concern, but there is no doubt that it exists. I have tried to balance the arguments for a start on direct elections before the drafting of the Basic Law and after its passage. After careful consideration, my conclusion is that the arguments are considerably weighted towards a start before the Basic Law is agreed. I will consider other arguments in a moment in response to the important point raised by the right hon. Member for Guildford (Mr. Howell). However, I have long been wary of the arguments in favour of what the late Hugh Dalton used to call the doctrine of unripe time. Arguments can always be advanced to state that some proposed change or advance is desirable, but the time is not ripe.

The problem is that we are under two time limits. First, we are under the time limit of the handover. Although the period of guarantee of the special administrative region is lengthy, it is clearly a limited period. Secondly, it is necessary for Hong Kong to have experience of a 25 per cent. elected Legislative Council and of a 100 per cent. elected Legislative Council early in that period.

The sooner that direct election begins, the earlier will be the experience of working representative structures and the greater the chances of sorting out any problems which may arise in direct election and direct representation, to which the people of Hong Kong are not used on a territory-wide scale. A start in direct elections this year would of course place a great responsibility on the people of Hong Kong to demonstrate their capability to conduct free elections in a responsible manner.

I am confident that the sophisticated people of that territory are more than equal to that challenge, and that their ability to meet it will be of assistance in the growth of their relationship with the country of which they will soon become an autonomous region. I believe that they will seize the opportunity to prove to China that the system can work. I am sure that the people of Hong Kong want the system to work—their whole future depends upon it—and the major change that the Chinese are proposing to be of benefit to them so that it can continue beyond the 50-year period.

Mr. Robert Adley (Christchurch): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Kaufman: I hope that the hon. Gentleman and the House will accept that this must be the last intervention that I will take, as so many right hon. and hon. Members wish to speak in a short debate.

Mr. Adley: The right hon. Gentleman mentioned that the Labour party had received a representative from the Chinese embassy. We all know that the Chinese are in favour of direct elections, but was she in favour of them before 1991? Does the right hon. Gentleman agree that it will not help the people of Hong Kong if they ar encouraged to take decisions which are clearly contrary t the views of the Chinese Government?

Mr. Kaufman: That formidable and remarkable lad was careful to express no view on that matter. In my view she was sensible not to do so. Clearly, it is not in th interests of the people of Hong Kong for action to be take during the remaining period of British administration tha will be unwelcome to the People's Republic of China. A the same time, with all respect to the People's Republic o China, Britain and the House are administering Hong Kong and will administer it until 30 June 1997. It is our responsibility to take decisions which we regard as prope for Hong Kong, of course taking into account th important considerations mentioned by the hon. Membe for Christchurch (Mr. Adley).

The issue will not go away. There is an appetite fo direct elections in Hong Kong that is acknowledged i every statement made on the subject, including those statements made by the Chinese Government. Reluctant though I am to say it, I have to say that until a specific commitment as to date and proportion of those to be elected is given, it is a question that will bedevil the preparations for the handover and could overshadow the important discussion that China is laudably seeking over the contents of the draft Basic Law.

I do not believe that direct elections are the only important issue at stake in the next few years for Hong Kong. It would be a pity if preoccupation with direct elections were to dominate and distort discussion of all the other issues which need to be considered and settled.

Therefore, I put it to the Foreign Secretary that the arguments strongly predominate in favour of an announcement in the White Paper next month that direct elections for some of the Legislative Council seats should take place later this year. Indeed, faced with a choice between 25 per cent. in 1991 and 12·5 per cent. this year, I would strongly recommend 12·5 per cent. this year, even though my own preference, like that of many in Hong Kong, would be for 25 per cent. this year.

My discussions with people from Hong Kong show that there is a great readiness there to co-operate with China in the fundamental changes that are to come, and to demonstrate that readiness to China. Direct elections this year would assist in that co-operation and that demonstration. The Foreign Secretary said on 21 January 1985:

"The process of consultation . . . will be further assisted by the progressive strengthening of representative Government in Hong Kong over the next 10 years." —[Official Report, 21 January 1985; Vol. 71, c. 741.]

Consultation on the basic law starts in April. Strengthening of representative government should start in this year, too.

There is intense interest in this debate in Hong Kong. Although it is now after midnight there, this debate is being broadcast live in the territory, and is being listened to by a large number of concerned people. Let the Government give them the commitment that so many are looking for.

In its decision to set up a special administrative region in Hong Kong, the People's Republic of China has taken one of the most visionary steps that any Government have ever taken. It deserves credit and admiration for its openness of mind and its readiness to innovate. The House has a duty to assist the People's Republic of China in that great enterprise, and to maintain its proper vigilance on behalf of the people of Hong Kong for whom we remain responsible. It is in that spirit that the Opposition approach the debate.

4.25 pm

Mr. Edward Heath (Old Bexley and Sidcup): I am grateful for the opportunity briefly to intervene in this important debate. Unfortunately, I was unavoidably prevented from hearing the first part of the Foreign Secretary's speech in which he paid tribute to Sir Edward Youde. I join him in that, as I knew Sir Edward Youde when he was ambassador in Beijing. He was our second ambassador there after we assumed complete diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China, and he carried out an expert job in having working relationships with Mao Tse-Tung, Zhou Enlai and Deng Xiaoping.

When Sir Edward came to Hong Kong, he had a formidable task in following Lord MacLehose who had been governor there for 11 years and was immensely admired and respected, and had performed remarkable feats as governor of Hong Kong. However, Sir Edward assumed that task willingly and with great skill, in his own style, which was different from that of Lord MacLehose. His death was a tragedy and we should pay tribute to him for his achievements in Beijing and Hong Kong.

Before I come to the main question about elections, I wish to follow my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary in saying a few words about the boat people. We must face the fact that that situation cannot continue. Those of us who have seen the camps are convinced that the Government of Hong Kong are doing absolutely everything possible to make them tolerable, but year after year children are growing up confined to those camps. That situation cannot be maintained. As we shall be responsible for Hong Kong for another nine years, we cannot allow a situation to continue in which so many young lives—they will soon become youths capable of work—are confined in camps. We cannot respectably hand over Hong Kong to the People's Republic of China with people kept in such conditions.

I do not believe that the People's Republic of China would allow such a situation to continue. Therefore, I urge my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary, who has a compassionate nature, to recognise that year after year human lives are continuing, and young people are growing up in a situation which—however much the Hong Kong Government do—is intolerable.

I do not believe that it is impossible for Hong Kong to assimilate the numbers that are involved. A colony of 5 million people could absorb such a number; it is perfectly possible if it is handled properly. Britain certainly could take more people than it has already taken. Voices will always shout against that, but a country of 50 million people must be able to absorb more than we have been prepared to accept so far.

After all, when my Government — of which the Foreign Secretary was a member—faced problems with Uganda, we were able to absorb 25,000 Ugandan Asians in 10 days. They have proved themselves to be admirable working people. They have created their own private enterprises and have been immensely successful. I am not in a position to make a comparison between those people and the Vietnamese, but I am quite convinced that Hong Kong could handle the problem once the Governments of this country and Hong Kong made up their minds to do so.

The major point of the discussion today is elections. When we debated this matter on 5 December 1984, I congratulated my right hon. and learned Friend on the agreement that had been reached. I summed up my position by saying:

> "Far greater than any danger of haste is the danger of not having fully representative working government with experience by the time the handover takes place." —[Official Report, 5 December 1984; Vol. 69, c. 405.]

That is still my view. There is a much greater danger of our dragging our feet than of being over-hasty.

For the remaining period before the handover, the all-important thing for Her Majesty's Government to consider is that we are still the Government of Hong Kong and that we have accepted our full responsibilities, placed upon us, with the full agreement of the People's Republic of China, for all the activities and particularly for the government of Hong Kong, until 1997. If we are to do that, we must show all the time that we are not only managing the affairs properly, but dealing with the problems that arise. There is no point in trying to hide the problems of Hong Kong, because everybody there knows about them only too well. There are problems with the stock exchange and scandals that have taken place in industry, commerce and within other activities in Hong Kong. They must be dealt with quickly and firmly if we are to demonstrate that we are still carrying out our responsibilities.

If we are to maintain the confidence of the people of Hong Kong we must show that we are still running the show properly. We cannot afford to let it gradually slip. If we do so—there is some evidence to suggest that people believe that that is already happening — the financial, commercial and industrial interests of Hong Kong will rapidly reach the conclusion that we will not carry out our part of the agreement reached between ourselves and the People's Republic of China. If they reach that conclusion, the prosperity of Hong Kong will fade away. That will be the test of whether we properly carry out our responsibilities under the agreement.

One of the questions open to discussion is that of elections. We should be able to hand over Hong Kong with a system of representative government. My right hon. and learned Friend has said that Hong Kong should develop its own system, and I entirely agree. However, it must be a system of representative government, and unless action is taken quickly now we shall be unable to hand over any form of experienced, representative government. I made that observation three years ago and now we have less than nine years left. As Members of this House, we know how long it takes to acquire the experience within the House to enable us to achieve anything individually within our parties or in government.

In Hong Kong the operation of a full system of government must be achieved in a short period of time and it is rapidly getting shorter and shorter. When my right hon. and learned Friend is considering the White Paper he must take that fact into account. The People's Republic of China accepted that a system of representative government would be established and it is committed to the continuation of that system for 50 years after the handover. Therefore, what we hand over is of vital importance. That lends emphasis to the fact that my right hon. and learned Friend should be prepared to take action, but in what direction?

[Mr. Edward Heath]

Obviously, when a new constitution is being devised it would be wise to ensure that any action taken now should not be in conflict with it. I fully accept that. However, do we need to do anything that is in conflict with that constitution? I believe that the answer to that question is no.

The first option for consideration is extending the functional system of government in Hong Kong with internal elections, and that is fully acceptable to the People's Republic of China. Those who are considering constitutional developments within the People's Republic of China at the moment are undoubtedly thinking along those lines. However, they face enormous difficulties. When they talk about opening up China or its liberalisation they are talking about the economic development of the country and they are determined on that. However, when it comes to the liberalisation of political activities the attitude is different.

It is genuinely believed that, with more than 1 billion people, the country is not sufficiently developed or experienced to carry on an effective system of government. One can understand that. A crucial point will be reached — as we have seen in other countries — because with economic development and liberalisation there inevitably follows a demand for political liberalisation. That always represents the crux for any country that is trying to develop its economy and political institutions.

We could increase what I term the functional representation in Hong Kong at this moment and that would be carrying the territory in the direction that would be followed by the People's Republic of China. Secondly, I understand that there are options contained in the basic constitution, as presently shaped, that concern 25 per cent., 30 per cent. and 50 per cent. of the Legislative Council seats for election. If those options are already within the proposed Basic Law and are accepted by the People's Republic of China, I do not believe that we would be in conflict with the constitution if we moved on that path between now and when the Basic Law is accepted. If we were certain that the Basic Law would be effected in a year's time all would be well, but, as we know, such matters tend to drag on and on. It may well be 1991 or 1992 before the matter is settled. In that case, the time left before the handover would be even shorter—one could count the years on the fingers of one hand.

If such options were taken up, I do not believe that we would be pursuing a path that would be in conflict with the forthcoming constitution to be agreed between the People's Republic of China and Her Majesty's Government. If I am wrong, no doubt my right hon. and learned Friend will correct me in due course. If we are not in conflict, I believe that it is possible to advance. Therefore, there are two options available to us by which we can help to develop representative government in Hong Kong. We would then be able to hand the territory over in 1997 with a system that could continue, without further controversy, for the remaining 50 years to which the People's Republic of China will be committed.

When my right hon. and learned Friend is considering the White Paper, which is the importance of today's debate, he should recognise that, from the point of view of governmental experience, it is urgently necessary develop a system of representative government in H Kong. Such a development would not be in conflict the new constitution.

Therefore, it should be possible for us to advance al such a path without the People's Republic of Ch claiming that we are in any way infringing undertakings that we have given. If we follow that pat will not be possible for the people of Hong Kong or of our other friends to say that we are not carrying out responsibilities that we have undertaken. If we do infringe our undertakings or fail our responsibilities, it be the best position for our Government.

The practical way in which the people of Hong Ko will respond to elections is a matter to be considered. I not quite certain whether my hon. Friend the Member Weston-super-Mare (Mr. Wiggin) was saying that 135,0 people represented a small or large number or whethe meant that people wanted elections or not. I do not m which way my hon. Friend interprets it, because, whe comes to the point, it is up to the people to decide whet they wish to vote in elections. My own judgment is that people of Hong Kong—the greater part of the 5 milli inhabitants—are mainly concerned with getting on w their own business, which they do extremely well. T does not mean to say that they should not ha representative government, especially when we have giv such an undertaking.

My hon. Friend and I may agree—probably for first time, but I hope not for the last—that the peo of Hong Kong can carry on doing their own business a continue to be successful. However, progressively, th will be opportunities for those who want to vote elections and form their own Government. We shall th hand over in 1997 not only a very successful Hong Ko commercially and industrially, but one which is satisfi with its form of representative government which can th continue for 50 years until further changes come under t People's Republic of China.

4.39 pm

Mr. John Morris (Aberavon): The whole House w have listened closely to the words of the right ho Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath), drawi on his long experience. They were wise words on the ne for direct elections and the fact that that would not incompatible, as he understands it, with the Basic Law far proposed.

On my last visit to Hong Kong as shadow Attorne General, in the course of discussions with the leg community I gave an assurance that whenever an iss arose regarding freedom, the law or the constitution, would be prepared to act as a conduit pipe if they ha exhausted all the existing machinery. Over the years the have been occasions when one has had to go to Ministe because of anxieties expressed in Hong Kong.

Let me give one example — the public outc regarding section 27 of the Public Order Ordinan enacted last March, which makes it a crime to publish fal news. If that were a crime in the United Kingdom, th Home Secretary would have to build prisons for editor sub-editors and the like. That law has caused great anxiet especially as regards the freedom of the press and fr speech.

I understand that there is now a film censorship Bill, fo political reasons, mainly the likelihood of seriousl damaging good relations with other territories. Freedom and censorship, particularly political censorship, are never compatible — a lesson forgotten perhaps by Her Majesty's Government in their litigious rampage through the courts of the world.

Whenever one goes to Ministers the answer is always the same — this is a matter for Hong Kong. If Hong Kong had a democratically elected Government that would be right, but when one hears of these aberrations which are contrary to our understanding of freedom, we cannot, like Pontius Pilate, wash our hands of what is going on there.

I come immediately to the issue raised by the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup. I believe, from the representations that we have had, that there is more than the beginning of a crisis of confidence in Hong Kong regarding progress on the road to direct elections. Informed opinion in Hong Kong, if we are to judge by the representations that we have had, is that they have been shaken by the timidity of the Government in grasping the nettle on how far and how quickly representative government is to be achieved.

The Foreign Secretary has not carried the matter one iota further. We do not know in what way Her Majesty's Government will encourage speed in moving towards a democratically elected government. Sophisticated Hong Kong, with a long tradition in the business world, perhaps will be unique as the only colony where we have not begun to move towards a democratically elected government when we hand it over. That is an odd reflection on the people of Hong Kong.

Mr. Adley: Has the right hon. and learned Gentleman not slightly misunderstood the history of Hong Kong? Is not the real reason why we never introduced any fundamentally democratic institutions in Hong Kong that, whatever the paper reality, the political reality was that no governor of Hong Kong for the last 150 years dared do anything along those lines that would fly in the face of the wishes of whoever happened to be governing China at the time? Is that not the reason why nothing was done?

Mr. Morris: Let us get away from the past. What is important now is the sophistication of business leadership and many other forms of leadership in Hong Kong. There are two great universities, with a third planned. It is unique that we have hardly moved along the road to democratic government. It is the only one of our colonies where we have not done so. The Government may assert on a technicality that there has been no breach of promise in not having direct elections in 1988, but it is only a technical defence and, like most technical defences, it lacks all merit.

Anyone who has read the excellent memorandum prepared by Mr. Martin Lee and his colleagues cannot fail to be impressed by the case that they have presented. Their analysis of the expectation in Hong Kong provides a sound prima facie case for elections now. It was Jim Griffiths, a distinguished Colonial Secretary and a compatriot of mine, who said on more than one occasion that half the battle was to begin. He had long experience of administering our colonies.

The expectation is based on the repeated promises of the Government, culminating in the Prime Minister's own words in December 1984:

> "We shall honour our obligations to the full . . . Long before 1997 we will have steadily and securely moved to increase the amount of representation of local people in the Government of Hong Kong."

Earlier, both the Foreign Secretary and the governor had said that representative government would be developed "in the years immediately ahead".

I emphasise the word "immediately".

As that was promised in 1984, how can there have been no progress by 1988? The sands of time are running out. Hong Kong needs experienced leaders to play their full part in the colony's affairs. Since the term of office of the Legislative Council is three years, it is difficult to see how a representative legislature can be established well before 1997 if a start is not made in 1988 on at least a small number of seats. If this opportunity is missed we shall chearly be in 1991 before a start can be made, and there will be only six years left.

May I ask three questions of the Foreign Secretary? First, are the Government aware of the extent of the anxiety of informed opinion in Hong Kong? Secondly — perhaps the Foreign Secretary will draw back the veil on the White Paper — how do the Government see representative government developing between now and 1997? Thirdly, will the Foreign Secretary endorse the assertion of my right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) that there is no tardiness on the part of the Chinese in going along with a start being made in 1988?

China has said that the Basic Law would represent the wishes of the people of Hong Kong. The letter and spirit of the agreement provide that the legislature of the Hong Kong special administrative region shall be constitutionally elected. The first step should be taken now. The right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup is right. It takes years for people to acquire the know-how to work the machinery of government and, indeed, the machinery of this House. Time is running out. If nothing is done by 1991 we shall have lost the advantage of seven years. They will have been seven very lean years indeed in making progress on the matter.

I quote the words of Sir Jack Cater, the chief secretary of Hong Kong until 1981, reported in The Independent this morning. He said:

> "Too little is made of the fact that we have so very little time. All that would be achieved by not introducing direct elections now would be to make [1997] that much more difficult. Hong Kong would not be getting the experience which it obviously needs. We should be treated as an adult society. If this is what we want, there has to be an extraordinarily good reason for not giving it to us."

Those are the words of a very experienced administrator in Hong Kong. I hope that the Foreign Secretary will tell us why a start cannot be made in 1988, or must three more years be lost before 1991?

4.50 pm

Mr. Jerry Wiggin (Weston-super-Mare): I and two of my hon. Friends had the good fortune to be invited by the Hong Kong Government to spend 10 days in the territory in September. We had a most interesting time, met very many people and were looked after most hospitably. At the time, the leading subject was the Green Paper and the survey was being assessed.

I intervened in the Foreign Secretary's speech and both the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) and my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) questioned the point that I was trying to make. It is a very simple point: the survey, although producing the views of 135,000 people, did not produce the views of 5·25 million people. From my discussions with very many people, I am certain that there is a substantial body of opinion that says either, "I do not know," or, "I do not care," or simply prefers a system in which elected government plays a very small part. I was delighted that my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary responded to my intervention by saying that those who make the most noise on this subject by no means necessarily have the most influence or carry the greatest weight of support in the territory.

[Mr. Jerry Wiggin]

Mr. Dennis Canavan (Falkirk, West): The hon. Gentleman referred to a survey. There have been several surveys and opinion polls to measure public opinion in Hong Kong on this matter. Recent surveys show that the majority of people favour direct elections. There may be a division of opinion about the timing of elections, but the most popular date for the introduction of direct elections in all the recent surveys is 1988.

Mr. Wiggin: I disagree with that. The survey to which I referred is the public response to the Green Paper, which I am sure the hon. Gentleman has read. With all statistics, it is possible to come to whatever conclusion one might choose. Mr. Martin Lee comes to a very different view.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes (Harrow, West): My hon. Friend sets much store by that survey, but will he confirm that the key question about the 1988 direct elections was muddled and has been widely discredited by people who know about surveys? Will he also confirm that the reason why so many people expressed no view is that 40 per cent. of the people asked could not understand the question? Does he agree that, if he were asked that question before or after breakfast, he would not understand it any more than I would?

Mr. Wiggin: I shall not dispute with my hon. Friend what is the best time of day to ask me intellectual questions.

This debate has been raging in the territory and it is natural that it should be reflected in our debate. I do not share my hon. Friend's view on this matter. The vast majority of people are far less interested in voting for their representatives than we might like to think. We have made the mistake in many countries of imagining that the Westminster system, and all that goes with it, transfers easily and that it is for the benefit of the people concerned. I question that, and believe that history would be on my side.

I intend to speak only for a few moments, but there is one point that deeply impressed me during my visit and has not been mentioned in the debate. It concerns the general state of law and order in the territory. It is immensely refreshing to walk the streets of Hong Kong, which are litter-free and well policed. According to the police commissioner, the crime figures are amazingly low —there are 13 street crimes and 30 burglaries a day in a community of 5·5 million people. They are quite exceptional figures.

I asked the police commissioner on what he based this performance and he said that he had, quite simply, twice the number of policemen in Hong Kong per head of population as he did as an assistant commissioner of police in London. The right hon. Member for Gorton suggested that a housing Minister should visit Hong Kong their ways. I hope that the Home Secretary will tal of that vital point.

While in Beijing, I had the privilege of meeting t Minister in charge of Hong Kong affairs. The w is in everybody's mind is confidence. I am convin the Government of the People's Republic of Chi understand that fact and, in the action of suppor futures market, demonstrated their desire to p money where their mouth is. That was one of t dramatic exhibitions of their intention to hono commitments. It is vital that our Government do th because confidence is fragile and could so e disturbed. I left after a very happy visit with the fi that we were set on a road to a successful transit I congratulate Ministers on keeping up that mom

4.56 pm

Sir Russell Johnston (Inverness, Nairn and Loc I wish to associate myself with the tribute to Sir Youde. The few remarks that I wish to make a much in tune with the typically sane and cons comments of the right hon. Member for Old Bex Sidcup (Mr. Heath).

I remember the debates in 1984 and 1985 ve There was no sense of complacency, but there was a that the Government had achieved a very good agr with the People's Republic of China, given that th no alternative under international law than to ne the best outcome from a position of weakne solution of two systems in one country, reserved a century, earned for the Foreign Secretary and the Governor, Sir David Wilson, in particular, justifia considerable praise.

On Third Reading of the Hong Kong Bil February 1985, I regretted that the self-determ route could not have been followed, because that genuine democratic response and I had no doubt nor do I have any doubt now—that, given that the overwhelming majority of the people of Hong would have chosen to follow the example of their city, Singapore.

That would have required an act of magnanimity by the People's Republic of China. case, the republic came a long way and the agreeme hailed as an ingenious, flexible and enlightened doc However, the way in which the agreement implemented depends on the framing of the Basi which lies with Peking. The first draft is due in Ap second draft next year and the final draft in 1990.

The impetus for our debate stems from the con of two things. First, it stems from the first draft Basic Law. We all know that first drafts ar important. Sometimes they are more important t other times. Secondly, it stems from the approach o term for the Legislative Council which will overl final production of the Basic Law.

The view expressed by the Hong Kong Delegat Democracy, led by Martin Lee — which many Members, including the Foreign Secretary, have s that the new Legislative Council must have a sign directly elected element. The proposal of 25 per ce think prudent, restrained and sensible. As right ho hon. Members have said, this is the central issue debate. Page 5 of the delegation's position paper quotes an exchange between the Foreign Secretary and myself on 25 October 1984. It states:

"In answer to Mr. Russel Johnston's question whether he had 'encountered any objection from the People's Republic to the development by the United Kingdom over the next 13 years of directly elected institutions in Hong Kong', Sir Geoffrey dovetailed the Green Paper proposals with those made in the draft Agreement by saying:

'The agreement provides for the Legislature of Hong Kong in the future to be on an elective basis and for the Executive to be accountable to that legislature.'."

It is central to the realisation of the concept of one country and two systems that democratic institutions are evolved and, as hon. Members have said, given time to bed down. Therefore, a beginning should be made now. If it is not, the hope and trust that certainly characterised the response to the joint declaration in 1985 will be gravely damaged, and that, in time, will have an economic effect.

The absence so far of specific proposals for a directly elected element for the new legislature is seen by many, rightly or wrongly, as stemming, first, from the Foreign Office—with great respect, I must say that the Foreign Secretary's remarks were opaque; he said quite a lot but we could not see any specific affirmation — and its pressure on the Hong Kong Government, and, secondly, from pressure from the People's Republic on our Government.

That perception exists despite the assurances that we have heard most recently from the Opposition spokesmen, particularly the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) who quoted a lady who had obviously had a profound effect upon him and referred to her remarks to the Labour group from the Chinese embassy.

Mr. George Foulkes (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley): No. The lady was from the Chinese embassy, not the Labour group.

Sir Russell Johnston: I am most grateful to the hon. Gentleman for that clarification. I have always thought that some Labour party policies stem from the Chinese embassy.

Mr. Canavan: The hon. Gentleman is thinking of Bob Maclennan again.

Sir Russell Johnston: I seldom think of anything else.

Hardly anyone believes that the delay in making proposals for a democratic element is due to the published results of the two Survey Office soundings of public opinion, which have been quoted. I certainly hope that the Foreign Secretary will say more than he did at the beginning of the debate about the wide discrepancy between the private opinion polls on the subject, which showed between 40 and 60 per cent. of people in favour, and the Survey Office results, which showed a range of 11 to 15 per cent. in favour. That is a significant difference, particularly these days when we are supposed to get much more accurate results.

The Survey Office exercise was so clumsy—the point was well made earlier—as to be seriously flawed. As the right hon. Member for Gorton said, annexe 1 of the joint declaration is relevant. It states that, after 1997, the Hong Kong legislature is to be constituted by election. Unless a start is made now, that will not happen.

Do the Government see 25 per cent. as a start or as an end? It is a good question. We all know that there is a proposal that the end should be 25 per cent. directly elected, 25 per cent. taken from financial institutions, and 50 per cent. taken from the so-called grand electoral college, which is chosen we know not exactly how, but we can guess. It is not just that it makes a nonsense of the possibility of the rejection of the chief executive — something that was spoken about at the time—but it describes a provincial Hong Kong with its independence of action not only circumscribed but neutered.

Many hon. Members have remarked on the failure of successive British Governments to move Hong Kong in a democratic direction. Successive Governments have defended themselves by saying that they wished to avoid provocation. Of course, they were in an exposed position. In practice, the media—the newspapers—have become a democratic surrogate: the release valve for free expression. As we move into a more active dialogue with the People's Republic of China, there are some things from which we cannot shrink. We cannot avoid some direct challenges on future safeguards for the kind of open dispute that is now available in Hong Kong — even without democratic institutions—but which, despite the notable changes that have taken place within China, are still very limited there.

The Foreign Secretary mentioned human rights. I shall make three short quotations from the document on the People's Republic of China that was published last year by our parliamentary human rights group. The first quotation, which appears on page three, makes a point that I have often noticed. It states:

"The contrast with the Soviet Union could hardly be more stark. There, irrespective of the economic and political reforms introduced by Mikhail Gorbachev, Western leaders have used their leverage to insist on human rights concessions. When Secretary Shultz was in Beijing in March 1987 he never met with Chinese dissidents nor said anything publicly about human rights violations. On visiting Moscow in April, he took reporters and television cameramen with him to meet Soviet refusniks . . . and used the occasion to declare that 'we never give up, we never stop trying' to advance human rights in the Soviet Union."

Some examples of that appear on page 75. It refers to the summary execution of thousands of common criminals, 7,000 to 14,000 persons who were executed without due process of law between 1983 and 1986, the situation in Tibet, and so on. The publication goes on:

"International human rights efforts in fact have intensified on behalf of groups in South Korea and Taiwan seeking greater political liberty. But China's economic accomplishments have sidetracked observers from pressing for political and legal institutions that could better protect China's citizens and strengthen the underpinnings of its economic modernization."

These are sensitive, difficult issues. In raising them, I in no way intend to diminish the significance and worth of what has been accomplished in the Hong Kong agreement. However, we in the United Kingdom, who have made Hong Kong — certainly for reasons which can now clearly be seen to be disreputable—have maintained it and overseen its expansion, which stems from the vigour of its inhabitants who went there of their own choice. We now have a responsibility to do our utmost to fulfil an historic trust.

I described the Hong Kong press as a surrogate democracy. I understand from the right hon. Member for Gorton that what I say now is being broadcast live. It will certainly be reported, but will that be the case after 1997? If the majority of the Legislative Council is democratically elected, I believe that it will be; otherwise, I doubt whether it will be.

[Sir Russell Johnston]

I take the point made by the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris). We are talking about our honour as a country and the effect on it if we fail to discharge a clear moral debt.

Regrettably, the debate has been a short one. There are other issues that I could have developed that demand attention, such as the status of passports and the boat people. I must say to the Foreign Secretary, in all earnestness, that when he said, almost casually in his off-beat fashion, that we could repatriate the boat people with adequate guarantees, a little shiver ran down my spine. It was not nice to hear such an idea in the middle of a debate.

The election is the immediate issue and it is the touchstone of future confidence in the arrangements for Hong Kong. I hope that the Foreign Secretary will be rather more positive before the debate is over than he was in opening it.

5.10 pm

Sir Peter Blaker (Blackpool, South): Like others who have spoken, I favour direct elections. The question is what part of the Legislative Council should be directly elected, and when that should happen.

Like my hon. Friend the Member for Weston-super-Mare (Mr. Wiggin), I do not take it as axiomatic that 100 per cent. of directly elected Members of the Legislative Council, based on the Westminster model, is necessarily right for Hong Kong. A start should be made with 25 per cent. of the Legislative Council being directly elected, to see how that works. It should then move on, the success of that percentage having been demonstrated, to a larger one. Direct elections should start between 1988 and 1991, not at a later date. For part of the Legislative Council, it should be not later than 1991.

I have three points to make in that regard. First, we are still in the lifetime of the first Legislative Council containing indirectly elected Members. Therefore, we have not had a chance to see how the experiment is working. It has certainly transformed debate in Hong Kong. The debate there is more vocal and, on the whole, is well-informed. It is interesting that there is no sign of the people of Hong Kong saying, "The people in the Legislative Council, whether nominated or indirectly elected, lack authority because they are not directly elected by the people." At present it is not losing authority for that reason.

We hear remarks, such as those made by the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris), that time is running out. That makes the basic assumption that the clock stops in 1997. Why are we assuming that? I know of no reason why we should assume it. We have not seen the draft Basic Law. We do not know whether there will be provision for further evolution in the special administrative region—SAR—of Hong Kong after 1997.

The most important question is, what do the people of Hong Kong want? I attach importance to the report of the Survey Office. It has done a very thorough job, and it was congratulated by the independent monitors on having properly, accurately and impartially conducted its operations. It is wrong to describe its work as a concoction, as has been alleged, implying that it was some sort of rigged arrangement by the Government of Hong Kong. That is a disgraceful allegation to make.

It is also said that it was wrong for the to attribute different weights to differ submissions, depending on whether they we individuals, petitions or stereotyped letters.
the Survey Office report does not do that. It happened and leaves the reader to make his o

With regard to the different opinion po McNair is a well-known polling company of repute. It was selected on the basis of an ope target population that it took was the adult Hong Kong. It operated by random sample, of 3,000 people to test, and conducted a advance. Its methods seem to have bee professional, and it certainly was not doing told by the Hong Kong Government.

Mr. Foulkes: When I was in Hong Kon spoke to the managing director of A. G. B. confirmed that the formulation of the questi asked in the survey were based on the wo Green Paper and that, given a free hand to as and simple questions, the questions in the su
the ones that would have been asked. She fel by the complicated wording of the Green P

Sir Peter Blaker: That is a very interesti is news to me that the company was instruc that wording. If it is correct I accept that, b invalidate my argument. A. G. B. M experienced and trained interviewers an perhaps this is the most important point—face interviews.

If one looks at some of the other opinion referred to in the document that has been circ Delegation for Democracy, the organisatio
Martin Lee, one finds a lesser degree of pro
The colonywide polls were largely conducted
If one conducts a survey by telephone, one a limits the people whom one can reach to telep
Therefore, one is excluding more than half th of Hong Kong. I can see no reason why n owners would be more likely than others to elections in 1998. It is wrong to imagine tha are opposed to direct elections in 1988 are n only of big business.

Other polls were confined to specific groups; for example, a group of university st imagine what sort of reply I would receive group of university students.

If one looks at appendix 7 to the volumino
the Survey Office, one gets a better idea of t
the other surveys that have been cited by th calling for direct elections in 1988. My rea Survey Office report is that there is clearly a favour of direct elections, but not in 1988. I the majority are against direct elections in favour of them at a later date.

What is beyond dispute is that there is a large divide in the population. I should like t question that my right hon. Friend the Guildford (Mr. Howell) asked: why should that people would be less inclined to obtain p
Canada, Australia or the United States if th promised direct elections in 1988? It is possib would be more concern if it were announce were to be direct elections in 1988 than the

would not be right to move towards direct elections at the present time, given the clear division among the population of Hong Kong, and given also that we are still in the first legislature that has been elected, even partially, by indirect elections.

Secondly, I want to deal with the accusations that have been made against Her Majesty's Government by the Delegation for Democracy. Somebody must mention these allegations, because Her Majesty's Government have been accused, in plain terms, of breaking their promises. That is a serious accusation, and I asked Mr. Lee how he substantiated that accusation. I asked him to quote the words on which he was relying. He was unable to find any words to that effect. The closest that he could get was to refer to undertakings about the development of representative government. That has happened, and Mr. Lee is an example of the development of representative government.

Mr. Lee referred to a 1984 report which said that a substantial section of opinion was in favour of direct elections in 1988, but he could not point to a promise by Her Majesty's Government that there would be direct elections in 1988. I hope that this accusation will not be repeated. It is unjust. It is unwise for the Delegation for Democracy to make that accusation, because it reduces its credibility. The people who know about these matters know that the accusation is not true.

The accusation generates an atmosphere of acrimony, which is highly undesirable. What is more, it is deeply offensive. I was born in Hong Kong. I have followed the events there for decades, and have done so especially closely in recent years. I have followed the statements, and I know that there has been no such statement by Her Majesty's Government. I hope that we have heard the last of that accusation.

Thirdly, what should be the attitude of the Hong Kong people towards China? I understand their nervousness. They did not want to be transferred to the sovereignty of China. China is enormous, and Hong Kong is tiny. China has a Communist system which the people of Hong Kong do not want, but I ask the Hong Kong people to look at the pluses.

There is what is generally agreed to be an excellent joint declaration, which was made in 1984 and gives the Hong Kong people all the freedoms that they could possibly want. That international agreement is registered with the United Nations. It gives the Hong Kong people a guarantee of freedom from Socialism for 50 years after 1997—something that I should be happy to see in this country, where we do not enjoy such a guarantee.

We see that China is carrying out its obligations. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary referred to the excellent work of the Sino-British Land Commission, which has been carried out harmoniously. Hong Kong has been independently accepted by various international economic and cultural organisations. Harmonious and constructive work has been carried out by the Joint Liaison Group.

If I had been asked a few years ago whether it was conceivable that there would be a committee drafting the Basic Law of Hong Kong under the aegis of the People's Republic of China, and that virtually half the members of that committee would be from Hong Kong, I should have been astonished, but the Basic Law drafting committee exists. I should have been astonished also at the idea of the Basic Law consultative committee, which consists, I believe, entirely of Hong Kong people and is advising the Basic Law drafting committee.

If I had been told that all the drafting committee activities would be conducted virtually in public, I should have been amazed. Everyone knows what the committee is talking about. Its discussions are immediately reported in the press. This is one of the most intense, thorough consultations that I have seen in 24 years in politics. It is incredible, and it is conducted under the aegis of the Chinese Government, of whom some hon. Members are so suspicious. That is really what those hon. Members are saying when they call urgently for a move to direct elections this year—that they are suspicious of China.

The attitude adopted by the Delegation for Democracy is mistaken. It is a confrontational posture, which is unwise. I do not think that it will help in the development of true co-operation. Part of the loss of confidence in the future by the people of Hong Kong, which some recent opinion polls say exists, may be due to the activities of the Delegation for Democracy, which is causing fear——

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: This is shameful.

Sir Peter Blaker: I agree that it is shameful.

Mr. Hughes: No, what my right hon. Friend is saying is shameful.

Sir Peter Blaker: My hon. Friend may have an opportunity to speak later. I hope that he will, and I shall listen with close attention.

The people of Hong Kong face a difficult process of adjustment, but what is the picture from the Chinese side? It is worth while the people of Hong Kong asking themselves that question. China has agreed to the joint declaration. It is an enormous step for China to take to accept the one-country, two-systems concept. Hong Kong will continue to be run by the Hong Kong people in a capitalist manner for 50 years after 1997. China is honouring the agreement. It is continuing to honour the agreement because that is in China's interest. Hong Kong is of immense value to China as it is—a capitalist, thriving, prosperous territory which will bring China great wealth and technology.

Hong Kong is China's open door on the world. Therefore, the Chinese are having to make enormous adjustments. They are learning about capitalism. We have seen the assistance that the Bank of China gave a few weeks ago in rescuing the Hong Kong future's market. I remember when Hu Yao Bang was relieved of his post—I think last year. It caused great concern in Hong Kong. China purchased a large share in Cathay Pacific. I do not know whether that was a conicidence, but, if it was not, it was a remarkable step. The negotiation was conducted at great speed and helped to stabilise confidence in Hong Kong. That is in great contrast to 1984, when the Hang Seng index fell dramatically during a difficult phase of the negotiations that we were conducting with China and the Chinese put it down to Britain playing the economic card. Would that one could manage the Hang Seng index as easily as that!

Having learnt a great deal about capitalism, China is learning about representative government—a concept foreign to the Government and people of China. The questions are not simply: what will China do for Hong Kong and what will be the effect of China on Hong Kong?

[Sir Peter Blaker]

The question is also: what effect will Hong Kong have on China? The question which we should debate is much bigger than the single one of direct elections in 1988 or in 1991. It is a matter of confrontation or co-operation. I opt for co-operation.

5.27 pm

Mr. Jack Ashley (Stoke-on-Trent, South): I was surprised by the speech of the right hon. Member for Blackpool, South (Sir P. Blaker). The House respects his voice on the issue of Hong Kong, but his speech astounded me. I was surprised that he based so much of his case on the Survey Office report. The argument against the report is not that it was rigged. That is a preposterous charge. Clearly, the Hong Kong Government initiated the report in good faith and it would be wrong to accuse them of rigging it. The argument put forward by statisticians and other market researchers against the report is that it was invalid. All the polls to which the right hon. Gentleman referred reached the opposite conclusion. I am surprised that the right hon. Gentleman based so much of his case on those polls.

I am surprised that the right hon. Member for Blackpool, South attacked the Delegation for Democracy so strongly. I met Mr. Lee only five minutes before the debate. I did not know him before and I do not agree with everything that the Delegation for Democracy says. But why should not that delegation be confrontational? Why should it not fight passionately for its rights? We do not have to agree with all it says, but it is entitled to fight passionately because the livelihood of its members is at stake. I am surprised that the right hon. Gentleman was so indignant about the delegation's case.

There are reasons why we feel that the people of Hong Kong want immediate direct elections. The movement out of Hong Kong is disturbing. Some people are moving out. Some people do not speak out because they do not want to offend the Chinese, and that is quite understandable. If I was there, I would not want to offend China if I thought that China opposed direct elections—although, in fact, I believe that it favours them. So many want direct elections. For all those reasons, I think that the right hon. Member for Blackpool, South was wrong in his analysis.

The great challenge underlying the debate and facing the Governments of China, Britain and Hong Kong, is how to make a reality of Deng Xiaoping's imaginative concept of one nation, two systems. That was an inspired idea and the Chinese deserve all credit for it. The difficulty is that everyone involved has a different history, a different cultural background and a different way of life, so there is a danger that there will be widely differing interpretations and expectations and that misunderstandings will arise. That is what we must avoid.

In this House, we focus mainly on the interests of Hong Kong, and rightly so, because we are still in charge and we shall remain in charge for the next nine years. I do not think that we fully appreciate the pressures that the new concept puts on China. Although China will eventually benefit from Hong Kong's financial and economic strength, it will have to accept in return a system alien to its own. China is accepting—even welcoming—a system that results in the accrual of great wealth to the Hong Kong people and gives them a higher standard of living than China's own people.

The Chinese Government deserve great cr constructive attitude to Hong Kong in recen have shown that they can appreciate the nat
Kong's prosperity and they are responsive
Kong people, which is very encouraging fo
However, inevitably, those in Hong Kong a about what lies ahead. It would be surprising not. There is to be a change in sovereignty a the concept of one nation, two systems. Tha a major economic and political upheaval.

Before that takes place, many vital issues be settled—not just the issue of direct el selection procedure for the civil service wi important issue, as will the balance of po balance of the assembly to be elected. We publication of the draft Basic Law with inte that will affect all these basic issues.

However, the immediate issue that is being and forth in the debate is that of direct election or for worse, direct elections have become good will and good intentions. Direct electio questions, because, although Britain has achievements to its credit in Hong Kong, dem one of them. We have nothing to boast ab respect because we have done very little. Alo magnificent and historic achievements in Ho us recognise our failure to introduce democr

Some press reports create the impression t unenthusiastic about direct elections in Hong as my right hon. Friend the Member for Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) said, China has said that it favours direct elections, although the has yet to be decided. It is therefore a questio and extent. Some people think that the iss elections gives rise to a conflict betwe requirement of sovereignty and Hong Kong autonomy based on democracy. If the critic believed, direct elections could threaten the prosperity of Hong Kong. I believe that thos quite wrong. They have misjudged the situati

China's right to sovereignty in 1997 is indis
it is generally understood—at least we hope that the Basic Law will include an element to elections. If so, we should introduce dire immediately, in 1988. That convergent develop not threaten China's position in 1997. As a ma direct elections this year would greatly be because it would then have democratically ele who could speak knowledgeably to it about th
Hong Kong's people.

It is to cast no aspersions on those in LegCo democratically elected people would have a voice. In the long term those democratically ele will be of great value to China.

I hope that China will declare that it does early direct elections. Nothing is worse than a appearing to drag its feet on an important iss reluctantly acquiescing. I do not believe for a m China is reluctant. But China would benefi specific about its acceptance of early direct ele the doubt in people's minds would be remove

There would be an added benefit, because such a declaration China would demonstrate public, including the people of Taiwan, its belie democracy and its pride in the electoral de taking place in China. Hong Kong would cle because elected representatives would be better able to articulate the views of those who live and work in that remarkably prosperous territory. Hong Kong could then have a constructive dialogue and a harmonious relationship with China.

Some people, whose opinions and experience are greatly respected, advocate a pause to allow Hong Kong to absorb the recent electoral developments. I do not agree. Notwithstanding the speech of the right hon. Member for Blackpool, South—a fine speech, but one with which I differ—Hong Kong has no time to pause. There are only nine years left before the transfer of sovereignty and Hong Kong must cope quickly with change. I have no doubt that, because the Hong Kong people are adaptable, they will be able to cope with that change. Direct elections will promote, rather than damage, the stability of Hong Kong. Some very able people recognise that it will be a matter of concern if such elections are not held.

The value of Hong Kong lies in the quality of its active people. They have the money and the passports, and they will literally fly away if they are denied an early democratic voice. An uneasy people is never a stable people. There is nothing to be lost, and everything to be gained, by both Hong Kong and China from having early direct elections.

Of equal, if not more, importance than those people, who are vital to Hong Kong, is the broader-based segment of active young people who will be the future leaders of Hong Kong. The future of Hong Kong lies with them. Their confidence is vital. However, as with a bank or stock exchange, once confidence is shaken or eroded, it can slide away with growing and unstoppable momentum. Lack of confidence could be an avalanche of disaster for Hong Kong.

Therefore, let us have early direct elections. If those young people are given a democratic voice and new hope for the future, they can raise Hong Kong to new heights of prosperity. They can be an asset of incalculable benefit to Hong Kong and to China if the right decisions are made now.

5.41 pm

Mr. Hal Miller (Bromsgrove): I shall follow the remarks of the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on one country, two systems, in a moment, but I cannot allow his attack on my right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Sir P. Blaker) to pass. I happened to be present at one of his meetings with Mr. Martin Lee. Orator of silken persuasiveness and practised reason, and successful advocate, that he is, he made the stark accusation that the Hong Kong and British Governments had acted in bad faith and had gone back on their words, and he used the phrase,

"the survey report was a concoction."

One monitor of the report was one of my most esteemed colleagues in the Hong Kong Government, so I had better declare an interest. There is no question that Mr. Li Fook-Kow would be party to a "concoction" of the survey report. I find that a damaging and a bitter accusation. I am grateful for the fact that my right hon. Friend rebutted it so forcefully and conclusively.

I find it a little ungenerous that sources are quoted, such as Mr. Martin Lee or the representative of the embassy of the People's Republic of China, but that little reference seems to have been made in the debate to the advice tendered by the Unofficial Members of the Executive and Legislative Councils, and especially to the Unofficial Member, Miss Lydia Dunn. I sh thought that some attention might be paid t which she and they have expressed, because responsibility in a difficult situation.

As I walked to the Commons this morning a light precipitation which, at this time of approach to the Chinese new year—is refe Hong Kong as Suet Sui. It is a propitious guarantees prosperity in the forthcoming year

I return to the joint declaration and the ceme the British and the Chinese Governments that the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong that is what this is all about. Direct elections ar of that declaration.

I regarded as rather remiss the remarks of th Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufma those of my right hon. Friend the Member for and Sidcup (Mr. Heath). They seemed det impose the smack of firm government on H which they were unable to exercise in this countr imagine anything that would be more likely confidence in Hong Kong than the British G suddenly starting to impose solutions there, u the people had not been consulted and to whic not given manifest and majority consent. Tha been the way in which Hong Kong has been ad

I am not going to take lessons in democracy returning officer at the first elections that we Hong Kong, to the urban council, in 1956. A about direct elections ignores the fact that they taking place for some time and have been incr the 1984 White Paper. That was the gravam charge of my right hon. Friend for Old Bexley a

There have been elections to the district b there has been a greater proportion of elected m the urban council and regional council in territories. Therefore, progress is being made perhaps not as rapidly as some of us would n disposed to advocate here. However, plea remember, while we are still responsible administration of Hong Kong—until 1997—does not give us carte blanche to impose solutio injurious to Hong Kong or foreign to its inter

However much we may regret that it was n to move towards a full democratic and indepen Kong, that is no reason for us to indulge in a l flurry to salve our conscience by introducing a of that at the last minute which might prove damaging. Nor should we be tempted to try t a kind of outpost of a Western-style democracy advance of an alien creed—of an alien capita —[Interruption.]—of an alien Communist syst

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): I first time.

Mr. Miller: As the right hon. Member for Trent, South said, we must put this issue into t of one country, two systems. It is still one countr countries, which is an important difference.

Mr. Ivan Lawrence (Burton): Why wo damaging if there were direct elections, when th Republic of China has said that it is prepared to elections?

Mr. Miller: We are all committed to direct elections. The argument turns on the timing of those direct elections, which is exactly the point to which I was coming. We are committed to direct elections, and I am glad that early in his speech my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State gave the assurance that there would be full and faithful implementation by the British Government of the joint declaration. Nobody should accuse him or us of bad faith. However, we must consider the time scale. It is not 1988, 1991 or 1997. As has been said, it is 1997 plus 50 years.

We have talked loosely about direct elections to the legislature, but it is important to remember that nobody has begun to examine the structure of government that is to ensue. Is a full ministerial system expected, with a Government formed from an elected legislature, or is a separation of powers, on the United States' model, between the Executive and the legislature envisaged? Such things need careful definition before we start talking loosely about a directly elected legislature. It is important to understand what system of government is being envisaged.

Mr. Heath: My hon. Friend has touched on an important point about continuing developments in the 50 years, but Hong Kong understands that the position at the time of handover will be carried on for 50 years under the guarantee of Beijing, which is different. My hon. Friend is arguing that Hong Kong should accept that it should go on developing in the way that it wants during those 50 years, but I do not think that that is justified by the understanding in the agreement.

Mr. Miller: I do not accept that the stage of development reached in 1997 will be frozen in aspic. That presupposes that there will be no development in China, either. The form of government must be thought out before direct elections can be meaningfully held. Although China is committed under the joint declaration to an elected legislature, as far as I know — no one has produced evidence to the contrary so far this evening— there is no document that sets out the Chinese view of the elected legislature.

Mr. Foulkes: Yes, there is.

Mr. Miller: I think I am correct in saying that we do not yet have the first draft of the Basic Law, which will be subject to widespread consultation among the people of Hong Kong—a consultation which, I can well imagine, might exceed that undertaken by the Survey Office. I can see grave difficulties if movement has begun on a directly elected legislature in a direction that is not envisaged in the draft of the Basic Law, which, when it appears, will be subject again to a widespread public consultation exercise, followed by final confirmation and enactment some time in 1990. Those are facts of life, and they must be carefully taken into consideration.

Then there is the comparatively minor matter of getting the sequence of elections as between the district boards, the urban councils and Legislative Council right, but the Basic Law is the thing, and our task this evening is to ram home our commitment to direct elections and to seek to influence the content of the Basic Law. We shall influence its content only if we show a real understanding of the position in China and Hong Kong, reaffirm our commitment to the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong and do nothing to undermine the unknown quantities and possibilities-formation of political parties and an
We might have been pleased to see Hong Kong to remain independent, such formalised opposition being esta introduction of the SAR in 1997 would to confidence and stability, and would whole reason for Hong Kong. So let u mean when we talk so loosely about d let us concentrate on their timing.
We must remember the importance authority of the Government of Hong 1997. The issue of stability has been ra my hon. Friend the Member for Westo Wiggin), but we must give it, and the and order, serious attention. I make a pl and learned Friend the Foreign Secreta the defence costs agreement with Government. They are having to assum burden of strengthening the police forc part of the responsibility for interna currently borne by our troops, who a defence costs agreement. The Chinese made it plain in the documents that the any contribution from Hong Kong forces, as opposed to internal security for more generous consideration to Kong in this regard than has thus far
We want the realisation of one cou —of Hong Kong people governing H is no doubt of our commitment to tha it will have to be a Hong Kong system take some time to evolve.
I end as I began. We may well feel Hong Kong are in a difficult position b and the deep blue sea, but I remind according to the principles of geom between the arms of the dragon and desirable place in which to dwell.

5.57 pm

Dr. Jeremy Bray (Motherwell, S
Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Miller) h of the Foreign Office and of the Gov Kong, and we are always interested in w
although we need to correct some of th remarks in the light of the background speaks. So it is for all of us.
It is now 25 years since I raised th
Kong in this House on the Easter Adjou
the first debate on Hong Kong since th elected Member, I was surprised to be office of the newly elected leader of Lord Wilson as he now is, and still mor in his office the Lord Privy Seal, in the hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup Lord Privy Seal told me that the Fore governor were worried about debating Kong publicly, and asked me to call of Wilson asked me what I was planning have such a remarkable effect.
I explained that the essential conti settlement was reached about 1997 reasonable continuity of economic devel border between Hong Kong and its hi that would take time to establish. If it grew, there would be a political basis for a settlement that would safeguard the essential future and the interests of the people of Hong Kong. So it has proved. But the sensitivity of the Foreign Office and of Foreign Office Ministers about stability in Hong Kong is not new. I hope that the Foreign Secretary will follow the example of the Lord Privy Seal, who wound up by saying that he did not see anything wrong with my arguing my case, and the debate went ahead.

All hon. Members have placed the greatest emphasis on the need for stability and continuity during the transition. We also need to recognise that China itself is undergoing a remarkable internal transformation, with a pace of change in some places that exceeds even that of Hong Kong. So of course China is highly sensitive about the situation that it will inherit in Hong Kong. Equally, it will be a somewhat different China in 1997 from what it is today. It will be by no means a homogeneous China. Already, the province of Guangdong does not raise taxes at the rates prescribed by Beijing; it negotiates its taxes with the capital. I was told that this year it is paying no taxes at all to Beijing, which seems a satisfactory outcome to its negotiations.

Such skills in the conduct of political life within China are already being learned rapidly in Hong Kong by all sections of opinion. It is against that background that we have been listening to what the people of Hong Kong are saying, and we must reach a judgment about what, in this rapidly developing situation, we should advise from this House.

There is no possibility of maintaining the status quo. The economic and constitutional development of Hong Kong are inextricably linked. Immigration has been referred to as one important indicator of stability, but perhaps an even more dramatic and immediate one is the exchange rate of the currency. For better or for worse, the touchstone of development—in the first place political but closely followed by economic development—has become the issue whether direct elections to the Legislative Council should be held in 1988. Now that that question has been raised and given a high profile, there is no dodging it. It is necessary to get over this step as soon as possible before Hong Kong can go on to the much more difficult stage of producing its own Executive and working out relations between the Executive and the legislature. The hon. Member for Bromsgrove rightly made that point.

When we reflect on this rapidly changing situation, we must ask ourselves whether it is possible to arrive at a pattern of relationship between the Executive and the legislature if the legislature is itself constituted on a pattern that is quickly to be superseded. Will there be a pattern of relationship between the Members of the Legislative Council, the electorate and the Executive that can develop, sustain, advise upon, demonstrate and learn in practice a new system?

Easy comparisons can be made. The hon. Member for Bromsgrove drew attention to the Westminster ministerial pattern and pointed out that is not the only one because there is the United States pattern, the pattern of local government and so on. None of the patterns offers easy, quickly learned or instantly absorbable patterns that would fit naturally into Hong Kong. Hong Kong must have time to learn these very necessary arts of government.

We recently had a good demonstration in Hong Kong of the need to learn following the stock exchange crash. An appeal was made to Beijing for financial support which was quickly given. An appeal was made people and they were quickly forthcomin in and resolve a rather difficult situation. S not be forthcoming and cannot be summo way in 1997. Problems will have to be people of Hong Kong and they will have to and establish traditions at breakneck pac years from now until 1997.

How does the relationship between the the legislature develop to the point where such sensitive issues as the stability of fir and the level of the exchange rate? We know experience that we cannot deal with t detachment from the facts of our own affect wages, employment and public exp Governments are dealing with the instabilit against a background of the support and their own people, they are in an incom position to defend their people and to sta interests in debates involving different nat

The arguments for going ahead with this year seem quite overwhelming. What that have led to any doubt about that in House, but perhaps more on the Conservat Opposition side? First, we had the survey response to the Green Paper. Seldom can Government have made such a shambles o process, especially a Government that a sussing out public opinion.

To find out about public reaction to a the Star ferry, questions are asked and Council get the answer within a week. It i thorough process of consultation than cou Britain. However, against that backgrou great deal of confusion and an inability questions and receive simple answers. I do n that the survey was deliberately confusi accident.

The People's Republic of China has ma the administration of Hong Kong up to 1 for the British Government. However, it through many channels unease about whe elections—which it accepts—should be Inevitably, there are tremendous and sensitivities in Hong Kong to the wishes Republic of China. It is natural that the certain hesitation about going ahead with the Hong Kong context a perfectly mandatory step. This should not be allowe question of face.

The draft Basic Law will be published in Hong Kong Government are due to m February their judgment about direct ele That is early in the year and it would not suggest to the House, still less to the ski concerned, that the specific forms fo provisions of the draft Basic Law and the ahead with direct elections in 1988 must b a way that properly recognises the profou everybody has in the continued peace development of Hong Kong.

I am confident that the good will of the future of Hong Kong and a firm expressi Kong, being in charge of its own destiny, to have those direct elections as soon as possible—and they can be held in 1988—is the right message to go out from the House.

[Dr. Jeremy Bray]

6.8 pm

Mr. Robert Adley (Christchurch): I am fortunate to follow two speakers who both have long and close connections with Hong Kong. I first went there in 1955, I think, and have gone there regularly ever since.

I agree with most of what has been said by hon. members who say that we cannot possibly speak on the issue sensibly and seriously without putting the discussions in the context of history. As my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Miller) said, to do so is a fundamental mistake which could have lasting and damaging effects on the people of Hong Kong. It is the people of Hong Kong whom we should be thinking about and I utterly reject the proposition that their future welfare depends solely and simply on whether there should be direct elections this year. That is so to simplify and trivialise the situation that it is not worthy of serious discussion.

I take issue on one matter raised by the hon. Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray). He spoke about the ability of people to assess public opinion in Hong Kong about the Star ferry fares and assumed that one could use the same process to deal with the complex situation surrounding whether, and when, there should be direct elections, to which body, by whom, at what time and with or without parties. That is about as fair a comparison as the one with which I concerned myself recently, when I heard about a public opinion test of people visiting a museum that had been subjected to museum charges. They were asked, "Do you accept these charges or would you rather go into the museum free?" It is not very difficult to assess the answer that is likely to be given to that question.

I agree with the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) that direct elections have been made the issue. They have been made the issue by the media and by people who have an interest in spreading unease in Hong Kong. They have been made the issue by people who have their own purpose and private interests in promoting that proposition. However, I reject the proposition that it is the only question of interest to the people of Hong Kong. I am sorry that the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) is not in the Chamber. I intervened in his speech. For him to start making comparisons in 1988 with what we were able to do or what happened in Singapore or Kenya or Timbuctoo is wholly farcical. Anyone who is aware of the history of Hong Kong would accept that.

I am also sorry that the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, criticised so severely the speech of my right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Sir P. Blaker), who was born in Hong Kong. In Hong Kong, in many instances for media-driven reasons, we are increasingly being presented with confrontation. It is as though the people of Hong Kong were being forced to make choices this week to determine their future for the next 50 or 60 years. Along with my right hon. Friend, I earnestly believe that the choice that really faces them is between confrontation à la Martin Lee and his friends, and co-operation under changing circumstances and with the Government of the People's Repu whom they will have to work sovereignty they will have to live.

I well remember the speech by t for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey) durin the right hon. Member for Man Kaufman) referred. Let me quote words:

"The skill of our diplomatists underlying good will of the Beij transformed the atmosphere and offe Kong a far more promising future tha when this act of the drama opened i —[Official Report, 21 January 1985;

Mr. Foulkes: Perhaps the hon.
own speech on 5 December 1984, w

"Those who hold power in Hong want to hold on to it. They have no have an obvious incentive to resis
Report, 5 December 1984; Vol. 69, c.
Can he tell us why he has changed h where the inspiration has come fro

Mr. Adley: The hon. Gentlema affairs comparatively recently. He that I have not always been the great Kong Government. As I was about establishment in Hong Kong has answer for over the past few years, the Hong Kong Government h considerable criticism from me.

Without divulging too many secr embarrassment, I can say that there
I had to invoke the assistance of my Friend the Foreign Secretary to deal tricks practised on me by that Go ago, when they deduced that I was grateful to the hon. Gentleman for that point.

Let me return to putting the ma context. It was not a matter of free we had to make new arrangements
Hong Kong; it was due to the impe on the new territories. It is very ourselves in the House—or, indee
Hong Kong to allow themselves—t faced with circumstances that seem straitjacket. As has been said on m us in those days could have imagined arrangement could be made to secure and stability of the people of Hong

Either we accept the good wil
Chinese Governments to ensure th carried out or, if we do not, we sho believe that there was and is a better of the present system should speak u that a better deal could ever have be the view of my hon. Friend the Me that it is grossly insulting to sug Government are failing to do their b obligations under the agreement.

We all know that the Governm
Republic are not opposed in princip
I presume that the hon. Member fo and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes)—I tell me if I am misreading his atte different colour—was trying to imp ic of China—with and under whose right hon. Member he debate to which ester, Gorton (Mr.

iefly from his wise

combined with the Government, has the people of Hong nost people expected ne summer of 1982."
l. 71, c. 742.]

mber will recall his en he said:
ong now like it, and een elected to it and change." — [Official 4.]
view since then, and has come to these ill know, however, friend of the Hong say, I think that the d a great deal to d in the recent past e certainly drawn

which might cause
ere occasions when ht hon. and learned
th some of the dirty rnment some years ritic of theirs. I am owing me to make into its historical nd easy choice that the sovereignty of ing end of the lease angerous to allow for the people of orget that we were l to leave us in a y occasions, few of

at such an excellent ne future prosperity
ong.
of the British and
the agreement is d say so. If people
eal on offer, critics but I do not believe envisaged. I share er for Bromsgrove t that the British
t to carry out their nt of the People's to direct elections.

Carrick, Cumnock
n sure that he will pts to paint me a that I was wearing

my hat as chairman of the British-Chinese parliamentary group, and acting as a spokesman for the People's Republic. That charge has been thrown at me on more than one occasion, and I do not think that it is even necessary to rebut it.

We are all concerned to retain the stability and prosperity that Hong Kong has enjoyed for a long time. Although my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove did not put it quite so bluntly, that stability and prosperity are based firmly and simply on autocracy, not on democracy. We owe it to the people of Hong Kong to ensure that, before we chuck out the baby with the bath water, we know clearly what we are putting in its place. Overt and covert pressure has always been brought to bear on Hong Kong by the Chinese Government, not just since 1949. The history books show that much of what was said in 1911 about the British in Hong Kong was far more vigorous and unhelpful than anything said by Beijing since 1949.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South invited the House briefly to consider the position from the point of view of the Chinese Government. Sensible people in Hong Kong know that they must learn to live with China. That is a fact of life, and there is no point in trying to avoid it. Either they must accept the good will of the Chinese Government, or they must believe that that Government are deliberately trying to string them, the House and the British Government along until 1997, when they will suddenly impose some new system. I consider that mischievous, and utterly nonsensical. If, however, we suppose it to be true, what difference would it make which institutions we put in place now? Surely we should advise the people of Hong Kong that co-operation, not confrontation, is essential.

Like most hon. Members, I have received a great deal of paper, and I shall not weary the House with numerous quotations. I am bound to say, however, that it is not only Mr. Martin Lee and his friends who are stirring up mischief. I received a communication from the Hong Kong Social Workers General Union, stating:

"The people of Hong Kong would not tolerate the decision to postpone the introduction of direct elections by 3 years and it would be folly to assume that they would accept such a decision mildly".

That sounds almost like an attempt to generate insurrection, and—at the very least—suspiciously like a threat. I do not think that such wild statements are doing any good to the people of Hong Kong as they struggle, understandably, towards a new future.

If I have any contact with the Chinese Government—which, of course, I have—I may be able to give the House the benefit of some wisdom and understanding. Unfortunately for me, however, that has already been done by the right hon. Member for Gorton, and, indeed, by the Foreign Secretary. They have both said what we know to be true: that the Chinese Government are not opposed to the principle of direct elections. All that we are talking about is timing: the timing of the introduction of direct elections, in relation to the progress of the joint liaison group and the development of the Basic Law.

It seems to me rather unwise to try to rush headlong into direct elections for an assembly none of whose constitutional arrangements have even been discussed, let alone put in place, before that Basic Law is complete. I believe that that would be the view of the Chinese Government. I may be wrong—it may be a changeable position. However, it would seem sensible to put the Basic Law in place first in 1990, and then have elections. Doing otherwise, and pushing elections for their own sake, would b instability. If that were done in the face of the Government of the People's Repub know whether they are opposed—it wo the face of sanity and disregarding sovereignty of the People's Republic, whi in the interests of the people of Hong Ko

I am worried that some people in H allowing themselves to be misled by politicians and trouble makers who wa unrest and who clearly do not trust the Ch Governments. Perhaps most dangerous people are allowing themselves to be meaning do-gooders.

The reputation of the Chinese Governm their ability to maintain the stability of should have thought that that was everyone. The message to the people of H be that they should not allow themselves siren voices.

The stock exchange scandal has been m mention it only to illustrate a point. T Chinese Governments are clearly committ ing stability. If stability is upset, howeve upset in London or Beijing—it is likely t by what goes on in Hong Kong.

I told the hon. Member for Carrick, Doon Valley that I have not always been admirer of the Hong Kong Government. I Sir David Wilson, however, Hong Kong possible Governor to see it through the ne years. It would be hard to imagine a mor friend. Hong Kong's gain is our Government's loss in the Foreign and Office. He is a good man. He will do his be the people of Hong Kong are led steadily the next few years.

We all want to do our best for the p Kong, but it should be steady as she constructively with the British and Chines is far more likely to achieve that than lis who appear to have instant solutions to e

6.22 pm

Mr. Andrew Faulds (Warley, East): I a last, to have an opportunity to intervene s in this very important debate.

The hon. Member for Christchurch (M not be too surprised to find that I endor word that he said, as I endorsed the cont right hon. Friend the Member for Blackp P. Blaker) and his right hon. Friend th Bromsgrove (Mr. Miller). That is not to view of the fact that the four of us have considerable interest in the affairs both o Hong Kong, and, if I may say so with my u we probably know more about it than th Members in the House of Commons.

The emphasis in the debate today seem been primarily on the need for direct e Legislative Council sooner rather than la me that the pressures for direct elections from two quarters: first, from the media groups in Hong Kong, some expatriate, wh the Sino-British agreement was always somewhat suspect and who really did not — and do not — want the agreement to work out properly.

[Mr. Andrew Faulds]

Newsmen have been perhaps the most malign in this regard, but there are undoubtedly other factions in Hong Kong itself who were unhappy — always unhappy — about the inevitability of China reclaiming its own after 1997. They are usually the well-heeled and, under the admirable capitalist system of Hong Kong, they have not done too badly. They can afford the luxury of a funkhole somewhere else and they have, of course, the requisite passports and tickets ready to hand. If the future turns difficult for them, they can up and go. Their commitment to making the agreement work is somewhat less than wholehearted.

Then there are those in the West, public opinion formers and parliamentarians in particular — we have them here tonight—whose traditions endorse and whose purpose depends on the cross in the ballot box. They disregard or perhaps conveniently forget that in all the years of colonial government, in spite of our commitment to the electoral ballot, we were diligent in denying it to our subjects in Hong Kong. Now the parliamentary majority are loud in their demand for direct elections now, this year.

Most of us forget, too — we are not well enough versed in knowledge of the history of other peoples, one of the unhappy developments of the abandonment of empire — that China and Chinese people everywhere have totally different cultural and social traditions from ours. The concept of democracy is at variance with their political thought over the many centuries of Chinese life. China, both Confucian and Communist, has shown a long respect for authority and social order — not perhaps ideas that we in the individualist West are too committed to or have too much respect for.

I accept the arguments of those of our Hong Kong friends—some of us have a number of friends in Hong Kong—who say there is no need to rush into elections, that gradualism and convergence will work out best for the true interests of the great mass of the Hong Kong populace who do not have a ticket and a passport to get out.

It is quite clear that public opinion in Hong Kong is very sharply divided on the speed of introduction of direct elections and I am sure that the "direct elections this year" factions are largely the westernised people who have very much fallen under the influence of European attitudes. I believe that those who want to hasten slowly are the great bulk of the populace in Hong Kong who still feel the ancient attachment to China and to Chinese values. That is as, I believe, it should be.

The first draft of the Basic Law is to appear, I gather, in April this year. I suspect it would be advantageous to all the parties, if the Chinese were to accept a move to some proportion of direct elections to LegCo.

Dr. Bray: I am sure that my hon. Friend would not wish to do an injustice to the people of China. He must be aware that the people of China have gone through a tremendous trauma recently and that it was that trauma which led most of the population of Hong Kong to go where they went. It is against that background of recent history that the matter is being resolved in Hong Kong and China. I think that my hon. Friend is showing remarkable insensitivity to that fact.

Mr. Faulds: No. I am moderately aware of that, but I think that the longer lesson of history is that, whether we like it or not, and whether the people of Hong Kong like it or not, they will be subsumed by China, and the more gracefully that happens, the happier their lot will be.

I hope that the Chinese will agree to something like a 25 per cent. proportion of direct elections. It would not be a bad figure to settle on. The British Government, as we know, are committed to an element of direct elections, but they did not spell it out in a timetable. I personally consider that it would be wiser to wait for that development till 1991 when the Basic Law, which, after all, is going to be the basic fact of Hong Kong's life and future, has been promulgated.

A proposal of a 25 per cent. introduction of direct elections in 1991 would still give some years of practice of democratic conduct of Hong Kong affairs. I should be very concened indeed for the prospects for the agreement and for our relations with China if there were to be too precipitate a move to a much larger proportion of direct elections.

A Government who have the responsibility in 1997 to take over Hong Kong have a legitimate interest in how things evolve politically—a point made by one of our Hong Kong friends. This is where convergence of developments with the Basic Law is so crucial, indeed critical, to the future of Hong Kong. Nothing could be worse for the future, both politically and economically, than for the introduction of changes before 1997 which the then Chinese Government might have to unscramble—and, of course, they would have to suffer the opprobrium of the international community if that were to happen.

Finally, there is another risk factor in rushing into direct elections. Party politics is all very well in our old democracies, regardless of the damage the swing of the pendulum often does to the real interest of the people concerned. But if direct elections were to lead to party politics in Hong Kong, the damage would be immense. There would be really only two parties involved—in our sense of party politics — and they would be the Communists and the Knomintang. Imagine what turmoil of instability that would lead to.

I believe that by far the most sensible course for us to urge in Hong Kong is to trust the Chinese Government's integrity in their intentions. They have listened to Hong Kong opinion. They were not at first really prepared to do so, but they have done so. They have taken part in very constructive consultations, and they continue to do so. They want a stable and successful Hong Kong for their own national reasons — the continuation of China's reconstruction and her economic progress and, of course, the reclaiming of Taiwan.

We should always remember that China, under a variety of governmental systems, has historically observed its obligations. I believe that all will be well—I am by nature an optimist, but I think that we have good reason in this case—and that unwise pressures from this House or this Government could do nothing but harm to Hong Kong's stability and success, and that is what we must be most concerned about.

6.30 pm

Mr. Alastair Goodlad (Eddisbury): I begin by strongly supporting my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) in his eloquent plea for further urgent action to remedy the problem of Indo-Chinese refugees in Hong Kong. This country has a proud record with regard to the number of Indo-Chinese refugees that it has accepted through Hong Kong and with regard to our efforts in orchestrating their resettlement elsewhere.

As I rehearsed to the House in the Christmas Adjournment debate, the position is becoming markedly worse. The number of refugees arriving for resettlement is increasing and the number accepted for resettlement elsewhere is declining. Since we debated the matter in the Christmas Adjournment debate, the position has become even worse. The number of arrivals in December was 278 and the figures for October, November and December were the highest since 1982. The number of people who have already arrived this month is 164, and that is already the highest January figure since 1983.

When my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State replies, I hope that he will be able to tell us that he has made significant progress in the process of persuading other countries to accept more refugees for resettlement so that this difficult problem may be solved quickly. My right hon. and learned Friend would find that he would have broad support on both sides of the House if this country was to act as a catalyst and offer to take more refugees for settlement than we took in the middle of last year.

I agree broadly with the comments made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Sir P. Blaker) and my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Miller). The views of the people of Hong Kong on direct elections have been canvassed systematically ond objectively. It is obviously too early to detect a consensus. Many people did not respond and of those who did, although the majority were in favour, opinion was divided about the type.

It is not surprising that there is no consensus. In this country, democratic institutions have grown up over hundreds of years, but we still try to change and improve their character and workings. Hong Kong has only recently introduced indirect elections and is considering the development of democratic institutions simultaneously with a change in sovereignty to its neighbour, which is not a democratic country in the sense that we use the term.

The motion refers to "stability" and "prosperity". They are both inextricably interlinked in Hong Kong. More than half of those living in Hong Kong previously lived in China. Their perceptions of stability obviously differ from ours. None the less, however they look at it and however we look at it, in an uncertain world the future viability of Hong Kong depends on its stability and on people's perception of its stability. In other words, it depends on confidence.

I believe that a consensus for direct elections will certainly emerge, but people will probably not want to be rushed. It is envisaged that Hong Kong should enjoy a high degree of autonomy after 1997. It follows that there should be as many years as reasonably possible of direct elections and whatever accompanying arrangements emerge for relationships beween the legislature and the Executive. It is equally desirable that the system in place should last beyond 1997. If the draft Basic Law that is expected to emerge in the spring shows a need for further consultation, that should take place before a system is installed.

It is important that the House should be clear about the position of the People's Republic of China. We should not be misled by vague optimism. I want to quote Mr. Li Hou, the deputy director of the Hong Kong and Macao office of the State Council. In the overseas People's Daily on 24 June 1987 he said:

"Concerning the question of whether or not there should be direct elections in 1988, starting from the point of view of convergence between the Basic Law and current reform of the political system in Hong Kong, ...until the Basic Law had been formally approved, the Hong Kong political system should not undergo any great change. If direct elections were hastily introduced in 1988, then a situation of non-convergence with the Basic Law would occur . . . In the past I have thought and now still think that the future political system in Hong Kong should be stipulated by the Basic Law: the political reform being carried out now in Hong Kong should converge with the Basic Law. Until the Basic Law has been formally approved, there should be no change in the political system in Hong Kong. We do not wish to interfere in the administration of Hong Kong by Britain before 1997, but if the measures being adopted now will have an influence after 1997, or will influence the smooth transition, then we cannot but express our ideas."

We should not be in any doubt about the view of the Government of the People's Republic of China. I believe that there is a strong case for allowing the present arrangements a little time to settle, for experience of democracy to develop, for parties to form and for a confluence of view within Hong Kong with the People's Republic of China about the way in which the way ahead should develop in line with the wishes of the people of Hong Kong.

Hong Kong has a unique record in the world in terms of economic and social achievement. One of the reasons for that is that it enjoys a political consensus—seldom upset—based on pragmatism. It is vital that that is not jeopardised and that the political achievements of the past few years are built on at a measured speed with which consensus can keep pace. There can be no absolute certainty in such matters. It is certain that the People's Republic of China wishes to respect Hong Kong public opinion and that the mutuality of interest of the Hong Kong people and their neighbours must be given a chance to assert itself through institutions with which everybody is at ease and at a pace which can reasonably be achieved.

The right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) referred to the principle of unripe time and he attributed it to the late Hugh Dalton. I think that Hugh Dalton got it from a book by F. P. Cornford written in the 1920s, called "Microcosmographica Academica", which was about university politics. The principle of unripe time is that one can put off indefinitely anything that really ought to be done by saying that the time is unripe and that it would be better to put it off for a little. But it is never done. That does not apply to Hong Kong.

Cornford linked that principle with the practice of squaring. Squaring was a process carried out in King's parade. It was done by taking those concerned by the elbow, somewhere between the front entrance of King's and The Copper Kettle, and persuading them to accept one's point of view. There was nothing discreditable about that. In all matters where consensus has to be achieved, a period of time for squaring must be allowed.

Hong Kong's only natural resources are her people, and the genius that they have shown. We must be careful not to do anything to prejudice the stability that has allowed such genius to flower. I have every confidence that if things continue at a measured pace, Hong Kong will continue to flower long into the next century.

Mr. Tony Banks: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. A number of hon. Members on both sides of the House wanted to speak in the debate. It is absolutely selfish for hon. Members, who know of the pressure on time, to make very long speeches, thus shutting out other hon. Members who wish to make points.

I wished to make a short, sharp point about the trade in endangered species in Hong Kong. Tigers and leopards are eaten in Hong Kong restaurants. That is a form of gastronomic perversion. We have had to listen to many speeches——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. I realise that the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) and a number of other hon. Members on both sides of the House have not been able to speak so far. The hon. Gentleman cannot make his speech under the guise of a point of order. Perhaps I should tell the House that this debate will be interrupted at 7 o'clock for private business. If the private business were to end before 10 o'clock, it would be possible for the House, if it so wished, to return to this motion until 10 o'clock.

6.42 pm

Mr. George Foulkes (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley): The interest and eloquence shown today and the queue of speakers waiting to participate in the debate justify the Opposition's request for a debate on the report, and confirms once again the House's great interest in Hong Kong. I hope that the Foreign Secretary will take account of the views expressed in the House and ensure that they are taken into account in the drafting of the White Paper to be published on 10 February.

Before coming to the central issue of the timing of direct elections, I wish to mention the Vietnamese refugees—the boat people. The annual report confirms a dramatic increase in their number—a 65 per cent. increase in 1987. The numbers leaving for settlement are declining. By the end of 1987, the number was 9,530. When I was in Hong Kong, I visited Tuen Mun, one of the closed camps. While I was there, another 120 people arrived. I met members of the Legislative Council who argued unanimously and strongly that they are querying the position of Hong Kong as a place of first refuge.

Already, a number of camps are full to capacity, and overflowing. The closed camps resemble prisons—indeed, one of them was built as a prison. While the Hong Kong Government are doing all they can with great humanity, I heard moving appeals from inmates—including women and children—who were anxious that the British Government should take some action to help them. The conditions in the camps are unacceptable and intolerable.

The British Government have reduced the numbers being accepted. We have taken 468 people in two years. That is not the 40 people a month that used to be accepted, and the conditions of acceptance are restricted to those with family links. We have a moral responsibility to give a lead, and I hope that the Secretary of State will make a positive reply.

As for the central issue, I shall concentrate on one of the principles included in the joint declaration, which must be a bible on these issues. The Secretary of State and the Government must ensure that it is taken account of in the drafting of the Basic Law and other matters. One of the agreed processes is that of convergence. The actions of the British and Hong Kong Governments up to 1997 should, as far as possible, fit the plans of the People's Republic of China from 1997 onwards, and vice versa, so that there is no disjunction or disruption between 30 June and 1 July 1997.

As the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) said, there is no conflict between what the right hon. Gentleman and Opposition Members have proposed and what has been proposed by the People's Republic of China. The right hon. Gentleman knows well the People's Republic of China and its Government. He is well respected by that Government—probably more than by ours. The Foreign Secretary and all hon. Members who have spoken have accepted the principle of direct elections. They accept that the People's Republic of China is not opposed to direct elections in principle, although the hon. Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Miller) queried the Basic Law draft.

A substantial collection of draft articles has already been compiled by the secretariat of the drafting committee for the Basic Law published in December last year. The right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup referred to the three options in which the minimum proportion to be directly elected is 25 per cent. There seems to be no dispute that a percentage of the Legislative Council should be directly elected. The only question is about timing. I agree with the right hon. Member for Blackpool, South (Sir P. Blaker) that the Opposition have no wish for any confrontation with China, but we sincerely believe that the Government of the People's Republic of China would understand and respect a stand on principle by our Government on that issue.

The views of the people of Hong Kong must be taken into account. So many hon. Members have said that those views are not paramount—as the Government might argue in the case of another dependent territory, but I shall leave that aside—but they must certainly be given a great deal of priority. As several hon. Members have said, the report of the Survey Office on the White Paper is open to serious question. The whole process, from the Green Paper onwards, is in clouded and obscure language, as the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) said in an intervention.

In the McNair survey, between 40 and 45 per cent. could not understand the questions because they were so obscure. I am not suggesting that it was rigged. It was sincere and honest, but severely flawed. In fact, it is the only poll which shows low support for direct elections in 1988. Successive polls, before and since that survey, have shown increasing support for direct elections. The most recent poll carried out by Marketing Decision Research showed that 78 per cent. were in favour of direct elections. That was broken down to 53 per cent. in favour of direct elections in 1988 and confirmed the trend in other polls.

Last week, I spoke to regional and urban councillors, community organisations and trade unions. My hon. Friend the Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds) will be interested to know that the only people I found on the other side of the argument were big business men, who are not often in favour of direct elections anywhere.

Some people argue that the people of Hong Kong are not ready for direct elections. I find that not only patronising, but, from my recent experience, completely untrue. The experience of election to urban and regional councils and now to district boards has already provided an excellent training ground, just as local government elections in the United Kingdom are a good training ground for prospective parliamentarians. When there are elections to the Legislative Council in Hong Kong, I do not believe that political divisions will be polarised in the way described by my hon. Friend the Member for Warley, East.

Another worry has been expressed about the effect that elections may have on confidence—the hon. Member for Weston-super-Mare (Mr. Wiggins) mentioned that. Such a fear is sometimes expressed by people who have shown their faith with direct elections in other countries by taking out dual nationality or refocusing their investments in those countries. However, the converse and more valid, powerful argument is the effect on confidence if the British Government are perceived as abdicating their responsibilities or if it is believed that a promise that was perceived has not been fulfilled.

I reaffirm the advantages of early elections, which I believe will give people the experience of participation in elections for the next nine years. They also provide an opportunity for consultation with directly elected people—people with a mandate. I hope that the Secretary of State will acknowledge that there has been strength of feeling expressed from all parts of the House—Liberal, Conservative and Labour Members—in favour of direct elections in 1988. Even those who did not argue for direct elections in 1988 agreed that a timetable for their introduction must be included in the White Paper. That view was unanimous.

I hope that any statement that is included in the White Paper will be clear and unequivocal so that it does not engender the kind of confusion in the mind that caused the unfortunate division of opinion between the right hon. Member for Blackpool, South and the visiting Delegation for Democracy.

In conclusion—I wish to give the Foreign Secretary time to reply to the points made in the debate—one of the essentials of one country, two systems is the existence of a pluralist democracy in the special administrative region. The overwhelming message to be carried from this debate is that we want that sooner rather than later.

6.52 pm

Sir Geoffrey Howe: With the leave of the House, I shall reply to the debate.

I should like to begin by saying that the debate that we have had today confirms the intensity of interest of Members on both sides of the House in the future of Hong Kong. This deep concern has been expressed by hon. Members with many different points of view.

In the context of this debate a number of what I would term "subsidiary issues" have been raised and I shall be able to deal with them only quickly.

The right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris), who represents my old home town with great distinction, raised the question of human rights, with particular reference to press freedom and censorship. The joint declaration is explicit on the importance of that, and recent changes in the law represented the repeal of many previously rigorous censorship laws. The matter still remains under review.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Miller) asked about defence costs arrangements and he will be aware that that matter is also under review.

Apart from the central issue, the issue that aroused most concern was that of the Vietnamese refugees. My right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) made a strong argument on the matter, and he was eloquently supported by hon. Members on both sides of the House, including my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad). I am grateful to my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup for his tribute to my concern about this matter. None of us in the House who have any familiarity with the topic can be other than deeply concerned about it.

Our record in dealing with Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong is not as bad as all that—we have taken some 13,000 altogether. However, my right hon. Friend is right to urge us to try to do more, not only in respect of our country, but in making attempts in other directions. This is a sustained campaign to which we will remain committed, but it is not easy.

In this context, it is also right to discuss—as we are doing with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—the possible return of some of these people to Vietnam. A number of refugees are now coming from North Vietnam. The return of such people will, of course, take place only under circumstances and conditions that are likely to be acceptable.

The central question in the debate has been the place of direct elections in the future of Hong Kong. The debate has narrowed itself down to the acceptance of the proposition that the principle of direct elections is acceptable to all sides. Indeed, it is contained in the pronouncement of the People's Republic of China and the joint declaration. There is room for argument about how many and in what respect, but the key question has become when we move beyond where we have already moved in that direction. It is important to note that on that key question different views on both sides of the argument have been expressed strongly from both sides of the House. This has not been a party matter and there has been no clear-cut division. Both views have been strongly and rationally supported.

There has been reference to, or, to be more explicit, charges of, bad faith and broken promises. Those charges were dealt with most notably by my right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Sir P. Blaker). I am grateful to him for his repudiation of those charges. Quite apart from my position and that of the Government, it would be wholly unjustified to leave such charges on the record in face of the devoted work that has been done to secure and implement the joint declaration by many people in Hong Kong outside our Civil Service and diplomatic service. Those people are entitled to have such charges repudiated.

I acknowledge the wisdom of the point made by the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley), who said that there was no question of falsehood or concoction about the survey. It is important that that untruth should be laid without doubt on both sides of the House. There is no question of falsehood in that survey. It was undertaken honestly, and the questions were not dictated by anyone to anyone. The questions were based upon the Green Paper—perhaps not the easiest way of doing it—and it was all done in good faith. There was no constraint on that survey.

Let us consider the conclusions that many people have drawn from that analysis. It is believed that there subsists in Hong Kong—not resting on any one survey—a serious and big divide in the population's views. Nobody on either side of the debate has said that there is a clear conclusion emerging in favour of direct elections in 1988. That is the key thing. If one looks beyond the surveys and takes account of the debates in the various councils and boards in Hong Kong, it is clear, as expressed by my right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South, that there is a clear division of opinion——

[Sir Geoffrey Howe]

Mr. Tony Banks rose——

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Forgive me, but I have no time to give way.

One comes back to the question of the pace at which we manage this process of change. Two factors have been commended by both sides of the House: a need to take account of the responsibility of Her Majesty's Government and the responsibility of the People's Republic of China beyond 1997, and the need to take account of the aspirations of the people of Hong Kong and also the style of government thus far in the territory. The hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston) drew attention to the particular features of Hong Kong—the surrogate democracy and the liveliness of democracy. This again suggests that the territory calls for a different conclusion from the conventional one.

The point that we come back to was made by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) in his opening speech, when he said that, in the process of analysis before a conclusion is reached, it is clearly not in the interests of the people of Hong Kong for decisions to be taken that are not, in the broad sense, in line with the destination commended by the People's Republic of China.

The same point was made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup, when he said that it would be wise not to take action in conflict with t constitution. Such factors must be balanced again other and account must be taken of the particular f of the Hong Kong people, society and institution

I am able to say no more than that the p commended by my right hon. Friend the Mem Blackpool, South was I gather, well supported speeches of my hon. Friend the Member for Christ (Mr. Adley) and the hon. Member for Warley, Ea Faulds). Unfortunately, I did not hear those sp However, I did hear the speech of my hon. Frie Member for Eddisbury, who also endorsed what m hon. Friend had said.

We agree upon the proposition that in due cou need an element of direct elections — a proportion, but certainly not going all the way. T there is agreement on both sides of the Hous question is one of timing, as was emphasised by th Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valle Foulkes). On that there is a difference of views amo contributors to the debate. Even then the Opp Front Bench and this side of the House come togeth need to secure a timetable for progress, expressed i and unequivocal terms. That is the message that I d from the debate more clearly than anything else.

There can be no cast-iron guarantees about the of Hong Kong, but that is true of any country or ter I believe that Hong Kong is well equipped to fa future and——

It being Seven o'clock, and there being private b set down by direction of THE CHAIRMAN OF WAY MEANS under Standing Order No. 16 (Time for private business), further proceedings stood postpon

British Railways (London) Bill [Lords] (By Order)

Order for Second Reading read.

7 pm

Mr. Sydney Chapman (Chipping Barnet): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

I am grateful for the opportunity to introduce the Bill, not only because I am a London Member, but, principally, because I believe it to be a very good measure. It is, after all, about improving and expanding London's transport infrastructure. Unlike the usual general powers Bills brought before the House from time to time on behalf of British Railways Board, this Bill is for the express purpose of authorising new works and improving rail services in London and the south-east.

Hon. Members will be aware that central London commuting on British Rail has increased by no less than 19 per cent. over the last four years. Off-peak travel has increased by almost one third, thanks to the Capitalcard initiative and other discounts. I also remind the House that the pattern of travel is changing significantly throughout the metropolis. Many more journeys are made around the circumference of our great capital city, particularly by road. The M25 London orbital motorway stands testimony to that.

British Rail is rising to the changes and challenges. It is making ingenious use of an abandoned railway section in the City between Farringdon and Blackfriars to link the north and the south of the Thames. From May, the Thameslink service will run from Bedford, Luton and St. Albans—I am delighted to see my right hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet) in his place — to the south of London and on to Sevenoaks, Gatwick airport and Brighton. That will bring many benefits and great convenience to passengers who at present have to change trains, sometimes several times, to complete those journeys.

In central London, the trains will also serve King's Cross, Farringdon and Blackfriars while the Gatwick and Brighton trains will also serve London bridge. However, the trains will not be able to serve Holborn viaduct because it is at the end of a short spur line.

There are essentially three parts of the Bill, in the sense of the works to be undertaken. Work no. 1 is to relocate Holborn viaduct station below ground on the new through route. That involves the realignment of the railway line north of Blackfriars. It is intended that the realigned route will run slightly to the east of the present line and, perhaps more important, will descend to run in a shallow tunnel under Ludgate hill.

The other points to note about the proposal are that passengers will approach the new station through the present entrance to Holborn viaduct station, as the new station will be very near the existing station, or use new entrances on Farringdon road or off Ludgate hill. The station will be fully accessible for disabled passengers. I applaud British Rail's initiative in making that a central concern and strategy of the detailed design plans.

Above the line, shop units are planned to cater for the needs of travellers. That major investment is made feasible by releasing the old Holborn viaduct station for redevelopment. All that will be beneficial for travellers and commuters, for taxpayers, for the City as a great financial centre of the world and for the regeneration of that pa of the heart of London. The new station will be named S Paul's.

Work no. 1 also involves demolishing most of t viaduct between Blackfriars and Holborn viaduct and t removal of the bridge over Ludgate hill, thus restoring t great prospect of St. Paul's cathedral. Environmentalis everywhere will see that as a great boon. I do not inte to wax lyrical about it; I only say that, as someone wh qualified as an architect, I have one other thing in comm with Sir Christopher Wren, the designer of that splendi ecclesiastical pile; he, too, was a Member of Parliamen It was realised that there might be a personality clash ar it was eventually agreed between our agents that S Christopher would promise to make no more politic speeches if I promised to design no more buildings. Th arrangement has stood the test of time.

British Rail applied to the Corporation of London la September for outline planning approval. At the sam time, it entered into extensive local public consultation I understand that the planning committee will consider th application shortly. Having examined the detailed plan and speaking as a fellow of the Royal Town Plannin Institute, I commend the planning application to th Committee.

The other works proposed in the Bill——

Mr. Michael Fallon (Darlington): Before my hon Friend leaves work no. 1, will he elucidate further th financial implications of the development at Holbor viaduct? Unlike a public Bill, the measure that he i commending to the House has no financial memorandum I think that I understood him to say that some or perhap all of the costs of the development would be recouped fron the sale of the station and the land immediatel surrounding it. Can he tell us whether the whol expenditure will be recouped or whether British Rail i financing any of the development from its other norma capital or current expenditure?

Mr. Chapman: The House will be grateful to my hon Friend for raising that important matter. I hope that I ca give him all the information now. The works involved in what I will call in shorthand the Holborn viaduct sectio of the Bill will all be financed out of the sale fo development of the Holborn viaduct station area, which is no longer needed for British Rail's purposes. It is important to stress that, if Thameslink is to become a reality, the existing Holborn viaduct station will be outdated because it will be left in limbo on a short spur and no one will use it. Everyone who wanted to get off in the area would alight at the new station.

The new station cannot be provided unless the asset of the old station is realised. The old station cannot be kept if the new station comes into being. There is no question of British Rail being able to proceed with the new station without getting rid of the unwanted old station left on the spur of the line.

British Rail has many priorities and I suspect that if it is in order we shall hear about some of them during the debate. This project will not stand above British Rail's other major priorities and it will be realised by using one of BR's assets. It could not be used for other British Rail projects, because the project would be useless unless the new station of St. Paul's, on the reopened line, comes into being.

[Mr. Chapman]

I also wish to deal with the relatively minor, but important works related to works nos. 3 and 4.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South) rose——

Mr. Chapman: I shall give way in a moment.

I shall check this fact, but, as I understand it, these works will be financed by British Rail moneys elsewhere. They are relatively small and I am sure that British Rail will confirm that they can be allocated out of the normal funds without damaging capital investment in other major projects.

Mr. Spearing: Perhaps the hon. Gentleman will clarify this point now. As I understand it, the long-awaited and excellent Thameslink will come into use in May, so some trains will be running through. Will they not stop anywhere between Farringdon and Blackfriars? If they are able to go through from May, what is the pressing reason for the changes proposed in the Bill?

Mr. Chapman: I appreciate the hon. Gentleman's great experience and knowledge of the area. The short answer is that, at present, there is no link between Blackfriars and Farringdon. As the hon. Gentleman says, this link will come into being in May, but there will be no station on that line between Blackfriars and King's Cross. I shall check these details in case I have inadvertently misled the House. The station would become useless to those people who presently use Holborn viaduct or who wish to alight from the new link in that area.

Mr. Greg Knight (Derby, North): My hon. Friend said that some of the costs, which he described as relatively small, would not be met. Will he be a little more specific? What does he mean by "relatively small"? How much money are we talking about?

Mr. Chapman: I cannot give my hon. Friend a precise answer now, but I shall seek to do so before the end of the debate.

I shall explain the other works, which may give my hon. Friend a better idea. The asset realised will cover work no. 1 and, if there is any excess, that may cover works nos. 3A, 3B, and 4, which I wish to describe briefly.

Mr. Fallon: I hate to press my hon. Friend on this matter, but what is the normal policy in this regard? What is the normal policy if an asset is sold in a region of the British Rail network and the sum realised is more than sufficient to replace that asset with a new development of the kind described in work no. 1? Is the surplus redistributed among other capital projects in the regions or is it retained within London or Network SouthEast?

Mr. Chapman: That is exceptional, if not unique, because it is rare that an asset is realised on the site where an improvement can be made to the British Rail network.

My hon. Friend is a much greater expert than I on these matters. Perhaps the Minister will be able to give a more authoritative answer. Normally, the money would go into the finances of the British Railways Board, which would put projects to the Department of Transport. The Minister would then approve, disapprove or amend projects and they would be allocated among the many priorities of the British Railways Board.

The minor works—I use the word "minor" advisedly—relating to works nos. 3A and 3B, aim to reopen two short tunnels immediately to the north of K station to achieve a connection of this new route to the south with the east coast main lin the north-east. That will allow the Thameslin be increased, with local trains running from t route through to the south.

Mr. A. J. Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed) Gentleman mentions linking this line to the main line, as does the promoters' statement, of the east coast main line will allow some L services to operate. Do the promoters see the l east coast main line as a way of providing passengers from the north-east into the Tham

Mr. Chapman: I am grateful to the hon. Ge raising that point. If he is a little more pati explain it to him.

Work no. 4 provides for a new escalator co shorten the interchange between the Thameslin and the main line station at King's Cross. The r east line terminates at King's Cross, although terminate at other stations. It would be imp those trains to bypass King's Cross or to con to the southern regions of the country beca normal 4 ft 8½ in gauge, but narrow width trac being used. It is important for people from the who want a quicker connection to the south-ea of the Thames to have this much more s convenient method of crossing from the main into the Thameslink. The escalators will do ju

Mr. Fallon: My hon. Friend has been generous in giving way, but is work no. 4 a con for works nos. 3A and 3B? He has dese opportunities to make it easier for passengers north alighting at King's Cross to transfer to routes. Just before he introduced work no. 4, to the possibility of local trains from the east line moving through central London. What is th therefore, of east coast main line passengers a the InterCity 125 at King's Cross? Are th discharged and to have the benefit of work no they also to share in the glories of works nos. 3

Mr. Chapman: Again, I am grateful to my ho The short answer is that if he goes to King's C for some inexplicable reason, does not want Westminster but wishes to proceed further sou benefit from Thameslink, with its attendant ph geographical tangential works, and the new connection. When people using Thameslink proceed further north, works nos. 3A and 3B into their own. They are adjacent developm course, they are linked for the direct or indirect passengers. I have attempted to put the matter as as possible. I can put it no more accurately.

The escalator link at King's Cross will prov conveniences for passengers at that great static will also be a great benefit for passengers Northern, Victoria and Piccadilly lines. As High at the end of the Northern line, it will beneficia some of my constituents. Because of the new link, they will have direct access to the main lin

At this stage, it is appropriate briefly to ref tragic conflagration that took place at King's Cr November last. I have made inquiries about the new escalators. They will provide an alternative access to and from the three London Regional Transport underground lines. Therefore, they will be an additional route that passengers may take other than going through the ill-fated ticket booking office. The detailed design of the escalators is yet to be completed. I am glad that that is so. I assure the House that they will include all appropriate fire prevention measures. Of course, they will be approved finally only after the most detailed discussions with fire services and the railways inspectorate.

Sir John Farr (Harborough): Will the latest fire protection include the provision of sprinklers?

Mr. Chapman: I cannot answer my hon. Friend's question. With the greatest respect, it would be inappropriate for me to do so. I have an assurance that British Rail will take full account of any recommendations that Mr. Desmond Fennell, QC, may make following his inquiry into the King's Cross disaster. My hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) will agree that it is far better to wait for Mr. Fennell's report and findings rather than for me to give my view. If my hon. Friend presses me, my view is that every precaution and every modern piece of technology that is appropriate to guaranteeing maximum public safety, not least in underground areas, should be the first priority.

Mr. Greg Knight: My hon. Friend has itemised some of the benefits that will accrue to passengers from the north who alight at King's Cross station. Are there any benefits in the Bill for passengers from the north who alight at St. Pancras station? For example, is he aware that passengers from Derby are already agitated, concerned and disappointed that British Rail has made no announcement about electrification?

Mr. Chapman: My hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) raises an important point for his constituents. He will know that the electrification of other lines is outwith the provisions of the Bill. Therefore, I would be out of order if I were to comment on that matter. As Chipping Barnet is not on that line, I fear that my knowledge is not as good as that of my hon. Friend. If my geography remains accurate, King's Cross and St. Pancras are not many miles apart. There is an interchange between the two stations. Therefore, the escalator link will be of at least indirect benefit, if not of direct benefit, to people arriving at St. Pancras.

When the Bill was introduced into the other place, seven petitions were deposited concerning the realignment of the Holborn viaduct section. The Committee in the other place allowed the Bill to proceed, subject to British Rail giving an undertaking to Whitbreads, one of the petitioners, to return to it the freehold site of that splendid hostelry, the Old King Lud at Ludgate circus, following completion of the works. Sixteen of the 17 petitions were settled to the satisfaction of the petitioners. Four petitions have been deposited in this House by National Car Parks Ltd., Whitbreads, the City of London Real Property Co. Ltd., and Deloitte, Haskins and Sells. They were concerned about the impact of work no. 1 on adjoining property that they own or occupy.

British Rail has written to the four companies and has offered to have meetings. Indeed, meetings have been held. I am pleased to say that a settlement has already been reached with National Car Parks, and it is hoped that settlements will be reached with the other three companie In any event, as hon. Members know, if the House choos to give the Bill a Second Reading, its provisions and a outstanding petitions can be considered in detail Committee.

The Order Paper confirms that there are concern about the Bill or about British Rail. That is not surprisin If the House gives the Bill a Second Reading, it will be immense benefit to many people. If hon. Members wish pursue points that are without the scope of the Bill, or they wish to pursue any grievances that they may hav with British Rail, I respectfully suggest that it might b more appropriate to do so when the British Railways No 2 Bill, or the general powers Bill, comes before the House I understand that it will do so within the month.

Mr. Beith: I am grateful for that useful piece of advice which, of course, we shall take. For a century and a hal it has been believed that grievances about railways mus be ventilated when railways legislation is brought befor Parliament. That belief was somewhat strengthened whe some hon. Members' arguments about sleeper service were greeted by British Rail's Inter-City marketin manager's insistence that he did not wish to discuss th matter with Members of Parliament.

Mr. Chapman: Obviously, I have heard what the hon Gentleman said. Having been a witness to his considerabl parliamentary skills, I know that he will devise an ingenious and effective way of allowing this beneficial Bil to go through the House while pursuing his grievances in another parliamentary way.

I am sorry for taking up the time of the House. I have tried to deal with the various points that have been raised. I believe that the works represent positive, sensible steps by British Rail. The works at Holborn viaduct show great initiative and enterprise. They will benefit London and many other parts of the country, particularly the north-east. If it is passed by the House, the Bill will be good for passengers and good for British Rail.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. I should inform the House that Mr. Speaker has not selected either of the motions relating to the instructions on the Order Paper.

7.29 pm

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett (Denton and Reddish): I welcome the opportunity to raise briefly the issues in the Bill and to contrast the way in which British Rail seems so enthusiastic to invest in London and the south-east with its attitude to the north-west.

I did not intend to speak on the Bill, but just before Christmas the north-west group of Members of Parliament asked for a meeting with the chairman of British Rail to discuss the deterioration in the service to the north-west. We were told that the chairman was too busy to see Members of Parliament and that we would have to make do with the midlands' director, Mr. Bleadsdale. When he met north-west Members of Parliament, he treated us with complete contempt. He came with no answers to our questions and made it clear that he was not prepared to listen to our views, but was prepared to allow the deterioration in the service to continue, and that we were a nuisance. I think that that was an insult, and British Rail must remember that if it wants to pass legislation through the House it must be prepared to talk to hon. Members and answer their questions.

[Mr. Andrew F. Bennett]

I find it amazing that British Rail can make substantial investment in London, yet every time we raise the issue of the deterioration in the service to the north-west the argument put forward is that it does not have the money to invest in that area. We have experienced a continual running down of that service. How on earth can BR talk, as it does in this legislation, of the advantages of travelling across London from north to south when it is doing its best to get rid of passengers who want to come from the north?

A similar proposal for a cross-London route was announced with a great fanfare three years ago. Trains from Manchester and Crewe, instead of arriving at Euston, were to go to Kensington Olympia and would be able to go on to Gatwick, Brighton and Dover. British Rail said that this would be a great improvement and that it required parliamentary approval for that development. It is now saying that from May it will discontinue most of those services.

The reason given for that decision is that an insufficient number of people want to use the services. There obviously have been problems, and one of the fundamental——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. At the outset the hon. Gentleman said that he would refer to the services in the north-west of which he has knowledge for contrast. He is now starting to argue the case for those services, which is out of order in the context of the debate.

Mr. Bennett: I am talking about the cross-London routes. It is perfectly all right for British Rail to tell us how desirable it is to have another cross-London route, but it is very odd that, having tried one for three years, it is now in the process of abandoning it. We must ask to what extent BR will be prepared to maintain this cross-London route, having invested a lot of money in it. I would argue that it should have invested that money in better rolling stock for the north-west and in maintaining services.

The fundamental flaw in BR's route across London was that services to the north of London had one system of electrification, while those to the south had another. A substantial amount of extra time had to be added for the changing of engines at Kensington so that trains could continue through to the south. It has been disappointed by the failure to attract passengers to that service, which is why it may be discontinuing it.

The question that we must put to the promoters of the Bill is how far they will be able to ensure that it is easy for passengers to travel on east coast lines down to the south. BR is obviously considering this improvement with a view to the Channel tunnel. There is still the fundamental problem that the railway system on the east coast line, like that on the west coast line, is incompatible with the engines that travel to the south. I hope that the promoters will tell us how they will get round that difficulty. If they cannot, I suggest to them and British Rail that it would be far better to invest the money in improving services from the north-west.

Mr. Beith: What worries me is that when British Rail is confronted with a difficulty such as the apparent incompatibility of running two services, its answer is that one of the services will have to go. That has been its argument on sleeper services. It has said there must be a transfer from diesel to electr diesel service will have to be removed alto that must have implications for the matter Gentleman is describing.

Mr. Bennett: I am unaware of what Britis about the east coast sleeper service. development for the Manchester service is not intend to get rid of the whole service, service in one direction. Sleepers will go up and return with passengers. British Rail sa more economical than having trains carryi in both directions. When we asked for deta could not produce them, which is amazing. to plead the case for sleepers too strongly—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope Gentleman will not want to plead that case as I can see, it has precious little to do wit

Mr. Bennett: If BR cannot maintain a from Manchester to London, it is doubtful be able to provide a service which, in the futu people to catch sleepers that will run on the through London and on to the continent. thought that one of the arguments for the to make travelling far easier. It is not proposition at any time to have to chan London if one is travelling to the south, but it in the middle of the night, that is very un

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not see a Bill that relates to, connects with or has any sleeper services of British Rail from M London. I hope that the hon. Gentleman wil Bill.

Mr. Bennett: If I were trying to build a north to the south, which is what the Bill ai of the services that I would consider usi sleepers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon knows that I am familiar with the north of th knows as well as I do that trains from Man south do not go through King's Cross.

Mr. Bennett: I accept that argument, bu through Doncaster. I would have thought t Deputy Speaker, would be the first to accept be more attractive to catch a sleeper from Do centre of London, and on to the contine Channel tunnel is open, using this route, tha at 2 am or 3 am, get out at King's Cross, an Victoria, when services across London are good.

The question whether sleepers will be through this new link on the east coast route the Bill. British Rail seems determined to sleepers to the north of England—not only coast route but on the west coast one suggests that it does not want to run sleepe Scotland. There is a good argument for it to develop its sleeper service so that, when th through London and the Channel tunnel is start to use the sleeper service as a major part within western Europe.

I hope that British Rail will reconsider it hon. Members and the representations th making. I hope that it will reconsider its investment programme. If it can find the money for this link, and could find the money for the Kensington link, it has a duty to find the money to invest in rolling stock so that the many passengers who use its services from the north-west and north-east of England are not deterred from doing so.

Last Friday, having remained here to vote, I went to Euston and was appalled to find that the 3.20 pm to Manchester had no seats left in the first-class accommodation—fortunately, I had booked a seat—and that about 10 first-class passengers had to stand all the way to Manchester. The reason was clear. The guard, for whom I had every sympathy, made the apologetic point that British Rail did not have sufficient rolling stock.

How can British Rail consider this sort of investment when it cannot invest in the rolling stock necessary to provide a decent service from Euston to the north of England? The first priority must be to get decent rolling stock. Many commuter trains in the north-west of England provide a poor service—again because of the lack of rolling stock.

I plead with British Rail to invest in the north of England, on the east and west coasts, with the same enthusiasm as it seems to have to invest money in London. One has the feeling that British Rail's only interest is in providing a service for the people in and around London, rather than one for people such as my constituents in the north-west of England.

I shall continue to take every possible opportunity to make legislating difficult for British Rail until it accepts the fundamental principle that it should talk to Members of Parliament about the problems that face them and their constituents. British Rail should re-examine its investment programme to ensure that a good service is provided for the people from the north of England who have to come to London before it invests too much money in transporting people across London. If British Rail does not invest in transporting people from the north of England, it will find that it will have a network across London, but no passengers because they cannot afford to get there.

7.41 pm

Sir Trevor Skeet (Bedfordshire, North): I am surprised that the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) has taken a narrow view of the Bill. I support the Bill. But why does British Rail need to obtain powers by using the private Bill procedure? The purpose of the Bill is to execute certain works, which have been well explained by my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman). British Rail already has a lot of legislation on the statute book and has many powers concerning the acquisition of land. I should have thought that most of what British Rail wants done could be done under existing legislation and that this Bill was not necessary. But, since British Rail has this special legislation, it will be considered, of course, and supported by many Conservative Members.

Mr. Peter Snape (West Bromwich, East): I apologise for interrupting the hon. Gentleman so early in his speech. We all feel sometimes that it is an inconvenience for comparatively minor works to be the subject of a Bill. What alternative means of providing anything new does British Rail have, given that it must first seek a statutory right from the House?

Sir Trevor Skeet: A committee is ascertainir the procedures can be modified to enable comp ahead without facing the general expense of the procedure. The Bill's promoters know how ex procedure is, especially when there is oppo relevant points are raised. If a group wanted t Sizewell B, it could do so by way of the p procedure, but it would be much better to hav Act and obtain powers by other routes. I mer that the private Bill procedure is a rather heavy to use on this occasion.

Some time ago I walked through the tunn Farringdon and Blackfriars. I was amazed at the route and the perspective that British Rail in reopening it. The tunnel was in use in the s It will be useful, to my constituents at least, to travel from Bedford through to Brighton and t

Two motions have been tabled, although been ruled by you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to be They simply reflect the protests in other pa country and the wish for more electrification in Kingdom. I think that that is generally accepte British Rail to some extent. Although there w delay in starting operation of the line from St. Bedford, once it began it proved to be succes moneyspinner for British Rail. Such developme most useful.

When the proposed line is completed, will the inter-city lines from Bedford to London, perh through the tunnel to Brighton and to Gatwick? be faster trains to London? I assume that there Is there any prospect of a spur line from Bedford to bring more people into London and other p south-east?

My hon. Friend the Member for Chippi referred to escalators. Two weeks before the King's Cross, I wrote to the chairman of London Transport complaining about the filth of th Surprisingly, I did not receive a reply until accident——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is difficult t these matters arise from or are connected with Sir Trevor Skeet: With all respect, Mr. Deput the transport authorities are constructing an between the stations. There must be prop provisions.

Sir John Farr: It is critical.

Sir Trevor Skeet: It is critical: I am obliged t Friend.

Even if the escalators are not made of wood, not swept, as I feel happened at King's Cros Pancras, an accumulation of dust could lead problems for future travellers. British Rail mu itself that the highest standards are introdu maintained and that the right cleaning faci provided to protect the public at all times.

I give the Bill my full support. It will impro through London to the south-east. I hope provisions will be extended to cover other peopl those mentioned by Opposition Members w certain additional work done. We hope that Br can secure investment from the sale of the assets t in mind so that there will not be too great an i on the taxpayer.

7.48 pm

Mr. Archy Kirkwood (Roxburgh and Berwickshire): I am grateful for the opportunity to participate in this important debate. We have seen from the speeches of the hon. Members for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet), for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) and for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) that the debate has national as well as local, London significance.

I declare an interest, if I need do so. The hon. Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape) has a more direct claim than I have to the fame of being part of a long-serving, loyal, traditional railway family, but my father was a railwayman for many years. I spent many summer vacations in signal boxes, until an inspector came along and I was put quickly over the dike. My uncle and namesake, Archie Kirkwood, was a long-serving member of the National Union of Railwaymen. Sadly, he died some years ago. He was a mentor of mine, and my family's experience of trade unionism in the railway industry percolated through the fabric of our family life. I benefited from that and, if I have no other claim to speak in this debate, I feel that my family background entitles me to do so.

Mr. Fallon: May I intervene on precisely that point? The hon. Gentleman has touched on an aspect that has not yet been considered, which is the attitude of the National Union of Railwaymen to the proposals and to the differing effects of investment in different parts of the network. Has he received representations from the union?

Mr. Kirkwood: That is an extremely important point, to which I intended to refer. I must say that I am not one of the most obvious constituency Members for the NUR to contact and I do not hold that against it. I make no complaint about that because this is a major Bill—indeed, I commend the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet on the way in which he opened the debate—but one or two gaps have been left and several questions still need to be answered.

For example, what consultations were there with the NUR—a very responsible union with a direct interest in the Bill? The Bill will affect NUR staff who operate from King's Cross and, from a more strategic point of view, the investment deployed could perhaps have been deployed differently. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman or the Minister will give us the benefit of the view of the Government and British Rail on that point.

The hon. Member for Bedfordshire, North made a strong point about the procedures adopted. As you know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I serve on the Committee that considers unopposed private Bills, under your own eminent chairmanship, and I therefore have some experience of these matters. I am surprised that the British Railways board should need to have recourse to such machinery. The pressures on Back-Bench Members inevitably mean that some of these important measures do not get the attention that they deserve, and that operates to the detriment of some of the projects that come before us. I am surprised that the board does not have available to it other means of achieving the ends set out in the Bill.

That leads me to one of my other concerns about the Bill. Are any short cuts — to put it pejoratively — employed in the Bill? Does it circumvent any of the normal planning processes under the planning legislation? I ask that neutrally. I do not suggest that BR is taking short cuts or that, if it is, it is doing so in a consp
However, the House has a right to kn procedure circumvents any of the planni

That is an important question for loc people have proper rights, obligations a to have their say and make prope representations through the planning p the Bill deprive them of any of their planning Acts? British Rail would be ensure that it has recourse to private Bill essential.

It is obvious to everyone that King's C national significance. That is why people are taking an interest in it. King's Cross the south. Hundreds, perhaps even th constituents from the borders of Scotla just on business but for family outings, visi so on. The station has a direct link with route, which has a fine history and traditi that obtain in King's Cross are vital not ju who use it daily but to people from ver afield who use it for a variety of purpose

We are entitled to ask what inconv caused during the construction of the w
Member for Chipping Barnet lucidly expla and we have all had the benefit of the promoters helpfully provided—I am gra but what inconvenience will be involved? W time scale? Will it be weeks, months, or, as Some of the works may take many m happens, how much inconvenience will station suffer? Will they have to go to oth concourse—with which they are familiar—
Will large chunks of the concourse be substantial periods?

That important question was mad important by the remarks of the hon. Mem and Reddish, who recounted his problems
Friday. I have experienced similar pr explained earlier, my commitment to the that I try to use as many of my parlia warrants as possible on land-based transp and from my constituency via the east coa than traitorously using aeroplanes, which softies and jet-set yuppies. The mark of a tr traditional Scottish Member is that he str the hassle at King's Cross and sits on his hours and enjoys it because he knows tha for a greater cause——

Mr. John Home Robertson (East Lothian

Mr. Kirkwood: He does it for Britain taking the easy way out by drinking a gin 757 from Heathrow.

Congestion on the concourse at Ki worrying. In the short term, congestion w are being completed may be relevant becau custom away. I might even be driven to my on the 757 until the concourse is put right.

Mr. Home Robertson: I look forward to the hon. Gentleman's drinking habits in th
News and East Lothian Herald.

Mr. Kirkwood: It is always difficult when who represents another constituency is si

elbow taking notes for one's local newspaper. I would prefer references to gin and tonic and aeroplanes to be deleted from the record. Alas, I know that that is not possible; the cat is out of the bag.

Perhaps a more serious question concerns the long-term effect on congestion on the concourse of the new escalator and the ticket office and the rest of the works planned in the Bill.

Mr. Fallon: On the question whether congestion will increase while the works are being carried out, has the hon. Gentleman yet studied clause 22? I know that his mind has been on other matters for the past week or so, but if he studies it he will discover that the compulsory purchase powers taken for the various works at King's Cross last until 1992. It is therefore possible that British Rail will carry out the works over a period of years, as the hon. Gentleman has warned, rather than over a period of months.

Mr. Kirkwood: That is an important question, and I hope that if it is not directly addressed this evening it will be addressed in Committee—although the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet may be able to elucidate.

Mr. Chapman: I am grateful to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) for giving way, because it may be for the convenience of the House if I deal with that point now. My understanding is—again I shall get confirmation of this — that it is anticipated that the works will take about two and a half years. It may be between two and three years——

Mr. Kirkwood: Two years?

Mr. Chapman: It will take about two and a half years from the date of the passing of the Act. I believe that it was hoped that, with Parliament's approval, work might start this May. Of course, that is now out of the question because of the length of time over which, rightly, we conduct our proceedings. I shall take further advice on that point but when I asked that question myself, I was told that it would take about two and a half years to complete all the works that are the subject of the Bill.

Mr. Kirkwood: That answer has taken me slightly aback. My initial reaction is that the works are much more extensive than the House had perhaps been previously led to understand. I do not mean that the House has been misled. Do I understand that if the works were to start immediately they would take a full two and a half years to complete?

Mr. Chapman indicated assent.

Mr. Kirkwood: Well, that adds extra point to my fears about congestion and the temporary transitional difficulties that will accrue.

Mr. Chapman: I was careful to say, "all the works that are the subject of the Bill". The substantial and major work is no. 1, the Holborn viaduct section.

In reply to the hon. Gentleman's question about the King's Cross works and the new escalator link, I shall find out how long those works will take to complete. There would be no point in starting the works on the day the Bill becomes an Act—nor would British Rail want to do so — unless and until Mr. Desmond Fennell, QC, has reported and the proper discussions and deliberations have taken place with the railways inspectorate a service. I am sure that hon. Members will think th and adequate.

Mr. Kirkwood: I am grateful to the hon. Mem is being most helpful to the House. We appreciat brings me to a question relating to the exter scale——

Mr. Beith: Before my hon. Friend turn consequent question about congestion at King' wonder whether it has occurred to him—I just realised this as a result of what the hon. M Chipping Barnet said—that the time scale th described—from May this year until 1991— the period from which sleeper services are inter diverted from King's Cross to Euston u introduction of full electrification at King's Cr is to say, the date at which sleeper services co introduced without any significant element o Perhaps it was not planned that way, but it w up the opportunity to regard the period during sleeper service is not there as one for reducing c with the hope of reintroducing sleepers as soon is open.

Mr. Kirkwood: I hope that my hon. Friend comment will be taken on board by the power His suspicions are similar to my own. We a about——

Mr. John McWilliam (Blaydon): Will Gentleman give way?

Mr. Kirkwood: I shall be happy to give way t Gentleman.

Mr. McWilliam: I should be grateful if Gentleman would direct his mind to the tho perhaps the Bill is premature. Given the works Cross, it might be better to introduce the Bill on the report and know the work that must be c there, rather than in advance of the report.

Mr. Kirkwood: I assume that that important relates to the fire inquiry that is being conduc eminent Queen's counsel. Obviously, the Bill w before the recent tragic event at King's Cross, b event been considered? Suppose there are fa consequences in terms of the design of escalat requirements and fire requirements on the ma described in the Bill. It may well be good counse slowly. That may not involve terminal delay. will involve a delay of only between six and ni and perhaps the Bill could be brought back to then. It would be sad and unfortunate if the through all its parliamentary stages only to fi report produced by the eminent Queen's couns substantial amendments to be made.

If that happened, can the hon. Member fo Barnet tell us whether the British Railways Bo appear on the doorstep of the House to ask amendments to what would then be an Act of P Would the board require secondary legislation of the report, because that might cost a dispro amount of British Rail's budget in terms of the has been set aside for the project? That importa requires attention and some answers in Comm if the hon. Member for Chipping Barn Government cannot give those answers this e

[Mr. Kirkwood]

House will want to know the implications of the report before it gives its final view. Of course, there will be opportunities not only in Committee, but when the Bill returns to the House on Report.

Mr. Fallon: If my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) is not prepared tonight to offer to withdraw the Bill for several months to take account of the timetabling points, the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire must consider whether the Bill could at least be withdrawn for a short period so that we may prepare a more extensive Report stage, bearing in mind that the works are not urgent, and bearing in mind that other major Bills, such as the York and London Bill of the last century, were considered by the House for 82 days. Even if the Bill has to become law reasonably quickly, there is no reason why we must rush through our considerations.

Mr. Kirkwood: Eighty-two days is a long time in politics, especially if one has been in the Liberal and Social Democratic alliance during the past week.

The hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) has made a good point. What is to prevent the Bill being put on ice? In terms of parliamentary procedure, presumably it would be possible to stage it over from one parliamentary term to another. I am an inexperienced hand at the parliamentary game, as you know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but I think that it is possible that there is some procedure for staging over a private Bill until the next Session. We had experience of that with the Channel Tunnel Bill, which was a hybrid Bill. This is a purely private Bill. There is nothing to stop us stopping the clock of parliamentary procedure on the Bill until we can see whether there are implications—and there are certain to be implications—as a result of the safety report by the eminent Queen's counsel who has been charged with the responsibility of investigating the causes and long-term effects of the King's Cross disaster. I hope that that important point will be given serious consideration.

I return to the point that I was about to make, having heard that the works will take two and a half years to complete. That suggests that the works are of an entirely higher level than I had anticipated, and that leads me to the question of cost. Although the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet was comprehensive, helpful and lucid in his introduction, he left out the question of the total cost. I listened carefully to his remarks and he said that the cost would more or less be met by the disposal of other assets on the site.

It would be helpful to know the gross or, indeed, the net sums involved. A course of public works over a two-and-a-half-year period will involve a different level of expenditure. If it is true, it brings into a new perspective the arguments that were deployed earlier by the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish about the respective and relevant merits of investment on the south-eastern route, let alone the east coast route. I can tell the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish that there is life well north of Manchester.

We need more detail on costs. The House is entitled to know how much money will be spent in every category of the expenditure—not only the money being set aside for investment, but the money that it is hoped will be made from the sales of assets. What is the state of play on those sales? Have brochures and prospectu
Are the heritable items that are disposals ready to be put on the pu their asking price? All these details a House can decide whether we are ge for this significant investment in the f take two and a half years to comp information on costs before we judgments.

I heard what the hon. Member said about the extent of the usefulnes
He will correct me if I am wrong, bu running over the route will be runn Presumably those tunnels are many narrow to take the InterCity 125 different——

Mr. Chapman: I told the House th normal 4 ft 8½ in, but the coaches a type because of the size of the tunnel bends.

Mr. Kirkwood: I appreciate the hon about the bends—I have been suffe
the past week in my party.

Mr. Spearing: It might be useful t
now. There is an abiguity about fhe w is a gauge for the width of lines and are not yet clear whether the new tun will be wide enough—wider than th take not only 125s but also, perchanc

Mr. Kirkwood: I see we have a pleth talent in the House and I am gr Gentleman for his help. What he said it leads me to another question.

The hon. Member for Chipping Bar cost would be astronomic, but how m link from the east coast route cost? T may say that the sums have been done millions of pounds are involved; I benefit analysis must be done. Howe have merely to be slightly widened in rolling stock through, doing that migh realms of commercial possibility in th

In view of what has been said about and the opportunity that it would prov return and for passengers, the question any calculations been done of what it a direct link? The figure may be imp are not unreasonable people and we w on the commercial viability of such a produced — but we cannot thin conscientiously representing our consti at least ask that question so that a judg

If it is too expensive to widen the tun case, what is the possibility of co-ordin that people coming from Berwick-upon at Stevenage, for example, and take a tr advantage of the link? What active cons given to that eventuality so that pe Berwick-upon-Tweed would not need terminal station at King's Cross, but c in a co-ordinated fashion without chan

Mr. McWilliam: Would the hon. G reflect on the problems of freight from tunnels and the loading gauge are not such as to be able to take freight from the north, there is no advantage to the vast areas of this country in allowing the Bill to pass. Freight is of the essence in the economics of opening up the tunnels to national use. If we cannot receive the assurances that we would like on freight access, there is no reason why the House should pass the Bill.

Mr. Kirkwood: I was coming to that point, and I shall reinforce and underline it now. Freight is an essential part of the viability and continuing prosperity of the east coast route. The hon. Member for Chipping Barnet may not know — the Minister will — that important freightliner depots just outside Edinburgh have recently been closed. A route such as this could have saved the depots and made them commercially viable. That is how important having a direct route is, rather than an indirect link such as the Bill proposes.

I return to my point about co-ordinating timetables for passenger journeys. How far up the east coast route does the ability to link through the tunnel go? I assume that passengers from places such as Stevenage, Huntingdon and Peterborough can go all the way through the link. How far up the route is it proposed that the service will extend—past Doncaster, as far as York, to Darlington or even the nether reaches of Newcastle and beyond? How far down the east coast route will people be able to get on British Rail trains that will take them directly through the route that is proposed in the Bill?

As regards commercial viability, British Rail tells us a great deal about the new ethos that now prevails in its commercial judgments. We are told a great deal about ratios of profitability, investment returns and so on. I did not hear the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet say anything about the commercial return that is expected on the investment. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, and the sums must be done. The House is entitled to know what money it can expect in return for this substantial two-and-a-half year building investment.

Mr. Beith: It is also true that we have heard nothing about the revenue implications of the investment that we are discussing. There seems to be an assumption running through the debate that the project is viable in terms of capital invested because of the return on the land. There has been no reference to whether passengers using the route will be receiving a public subsidy in order to do so.

Mr. Kirkwood: I agree with my hon. Friend. The commercial return is closely linked to the terms of the subsidy—if there is to be any. Some hon. Members are worried about the disparities in the subsidies between one route and another and one area and another. The hon. Member for Darlington and other hon. Members advanced cogent arguments about the disparity in the subsidies that are applied per passenger journey in different parts of the rail network. These are all important matters.

The aims of the Bill are set out in the brief supplied by the promoters. The Bill seeks powers to alter the alignment of the railway. Among other things, the Bill seeks to replace Holborn viaduct and to provide a through bus interchange and better access for taxis, especially for disabled passengers. That is an important part of the Bill's provisions. From my own experience, I commend British Rail for its improvements to stations, especiall stations, and to Waverley station in Edinbur Glasgow stations.

To a certain extent, British Rail has not mad provision for services for the disabled and has ship for a ha'p'orth of tar. I hope that British R careful attention in this major development t facilities that will enable disabled people to tra let or hindrance. That is an important matter t considered.

The safety aspects of the escalator that wil quicker alternative at King's Cross for Tham underground passengers was mentioned by Member for Bedfordshire, North. I am also about that. I was a bit uncertain about the d objections mentioned by the hon. Member fo Barnet. I think he said that 17 objections had b in the House of Lords.

Mr. Chapman: Seventeen petitions.

Mr. Kirkwood: I am grateful to the hon. Gen that correction. The hon. Member for Chipp skated over those. It follows from what I said ea the planning Acts that the position of objectors The hon. Gentleman dealt with some of the pet the sponsors' brief tells us that there are four p the Bill. I was left in some uncertainty about state of the 17 petitions in the House of Lords

Mr. Chapman: The hon. Gentleman is qui recall that I said that 17 petitions were presen other place. Of those, 16 were settled and a rec tion was made about the 17th, which I shall shorthand as the Whitbread petition. Four peti presented to this House and one has been sett are outstanding and are at an early stage considered. Negotiations are continuing. outstanding ones include the Whitbread petitio

I hope that the Bill is given its Second Readi those three petitions, if they are still unsettled, w with under the procedures of the House by the examining the Bill. There is no question of the being able to pass judgment, to make its view to impede the progress of the measure if it is no with the settlements that are made, not undetermined on the three outstanding petitions. possible and, according to precedent, likely to b that the three outstanding petitions will be se were 16 of the 17 petitions in the other place the Bill reaches Committee, even if it is given Reading.

Mr. Kirkwood: That intervention was extreme and substantially sets my mind at rest. I listened to the hon. Gentleman's speech and was uncle intervention somewhat alleviates my worries. I like it to be thought that I am antipathetic to th I do not want to do anything to impede its Deloitte Haskins and Sells and firms like Whitt look after themselves and their property inte important. They have the right to make their pro representations in their own way and in their ow am quite happy to let that happen and I do not interest to impede the Bill. However, I was worr the number of petitions in the other place, but hon. Member for Chipping Barnet said about tha my mind on the issue.

Mr. Jack Thompson (Wansbeck): The hon. Gentleman has spoken about the petitions submitted to this House. The petitions could include what is described in the promoters' statement as "the comprehensive and sensitive redevelopment of the prime area to the west of St. Paul's Cathedral."

Hon. Members will know that for the last few months this has been a most contentious issue. The sensitive development of that area is of prime importance not only to the people of London but to people all over Britain.

Mr. Kirkwood: I entirely subscribe to that view. That was a helpful intervention and if the hon. Gentleman has any other thoughts I should be happy for him to share them with the House.

I was talking about petitions and objections. I do not think that the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet told us what the Camden borough planning department had to say about this Bill. It would be of interest to the House to know whether it was negative, positive or antipathetic to this proposal. That is an important issue and it is part of the democratic duty of Camden borough to comment on that.

Earlier, I spoke about the difficulties of defining the interface between this parliamentary procedure and the planning Acts. What is the view of Camden borough planning department? Does British Rail know, or has it asked? If it has asked, I and the House would like to know the reply.

The London Regional Passengers' Committee also deserves to be consulted in this process. I am not an expert about the duties and responsibilities of British Rail in this context. I understand the parliamentary procedure in the House, but it would be remiss of the House if it did not ask what bodies such as the London Regional Passengers' Committee feel about this. Is it antipathetic to the proposal, or does it support the proposal as a positive benefit to the people it represents? The House would like to hear about that.

The Bill considers the possibility of opening railway lines. That is good, and I am in favour of it. I hope that it catches on, because some hon. Members could make a few suggestions about it. The Borders have never recovered from the stupid and incompetent closure in the 1960s of the Waverley line. That had a dramatic and traumatic effect on the communities in the south-east of Scotland. Railway lines can have good or bad effects on communities.

My fervent hope is that the measure will eventually go ahead, and I hope and believe that it will have a positive effect. The House would be derelict in its duty tonight if it did not pose questions such as we have heard so far in the debate, and received realistic answers which it was prepared to accept, before allowing a measure of such magnitude to proceed. Against that background, I am happy to commend the Bill's Second Reading to the House.

8.30 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. Peter Bottomley): There have been one or two references to the events of the past few days. If the alliance returns from "Voices and Choices" to give 42 minutes to a Bill that it supports, heaven help the rest of us if we ever become involved in public debate with its members in the next general election.

We have considered the content of the Bill, and have no objection to the powers sought by the British Railways Board. Indeed, we support the Bill's aims. We note that it will enable the board to provide a new, modern station on the Thameslink line. Starting later this year, commuter services will run directly between north and south London for the first time since the first world war. We have told the board that we will always support worthwhile investment to enhance the quality of service to the passenger, and this is such a case. We approved the necessary investment for the scheme in December.

The proposed new station will be funded by redevelopment, with the private sector, of the Holborn viaduct site. We are pleased to see that the board is involving the private sector in this way, in line with our requests that it should broaden the participation of that sector in the development of its property.

I hope that the House will support the Bill and enable the British Railways Board to carry out this exciting and worthwhile development. The Department of the Environment has one outstanding point on the Bill, on which negotiations are continuing with the promoters. It is hoped that the matter will be resolved satisfactorily.

Mr. Beith: I hope that the Minister will forgive me if he is about to deal with this point. However, I hope that he will give us a Government view about the prospects for through running from the east coast main line through Thameslink, and about the value or otherwise of British Rail's providing an interlinking service at this point. That must surely have played some part in the decision on whether the investment should proceed.

Mr. Bottomley: It did not. One of the differences about the present Government is that we set objectives for British Rail and then expect it to carry them out. Business interests that have petitioned against the Bill will have the opportunity to present their objections to the Select Committee. The Committee will be able to examine in detail the issues involved, and will have the added advantage of hearing expert evidence.

I recommend to the House that the Bill be given a Second Reading, and allowed to proceed to Committee for such detailed consideration.

8.32 pm

Mr. Peter Snape (West Bromwich, East): Let me first congratulate the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) on the detailed and comprehensive way in which he moved the Second Reading. I do not know whether this is the first Bill for which the hon. Gentleman has had responsibility, but I am sure that it will not be the last, given the detailed way in which he explained it for us.

The first and most serious point that I should make, particularly in response to the hon. Gentleman's speech, is that I support all that he said about new escalators at King's Cross. All of us were appalled and horrified by the tragedy of 18 November. I know that whatever criticism may be levelled at the management of British Rail or, for that matter, that of London Regional Transport—I am never "behind the door", as the saying goes, in levelling such criticism myself — the lessons of that appalling tragedy will be learnt, and that new escalators, incorporating all the necessary fire prevention devices that are available, will ensure that it is not repeated.

I also congratulate the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on his epic speech. As the Minister said, for the Liberal party to support a Bill and take 42 minutes to tell us so——

Mr. Beith: Front Benchers always take 42 minutes.

Mr. Snape: They do not, as I shall show the hon. Gentleman in a moment.

There are exciting times ahead for the Liberal party, and I hope that, although his speech of support might be a little shorter than that of his hon. Friend, the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) will do nothing to detract from his prospects in the competition to which we all look forward with such enormous interest. If I can do anything to assist him, he need only ask.

My hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), who explained that he had to leave early tonight, had some valid and trenchant points to make about cross-London railway traffic in the context of the Bill. I think that we would all regret the lack of success of the north-south services which were diverted through Kensington Olympia. There are reasons for that, which we hope will not be repeated with these new services.

The service to which my hon. Friend referred in detail was started up along a fairly old railway line, which British Rail's management had been unwise enough to run down considerably. The speed of the trains, most of which are to be withdrawn in the May timetable, averages about 44 mph, which hardly provides any marketing appeal in the latter part of the 20th century. We hope that average speeds on the new link line will be considerably higher.

I think that I can prejudge at least part of the Minister's reply, particularly in regard to the InterCity prospects for the new tunnel——

Mr. Spearing: It is not a new tunnel.

Mr. Snape: As my hon. Friend accurately, if somewhat pedantically, reminds me, it is not a new tunnel. It was closed as long ago as the first world war. The new services to the old tunnel will be confined to local trains, because of the problems with the width of the loaded gauge. I do not know whether the Minister has the figures that were requested by the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire about the cost of doing a proper widening job on the tunnel to allow InterCity services to pass through, but the House would be interested if they were available.

Mr. Beith: The hon. Gentleman mentioned the Kensington Olympia link, which is used as a link through London. He seemed to imply that it had not been successful and might disappear. I am sorry to hear that, because I had not realised it. My wife travelled on the line recently, and found it a useful service. She did, however, come across a group of passengers who had alighted from a plane from Nigeria at Gatwick, and were now at Milton Keynes still hoping to reach Victoria.

Mr. Snape: I do not know whether the Bill will offer them much consolation. I do not suppose that, having embarked on such a journey, they would be over-impressed with the link via Kensington Olympia either. As I have said, I think that its lack of success was partly due to the short-sightedness of previous railway managements who ran it down. As there is only one platform available for the trains, if one train runs late—as occasionally happens, even with an average speed of 44 mph—it must wait outside the station if any other train going in either direction is occupying that platform.

One of the problems behind the introduction of Bills such as this is that London suffers from the rabid competition of the old railway companies 150 years ago. It may be a salutary lesson—I do not expect the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet necessarily to agree with me, although he will probably do so secretly—that such unbridled competition all those years ago necessitates the sort of Bill that we have before us. However, the Government are planning to unleash such competition on Monday in relation to road transport in the next two or three years. I hope that Conservative Members who tell us about the supposed benefits of unbridled competition like some ritual incantation will remember the problems when they are next tempted to throw their somewhat infantile ideology around the Chamber.

In one of his many interventions, the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) asked about receipts from the land development mentioned in the Bill. That is a valid point. The problem with sectorisation in British Rail is that often, and for understandable reasons, sector directors, having acquired receipts, are unwilling to release them to other sectors.

The balkanisation of what should be a national railway system should be resisted. I am not suggesting that the hon. Member for Darlington ought to resist it himself, because, perhaps unlike the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet, he has enormous ambitions which will no doubt be realised during a long and distinguished parliamentary career. The fact that sector directors do not like parting with receipts leads to difficulty. I do not know whether the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet can answer that point, but it is a matter which we should like explained.

As for the marathon speech of the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, I had not realised that he was so well connected, so to speak, in railway terms. Like his uncle, I am a member of the National Union of Railwaymen. I am glad to say that his uncle had a reputation for brevity, which the hon. Gentleman does not share. His uncle was much more sensible with regard to politics as well. Nevertheless, we welcome converts from wherever they may come. Perhaps it would be more accurate to describe them as enthusiasts. I am sure that, given his railway background, provided that he renounces those false political doctrines that he has embraced for some years, and if things get too rough for him in that group of Kilkenny cats that he belongs to at the moment, the hon. Gentleman might be welcome elsewhere. He could join the calm and placid listening party which I have the honour to represent.

The hon. Member for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet) referred to the improved services to his constituency as a result of what Sir Peter Parker called—and which continues to be known as—the bedpan service. He will acknowledge the good fortune of his constituents which will arise out of the Bill—good fortune which is unlikely to be shared by passengers from further north because of the apparently insurmountable problems associated with passing InterCity trains in the tunnel.

We have heard the good suggestion that we should look at the timetable to see whether, instead of passengers having a cross-London journey necessitating a change to the underground to get from one terminus to another, provision could be made at Bedford or Stevenage, or wherever else BR thinks would be most suitable, for InterCity passengers to change to modern electric multiple unit trains such as it is envisaged will travel from Bedford to Croydon, Gatwick airport or Brighton. It is well worth exploring that idea. I hope that BR management, which is not always adept at snatching business opportunities, will listen to what I think appears to be an eminently sensible suggestion, which would benefit a considerable number of passengers.

[Mr. Snape]

There are a number of outstanding matters which the Opposition would like to pursue, but, as your predecessor in the Chair reminded us, Mr. Deputy Speaker, a general powers Bill is to follow — the debate on which will enable most of us to get most of our moans about BR management off our chest. We can talk then about the missing, diverted and empty sleeping-car trains — the new ghost trains of the modern railway.

While the Opposition welcome the Bill, we want the Minister to know that our misgivings about these other matters will receive a full airing when that Bill comes before us. If he is charged with taking it through the House, he will have a rougher ride than he has had tonight.

8.45 pm

Mr. Neville Trotter (Tynemouth): I should like to give some background to the Bill. The House is aware that the railways took powers a little while ago to construct Thameslink and run trains from the midland main line at St. Pancras to the southern side of the Thames. I should like to consider those powers in the Bill which will link that system, which is now under construction and nearly open, to the east coast main line at King's Cross. They are works nos. 3A, 3B and 4, and also involve clause 11.

I find it surprising that there is little in the notes that the promoters have circulated about the powers being sought at King's Cross. There is considerable reference in the notes to the works at Holborn to build a new station on Thameslink. We are told that those works will provide a direct connection between Bedford, Luton and St. Albans to the north, and south London, Gatwick airport, Brighton and Sevenoaks to the south; in other words, there will be services right down to the south coast. As for works nos. 3A, 3B and 4, there is no explanation of the sort of service that it is proposed to run through that link. It is unfortunate that we were not told before Second Reading the aims of three of the four works in the Bill.

Mr. Fallon: Does that not reinforce something that has emerged throughout the debate? I refer to the inadequacy of the information that accompanies the Bill. Had this been a Government Bill, we would have had a financial memorandum outlining the expenditure and detailing the cost to be defrayed on the works, and we would have had an explanatory memorandum giving much greater detail of the powers sought and the works to be undertaken. Should the promoters not now consider whether a much fuller statement should be given? Should there not be details of costs of each work and, who knows, maps and plans as well?

Mr. Trotter: I entirely agree. I was amazed that we were not supplied with that information. I hope that the matter can be put right.

If we read the proceedings in another place, where the Bill started life, we find that the sponsor, Lord Marshall of Leeds, explained that works nos. 3A, 3B and 4 are needed to connect the Thameslink direct to the east coast main line. Lord Taylor said that many people would use the service, which would establish an essential link to the rail service north of the border. He described it as an imaginative and energetic example of the management of British Rail. Many of us who have occasion to use the east coast service would not describe the management of BR as energetic and imaginative on the basis of recent experience.

It has been made quite clear, however, that the works at King's Cross are in connection with establishing a link with the east coast main line. There were many references in the other place to the large number of people who would join the main-line services from King's Cross to the north of England and to Scotland as a result of the proposed link through the Thames tunnel.

I was interested in comments earlier in the debate about the narrow gauge of the tunnel. It could not be the track, for it would have been of little use indeed if that were the case. One cannot help asking, however, what used to go through the tunnel when it was previously used. I am sure that the tunnel was not used by special freight trains in the old days. There were not special narrow wagons to pass through it.

A great opportunity will be lost if main-line passenger trains do not pass through the tunnel in future. We are led to suppose that specially thin or specially shortened trains will be built for the service, but we have been given no information on that. We do not know where these trains will come from or where they will go. With respect to my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman), I do not think that there is a station at Chipping Barnet. However, I suspect that there are stations close to Chipping Barnet. Will trains passing through the tunnel go as far as Stevenage and Peterborough, or will they go all the way to Newcastle and Edinburgh? Where will they go in the other direction? Will they go to the south coast, or will they stop somewhere in south London?

Mr. Fallon: Does my hon. Friend agree that it is extraordinary that such a Bill should be promoted for works that will last for two and a half years, involving the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of pounds, yet we have not been told by the promoters whether the tunnel will take 125s or whether it will accommodate freight trains?

Mr. Trotter: That is absolutely right. I am certain that the tunnels will not take 125s, because the new service will be electrified. A great opportunity will be lost if the link is not constructed in such a way that it can be used by through main-line trains. Perhaps there is a need to iron out the bends in the tunnel as well as in the Bill. It would certainly be more sensible for a proper long-distance through service to be provided through the tunnel.

Reference has been made to the link to the southern region from the west coast main line. I had hoped that the aim now was to provide a similar service from the east coast main line. The east coast main line is of great historical importance. The first sleeping car ran on the line from King's Cross in 1873. As far as I know, that event has not been celebrated by the present management of British Rail, and, sadly, we face losing this service in the near future.

I believe that there are doubts about the future of King's Cross and over important parts of the east coast main line service. It is amazing that we are being asked to give a Second Reading to a Bill to deal with the interchange of large numbers of passengers between the Thameslink service and the east coast main line, yet we do not know the details of the future service on the east coast main line.

Recently, as one of its initial excuses for removing the east coast sleeping car services, British Rail said that Euston was a superior station to King's Cross for passengers to use. Obviously, if King's Cross is so inferior, we must sort out the inadequacies there. I do not believe that the provisions in the Bill will tackle the inadequacies. We need a more thorough re-examination of the position at King's Cross.

Does the future of King's Cross justify the works set out in the Bill? Will they be sufficient to improve King's Cross to provide an adequate level of facilities, which British Rail clearly feels are at present inadequate, in the light of the action that it has taken in respect of the overnight services? My colleagues from the north are well aware that Lord Taylor's description of the management of British Rail as "imaginative" and "energetic" is not a fair description of our recent experience in connection with services to the north-east. Indeed, I would say "insensitive" and "negative" are more accurate descriptions. There has been a refusal to accept the inadequacies of the proposed changes for the most important overnight services, and that is clearly relevant to what we are now talking about.

British Rail seems prepared to lose its share of the overnight market and has refused to reconsider its plans, which I believe calls into question its judgment as well as its public relations. That must make us doubt whether the plans behind the works in the Bill have been well thought out and considered.

I want to give an example of the inadequacy of the marketing on the east coast main line. The present overnight return fare from King's Cross to Newcastle is £149. I was astonished to find that the fare to Edinburgh is only £109 for the overnight journey, and the Edinburgh journey is 50 per cent. longer than that to Newcastle. To add insult to injury, I understand that one can leave one's car for a week at Waverley station. One would be lucky to get away with leaving it for one day at Newcastle.

Mr. Home Robertson: One would be lucky to get a place.

Mr. Trotter: I accept what the hon. Gentleman says. I am, however, advised that the facility is offered at Edinburgh.

One of our great criticisms in the north-east about the service out of King's Cross at present is the complete lack of marketing and initiative that has been shown by the east coast management with regard to the overnight services. We are being asked to incur a great deal of money in this Bill on major works at King's Cross when the management appears to be unable to market the product that it already possesses.

In the near future there will be 400 miles of main line from Kings Cross on which, for the first time in history, there will be no overnight service. The sleepers will go and people coming out of the interchange with Thameslink to use the sleepers will find that the overnight sleeping trains have been removed. We must doubt whether the sums on which the plan was prepared and is now put to the House are still accurate.

Mr. Beith: Another possibility that is closed off by that decision is that at the moment newspaper contracts go north from King's Cross. There might even be a facility for loading the papers closer to the centres where the papers are produced through the use of the link line. However, British Rail seems to be surrendering completely.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. Before the hon. Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) pursues that point, I remind him that we are dealing with work in London. It would be out of order for the debate to stray beyond that.

Mr. Trotter: As I said at the beginning, we are being asked to give a Second Reading to a Bill a large part of which concerns the provision of a link between the service under the Thames and that from King's Cross to the north. If we consider only one half of that link, the House cannot properly consider the Bill. I would certainly not want the Bill to receive its Second Reading tonight on that basis.

The carriage of newspapers is interesting, even if that only happens between Holborn and King's Cross—to keep the point within the context of London. We may allow our imagination to look further afield. The whole question of sector costing must be considered carefully. The Select Committee on Transport, on which I have the honour and pleasure to serve, drew attention in its report on the railways to its concern over this type of case

> "where InterCity . . . in an attempt to shed costs, moves its services away from lines or stations which it might more sensibly continue to use."

That has been happening with the east coast main line. The removal of the overnight passengers to Euston, or more likely to the competing air services, will mean that those passengers will no longer help to fund the movement of newspapers, post or parcels on the east coast main line. These services will in turn become less competitive and a vicious circle will be created as a result of the odd costing between various sectors of British Rail.

Before we proceed with the Bill, it is important to know the long-term plans for the service out of King's Cross. It is ridiculous to suggest that there should be a link for passengers using those services if we do not know what plans there are for the future. While it has been suggested by British Rail that King's Cross is an inadequate station for passengers to use at night, the latest reason for removing the overnight services is that the diesel locomotives needed to run it are so worn out and expensive that they can no longer be justified, and that electrification is the answer.

We are being asked to agree a system of works that will link up at King's Cross with the now being electrified east coast main line. The argument now advanced for using electric trains from Euston will be removed by the electrification of the route from King's Cross to the north-east and Edinburgh. There will no longer be any need to use clapped-out expensive diesel locomotives. Indeed, if those overnight trains continue to run from Euston rather than from King's Cross, not only will the passengers not have the advantage of the link to the Thames, but several of the clapped-out, expensive diesel engines will have to be maintained to run the service on from the electric wires at Carstairs to Edinburgh.

[Mr. Trotter]

There is thus a strong argument in favour of returning the Edinburgh service to King's Cross after electrification in only two years' time. That would bring more passengers to King's Cross and more people would use the works that we are asked to agree tonight. That would be logical, but however obvious and sensible it might be, British Rail has refused to give a commitment and we are left in complete doubt about the future. It is no good saying that the alternatives that British Rail has suggested will be adequate.

Dr. David Clark (South Shields): To substantiate the point that the hon. Member for Tynemouth (Mr.Trotter) is making about the type 47s and the switching of trains from Carstairs to Edinburgh, when the point was put to British Rail about running the type 47 from Carlisle to Newcastle, it said that it was too expensive. The point that the hon. Gentleman is making about the link is quite right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Carlisle and Newcastle are a long way from London. The debate must be directly related to London, as that is what the Bill is about.

Mr. Trotter: I am talking about people who want to go from the middle of London up to the north using the service at King's Cross. That is what the Bill is about. People want to get to King's Cross on the link line at night, so that they can go home. On the railways' present plans, they cannot do that. I believe that this should be put right.

People who wish to make an overnight journey to Newcastle now have to go to Euston instead, without, of course, being able to use the link line. They must then go all the way to Edinburgh and back to Newcastle—a total of 525 miles instead of 268. In the other direction, they must leave home at 5 o'clock in the morning to get there in time for their engagement. That is wholly unsatisfactory. One of the most astonishing features of the management of British Rail is that it has failed to accept that this is unsatisfactory. This throws doubt on the judgment of the senior management of British Rail.

Mr. Fallon: What would the position be if one of my hon. Friend's constituents wanted to return from a meeting in Holborn and be at an early-meeting on Tyneside in the centre of Newcastle? If he could not use the link and had to travel by that circuitous route through Euston and Edinburgh, what time would be available to him for the meeting at Tyneside?

Mr. Trotter: He would have to get off the sleeper in Edinburgh at dawn, to catch the first train to the north-east from Edinburgh. It is astonishing that one of the senior managers of British Rail was quoted as saying,

"He could enjoy . . . the view on the way."

Mr. Snape: That gentleman said:

"He could enjoy a great British breakfast and the view along the way."

Mr. Trotter: That is the full quote. The person concerned would arrive in Newcastle at 8.30 am, provided that he got up in Edinburgh at 6 o'clock.

Mr. Beith: Assuming that the sleeper was not late.

Mr. Trotter: We are talking about an unknown quantity of money for work at King's Cross, and it is difficult to see the costs in context.

The energy wastage by British Rail on the eastern region is said by its energy manager to be £7 million a year. I do not know whether the cost of these works will b or less than that. Losses on the sleepers have variously estimated at £1 million, £700,000, £5 £355,000, £250,000 and £200,000. If we keep pressure they may disappear altogether. However, Rail's determination to close the service at nig prevent people from Holborn or elsewhere in L making an overnight journey to the north-east ha unchangeable.

The Transport Users Consultative Committee ta interest in all passenger services, whether from Holb from King's Cross. Both the north-east committee a national committee are concerned about British proposals on this issue.

The link envisaged in the Bill must raise the qu of through trains to the continent. On the very di the other place passed the Channel Tunnel Bill, consideration to the Bill before us tonight. Man Members who come from the north-east agreed v construction of the Channel tunnel only becau envisaged a through rail service from the nort already suffer from the north-south divide. It is es that we have proper rail communication in Brit through service by rail to the continent will be esse future.

I had hoped that this Thames tunnel would be a way of providing such a service from the eastern p England down under London and through continent. Are we to be deprived of that oppor Perhaps my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping will be able to tell us whether there is a possibili service through the tunnel to the Channel tunn should know whether British Rail is considering th

Hon. Members have referred to other through s in London. Those services have been reas successful, whatever the Opposition may say abo slow speed of such trains. I do not believe there is an for the overall speed to be as low as it is. I suggest th slugishness is due to these trains being badly elsewhere than through west London. I hope that t link will mean we can do better in the future.

There is to be a new, experimental, sleeping ca that will run from Edinburgh to Poole that will miles off the main electrified line. I do not know wh money has been found to pay for that service. I have thought that there were far fewer people wis travel overnight from Poole to Edinburgh than the wishing to travel from King's Cross through to New Will that costly new service use the tunnel? I do not that it will, but my hon. Friend the Member for Ch Barnet should tell us.

Earlier in the year, the director of InterCity refe the closing of two uneconomic night routes, one o was the service from King's Cross up the main eas line. He went on to say—I believe that his word rather unfortunate—that InterCity planned to ad new ones. I do not know whether he intended that to merit my interpretation, but I believe that a servi as that from Poole to Edinburgh — whether through Holborn or not — is likely to be f successful than the services that we are to lose from Cross.

Mr. Jack Thompson: Has the hon. Gentleman account of the fact that the distortions that alread in fares, particularly on some of the services that we suffer on the east coast, may be applied to services down to places such as Poole?

Mr. Trotter: The hon. Gentleman is absolutely right. Earlier I referred to the incredible lack of marketing. The impression formed by many is that a decision was taken to withdraw the service from King's Cross up the east coast line and that more passengers would be an embarrassment and get in the way of taking that service off.

I do not know whether it is intended to run lounge cars on the Thameslink. I was astonished to read that 31 lounge cars are to be introduced on the overnight sleepers from Euston and elsewhere. It seems that the idea is that business men will spend half the night drinking gin and will then get up before dawn to have breakfast. I believe that providing and running these cars is an astonishing use of money. One cannot help but wonder whether the cost of hauling those 31 lounge cars over Shap and the rest of the system will be fully remunerated out of profits on the gin or the breakfast.

I believe that there are grave doubts about the present management of the British Rail InterCity system. Those doubts are relevant tonight, because one of the aims of the Holborn link is to feed passengers to InterCity services. Before we agree this Bill we need to be satisfied about the plans for future services out of King's Cross that are intended to be used by those coming from Holborn on the link. We need to know the complete plans for the future of the station and the services out of it.

9.8 pm

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): I am inclined to support the Bill, but I wish to ask a number of questions. I believe that a number of anomalies have appeared in the course of this valuable debate.

My first hesitation is that the Bill appears to accede to the Government principle—confirmed by the Minister—that substantial investment by British Rail in new routes, new lines—or, to be more accurate, reopened lines—will be paid for only by some form of localised property development. I cannot stomach that doctrine. The Minister may look puzzled, but I understand that that is the policy in many parts of London and in particular in respect of extensions to the docklands light railway. By the time I have finished my speech it will be clear that such a Government policy has also been adopted for other extensions, not only in London but elsewhere. If it is not, I shall be glad to hear from the Minister later by letter.

I apologise to my hon. Friend the Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape), who thinks that I am being pedantic, but these are not new routes. They are routes which are being reopened and refurbished. Tunnels built in the 19th century are being reopened. Although the railway routes that the trains will use may be new, the works themselves, with one exception, are not new railways. Therefore, I am not being pedantic. A principle is involved. The House is not being asked to authorise a new route.

I sympathise with the hon. Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) who is interested in the east coast main line. Many Londoners use that line. I shall not dwell on the topic at length, because it does not come within the scope of the Bill, except that British Rail wants to run it almost as a semi-commuter railway, certainly as far as Grantham, which British Rail boasts is now part of London's commuterland. It appears that British Rail wants to squeeze out other services, particularly sleeper services, which seems to be an extraordinary decision.

Even more extraordinary is the lack of assistance for the Kensington route, which is a cross-London route. We heard about that from my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett). I am sorry that British Rail has not persisted with that route, because it has the advantage of no loading gauge problems. One would have expected British Rail to persist with the welcome cross-London services which it started. Perhaps those services could go faster, but they were an innovation. It will be disadvantageous to the image of British Rail if they are cut after May.

I wish to ask some questions of the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) about Snow hill in particular. That is the site of the main work and there is a proposal to abandon and, in effect, rebuild the Holborn viaduct terminal. The Snow hill route was used in the post-war period, particularly for goods traffic going through London. It has been closed relatively recently, much to the chagrin and criticism of many railway-minded people.

I thought that there was a Snow hill station. Why could not that be refurbished relatively quickly at a fairly low cost? Why was that not done for the service which is to start in May to give access to Holborn viaduct to people coming through on the widened lines?

Mr. Jack Thompson: I bow to my hon. Friend's knowledge of the area. Can he tell us about the condition of the tunnel?

Mr. Spearing: No. The point I am coming to is that the works which we are being asked to authorise are not necessary for the service which is starting in May. That service will be from Bedford to various destinations south of the Thames, particularly Bromley South, Gatwick and perhaps Brighton. Therefore, those tunnels will be in operation in a few months' time. That is not what the Bill is asking us to authorise.

We are being asked to authorise additional works, first, for the elimination of Holborn viaduct and, secondly, for the refurbishment of tunnels at King's Cross which will give a second outlet to the north. I am mystified why we need to spend a lot of money on redeveloping the Holborn viaduct area to provide a terminal on a station below, which I believe exists and through which trains will be running in the next few months.

In addition, I do not understand why there is an apparent need to remove the viaduct between Blackfriars and Holborn and the Snow hill route which will start in a few weeks. I appreciate the architectural feature which may be an advantage if the railway is to go beneath the ground, but it is an expensive change which, apparently, will be paid for by the abandonment of Holborn viaduct. I assume that Holborn viaduct will be demolished because, ultimately, the balance of traffic north and south will eliminate the need for a terminal there. If Holborn viaduct is no longer required, surely it would be relatively cheap to put a station beneath it on the Snow hill line.

I now wish to turn to the mystery of works nos. 3A and 3B at King's Cross. I have made inquiries of British Rail about those and it has confirmed the relatively well-known fact that the York road tunnel and the Hotel curve tunnel will not take standard gauge coaches. Specially short or narrow coaches and limited gauge locomotives were used on the Moorgate service until a few years ago. I have ascertained that they will not be available for 125s, sleeping cars or the new mark 4 coaches which will be used when electrification of the east coast main line occurs. Therefore, suburban services from the Peterborough or Stevenage areas will go to the various destinations in the south.

[Mr. Spearing]

Mr. Trotter: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for that explanation. Surely, if the main part of Thameslink will take proper main line stock, it would be sensible to open up the curves on the tunnels at King's Cross so that we get all the advantages of running through services from the farther ends of the country.

Mr. Spearing: Yes, that would appear to be an attractive solution, but, from what little I know about this line, I believe that the loading gauge restrictions are not only on those tunnels but found elsewhere on the line.

How expensive will it be to make the so-called widened line even wider and provide the facilities that the hon. Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) mentioned? What about something more ambitious still?

My closing points relate to plans for rail traffic through London, which were produced in the mid-1960s. Under the strategic plans, there were proposals for main-line tunnels through the centre of London linking some of the mainline railways to the standard gauge size of bore. That would have been of vast benefit to Londoners. There would have been relatively short tunnels. If I remember rightly, there was a suggestion for tunnels between Paddington and Liverpool street and between Euston, Battersea and Victoria. British Rail revived such proposals not long ago in a scheme called CrossRail, but the Minister said that he was not concerned with it as British Rail had not produced any plans. He said that the Department of Transport would consider the proposals only if they were profitable.

We are now left with this limited proposal. It would be much better for strategic transport in London, where overcrowding on the underground is now a problem, for the Government to have invested in a much more ambitious scheme of standard gauge routes, either on the CrossRail principle introduced by British Rail some time ago or as envisaged in the strategic plan studies for London in the mid-1960s. That would have provided a better service for suburban traffic in London and for through-London services requested in the debate by hon. Members from the north.

9.18 pm

Mr. Michael Fallon (Darlington): The House is indebted to my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman). Some hon. Members referred to him as the hon. Member for Chipping Norton. I would not ask him to choose between those two constituencies. I simply wish to put that on record. I am indebted to him for his clear explanation of the purposes of the Bill. I hope that he will not take it amiss if I now criticise to some extent the promoters of the Bill. We understand that he is not a promoter of the Bill. He is acting on their behalf and he has done his duty in as full and frank a way as possible.

The promoters of the Bill have not effectively discharged their obligations to the House. The statement circulated by the promoters—I received a only this morning—is a tatty, two-page, p document. It contains neither a financial exp the cost of the various works to be undertaken powers are sought, nor a proper explanation, two sentences in paragraph 4, of the various wo described in clause 5. It would be almost impo layman, looking at a copy of the Bill and a tatty statement, to have any idea of what is of the purpose of the Bill.

I draw that point to the attention of the Ho reasons. First, the House is considering private Bills procedure. I should have thought Committee, which is sitting during this Sess want to examine the statements that are ci support of private Members' Bills and whether promote them could get a little nearer to the was set by the Government, and, at the outse private Bills much fuller explanatory and memoranda.

Mr. Chapman: If the opportunity arises, I sh the points that have been made. I should like my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (about the financing of the schemes. I hope to precisely as I can, to give hon. Members the they want. They were published when the Bil before Parliament. Of course, that was the last I take to heart the criticism that the figure presented with the memorandum. They are av

Mr. Fallon: My hon. Friend, courteously attempted to respond to my point. It is no re him; it is a reflection on the promoters. I am be that it will not do to tell us that the financial i was produced in the last Parliament. There Members present who were not in the last Parl financial information is attached to the prese Order for the Second Reading of which the Cle It will not do to say that financial inform published at the time or that it was available Parliament.

It will not do for another reason. When began at 7 o'clock, somebody straying into it been under the impression that we were relatively minor works. It was only when we ex full implications of clause 2 that we discovered discussing works to be undertaken over two to We are discussing a major infrastructure project in the heart of our capital city. We re fuller financial information.

We require such information for a second rea is a growing, damaging imbalance of public e on the railway network as a whole. Some of th clause 5 are self-financing. The return from the of the existing Holborn viaduct site will cover My hon. Friend has already made it clea remaining works, works nos. 3A, 3B and 4, will financed and will require support from central funds. That means that they will require suppo taxpayer. The most heavily subsidised part of is Network SouthEast in which the works constructed.

My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of S supplied me with the figures before Christmas. passenger service obligation grant to Network is about £232 million. That is almost as much as the entire regional aid budget. Let us leave that out of the Bill for the moment. Let us simply remind ourselves that the money for the construction of the works at King's Cross, through Snow hill, will come from that central Government subsidy. Those works will be financed not simply by London commuters such as my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet, but by taxpayers throughout the country who may never witness them being undertaken.

Mr. Home Robertson: Would the hon. Gentleman have more confidence in the ability of British Rail to finance these works in the medium or long term if it had not gone to such strenuous lengths to deter many of its regular passengers and to sabotage the night services that serve the hon. Gentleman's constituency and my constituents from the Dunbar area?

Mr. Fallon: That is a very strong point. I was always taught at school that those whom the gods would destroy they first make mad. I have now discovered that British Rail's motto must be, "Those services that it wishes to eliminate it first makes secret."

With regard to clause 5, as I established in my reference to the taxpayers' subsidy of these works in London, it would be wholly unfair to proceed with the construction of such a link across the centre of London unless all those who use the railway network and all those who are technically able to do so, commuting on the railway network from those parts that are connected to the London link, have equal access to it. It would be wrong to construct such a link and deny those who had paid for it to the right to travel along it. That means not only equal access but access on a regular and continuing basis, not simply at certain times of the day. This is not a London link for yuppies. It should be used by all those who use the railway network and are able to transfer at points on the east coast line. We shall learn where those points are when my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet replies to the debate.

It is right that, if the taxpayer is subsidising this link across the centre of the capital, all those who wish to have access to the King's Cross line—in particular, the east coast main line—should have access to it at whatever time of day they arrive or leave. Somebody in the north-east — on Tyneside or Teesside — may wish to reach Holborn for a breakfast meeting at 8.30 or 9 am. We are also entitled to consider the position of somebody leaving Holborn who wants to make a business trip to the north-east, the Borders or Scotland.

We are entitled to ask why this appears to be a metropolitan Bill. It has been drafted by people who have no conception of the huge distances involved for those who have to leave London and do their business in the borders or the north-east, or those who live in the Borders or the north-east and have to do their business in London.

Those who drafted the Bill do not understand the implications of not allowing those who live further away on the railway network to share in its benefits. I was not surprised that the metro-cats of Marsham Street could not find much for the Minister to say in support of the Bill. They have no understanding of the huge distances involved or the rights of those in the railway regions that we from the northern constituencies are determined to protect.

We do not find work no. 2 in clause 5. Is that another British Rail service that has somehow become secret? We seem to leap from work no. 1 to work no. 3A. What happened to work no. 2? Was it considered at some earlier stage? Was it something that was included during the last Session that we are not entitled to see during this one? Should inquiries be made at the Vote Office to discover whether part of the Bill became detached in the excitement of the general election? I leave my right hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet to ponder that point.

Works nos. 3A and 3B pertain to King's Cross and, in a sense, lie at the heart of the Bill. As has been said many times in the debate, King's Cross is much more than a station for London commuters, enabling the yuppies who live on the outskirts of London — for example, Huntingdon — to make their money in the centre of London. It is a national station, as has been recognised from E. M. Forster onwards through the pages of our literature.

In undertaking works at this station whose benefits would not be available to those arriving overnight from Scotland or the north-east, the Bill's promoters are depriving King's Cross of part of its historic role in our railways network. They are also depriving the very people whom they seek to help—Londoners and City businessmen—of the opportunity to get out of London into the northern regions to see what is happening there. The promoters are doing no service at all.

I come to work no. 4. The serious point has emerged that it would be inappropriate to proceed with the development of subways and escalators in the vicinity of King's Cross when an inquiry into the tragic events of 18 November has only just been established and it will be months before we know what is recommended by the public inquiry set up under statute to be conducted on a judicial basis by Mr. Desmond Fennell QC. There is a range of issues to be considered — not simply fire detectors and sprinklers but the design of the subways and escalators.

If my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet cannot reconsider works nos. 1, 3A and 3B, I urge him to look again at work no. 4 to determine whether it is right to ask the House to grant powers to authorise these works before the public inquiry into the tragic events of that fire has even begun.

Mr. Chapman: My hon. Friend raises a serious point. I tried to reassure the House in my opening remarks. However great the speed with which the Bill progresses through the House, it will be some months before it reaches the statute book. As my hon. Friend has said, it will be some months before Mr. Desmond Fennell QC reports. The detailed designs of these escalators have yet to be completed. Obviously British Rail will wait on the inquiry's findings. Quite apart from that, British Rail will closely consult the railways inspectorate and the fire services.

Whatever else I cannot do, I hope that I can reassure my hon. Friend on that important point. We are talking about the time span between the Bill being passed by Parliament and these works at King's Cross being completed — under two years. Some people complain that the works should be completed more expeditiously. Others, such as my hon. Friend, who refer to escalators rightly say that we should wait. I hope that I can assure my hon. Friend on that point, which is central to the questions that I asked before preparing to introduce the Bill.

Mr. Fallon: No one could have been more forthcoming and co-operative during this debate than my hon. Friend. He has sought every opportunity to reassure those of us who have had some reservations about the Bill's detailed provisions. His remarks are, to some extent, reassuring.

However, we are talking not just about escalators but about subways and the additional congestion that will be caused precisely because it will take at least two years to complete the work. A large number of additional passengers arriving at and departing from King's Cross may be rerouted along the subways because of the other works to be undertaken under the Bill.

I hope that my hon. Friend will consider carefully the import of his remarks and consider whether it might be better to separate work no. 4 from the others in the Bill, at least until the public inquiry report is available, which I understand will not be until the summer at the earliest. No one has provided any information to the contrary tonight. My hon. Friend might be better advised to return to the House with fresh legislation to seek powers in respect of work no. 4.

I conclude by making two general points. First, I return to clause 22. The Bill takes important powers of compulsory purchase—we have heard nothing of local authorities' response to them — for four years, until 1992. The Bill would allow major works in the heart of our capital city. My hon. Friend and his supporters must make their case for the importance of those powers and justify them.

Secondly, the Bill deals with improvements that will make it easier for those commuting to London—those who enjoy the benefits and southern comforts of the largest subsidy in the provincial rail network. If such benefits are to be conferred on London, it is surely right and proper that they should be enjoyed equally by the rest of the United Kingdom—the taxpayers who are forking out the money. Those who seek power to construct the link must ensure that, as far as practicable, all parts of the country have equal and regular access to it at all times of night and day.

9.37 pm

Mr. A. J. Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed): This has been a very interesting debate. Hon. Members on both sides of the House have referred to matters that had not struck some of us until we set to work on the Bill. That shows the value of the debate, and those who suggested that we should let the Bill go through on the nod at 2.30 pm, with not a word spoken, ought to pause and reflect that complex legislation such as this needs to be discussed in a reasonable way.

Had more time been available for the debate, other hon. Members might have wished to speak. The hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) is a regular user of King's Cross and the hon. Member for Wansbeck (Mr. Thompson) takes a similarly close interest and makes full use of the service. Indeed, the hon. Gentleman would probably use the link line if the transfer arrangements between the main line and the link line proved satisfactory. However, it has not become at all clear that those transfer arrangements will be satisfactory.

I know that the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) would have liked to deal at length with a number of the worries expressed during the debate. Let me say in passing that the promoters could not have had a better or more helpful advocate than the hon. and that we are grateful to him for the way has conducted himself.

Many of us would welcome the opportuni to these discussions at a later debate—we adjourn this debate or discuss the Bill at a l its proceedings if the difficulties have not beer Indeed, we may meet again to discuss a Briti (No. 2) Bill if British Rail does not find it po am sure it could—to deal with Members of more directly and allay their fears so that it necessary to discuss the issues in debates such

The attitude of some in British Rail ha conducive to achieving such an object. If one on the long, tortuous history of railway legi discovers that railway Bills generally pro satisfactorily when the railway company has trouble to ensure that it is meeting the wi service needs of those represented in the Hous it has not.

I was particularly struck and, indeed, distu Government's attitude to the Bill and the reasc advanced for saying so little about it. I do whether the Under-Secretary of State had don of deal with the promoters to keep his re minimum. I was surprised to see him in the thought it was a victory for the "Convert the r roads" lobby. I had expected to see the Minis at the Dispatch Box, because he normally railways and takes such a close interest in the

When the Government's doctrine was en became even more surprised. The Minister s Government's attitude was that the inves justified solely because of the return that coul from the redevelopment opportunities that Basically, the Government are happy about th because they are self-financing. I agree Government that the fact that they are self-fin be welcomed. However, the idea that the Go attitude should be confined to saying, "Well d Rail, you have found a self-financing proj extraordinary when one considers the reven tions that might flow from the continued run services, the rolling stock that will have to be p maintenance of that rolling stock, and the exte the receipts from the service are needed, when of Network SouthEast, one is not surprised deficit or a difference between the revenue ea service and the cost of running it.

Another reason why I was struck particula was that in reply to my intervention the M "Basically it has nothing to do with us." Government who tell British Rail to go away with the job. All that we are concerned about that any deals that it does are self-financing."

I should find that attitude easier to understa taken consistently by the Government. Whe Friends and I, and hon. Members of other p raised other service issues relating to the east line, Ministers have been only too keen to wellington boots, into all the details of the comment on them as if they knew precisely h cost to open a train door at Newcastle centra for a passenger to alight at King's Cross. figures of alleged subsidies to passeners as i intimate with the day-to-day workings of the

Indeed, I have advised Ministers that that is not what hon. Members expect of them because we understand that the Government are somewhat removed from the day-to-day operations of the railways.

However, the Government now seem to have got themselves in the ambiguous position that if British Rail proposes to remove a service, they weigh in with all the arguments that they can muster, but if British Rail is launching a new project, the Government's sole role will be to assess whether it can be financed out of the property development deal upon which it is based. Any railway finance implications, let alone implications for the customers of the railways, are of no concern to the Government. I find that profoundly worrying.

Mr. Jack Thompson: This is an important point. It has not yet been clearly stated that at the time of the sale of the land that is now to be sold to provide the finance for the new project, market forces may be totally different from the way in which they are identified now. Present values may not be applicable 12 months from now when the sale takes place. Has that fact been taken into account?

Mr. Beith: The hon. Gentleman can make his point with even more force having been told that the key figures that are the basis of all this were produced when the Bill was introduced in the previous Parliament. Quite a lot has changed since then, not least in the vicinity of Holborn viaduct station. City firms are shedding labour at a considerable rate and the calculations about the value to the link line of its passing close to the City will need to be reconsidered. Clearly, many other financial factors will change over time.

Mr. Chapman: I want to be as helpful as I can to the House. I may not have the opportunity before 10 o'clock to give all the information that has been asked of me during the debate. However, it may be helpful for the House to know that work no. 1 was estimated on 1 December 1986—that is 13-plus months ago—at about £36 million. A complete schedule was presented to Parliament. The hon. Member for Wansbeck is perfectly correct to say that British Rail does not know the value of the assets on the redevelopable land in the proximity of Holborn viaduct, because the value can change at any time.

Of course, the planning application is pending with the City of London corporation, and quite properly, it is not yet known whether those plans will be acceptable to that local planning authority.

One final point is that the House will be pleased to know that these plans will, I think, commend themselves to the local planning authority, if only because they have just been given the approval of the Royal Fine Arts Commission.

Mr. Beith: The hon. Gentleman makes an interesting point. I shall turn later to the planning issues. I wonder whether the plans have obtained the approval of the royal family, too. Its members take a close interest in developments in the area around St. Paul's.

I am glad to see that the Minister of State has joined us; I hope to come to what he said about the level of subsidy that he thought—incorrectly, as it turned out—applied to certain other British Rail services as compared with the level of subsidy that applies to passengers travelling on this link route from north London through to the southern counties.

One cannot now think of King's Cross station remembering the horrible tragedy that took pla and which so shook the nation. Those of us who station regularly cannot but be moved by the sig bank of flowers that stands outside it, and by the which people have added flowers and messages bank of flowers as the weeks have gone by. I h there will be some sort of permanent memorial, so within the precincts of King's Cross, to those their lives in that terrible tragedy. I hope, too, tha will be learnt from it. It was a horrifying experie many people were directly affected by it.

The fire changed many people's perception station. For many people in the north-east, King has always been the gateway to London, and the if it were properly organised, to travel to other London directly, possibly without even changin —as we had hoped—or at least by making connection, would be welcome to such people.

Many of my constituents come through this ga to London—farmers coming to the Smithfield s instance, although I notice that not so many are this year. Times are not so good for the farming fr as the hon. Member for East Lothian knows from experience. Ministers and church members com numerous church conferences that seem to take London; women's institute members come, as d of schoolchildren, who go to the Tower and see the sights of London. King's Cross is also a gateway o from London, which illustrates the importanc station, upon which so many of these works will b out.

I had not spotted, until the hon. Mem Darlington (Mr. Fallon) pointed it out, the disapp from the Bill of work no. 2. Perhaps, one day, discover what happened to work no. 2 and why, disappeared, works nos. 3 and 4 were not ren accordingly, as would be the normal practice. I that hon. Members will be familiar with E. M. novel, "Howard's End", to which the hon. Me Darlington referred. In it, Margaret Schlegel is me

"To Margaret . . . the station of King's Cross ha suggested Infinity."

I am not referring to the Prime Minister, who does King's Cross as frequently as I would wish; neit she travel on the trains as often as I would wish

"Its very situation—withdrawn a little behind spendours of St. Pancras — implied a comment materialism of life. Those two great arches, c indifferent, shouldering between them an unlovab were fit portals for some eternal adventure, whose iss be prosperous, but would certainly not be expres ordinary language of prosperity."

That is rather a dated view of King's Cross, bec buildings on which the works are to be carried out recognised for their enormous architectural val present a marked contrast between King's Cros Pancras, where Giles Gilbert Scott worked frustrations of not having been allowed to build Foreign Office — instead, he built a Gothic Lewis Cubitt, who had been told that a good stati be built at King's Cross for less than the co ornamental archway at Euston square—its rem one of the early tragedies of modernisation—s produced a remarkable building which was per first great essay in functional architecture. It precursor of a whole generation of architecture against which people are now turning, but it must be maintained, preserved and recognised.

[Mr. Beith]

In recent years, work carried out at King's Cross has tried to be sympathetic to the character of King's Cross. I know that the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet has a close interest in buildings and architecture and, with his training, he understands it very well. Recent works have tried to be sympathetic to King's Cross and I hope that the works to be carried out under the Bill will do no harm to that very important and historic building. That is a difficult matter for people to deal with, but it is important. I am puzzled by the attitude of British Rail management to it.

The redoubtable Mr. Prideaux is one of the many members of British Rail management who have been involved in arguments with me and with other hon. Members present. He said:

"Euston's environment for overnight services is superior to that at King's Cross."

He is arguing that King's Cross is basically an unsuitable station even for passengers who alight from an overnight train so that they can go down the escalator provided by the Bill to join the link line to go through London to Holborn and possibly to destinations to the south of London.

Mr. Prideaux says that the environment there is not suitable for that purpose. I cannot understand why, because King's Cross has refreshment room facilities, newspaper stalls, a Pullman lounge and all the facilities that one might require either on alighting in the early morning or leaving late at night. However, I wish that the refreshment kiosk stayed open a bit later at night, because at 11.30 pm one is confined to a burger stand. The facilities are adequate for the purpose, and will be particularly so if the link line is there.

I cannot see the sense of diverting all the overnight traffic from Scotland into Euston if the link line was about to be provided. The possibility that people could move directly from an overnight service on to a train which would take them into central London or out to destinations south of London, should have been foreseen by British Rail when it made its extraordinary management decision to transfer all overnight services to Euston. At the back of that desire to transfer, there seems to be a belief that in some way King's Cross is not an adequate station. I reject that view and it is implicitly rejected in the decision in the Bill to make King's Cross part of this service.

Mr. Trotter: For the reasons that the hon. Gentleman has advanced, if King's Cross is inadequate for people who simply want to get on an overnight train, it must be a great deal more inadequate for the many people who use it during the day.

Mr. Beith: The hon. Gentleman is right, and I shall come to the problems related to the points about congestion that were made earlier in the debate.

One matter casts a strange light on the Bill. I went to York to discuss British Rail's plans to withdraw overnight services from the Borders. At that meeting I discovered that British Rail planned to remove them from Tyneside as well. Nothing had been heard about that decision. Indeed, I found afterwards that a press release had been issued at precisely the time that I was t the InterCity manager to discuss the pr that one of the results of the chang services would be that King's Cross closed after 10 o'clock at night. How d the provisions of the Bill?

Clearly, the Bill envisages that provide a regular service for passeng directly to King's Cross station or al Holborn viaduct or stations to the sou understand how an apparent att economies by closing King's Cross at the provisions of the Bill.

Problems will arise because of co Cross while the works take place. The Cross is not with the overnight services of the build-up of daytime services and them. When the overnight services dep is plenty of room on the concourse at K the passengers, even though the tra Minister should realise that British Rail over his eyes when it says that nobody u services. The evening sleeper service t Edinburgh is full night after night. personal experience. The southbou Newcastle is frequently full, even if the is not.

The congestion problem arises duri of the large number of InterCity trai station for a very short time. They ar is a case of capital being intensively the consequences is that often the train platform for the 20-minute or half-hou that passengers can get directly on to be boarding the train in the last five result is that a large number of people King's Cross station concourse.

It is extraordinary; it is like Hampto entire station concourse is marked rather like the lines on the carpet in t great serpentine shape. The queues another like an Indian snake-charmer' wind around to get from one side of platform, or sometimes proceed in the queue B, queue C and queue D. It is system, and it is a tribute to the fortitu the British people — especially Northumbrian and Scottish travellers — that they bear the queueing s tolerance, and show so little irritation, e very uncomfortable and inconvenient

Mr. Trotter: Does the hon. Gentlem of the features of the maze at King's Cr lack of anyone in authority to hel Presumably that will also apply to the get down to the Holborn link.

Mr. Beith: That is true. I have seen I find—particularly if I am wearing anything which faintly resembles auth asked questions by members of the pub can get to, say, the metropolitan line.

Problems of congestion are bound a serious displacement of other activit caused by the works that are taking escalator and ticket hall must be built. I foresee considerable problems arising from building of the ticket hall, which is one of the explicit provisions in the Bill. Someone will have to explain to the staff at King's Cross how to relate the activities of one ticket hall to those of the other.

My experience at King's Cross—and, I am sure, that of other hon. Members—has been very disconcerting. For two or three months it was impossible to book a sleeper to Alnmouth, in my constituency, because the ticket office had been told that the train did not stop there. Although the barrier, with a notice on it, was nearer to that ticket office than the new ticket hall proposed in the Bill, the staff seemed unable to observe the words written above the platform informing passengers that the train stopped at Alnmouth. Unless there is some co-ordination, there will be experiences similar to the experience—which I described in an earlier intervention—of the unfortunate Nigerians arriving in Milton Keynes.

Let me now deal with the important issue of the interchange between the link service that the Bill provides and other services out of King's Cross. It has been a great disappointment to hon. Members that there seems to be no prospect of through running, despite concern in the north about through running into the Channel tunnel and beyond.

As the hon. Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) pointed out, any support given from the north-east to the Channel tunnel, although it was pretty muted, was at least based on the assumption that there had to be a rail tunnel, with a direct rail connection. If the Bill's promoters would say that the Bill would assist through running through the tunnel that is being built in London, so that direct services to the continent would be an early possibility, it would be enormously welcome, in relation to freight as well as passenger travel.

It is important that the north-east should gain the benefits of rail haulage, which could provide the area with distinct economic advantages if there was direct linking through the Channel tunnel. However, we were told that the loading gauge made through running unlikely, unless there was some rolling stock specifically designed to enable through running from the east coast main line on to the link line and beyond.

Mr. Chapman rose in his place and claimed to move, That the Question be now put.

Question put, That the Question be now put:—

The House divided: Ayes 123, Noes 34.

Division No. 147] [9.59 pm

AYES

Arnold, Tom (Hazel Grove)
Atkinson, David
Bevan, David Gilroy
Blaker, Rt Hon Sir Peter
Bonsor, Sir Nicholas
Boscawen, Hon Robert
Bottomley, Peter
Bottomley, Mrs Virginia
Brandon-Bravo, Martin
Bright, Graham
Burt, Alistair
Butterfill, John
Carlisle, Kenneth (Lincoln)
Carttiss, Michael
Chapman, Sydney
Chope, Christopher
Clark, Sir W. (Croydon S)
Coombs, Anthony (Wyre F'rest)
Coombs, Simon (Swindon)
Cormack, Patrick
Cousins, Jim
Cran, James
Davies, Q. (Stamf'd & Spald'g)
Day, Stephen
Devlin, Tim
Dorrell, Stephen
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord James
Eggar, Tim
Evans, David (Welwyn Hatf'd)
Favell, Tony
Fenner, Dame Peggy
Field, Barry (Isle of Wight)
Finsberg, Sir Geoffrey
Fookes, Miss Janet
Forman, Nigel
Forsyth, Michael (Stirling)
Gale, Roger
Garel-Jones, Tristan
Gill, Christopher
Goodson-Wickes, Dr Charles
Gorman, Mrs Teresa
Gorst, John
Gow, Ian
Gower, Sir Raymond
Grant, Sir Anthony (CambsSW)
Greenway, Harry (Ealing N)
Greenway, John (Rydale)
Griffiths, Peter (Portsmouth N)
Ground, Patrick
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hanley, Jeremy
Hargreaves, A. (B'ham H'll Gr')
Hargreaves, Ken (Hyndburn)
Harris, David
Howarth, Alan (Strat'd-on-A)
Howarth, G. (Cannock & B'wd)
Howell, Rt Hon David (G'dford)
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunter, Andrew
Irvine, Michael
Jack, Michael
Jackson, Robert
Janman, Timothy
King, Roger (B'ham N'thfield)
Knapman, Roger
Knowles, Michael
Lee, John (Pendle)
Lennox-Boyd, Hon Mark
Lightbown, David
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lord, Michael
McCrindle, Robert
Macfarlane, Sir Neil
MacKay, Andrew (E Berkshire)
Maclean, David
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, M. (Newbury)
Mans, Keith
Martin, David (Po
Miller, Hal
Mitchell, Andrew
Mitchell, David (N
Monro, Sir Hector
Moore, Rt Hon Jo
Moss, Malcolm
Neubert, Michael
Nicholls, Patrick
Nicholson, David
Onslow, Rt Hon C
Oppenheim, Phill
Paice, James
Patnick, Irvine
Porter, David (Wa
Portillo, Michael
Raffan, Keith
Rhys Williams, S
Riddick, Graham
Rost, Peter
Rowe, Andrew
Ryder, Richard
Shaw, David (Dou
Shaw, Sir Michae
Shephard, Mrs G
Shepherd, Colin
Sims, Roger
Skeet, Sir Trevor
Speed, Keith
Stern, Michael
Stewart, Andrew
Stradling Thomas
Summerson, Hug
Thompson, D. (C
Thompson, Patric
Thurnham, Peter
Townsend, Cyril
Trippier, David
Waddington, Rt H
Walker, Bill (T'si
Warren, Kenneth
Watts, John
Wheeler, John
Widdecombe, Mi

Tellers for the Ay
Mr. Michael B
Mr. Timothy W

NOES

Ashdown, Paddy
Beith, A. J.
Buchan, Norman
Campbell, Menzies (Fife NE)
Canavan, Dennis
Carlile, Alex (Mont'g)
Clelland, David
Cox, Tom
Cunliffe, Lawrence
Dixon, Don
Eadie, Alexander
Flannery, Martin
Foster, Derek
Foulkes, George
Fyfe, Mrs Maria
Golding, Mrs Llin
Haynes, Frank
Home Robertson, John
Lamond, James
Leadbitter, Ted
Livsey, Richard
McKay, Allen (P
McWilliam, John
Meale, Alan
Patchett, Terry
Powell, Ray (Og
Prescott, John
Snape, Peter
Thompson, Jack
Trotter, Neville
Vaz, Keith
Wallace, James
Williams, Alan W
Wise, Mrs Audre

Tellers for the N
Mr. Archy Ki
Mr. Michael F

Question accordingly agreed to.

Question, That the Bill be now read a Sec*accordingly and agreed to.*

Bill read a Second time and committed.

Hong Kong

Postponed proceeding resumed.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House takes note of the White Paper on the Annual Report on Hong Kong 1987 (Cm. 293) and endorses the policies which the Government is pursuing to maintain Hong Kong's future prosperity and stability.

Food Protectio

10.9 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secre Scotland (Mr. Michael Forsyth): I be

That the Food Protection (Emergenc 1988 (S.I., 1988, No. 11), dated 7th Jan which was laid before this House o approved.

The order revokes and re-enacts w provisions of the Food Prote Prohibitions) (No. 3) Order 1987 and (Emergency Prohibitions) (No. 4) Ord the emergency prohibitions impose restricting various activities to preve food rendered unsuitable for that pur of the escape in April 1986 of radioact the nuclear reactor at Chernobyl. [In

Mr. George Foulkes (Carrick, C Valley): On a point of order, Mr. Spe in what the Minister is saying, but I of it.

Mr. Speaker: I sympathise with th

Mr. Forsyth: The order also desig out the areas in Scotland affected b which the movement of sheep and in of sheep are prohibited. As hon. Mem restrictions on the slaughter of sheep areas and the supply of meat derive extend throughout the United Kingd

Hon. Members will know that in the minimum disruption to normal bus Government announced on 13 introduction of a mark and release sch which failed a monitoring test for moved from an area where the move of sheep had been restricted by or slaughtered. Those sheep were painte a distinctive paint mark of a parti denoted that they came from a restric not be slaughtered until they had su monitoring test and were ear-tagged to until there was a general amnesty on colour, following comprehensive testi consumption of the sheep would no lo to health.

Three colours are used in rotation green, blue and apricot. The order pro Monday 11 January, slaughter contro sheep originating in the post-Cherno are lifted. It follows a substantial fall i in such sheep, all of which were mark September 1987, following their move

In addition, with effect from Mon colour mark used to identify hither which are to leave a restricted area monitoring test for radioactivity is ch apricot. As with previous colour chang is to enable newly marked animals from sheep which have moved earlier area onto clean pasture, thus facili release from controls of blue-mark readings for radioactivity permit it.

Neither sheep marked blue on or 1987, nor sheep marked apricot on 1988 may be slaughtered unless they successfully pass a re-monitoring test for radioactivity and are identified with a special ear-tag.

Those changes in colour continue the central control, designed to protect the food chain, over the movement and slaughter of sheep from the restricted areas and enable sheep once contaminated to unacceptably high levels of radioactivity and in respect of which these levels have now decreased to acceptable levels, to be slaughtered.

Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): If there are any difficulties after this year, are there any contingency plans about future colour arrangements?

Mr. Forsyth: If the hon. Gentleman has followed the debate—I am sure he has followed the subject closely—he will know that the three colours operate in rotation and that there is no need for additional colours to be added. The additional scheme of monitoring in the slaughter-houses continues to give added protection to the food chain.

I commend the order to the House.

10.14 pm

Mr. John Home Robertson (East Lothian): I want to know who chose the colour apricot used in the scheme. I am grateful to the Minister for giving us a brief explanation of the way in which the colour coding scheme is going round in circles. It sounds rather like a variation on the alliance merger negotiations. I am sorry that neither the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan) nor the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye (Mr. Kennedy) can be with us tonight. I understand that they may be taking part in something of a greetin' meetin', in keeping with the tactics that the leader of the SDP has recently discussed.

I am grateful to the Minister for giving a brief account of the way in which the restriction scheme is operating. I understand that the areas covered are as before, and that therefore the same number of farms and broadly the same number of sheep are subject to the restrictions. I understand from the National Farmers Union of Scotland that it is as happy as can be expected about the way in which the scheme is operated. Indeed, everyone involved with farming in Scotland recognises how important it is that consumers should be reassured that meat reaching the market place is safe for consumption. It is obviously important that the Government should continue to operate such schemes for as long as necessary.

With that in mind, I should be grateful if the Minister could give us some suggestions about how long the Government's experts advise that the restrictions should remain in effect. This morning my hon. Friend the Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark), the shadow Minister of Agriculture, gave me a copy of a cutting from the Manx Independent of 8 September 1987. That article quoted an unnamed scientist from the industrial pollution inspectorate in Scotland who confirmed that sheep farms could remain under Government restrictions for years. He told the paper:

> "Caesium levels will decay by half their value in 30 years, and because of the nature of much upland pasture, readings which are considerably above the trigger levels in operation, suggest that caesium pollution could be a problem for many years."

Clearly that is a matter of some concern. It has bearing on the considerations that the House and the nation may give to future aspects of nuclear power, s disposal and so on. Over the years, we ha reassurances that we have no need to worry will be all right. We have been told that not could go wrong and that if it does we will be and that there are ways of dealing with su However, here we are facing a problem t hundreds of miles away nearly two years ag

Mr. Foulkes: Thousands of miles away.

Mr. Home Robertson: Yes, indeed. I am p hon. Friend. That problem occurred nearly t but farms, businesses and people's jobs and v being disrupted in Scotland.

I make no complaint about the fi Government are introducing the order. Ind heartedly support it. However, I should be Minister took this opportunity to say how such restrictions are likely to be in effect.

10.17 pm

Sir Hector Monro (Dumfries): Although h may greet the debate with some hilarity, I bel is a serious side to the problem, on two cou Government were quick to react to the introduce the scheme, soon after the Chern in the interests of consumers. However, at t it was equally important that a scheme shoul to help farmers sell their fat lambs at the ap and to ensure that they were clear contamination.

I believe that the Government and Department, of Agriculture and Fisherie administered the scheme, often with partic have done so with great good will and Farmers are satisfied that they were helpe difficult period by that Department, and p regional offices such as that in Dumfries.

In the first six months when the scheme difficulties arose. I appreciate that it took that scheme to be understood in the mark farms. However, the compensation that wa arrangements that were made have, in the lo satisfactory. However, I appreciate that have been greatly inconvenienced by the or in south-west Scotland.

I am grateful for the opportunity to than and his Department for being so helpful an ing and for administering the scheme in possible.

10.19 pm

Mr. Richard Livsey (Brecon and Radno for being a fellow Celt and not a true Sc Scottish, and in the past I farmed 1,500 acr so I know a little about the farming sce sensible to continue with the order. We hav problem in north Wales. The hon. Member f The Border (Mr. Maclean) has also expe problems in his constituency.

The main point is that the health of the protected. All farmers accept that. That is requirement of the order. It is also necess farmers' products and markets long term.

The CEGB proposal to conduct an Trawsfynydd power station in Wales is ir

[Mr. Richard Livsey]

could cause problems if it is not monitored carefully. I do not think that it is wise to proceed with it. It should be remembered that the original experiment at Chernobyl caused all the trouble that we are discussing. It must also be remembered that farmers are now into the third year of disruption and are not able to market sheep from the upland areas. The Scottish Office should ensure that those farmers are adequately compensated. Considerable compensation has been given but, as I have just said, this is the third year in which the upland sheep farming system will be affected.

Upland areas throughout the United Kingdom have been affected. The Scottish colleges should monitor farm accounts closely to find out the long-term effect on the profitability of the Scottish upland farms. The Government should try to ensure that there is not a continuing decline in farm incomes. Therefore, the Minister should take careful note of the monitoring from the point of view of the contamination of the sheep and the effect on the profitability of sheep farming systems.

10.21 pm

Mr. Bill Walker (Tayside, North): I welcome the introduction of the order and the fact that the Government are continuing to act sensibly and sensitively, as they have done from the outset, on the problems faced by sheep farmers. After all, it was not the action of sheep farmers that brought about the difficulties. It is wise to remember, as the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) has said, that such things are with us and that they could happen again.

What comes through clearly is that, whatever we decide to do in the United Kingdom, it will not in the end have any impact upon totalitarian regimes wherever they are, and particularly on the one that initiated the problem. We can only hope that our example will encourage or embarrass that country so that never again will we face a similar situation.

The Government have adopted a realistic approach. We have dealt with the effects of the fallout and we have put into operation a system of monitoring that continues to protect the consumer while at the same time ensuring that farmers do not go out of business during the term of the order. On that the Government are to be congratulated.

10.23 pm

Mr. George Foulkes (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley): I declare an interest from the point of view of my constituency, which is affected by the order and by the contamination, as the Minister knows. As the hon. Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) knows only too well, my constituency is large, being 800 square miles in area. It is interesting to note, in view of the debate in which I participated earlier, that my constituency is twice the size of Hong Kong, which has a population of 5·5 million. My constituency is sparsely populated; it is rural, with many high parts, and has a heavy rainfall. It was one of the areas most seriously affected by contamination because, unfortunately, we had very heavy rainfall just after the Chernobyl incident.

I agree with the hon. Member for Dumfries that this is not a humorous or facetious issue. It is important in terms of compensation and effect. We must remember that this incident, involving serious contamination and restriction on the slaughter of sheep, took place almost two years ago, yet it is still having a serious effect. We must also remember that it was not a nuclear explosion. It was a conventional explosion in a nuclear power station resulting in the emission of radioactive material which went into the atmosphere, was transported through the atmosphere and deposited, in particular, in Scotland, Wales and Cumbria. It was a case of caesium contamination, which decays very slowly.

It is a very serious matter, but there is no harm in bringing humour into a serious matter—as I have been known to do from time to time — because it can sometimes illustrate a point extremely well, as the Minister managed to do in his reference to the colouring of sheep.

This matter has caused a great deal of concern in my constituency. I have raised the post-Chernobyl effect with the Minister on several occasions, but, like his predecessor, he tends to shrug it off in a Pavlovian way. In my younger days, I studied psychology a little, including the matters studied by Pavlov. Scottish Office Ministers tend to react in that sort of way when hon. Members, particularly Opposition Members, raise such issues.

I have mentioned on previous occasions the effect of the build-up of radioactivity after the Chernobyl incident in the bodies of people in south-west Scotland. Although there is a restriction on the slaughter of sheep which register above the 1,000 becquerel level, contaminated sheep below that level are still being slaughtered and sent to market. Sheep are also being slaughtered and being sent to market at a later stage when the becquerel level falls.

There has not been sufficient study of the other ways in which accumulated radioactivity gets into the body through food chains and accumulates. If that effect is evident in sheep and lambs, it must surely be present in the bodies of other animals that we eat. It must be present in grain and root crops and is therefore coming through all the food chains into the body. That is why I have been urging the Minister to institute a systematic study of whole-body monitoring.

Mr. Livsey: The becquerel level of a married couple farming in north Wales has been monitored. The becquerel level recorded in the wife was 4,500 and the level in the husband was 4,800.

Mr. Foulkes: I can give other similar examples. The Minister, the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Lang), brought the matter to the attention of the media. He supplied other figures for me and then shrugged them off. I regret that he does so. There were high radioactivity levels for trout in Loch Doon, for rabbits — the level for rabbits in my constituency was very high—and for deer. Of course, radioactive material is concentrated in animals' bodies.

I have been arguing for systematic whole-body monitoring. The Minister said that it is already happening because volunteers are going to east Kilbride. Professor Baxter and his staff at the Scottish university research and reactor centre are doing whole-body monitoring. But that is not a systematic study to try to compare one part of the country with another. Of course, volunteers are not always those who need to have their radioactivity levels checked. I hope that the Minister will reconsider the matter. Opposition Members were worried recently by a report in The Observer that the radiation monitoring unit at the Ministry of Defence had warned against——

Sir Hector Monro: That is quite incorrect information. A fortnight ago, I received a letter from the Ministry of Defence—it was well publicised in the press—stating that that was a lot of nonsense.

Mr. Foulkes: If that is the case, I look forward to receiving a copy of the letter from the hon. Gentleman. The information was certainly not refuted at the time. Many weeks ago, a full account appeared in The Observer, including a quotation from a Ministry of Defence spokesman, stating that the Department had warned against military personnel going to the south-west of Scotland because of the danger of radioactivity in the Purple Warrior exercise. I observed that exercise and had certain comments to make.

There is general concern not just because of the post-Chernobyl effect but because there are other potentially radioactive nuclear establishments in the area. There is Hunterston in the north. Right in the centre there is the radioactive establishment of great interest at Chapelcross, which many people forget. Not only is it a generating station but it has other significant functions as a producer of tritium and plutonium. Therefore it is important in terms of the weapons programme. It is right in the centre of south-west Scotland. Sellafield is south of south-west Scotland.

We know about the concern that has been expressed about Sellafield. The latest Sellafield proposal is that the enriched plutonium that is brought here from Japan for reprocessing should be flown back from Prestwick airport. A previous Energy Select Committee pointed out that the most dangerous radioactivity scenario that one can envisage is an aeroplane crash. The hon. Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) is an expert on the matter. There is concern about road and rail transportation and possible accidents. The worse possible scenario is an air crash, a subsequent fire, and the effect of radioactive discharges and the contamination that should take place.

We in south-west Scotland consider that the area is targeted. [Interruption.] The hon. Member for Dumfries mutters away. His majority is reducing progressively as mine rises progressively. Bit by bit, the people of south-west Scotland are giving their verdict. There will soon be few Tories in that area. I receive letters from the hon. Gentleman's constituency and from the neighbouring constituency, stating that the Conservative Members are not adequately reflecting local people's concerns.

There is genuine concern that the south-west of Scotland is targeted. Of course, we cannot blame Chernobyl; it was entirely an accident. There was certainly no intention to target any part of the country. It was an unfortunate thing, and it added to people's worries. They are already concerned about the incidence of radioactivity and the potential for further radioactive contamination in the area.

I hope that the Minister will give a more positive reaction about the monitoring for which not only I but other people have been calling. If he does not, we shall continue to press him in order to obtain a response. I hope that he will, for once, show some concern. He is following the path of his predecessor in accepting the bland assurances that he is given by his Department and regurgitating them. He should remember what happened to his predecessor the Earl of Ancram, who is no longer a Member of the House.

10.35 pm

Mr. Michael Forsyth: By leave of the House, I shall try to answer some of the main points that have been made.

The hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) said that I follow a long line of Ministers who repeat what the Department says. I took the trouble to read some of the speeches that the hon. Gentleman has made on this issue. He seems to make the same point over and over again and, although it is answered, he does not accept the answers that are given. He has a characteristic of trying to stir up anxiety about these issues because of his particular antipathy to nuclear power. It is slightly mischievous of him to create needless concern among his constituents.

With regard to the hon. Gentleman's point about whole-body monitoring, he knows very well that there is a project being carried out at East Kilbride, which he mentioned. He says that it is not a proper project because it is based on particular selected volunteers. My understanding is that to make the data from the project valid, it is essential to have volunteers whose dietary behaviour has been considered to obtain worthwhile results. I would rather take the word of the scientist responsible for the project on the best ways of achieving that than take that of the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Foulkes: Will the Minister confirm that scientists have put to him a proposal that has not been approved by the Department?

Mr. Forsyth: We are supporting the project that is currently being undertaken.

Mr. Foulkes: The Minister is dodging.

Mr. Forsyth: I am not dodging at all. It has shown quite clearly that the assumptions on which our action was based were valid.

I am grateful to my hon. Friends the Members for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) and for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) for the tributes that they paid to the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, which handled an extremely difficult matter extremely well. It has served the people of Scotland very well indeed.

The hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley must not try to imply that the levels of radioactivity concerned are anything but nominal. Even at the 1,000 bq/kg level in lamb, if someone consumed 5 kg per year it would be equivalent to the levels in half an X-ray. We should bear that point in mind.

The hon. Gentleman asked about deer, rabbits, trout, grouse and other animals that have been affected. One would have to eat about 20 grouse per year to reach the levels with which we are concerned. The higher levels that are sometimes referred to occurred on the leg meat of the grouse, and there is not much leg meat on a grouse.

Mr. Foulkes: I did not mention grouse. I mentioned rabbits, trout and deer. I specifically did not mention grouse because very few of my constituents are able to afford it. Some of them manage to catch trout, and the Minister will recall that the level in trout in Loch Doon was about 4,500 bq/kg. The Minister is shrugging off concern about such information.

Mr. Forsyth: The reason why I mentioned grouse—the hon. Gentleman is right, he did not mention grouse specifically—is because the highest levels of radioactivity have been encountered on the leg meat of grouse; I was giving the worst case to reassure the hon. Gentleman's constituents. The levels of bq/kg discovered in deer, rabbit and trout are very much less. The point that I am trying to get across to the hon. Gentleman is that the quantity of meat consumed determines the dosage. The dosages concerned are very low and are comparable to half an X-ray. It is irresponsible of the hon. Gentleman to imply that his constituents are somehow threatened. If they were, the Department would have taken action, as it has done over the sheep problems.

[Mr. Forsyth]

The hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) asked why we chose particular colours. It arose because of the dyes. I am sure that he will be relieved to know that red is used only in England and not in Scotland. The hon. Gentleman assumed that the number of farms affected would be broadly the same, and went on to say that this problem would be with us for a considerable time. This year 69 farms are covered, compared with more than 2,500 the previous year. The worries expressed by the hon. Gentleman and some of his colleagues do not appear to be reflected in the number of farms affected.

The hon. Gentleman talked about sheep farms being affected for years to come and quoted the 30-year half-life of caesium. What matters is not the half-life of caesium but the time that it takes for the caesium to be dispersed. That is affected by rainfall, soil and vegetation structure, and so on.

Mr. Home Robertson: The Minister referred to the 69 farms covered. I understand that that is precisely the same number of farms that were covered by the order that we debated on 16 November, which, incidentally, included a number of farms that had not been covered by previous orders. There seems to be an indication that there was a build-up in some areas. I press the hon. Gentleman again to take the opportunity to give some sign of the Government's view, on the strength of the scientific advice available to them, of how much longer this type of restriction is likely to have to remain in force.

Mr. Forsyth: There are 69 farms involved, and about 124,000 of the sheep population in Scotland of 8·8 million are affected. The hon. Gentleman is right to point out that some additional farms came within the system. As he has studied these matters, he will know that, for example, the structure of the vegetation in some areas results in a concentration of caesium. That is why some farms came back into the system, as I explained when we debated the matter previously, along with the orders that applied to other parts of the United Kingdom.

The Government will continue to operate the system s long as our monitoring indicates that it is necessary to d so to protect the food chain. I hope that the hon Gentleman supports us.

Mr. Home Robertson: I am sure that the whole Hous would support any responsible Government in applyin restrictions where they are necessary. I am trying to pres the Minister to throw some light on one point. I am certai that his officials have given him some information on th likely prognosis. How long is it likely that such restriction will have to remain in force, either on these farms or o others? Are we talking about weeks, months or, indeed years?

Mr. Forsyth: The hon. Gentleman may believe that th Scottish Office is omniscient, but it does not have th qualities of precognition. There is no way of predictin exactly how quickly dispersal of the caesium will take. Th position that the hon. Gentleman appeared to think existed is not nearly as bad as he suggested.

The hon. Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Livsey referred to compensation. To date, the compensation paid in Scotland amounts to £1·4 million. The hon. Gentleman talked about the tests to be carried out in a nuclear power station, which is something of a red herring. I refer him to the excellent reply by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in the House yesterday, which he obviously has not had an opportunity to read.

We shall keep the situation in Scotland under review to ascertain how far restrictions will need to be maintained in 1988. For the immediate future, however, we believe that the present movement and slaughter controls represent the most practicable way of ensuring the continued safety of the food chain and of maintaining public confidence with the minimum disruption to farmers' normal husbandry practices. I commend the order to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That the Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) Order 1988 (S.I., 1988, No. 11), dated 7th January 1988, a copy of which was laid before this House on 11th January, be approved.

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS, &c.

Fees and Charges

Motion made, and Question put forthwith pursuant to Standing Order No. 101 (Standing Committees on Statutory Instruments, &c.),

That the draft Department of Trade and Industry (Fees) Order 1987, which was laid before this House on 4th December, be approved.—[Mr. Peter Lloyd.]

Question agreed to.

Exhaust Emission Control

Motion made and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Peter Lloyd.]

10.45 pm

Mr. Graham Bright (Luton, South): The impact of the motor car on our lives is obvious to us all. It is an essential means of transport for business and leisure activities for the majority of the population. Indeed, no modern economy could survive or prosper without it. The growing number of vehicles on our roads has created a series of problems — congestion, inadequate traffic-carrying capacity and a shortage of parking spaces in our towns and cities. We are all familiar with those problems.

The Government and local authorities rightly give high priority to the task of tackling those problems. However, there is a second concern — less obvious but equally serious. We have become much more conscious of the effects of vehicle exhaust on the atmosphere. That was one of the reasons for our welcome decision to move from the use of leaded to the use of unleaded petrol. But car engines are also the source of a substantial proportion of the carbon monoxide, nitrogen oxides and unburnt hydrocarbons being pumped into the air every single day.

I do not pretend to be a medical expert, but I know that the harmful effects of the emissions are widely accepted. More than 90 per cent. of the carbon monoxide detected in cities in the United States, which has far more stringent standards than we have, comes from car exhausts. Carbon monoxide is a poison that reduces the flow of oxygen into the blood. People with weak hearts and the very young suffer extra strain even at low levels of exposure.

The second major source of pollution is to be found in the oxides of nitrogen. Admittedly, cars are not normally responsible for as high a proportion of these as of carbon monoxide in the atmosphere. They are responsible perhaps for only 30 to 40 per cent. in most urban areas. Even a small concentration has been shown to cause respiratory problems for children and asthmatics—something that concerns me as an asthmatic.

Finally, there are the unburnt hydrocarbons, which, in combination with nitrogen oxides, have been identified as a major cause of acid rain and photochemical smog. Two years ago, I had the dubious privilege of seeing the disastrous results of acid rain pollution on the Black forest in West Germany. It would be most unwise to think that those effects occur only there and in Norway. Every time that we get a really fine summer day without strong winds, we also get ozone pollution outdoors at levels of concentration well above those permitted in factories by the factory inspectors. There is no escaping those effects; they are all around us.

Other countries have acted to control such emissions. The Clean Air Act passed in the United States in 1970 required motor manufacturers to cut atmospheric pollution from vehicle exhausts. The technology needed to do that was available in the form of autocatalysts. Since those became compulsory in 1975, carbon monoxide and hydrocarbon emissions have fallen by 90 per cent.—as a result of oxidation catalysts being fitted to the exhausts of new cars. Since 1981, when the three-way catalysts capable of removing nitrogen oxides also became compulsory, the emission of that gas has dropped by 75 per cent. Therefore, it is not surprising that other countries such as Australia, Canada and Japan have followed the American lead.

Here in Europe, members of the Stockholm group have adopted the United States emission standards. Austria, Sweden, Switzerland and Norway have all decided to take that course. In the European Community, West Germany, Holland and Luxembourg have used fiscal incentives to promote the use of autocatalysts.

As a result of the Luxembourg compromise in 1985 — I emphasise the word "compromise" — the Commission produced a draft directive requiring cars with a capacity of more than 2 litres to have three-way catalytic converters fitted by 1989; those with engines between 1·4 and 2 litres would either have to have three-way catalysts or lean-burn engines fitted with oxidation catalysts, while those under 1·4 litres would require lean-burn engines alone.

I now understand—this is one reason why I have sought this debate—that the Community's Environment Ministers agreed at their meeting on 3 December that the directive should now be issued. I understand also that they have not yet decided what should happen about small cars. I understand further that Denmark is to go it alone and have more stringent controls. I say, "Good for Denmark." That is undoubtedly progress. My hon. Friend will be entitled to claim credit for that on both economic and technical grounds when he replies. However, the key question is whether it is an entirely appropriate solution in the long term.

This issue is of great importance to my constituency, where General Motors' main United Kingdom plant, Vauxhall, is situated, and to the British-based motor manufacturing industry in general.

There is no doubt that we have the technology to solve the problem. Indeed, a British company, Johnson Matthey, pioneered the development of autocatalysts and is still the world leader in this field. That company, together with General Motors, is a major exporter of autocatalysts to the American and European markets. The difficulty that motor manufacturers based in Britain and suppliers like Johnson Matthey will face lies in the mixture of lean-burn and autocatalysts technology that is proposed in the directive.

It is not true to claim that lean-burn technology in itself offers a solution. Lean-burn engines cut emissions of nitrogen oxides at low speeds, but increase them at higher speeds. There has been some misleading, not to say irresponsible, advertising by one of our major motor manufacturers on that point. Furthermore, the leaner the engine, the higher the hydrocarbon emissions. That explains the need for oxidation catalysts to reduce carbon monoxide and hydrocarbon emissions on lean-burn engines.

The study conducted by the Warren Spring laboratory for the Department of the Environment suggests that, on official traffic forecasts, the adoption of the directive will reduce nitrogen oxide emissions from vehicles by between 12 and 32 per cent. by 2010. If three-way catalysts were fitted to all cars, the estimated reduction would be between 60 and 69 per cent.

The directive offers a second-best solution, even if it is adopted now. A delay in its adoption until the 1990s will simply put back the date at which atmospheric pollution begins to be reduced.

I appreciate that one or two manufacturers face difficulties in completing their engine technology to accommodate autocatalysts on all their models. But all our manufacturers are already faced with the task of meeting

[Mr. Graham Bright]

American emission standards, if they are exporting. They will have to confront the problems of meeting those standards and complying with the much less rigorous European Community requirements in the 1990s. I do not believe that that is a satisfactory long-term prospect. Two of our major producers of motor vehicles are American, so they have the technology because that is what they provide in the United States. There is no reason why that technology should not be transferred.

The alternative is obviously to adopt three-way catalysts for models of all sizes, which is what I would prefer. Such catalysts are capable of dealing with unburnt hydrocarbons, carbon monoxide and nitrogen oxides, and of converting them into harmless carbon dioxide, water and nitrogen. On environmental grounds, that is a clearly preferable course. I recognise that extra costs would be incurred by motor manufacturers and, in due course, by car purchasers. The basic cost of a catalyst is now about £50, although further modifications to an engine have to be made if one is fitted. In West Germany, where identical models with and without autocatalysts capable of meeting the proposed European standards on emission are available, the average price is about £214, and the figures of £500 to £1,000 that have been bandied around by some critics are highly exaggerated.

It is equally untrue to suggest that the fitting of autocatalysts has a dramatically adverse effect on engine performance and fuel economy. The figures that I have seen of tests on continental manufacturers' models suggest reductions in maximum speed for medium-sized cars—between 1·4 and 2 litres—of just over three miles per hour, and for larger cars of more than 2 litres of fractionally more than two miles per hour. On fuel economy, there was a marginal loss for small cars of 1·3 miles per gallon, and for large cars of 0·2 miles per gallon; medium-sized cars actually gained. I have taken part in a scientifically monitored test that confirmed those findings. The results are, I believe, acceptable in the light of the environmental gain offered—even when the cars are pushed, no difference in performance can be found.

The technical case for supporting three-way catalysts rather than the directive's compromise is compelling. This is an area in which Britain has a technological lead. We have taken the necessary steps to reduce the emission of lead, even though I am afraid that customers at the petrol stations have been very slow in demanding the product. That situation cannot last. Perhaps my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will feel able to provide an incentive to encourage the use of unleaded petrol when he makes his Budget statement later in the year. Unleaded petrol is essential if we use autocatalysts.

I do not believe, however, that we should settle for a second-best solution to the problem of exhaust emissions from motor vehicles. It may not, in any case, be possible to sustain the compromise envisaged in the Community directive indefinitely. There is pressure for environmentally clean vehicles to be produced here in the United Kingdom and in continental countries where the Green movement is strong.

It is interesting that a survey by a Scandinavian poll in this country shows that 45 per cent. of the public identified that cars were associated with contributing to acid rain. The adoption of American requirements within the European Community to conform with other continental countries is bound to reappear on the agenda. It may enjoy some support from the Japanese and United St based manufacturers operating in a global market. threat of further penetration of our markets by manufacturers cannot be discounted.

Let me put the issues as clearly as I can to my Friend the Minister. Action has had to be taken to co vehicle exhaust emissions. The EEC's directive offers a partial solution, even though the technical mean resolve the major problems is available. Three- catalysts are already available for all classes of veh They are relatively cheap and have little adverse effec engine performance or fuel economy. A British comp is the leading manufacturer, and most car producers as Vauxhall are perfectly capable of adapting their veh to use them. It is in our commercial and environme interests to adopt this solution.

My hon. Friend understands, I know, how technic subject this is. It is vital that the Government's positi fully explained to satisfy the legitimate environme concerns which underlie this debate. It will also hel clarify the thinking of the motor manufacturers and suppliers. I accept that we have moved forward. I hoped that we could move further and faster. I trust the Minister will recognise the force of these argume

1 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment (Mr. David Trippier): I am most gratefu my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Mr. Bri for raising the question of motor vehicle emissions their control. As the House will know, he has an excel record as an assiduous and able advocate for constituents and the companies operating within constituency. I am certain that that point will particularly appreciated by the Vauxhall Motor Comp

My hon. Friend has raised some important points his proposal justifies careful consideration. I welcome opportunity to clarify the issue and to place on record considerable progress that we have made and to say w action is planned for the future.

My hon. Friend correctly identified the importanc the contribution made by road traffic to air pollution. mentioned specifically carbon monoxide, nitrogen oxi hydrocarbons and lead. I add to that list smoke emissi In addition to these primary pollutants, vehicle emissi contribute to the formation of secondary pollutants, s as ozone, which he mentioned. The fact that legislatio in place or under discussion within the Europ Community to deal with all these pollutants demonstr that the problems are taken seriously. I believe that t measures will lead to a significant improvement in quality.

First, I should like to deal with the so-ca Luxembourg package or compromise as it used to called. The European Community directive specifies standards that member states may apply to car emissi It is to this directive in particular that my hon. Friend drawn our attention. The Luxembourg package is agreement made for European cars in the context of European environment.

In approaching negotiations, the Government ai for a step-by-step approach designed to tighten standa as improving technology allowed us to do so in a c effective manner. An important part of this approach to take account of the fuel-efficient lean-burn technology being developed by various manufacturers, including those in the United Kingdom.

The directive in its final form reflects our approach. The standards agreed are a substantial improvement on previous regulations, but car manufacturers are able to take full advantage of new technologies and, in particular, the lean-burn engine. Standards are given for three categories of car — those above 2 litres in engine capacity, those with engines between 1·4 litres and 2 litres and those with engines of less than 1·4 litres.

My hon. Friend has summarised admirably the technical options that car makers will probably adopt to meet the new regulations. This is important. We do indeed expect that some manufacturers of medium cars will decide to fit three-way catalysts to particular models. My hon. Friend will no doubt be pleased to see a growing number of catalyst-equipped cars on the road. The new directive will allow enterprising manufacturers to continue to follow the lean-burn route, but it will not prevent the use of catalysts.

As my hon. Friend said, the Luxembourg directive was finally approved by the Environment Council last December. We have recently committed ourselves to implementing all its provisions. As regards the mandatory application of the exhaust emission standards for small and medium cars, we want to harmonise the dates as far as possible with other manufacturing countries. We are in active discussion with other member states to that end. We also intend to apply the large car standards as soon as practicable.

Predictions of future emissions and the formation of secondary pollutants are made within the Department's air quality research programme. My hon. Friend has raised two further issues essential to predictions of this kind — the growing number of vehicles on our roads, and the fact that pollutant emissions vary with speed. I should like to assure him that both factors have been taken into account in our calculations. It is currently estimated that the implementation of the Luxembourg package will more than offset the effects of traffic growth. Levels of both primary and secondary pollutants will be significantly below today's levels by the year 2000. Clearly, tighter standards of the kind suggested by my hon. Friend, for example, would further reduce pollutant levels. However, the improvements would be subject to a law of diminishing returns both in terms of the air quality improvements achieved and the cost of achieving them.

The costs associated with the new standards can, of course, only be estimated, and as technology develops so the estimates are revised. In the House last year my hon. Friend asked about those costs, and I am pleased to be able to give him more recent information. Our latest estimates are that controlled three-way catalysts would add £370 to the purchase cost of a car before tax. By comparison, the lean-burn plus oxidation catalyst route would add £150. Overall, we estimate that the Luxembourg agreement, as it stands, will add £550 million annually to United Kingdom motoring costs.

By contrast, the costs of applying three-way catalysts to all new cars are estimated to be well in excess of £1 billion a year. Those estimates do not take fully into account the potential for fuel economy improvements with lean-burn vehicles. Looking to the future, this potential, which is lost with three-way catalyst cars, is of major significance. Taking those costs together with the diminishing benefits obtained, we believe that United States levels of emission control would not be cost-effective for Europe.

Unleaded petrol has a link with the Luxembourg agreement, as the directive gives dates from which member states may insist that all cars must be able to run on unleaded petrol. The United Kingdom insisted on early dates, consistent with our policy of reducing environmental lead. A separate directive covering the distribution of unleaded petrol was approved in 1985. My Department has energetically pursued the directive requirement for balanced distribution of unleaded petrol throughout the United Kingdom by October 1989. This has to be a joint enterprise with the oil and motor industries, and we have set up the machinery for effective co-ordination. Now that the Luxembourg package has been approved, we will be implementing the earliest possible dates for cars to be required to be able to run on unleaded petrol and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will be issuing draft regulations for consultation in the near future.

My remarks so far on the Luxembourg directive, in terms of the emission reductions expected and the costs, refer only to the first stage. The directive requires that proposals for a second stage of emission limits for the small car category be discussed this year. We are currently waiting for the Commission to present proposals to the Council.

The 3 December Environment Council agreed a common position on a directive, providing a first stage of limits for particulate emissions from diesel cars. Like the Luxembourg directive, this proposal also includes the provision of a second stage, to be considered in 1989.

The December Environment Council also gave its final approval to a directive limiting for the first time gaseous emissions from heavy diesels. Again, this is a first stage of regulation. Proposals for a second stage will be ready for consideration by the Environment Council by the end of this year. This second stage will further reduce the limits on emissions and introduce a limit on emission of particulates. As my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Transport told the First Standing Committee on European Community Documents on 25 March 1987, large diesel engines are now the dominant source of black smoke in urban areas. We shall be pressing the Commission to bring forward tough proposals for the most stringent limits technically and economically feasible.

In summary, we have at our disposal powerful new measures against air pollution from motor vehicles, and more are to come. The Luxembourg agreement enables us to impose emission limits on cars which give a substantial reduction in primary and secondary pollutants, but which also encourage new and cost-effective technology. We remain convinced as a result of our most recent estimates that the adoption of emission limits for cars equivalent to those of the United States would entail additional costs that would not be justified by the air quality improvement likely to be achieved.

Finally, I thank my hon. Friend for raising this matter. I know that he has taken a close interest in vehicle emissions and that the Vauxhall Motor Company in his constituency is concerned with the issue. It has been most useful to have the opportunity to discuss these very important matters.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at nine minutes past Eleven o'clock.

House of Commons

Thursday 21 January 1988

The House met at half-past Two o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

Mr. Cohen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot take a point of order before we have opened the sitting. I say to the hon. Member that by raising a point of order at this time he puts in jeopardy those who wish to put questions to the Home Secretary. I will take points of order at the appropriate time, which is immediately after Business Questions.

Mr. Cohen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It will not wait until then. It is very brief.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, I cannot take it now.

Mr. Cohen: On a point of order. I am——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to say to the hon. Gentleman that he will have to raise this at the appropriate time.

Mr. Cohen: Mr. Speaker, a number of people have been denied their democratic rights. This affects the Sessional Orders, and I should like to be given the opportunity to raise the matter of people being denied their right to lobby——

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. Member please come and discuss this with the Table while I am getting on with the business?

PRIVATE BUSINESS

LONDON REGIONAL TRANSPORT BILL (By Order)

Order read for resuming adjourned debate on consideration [10 December], That the Bill be now considered.

Debate further adjourned till Thursday 28 January.

GREATER MANCHESTER (LIGHT RAPID TRANSIT SYSTEM) BILL [Lords] (By Order)

As amended, considered.
Amendments agreed to.
To be read the Third time.

GREATER MANCHESTER (LIGHT RAPID TRANSIT SYSTEM) (NO. 2) BILL [Lords] (By Order)

As amended, considered.
Amendments agreed to.
To be read the Third time.

TEIGNMOUTH QUAY COMPANY BILL (By Order)

YORK CITY COUNCIL BILL [LORDS] (BY ORDER)

HAMPSHIRE (LYNDHURST BYPASS) BILL

[Lords] (By Order)

Orders for Seconding Reading read.
To be read a Second time upon Thursday 28 January.

Oral Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Official Secrets Act

1. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has undertaken in order to ascertain views as to the reform of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act.

The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hurd): There have been at least 15 years of public debate on the matter, and there will be full opportunities to comment on the Government's proposals before legislation is introduced.

Mr. Hughes: Will the Home Secretary make sure, in the months between the debate last Friday on the Bill introduced by the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) and the White Paper that the Government plan for the summer, that he listens to the views of the country as a whole and not to the increasingly dominant view in his party that secrecy is justifiable? Is the Home Secretary aware that only two out of the 53 new Conservative Members elected in June voted for freedom of information? Is that not an indictment of a view that is generally rubbished, namely, that the Government put their own self-defence at a far more important level than the general interests of the nation and its ability to judge issues?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I ask for brief questions, because long questions lead to too long answers.

Mr. Hurd: I do not agree with the hon. Gentleman. People who wish to express views to us obviously have a choice to do so between now and June, the time of the White Paper, or after the White Paper and before the legislation.

Mr. Stokes: Is my right hon. Friend aware that all these matters of secrecy are of interest mainly to the media, and that the mass of ordinary patriotic people want state secrets to be kept as state secrets?

Mr. Hurd: I must say that when I arrived in my constituency at the weekend I found a rather different flavour to the discussion there from the one here. We have a serious job to do, to honour the commitments that the Prime Minister and I have given to the House. During the debate on Friday many hon. Members explained how difficult that job will be. I agree with that, but we intend to do it.

Mr. Hattersley: Does the Home Secretary recall that during the debate on Friday quotations were read to the House from the book by Mr. Anthony Cavendish, in which Mr. Cavendish said that the security service had recently been involved in operations to discredit Members on both sides of the House. Why does the right hon. Gentleman think that such allegations should be suppressed under section 2 of the Official Secrets Act rather than be investigated, as they would be in any other democracy?

Mr. Hurd: I do not wish to comment on the Cavendish case or the injunctions that have borne on that particular publication. I would much rather have a decent, restricted system for the protection of official information than the present system, which is open to misinterpretation and misuse, and that is what we intend to get.

Firearms

2. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent meetings he has had with representatives of gun clubs; and if he will make a statement.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hogg): My right hon. Friend has met representatives of the British Shooting Sports Council, which represents a wide range of sporting and trade interests. I have met representatives of the Shooters' Rights Association, and the United Kingdom Practical Rifle Commission, and Home Office officals have met a number of other organisations.

Mr. Thompson: I thank my hon. Friend for that reply. Bearing in mind the excellent work carried out by many gun clubs up and down the country, including in Norwich and the surrounding area, and the genuine concern about some of the measures to be put forward in the legislation to be debated this afternoon, will my hon. Friend say more about the discussions that he may have had with the gun clubs about licensing arrangements and compensation?

Mr. Hogg: I recognise that the issue of compensation causes considerable concern to right hon. and hon. Members. There are serious objections to compensation, but we are prepared to give further thought to the fresh arguments that have been put forward. However, I should emphasise that I believe that there are still great difficulties, both of principle and of practice.

Sir Jim Spicer: Does my hon. Friend agree that although there may be objections to the principle of compensation, there are greater objections to not paying compensation because of what may happen as a result of the disposal of such firearms? Will he undertake to keep an open mind on that matter as the Bill progresses?

Mr. Hogg: I shall always consider extremely carefully the points that my right hon. and hon. Friends make. None the less, there are difficulties of principle that we cannot ignore. However, I repeat that we are prepared to give further thought to the arguments that have been put forward.

Immigration

3. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will consider collecting statistics for entrants to the United Kingdom on the basis of ethnicity.

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. Tim Renton): No, Sir. The statistics collected on passenger admissions by nationality are sufficient to meet all the Department's major needs for information on entrants to the United Kingdom.

As far as immigration control is concerned, we do not consider it necessary to extend the interviewing process by seeking and recording a person's ethnic origin; it would add to the cost of the control and inconvenience to the public and the passenger.

Mr. Grant: The Minister will be aware of number of complaints of racism at the ports of e country. Does he agree that one way of ensur check is kept on that problem would be by ethnicity? For example, if 20 Nigerians were de one could reasonably assume that they were However, if 20 Americans or South Africans entry, one does not know their colour.

Mr. Renton: I reject the charge of racism a immigration authorities and officers. Both the N Council for Community Relations and the C for Racial Equality have in recent reports said t that immigration officers discharge their without regard to race, colour or religion, a required to do by the rules.

If we were to ask a question about enthnicity have to apply to all passengers subject to im control. If we were to ask whether passen African, Asian or Arab in origin, the hon. Gen some of his colleagues, would be the first to co

Mr. Sayeed: Does my hon. Friend agree tha the statistics, suggested by the hon. Me Tottenham (Mr. Grant), would be likely to le misuse, as they would reflect only one criterio

Mr. Renton: Yes, that is right. Let us co example, South Africans — be they black o coming into this country. If they have British by descent, they will travel here on British pas their entry to the country will not be reflecte statistics.

Mr. Janner: Does the Minister accept that m wishing to enter this country — members minorities and others — complain of the l delays at Heathrow caused by the heavy burde on immigration officers? Far more of the compl constituency and elsewhere come from people f minorities and their families and friends seek entry as visitors than from anyone else.

Mr. Renton: I suggest to the hon. an Gentleman that, since we introduced the visa five countries — including those of the In continent — over a year ago, the number of of difficulties at our major ports of entry has substantially. However, I agree that there are un delays, and that is one reason why we have p in the immigration rules before the House for d week. I hope that the hon. and learned Gent support them.

Mr. Stanbrook: Is my hon. Friend aware thu is no more relevant to immigration control than of an immigrant's hair? We ask only that im control should be exercised in the interests of people as a whole, whatever the colour of thei

Mr. Renton: I take my hon. Friend's point. I remind him that one of the first immigration r immigration officers should exercise their powe regard to race, colour or religion. I believe th that, and it is very important that they should

Mr. Randall: Why does the Minister not concerted action to overcome deficiencies in Office statistics, which refer to appalling disc between black and Asian people in this country he not done more?

Mr. Renton: I am totally unclear about the deficiency in the Home Office statistics to which the hon. Gentleman refers. As discussed in the Immigration Bill Committee —to which I must not refer in the Chamber—we intend to put forward changes in the rules for debate in the House next week. They will greatly help immigration officers and Lunar House to attend more to the serious and deserate cases that hon. Members bring to my attention.

Custodial Remand

4. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of his experiment on restricting the period spent on remand in custody.

Mr. Hurd: So far the custody time limits in force in Avon, Somerset, Kent and the west midlands are working well. From 1 April I propose to extend the tighter limits in the first three areas to Greater Manchester, the whole of Wales and to Cheshire, Cornwall, Devon, Dorset, Gloucestershire, Hampshire, the Isle of Wight and Wiltshire. In the west midlands the time limit to committal will be reduced from 98 to 84 days, and time limits will be extended to the Crown courts at Coventry and Dudley.

Mr. Favell: As a lawyer, I hesitate to suggest that lawyers never do today what they can put off until tomorrow. The news from my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is not only desirable but necessary. When can we expect the experiment to be extended to the whole country? Does my right hon. Friend agree that when that is done there will be less pressure on prisons and their staff, a saving of money and a reduction of the time during which innocent people can be kept in gaol?

Mr. Hurd: We are proceeding gradually so that we can benefit by experience. So far our experience has been good, and that is why I have today referred to a further substantial step to reduce delays in justice. As we get on, I hope to extend the provisions over the whole country and to re-examine the time limits to see whether they can be tightened further.

Ms. Short: As a member of the Select Committee on Home Affairs, which made that recommendation, may I remind the Home Secretary that one of our major concerns was that enormous numbers of those in our prison population were on remand? Can the right hon. Gentleman tell us what is happening to the proportion of prisoners on remand in areas where the experiment is in operation?

Mr. Hurd: Not without notice. However, I hope and estimate that, as a result of the extension of the time limits that I have announced, there will be a reduction of between 300 and 600 in the prison remand population.

Mr. Lawrence: Is my right hon. Friend aware that if the 110-day rule that operates in Scotland and the United States—with which he is tinkering in the experiment—were introduced, there would be a substantial reduction in the time spent in custody awaiting trial and in the prison population? Will he consider bringing forward an amendment to the Criminal Justice Bill to introduce such a provision as speedily as possible?

Mr. Hurd: We have the powers. We took them under the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985, and we are using them. My hon. and learned Friend is aware that the Scottish procedures are different, and the procedure is not absolutely applicable across th With the exception of the west midlands, we are towards 56 days to summary proceedings, 70 committal and 112 days to arraignment in th court.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Will the Home Secretary ex logic behind his decision today? Why, if he is so-fa impressed with the experiment, is he just extend he agrees with the recommendations of th Committee on Home Affairs, why does he not the procedure for the country as a whole?

Mr. Hurd: Because I want to make sure arrangements are in place and that the li practicable. Nothing is worse than to intr substantial change of this kind at a pace and in a brings it into discredit because people cannot c We are gradually extending and tightening Opposition might be a little more gracious a progress that we are making.

Courthouses

5. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of Stat Home Department if he has any plans to amend t for approval of the construction of courthouses reduce delays.

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. John No, Sir. The procedures are already designed that scarce capital resources are used to prov operational buildings economically and as q possible. I understand that Essex county counc to go to tender this week for the new m courthouse in Basildon, with a view to comple in 1990.

Mr. Amess: Will my hon. Friend accept my and that of my constituents for the support of t Office and Essex county council for the building c courthouse in Basildon? Will he also accept tha the intolerable pressures on the old court Billericay, it would be irresponsible for anyone to building of the new courthouse further?

Mr. Patten: I entirely agree with my hon. Fr I hope that there will be no further delays with courthouse now that it has gone to tender. Friend's warm thanks are greatly appreciated. sometimes sparing in the direction of the Dispat quite often happily visit Basildon with my hon. will be there shortly in his company lookin important crime prevention project funded by th sector, and I hope to have a chance to look at courthouse site.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Will my hon. Friend opportunity to consider the merits of c magistrates and county court buildings, such excellent building at Staines in Middlesex, and that with the position in Solihull, where we have magistrates court, but no county court?

Mr. Patten: I sometimes go to Solihull as consider the issues on their merits. We like combine the provision of justice with the pro other social facilities wherever that makes sens local community and can be afforded.

Broadcasting

6. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received during the past year on the future of broadcasting.

7. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to publish his proposals for the future of broadcasting.

Mr. Hurd: In recent months I have received many representations in various forms about the future of broadcasting. I announced our radio proposals on Tuesday and will within the next few months be publishing further proposals for broadcasting legislation.

Mr. Knight: Does my right hon. Friend agree that, with regard to television, the British public get a pretty raw deal from the current BBC-ITV duopoly? Is he aware that on many occasions second-rate sports programmes are broadcast simultaneously on three of the four channels, often with two channels covering the same event? Is there not an overwhelming argument for the setting up of a fifth television channel and for giving the go-ahead for short-range local television stations?

Mr. Hurd: We are looking at a whole range of matters relating to television. Unfortunately, they must be considered together because they relate to each other, and that is why this matter is taking some time. They include the point referred to by my hon. Friend and the possibility of a Channel 5, the future organisation of Channel 4, how ITV contracts should be let in future, the possibility of the multipoint video distribution system and the use of night hours. There is a big agenda.

Mr. Campbell: In his written answer on 19 January the Home Secretary said that community radio should be subject to light restriction. Is it still the Government's intention to prevent those providing community radio services from expressing views on matters of political or industrial controversy? If, for example, there was a proposal in a particular community for the dumping of nuclear waste, would that not be precisely the kind of issue on which a community radio station should be entitled to pronounce?

Mr. Hurd: The hon. and learned Gentleman should consider paragraph 7.7 of the Green Paper. Nothing in the statement that I made on Tuesday alters that. We believe that stations, including local stations, should ensure that any news, given in whatever form, is presented with accuracy and impartiality. There are a number of provisions to avoid allowing the views and opinions of particular persons to predominate. If the hon. and learned Gentleman considers paragraph 7.7 of the Green Paper, he will find the answer that he is seeking.

Mr. Wells: Under the legislation proposed by my right hon. Friend, will it be possible to have a dedicated London Jazz radio station?

Mr. Hurd: Yes, indeed, if the proposals for such a station meet the criteria—and I see no reason why they should not. Some of the people who first interested me in the idea of community radio wanted to do exactly that.

Mr. Rees: Would it not be wise, before the Government legislate, following their statement of a couple of days ago in a written answer, to give the House a chance to comment on the proposals?

Mr. Hurd: The right hon. Gen Opposition have ways of doing that if take the suggestion seriously into accou to rush into these matters. It will be so there is any legislation.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: What repres right hon. Friend received about the television? Many of us are concerned a that appear on television well before 9 o'
of which is unsuitable for children.

Mr. Hurd: Occasionally, so am I, a most recently just before Christmas chairmen of the BBC and the IBA continuing anxiety about violence on t much rather that they dealt with the ma with the guidelines. However, as my ho we shall soon be setting up the new broad council. That is the sort of issue with wh concern itself.

Mr. Tony Banks: Was it not a grave
House to announce these major change by way of a parliamentary question and that it amounted to a statement? Wh Secretary not come here and allow the the matter in further detail? When w opportunity? Will the auctioning of national independent channels allow pe to bid for them?

Mr. Hurd: There was a discourtesy to when the answer was available it was a and I apologise for that. There was a m to the copy sent to the right hon. Membe Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley), and he a correspondence about that. I do not thi of place to carry the discussion forw statement, as what I said followed closel that was published some time ago and have substantial opportunities to go o detail when legislation is introduced.

Mr. Fisher: How many of the 500 re the Home Secretary received about recommended that he should auction off highest bidder? Does he understand something as powerful and culturally im licence is completely irresponsible and it did not command even the support companies and individuals who were applications for licences?

Mr. Hurd: I do not think that the ho thought the matter through. We are talki allocates three national commercial ch either have a body that sits down maybe in an unsatisfactory or conceal what we propose, which is a standard applicant will have to pass a test of varie is accepted. Once that hurdle is surmo to provide variety on each national ch done by tender so that the Exchequer an benefit to a certain extent from the u national resource.

Mr. Sayeed: How does my right hon control the content of internationally broadcasting by satellite?

Mr. Hurd: Negotiation is going on in the Council of Europe at Strasbourg with the aim of producing, if possible, a convention treaty that will bind the 21 members and provide for some enforcement machinery. Apart from that, we are considering whether other additional methods might be necessary. It is one of the most difficult aspects of this problem. I hope that if the Council of Europe can reach agreement the necessary legislation will be put before the House before too long.

Mr. Corbett: First, may I give the Home Secretary another opportunity to apologise to the House for his discourtesy in making a statement about a major change in broadcasting policy by way of a written answer on Tuesday, instead of coming here so that my hon. Friends and other hon. Members could ask him questions?

Secondly, how does he intend to ensure quality and balance in the stations whose licences are to be flogged off to the highest bidder, and when does he expect to make an announcement about the frequencies that the BBC will lose under his proposals, because the BBC needs time to adjust?

Mr. Hurd: I think that I have already covered the first point and do not want to repeat myself. If the hon. Gentleman looks at the reference in the Green Paper to content and to what I would call the "consumer protection" part of the proposals and the standards to be required by the new radio authority, he will see that they are set out at some length. The House will want to debate that in detail when the legislation is considered in Committee.

We are discussing with the BBC which two frequencies we propose to take from it to facilitate the three new national commercial channels. On the whole, the BBC is content with the position because it knows where it is within the limits of the money and frequencies that it has and which are assured to it, so it can get on and organise itself as it thinks fit, not as I think fit.

Farmwatch Schemes

8. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many farmwatch schemes are operated in England and Wales by county constabularies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Information about the number of farmwatch schemes is not held centrally. Farmwatch is one of a number of variations of the neigbourhood watch concept; others include hospital watch and business watch. The number of such schemes continues to grow and we are much encouraged by this evidence of the willingness of so many individuals to work together, and with the police, to help prevent crime in their areas.

Mr. Key: Will my hon. Friend join in congratulating the Wiltshire constabulary on its initiation of the scheme, which has led not only to a decrease in rural crime, including farm theft, illegal hare coursing and other crimes, but to an improvement in the use of police resources and help with the scheme from the whole community, including environmental groups and shooting clubs?

Mr. Patten: The answer to that is yes. The type of work that is being carried out in the Amesbury sub-division of the Wiltshire police area is exemplary. I hope that other such areas up and down the country w problems of rural crime will think about g same path. [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. Members wh private conversations should do so outside.

Mr. Skinner: What assistance will the those on the farmwatch scheme to stop developers and the city slickers preying on th it and then turning it into suburbialand, thu natural beauty of Britain?

Mr. Patten: That is an interesting devel farmwatch concept, but I am happy to say for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of Environment.

Drinking and Driving

9. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secreta the Home Department how many persons with offences relating to drink and driv Christmas period; how these numbers c previous equivalent periods; and if he statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I regret that inform be available in the form requested until the this year. However, the Association of Officers has collated provisional figures for Wales which show that there were 5,259 po breath tests in the period 19 December 198 1988. I am encouraged by the widespread s way in which the police and the Governme drinking and driving problem over the Chri I hope that that will be reflected in the off when they are available later this year.

Mr. Taylor: Although figures show a welcome improvement, does my hon. Friend much excess drinking at Christmas time is a Bearing in mind the enormous social pressur people to consume alcohol at Christmas tim to take steps to require publicans to stock wines and beers, especially at that time?

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend is right importance of making available non-alcoh pubs.

Mr. Ashton: Is it not time that the Mi patting some drivers on the back? Does he the past 20 years, while the number of cars enormously, the number of accidents has g the Scottish Temperance Society continually to slag off drivers who have an excellent re a fact that a lorry speeding through fog on a cause far more damage, and that more peop at Christmas by dangerous foam-filled furnit killed on the roads by drunken drivers?

Mr. Hogg: The truth is that drinking and do not go together, and it is the bus Government to communicate that fact as possible.

Mr. William Powell: Is my hon. Friend aw is considerable relief about the success of the Christmas to discourage people from driving? Does he recognise that the proble and driving is not confined to Christmas, but takes place throughout the year, during much of which there is no talk at all about the dangers of such behaviour? Will he use all the resources of his Department to ensure that there is a year-on-year campaign, not one that takes place merely during public holidays?

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend's point is very much in the mind of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport. In substance, I agree with what he has said.

Broadcasting

10. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the future of community radio in Britain.

Mr. Renton: Many of the responses to our Green Paper "Radio: Choices and Opportunities", published last year, welcomed the prospect of community radio. As my right hon. Friend announced on 19 January, we intend to bring before Parliament legislative proposals based on the Green Paper.

Mr. Wallace: I am sure that those with an interest in community radio will be very glad that the Green Paper has given the green light to it. Is the Minister able to announce a time scale in which he hopes the proposals will be implemented? As he is no doubt aware, the Shetland Islands Broadcasting Company has been on the air in my constituency and — judging by representations that I have received — is popular. Can the Minister say how the proposals will affect that company?

Mr. Renton: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his support for the proposals that we are announcing. Assuming that it is possible for a Bill to be brought before Parliament in the next Session, I hope that the proposals will be law by the end of the summer of 1989, and that the radio authority will then be able to consider community radio applications and start issuing licences.

As regards the station in the Shetlands, I am sure that the hon. Gentleman would not expect me to give my blessing to a pirate radio station. The gentleman concerned will have to make his application to the radio authority. I must say, however, that that seems just the sort of project that could succeed under the new regime that we have announced.

Custodial Remand

11. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female prisoners aged less than 17 years old are currently held on remand in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 30 September 1987, the latest date for which figures are available centrally, about 165 untried and 15 convicted unsentenced males aged under 17 were held in prison department establishments in England and Wales. Girls aged under 17 may not be remanded into prison custody.

Mr. Taylor: I am sure the Minister agrees with the importance of the rapid development of bail hostels. Does he agree that the present development of such hostels is too slow, and is there any way of speeding it up?

Mr. Hogg: I am glad that we hav support for our policy of introduc

Prisoners (Stati

12. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Sec Home Department how many serving sentences in Her Majesty's Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 30 Nove 37,450 sentenced prisoners in priso ments in England and Wales.

Mr. Hardy: In view of the serious crime during the Governm and noting that under the Wh expenditure the provision for law a to improve much after 1989, m Minister can be sure that all the Department is to provide will be f

Mr. Hogg: I am sorry that the h such a question. For one thing, I sh his party's position was a trifle emb Labour was in government in the anything about a prison building surprised that he has not welcom present building programme, wh 21,000 more places by 1995 than th came to office.

Mr. Madel: Some people sent t result of having caused death by dri much. Can my hon. Friend comm The public are not clear whether ra allowed because of different policie chief constables. Can my hon. Frie breath-testing is, or is not, lawful?

Mr. Hogg: Random stopping is 159 of the Highways Act 1980. lawful.

Adults (National Numbe

13. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Sec Home Department if he has any pl a national numbering system for e years.

Mr. John Patten: No, Sir.

Mr. Wilson: If the Home Secret introduce a system of natio presumably, like all his predecesso system as undesirable, what repres to his colleagues in the Cabinet abo tax will require just such a system, commissioned by the Scottish Offi Institute of Public Finance and Ac that the report makes it clear that t without a system of national nu system—to be known as a comm he agree that, as a by-product of t down the road of a state identific individual?

Mr. Patten: That is a matter fo the Secretary of State for the authorities will have the responsi

he hon. Gentleman's more bail hostels.

s) ary of State for the rsons are currently sons in England and ber there were about epartment establish-

r-increasing rate of
t's period of office,
Paper on public order seems unlikely
I ask whether the tra prisons that his d?

. Gentleman has put ld have thought that rassing, in that when 970s it failed to do ogramme. I am also the Government's will produce over umber when we first prison are there as a ng, having drunk too

on a further point?
om breath-testing is pursued by different say whether random

llowed under section ndom testing is not

g System)

tary of State for the
to seek to introduce h individual over 18

y does not intend to numbering and,
would regard such a tations will he make the fact that the poll defined in the report from the Chartered ntancy? Is he aware poll tax cannot work bering—a state ID
nity identifier? Does poll tax, we shall go on system for every ay right hon. Friend Environment. Local ty of compiling the lists of those liable to the community charge. They will be able to draw on a range of lists to compile the community charge list.

Mr. Jessel: As most other countries have identity cards, and as they would greatly help to combat terrorism and other crimes, including social security fraud, what possible argument is there against them?

Mr. Patten: I know how strongly my hon. Friend and some of my other hon. Friends feel about the issue. However, there is no evidence that in 1952, when identity cards were withdrawn, the police were put into difficulty. We have had no representation from the police that they find difficulty in identifying most people when they need to in pursuit of crime.

Charities

14. Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to seek to change charities law; and if he will make a statement.

16. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals to amend current arrangements for the monitoring and control of charities.

Mr. Hurd: The Government have warmly welcomed the report by Sir Philip Woodfield of his efficiency scrutiny of the supervision of charities. We accept the report's conclusion that, while the essentials of the present supervisory framework are still necessary, the system needs extensive reform. The report's proposals to strengthen the Charity Commission's powers, and in particular its capacity to deal with abuse, provide a sound basis for the future.

Most of the report's recommendations concerning the procedures and internal management of the Charity Commission are already being put into effect. Those recommendations affecting the extent and nature of the commission's powers will need primary legislation. We would hope to put forward proposals for such legislation later in this Parliament.

Mr. Ashdown: The Home Secretary's statement will be welcome in view of the fact that charities are being abused, as he knows. There are cases where so-called charities are returning as little as 10 per cent. to charitable purposes. Business men are earning fat profits and running expense accounts and vehicles to dodge tax. When does the Home Secretary expect the legislation to be complete and in place?

Mr. Hurd: We need to think it through carefully, but Sir Philip Woodfield clearly showed that the Charity Commission ought to spend more time monitoring and spotting the kind of problem to which the hon. Member referred, and less time carrying through pernickety procedures laid down by law, which should not have the same priority.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: My right hon. Friend's announcement is very welcome on the Government side of the House. Does he accept that too many bodies which do not deserve it are taking considerable tax advantage of charitable status? Will he also accept that too many charities are suffering from maladministration and that too many charities are engaged in political advertising and political activity?

Mr. Hurd: There has been a huge charitable activity in recent years. We nee that the framework of law is right to gu problems. I am holding a seminar at the Monday, to which many leading charities people, to clarify in our own minds more t the content of legislation might be.

Mr. Winnick: In view of their present p Home Secretary tell us whether the Libera would now qualify for charity assistance?

Mr. Hurd: I think they would have so submitting to the commission the necessary rules and membership.

Crime Statistics

18. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the S for the Home Department if he will make the latest crime figures.

Mr. John Patten: In the 12 months September 1987 recorded crime was 2·6 than in the previous 12 months. This is le long-term rate of increase in recorded crim 1950s.

Mr. MacKay: Does my hon. Frie altho[illegible]one of the greatest deterrents ag be the [illegible]ity to be caught, the Thames Val which he and I share, has the lowest ra public anywhere in the country? Ca constituents and his any hope on this poi

Mr. Patten: Thames Valley police force increase, and another increase in manpo from 1 April. My right hon. Friend the takes into account the changes in popula resources available to the police locally, crime pattern, in deciding on future inc manpower. Thames Valley police force number of additional policemen authoris

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Q1. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Prime will list her official engagements for Thurs

The Prime Minister (Mrs. Margaret morning I presided at a meeting of the C meetings with ministerial colleagues addition to my duties in the House, I further meetings later today.

Mr. Thurnham: Does my right hon. F parents have a great responsibility for the is she aware that parents who find them transmitting severe genetic disorders, molysis bullosa, which cannot be detecte week, wish to choose, on medical advice, they should continue with such a pregna

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend very effectively. It is a matter that will be debate tomorrow, when doubtless hon. make up their own minds about how to v It is for each of us to do that. Speaking f Bill is drafted at present, I could not sup

Mr. Kinnock: I am glad that, in at least one area, the Prime Minister and I are in complete agreement. When it is clear that the Prime Minister has enough money to meet the demands of the presidents of the royal colleges and of the nurses, without further dispute and without further crisis, why does she not use that money now?

The Prime Minister: The right hon. Gentleman will have seen from the public expenditure White Paper published yesterday that there is a very substantial increase in National Health Service expenditure for next year, 1988-89, of £1,100 million.

Mr. Kinnock: The Prime Minister knows that those figures are calculated on exactly the same basis as the figures for this year, which required her to find some supplementary sums and which still leave the hospitals in deficit. Does she not realise that she is guaranteeing a further underfunding crisis for next year unless there is an additional amount? Why does she not make Budget day a National Health day?

The Prime Minister: The right hon. Gentleman is aware that the public expenditure estimates have just been published. Before those were published, in December an additional £100 million was made available to the National Health Service to get over this difficult time of year for some. The amount of public expenditure has been decided. The Budget is about how to raise the taxation and borrowing, not how to add extra expenditure.

Mr. Forman: Does my right hon. Friend agree that it is a great pity that the Opposition and some parts of the media do not pay more attention to all the good news in the National Health Service? Was she as heartened as I was to learn of the formal opening earlier this week of the new maternity unit at St. Helier's hospital in my constituency, where the dedicated staff are able to deliver 10 babies a day? Does she agree that this is a sign of the excellent performance in the National Health Service and also of the vitality of the nation?

The Prime Minister: Yes, I noted the opening of that hospital, and I congratulate it on the way in which it has got up to its fullest possible capacity and on the excellent work it is doing. It would be pertinent to remind the House that, although we hear of difficult cases from time to time, since we discussed the National Health Service last week there have been about 45,000 operations in the NHS. That is not a Health Service in crisis. We are doing very well.

Dr. Owen: Surely the wise decision of the Royal College of Nursing not to sanction any strike action now deserves more than mere verbal support. Will the Prime Minister give it the assurance that it wants to hear, which is that the pay rise due to nurses will be funded in full by the Government, and that the price for that will not be exacted in any way from the National Health Service?

The Prime Minister: The Royal College of Nursing, for which we have the highest regard, is very much aware that the nurses were given an independent pay review body because the royal college had never gone on strike, as it cared too much for its duty to patients. I note what the right hon. Gentleman said. May I remind him that the Government of which he was a member cut the pay of nurses by 20 per cent. in real terms?

Mr. Grylls: Does my right hon. Friend recall the words of the late Aneurin Bevan, who said that he would stuff the mouths of the doctors with gold? As doctors have been well rewarded over the years, is it not right to expect them to make their contribution to improving efficiency and value for money in the National Health Service?

The Prime Minister: Everyone has a duty to obtain the maximum from the enormous amount of resources that the taxpayer pays to the Health Service, to operate with maximum efficiency and treat the maximum number of patients. Certainly, performance varies greatly between districts and hospitals, and it is with a view to examining that that we are obtaining some interesting figures and hoping to raise the standards of those who are not so good at using their resources to the standards of the best. Doctors will play a welcome part in that process.

Mr. Barry Jones: May I draw the Prime Minister's attention to the continuing difficulties of Chester district health authority, which treats thousands of my constituents? Does she know that on Christmas Eve two elderly patients were transferred between hospitals in a 4-tonne Bedford van because of a result of cuts? Does she know that that van was cold, dirty and smelly? Would the right hon. Lady like any member of her family to be transferred in such a shameful way, and does she realise that we do not think the Health Service is safe in her hands?

The Prime Minister: As the hon. Gentleman is aware, those matters must be addressed to the local management, because it is responsible for the conditions. From 1979 up to March 1988—[Interruption.] The Opposition do not want to know the extra amount of money that the taxpayer has found for the Welsh Health Service—[Interruption.] Yes, it is the taxpayer who finds the money. Almost £500 million at current prices has been invested in the capital of the hospital and community health service in Wales, and expenditure on the National Health Service in Wales has risen by a third, after allowing for general inflation between 1979 and 1987. It is for the management to make the best of the opportunities that that money affords them.

Mr. Wheeler: Does my right hon. Friend nevertheless agree that it is not a simple matter of more money—billions more have been spent on the NHS, and billions more are planned to be spent—but that it is also a case of efficiency, good management and evaluation between hospitals and practices?

The Prime Minister: We notice great differences between departments, hospitals and districts in how the money is spent and we are trying, as I said, to bring more of the best practices to those areas that have hitherto not been able to manage as well, although they may have had as many consultants and nurses. In general, the Health Service is expanding, it is treating many more patients, it is doing many more operations and it is treating more day and out-patients. The polls show that 80 per cent. of the enormous number of people who use the Health Service every year are highly satisfied with the treatment that they receive.

Q2. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 January.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Cohen: Why is the Prime Minister demanding extra-special NATO meetings? Is it to bounce the Germans to accept battlefield nuclear weapons, which they do not want, or is it to tie President Reagan's hands in the coming peace talks? Is the Prime Minister using NATO to nuke the negotiations? Would not the money which she is determined to spend on new bombs be better spent on the Health Service?

The Prime Minister: No. If we did not have an effective defence there would be nothing like such a good Health Service, education service or standard of living. That has been mostly accepted by past Labour Governments. I understand that it does not seem to be accepted by the present Labour party.

Q3. Mr. Wood: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 January.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Wood: Is my right hon. Friend aware of the deplorable action of the Birmingham council in trying to prevent the free extra tuition for gifted children in the area, which teachers are prepared to provide? Is it not a duty of a local education authority to ensure that there is good education to maximise the abilities of the children in the area?

The Prime Minister: I saw those reports this morning. I have not been able to find out whether they are accurate, but if they are I hope that everyone will condemn the action. The teachers are willing to give those especially gifted pupils extra tuition on Saturday morning. I think it is our duty to give every child a chance to develop its best talents and abilities and not to let the Socialist dogma of levelling down interfere with that process.

Q4. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 January.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Pendry: Will the Prime Minister take time out today to talk to the chairperson of the Tameside and Glossop health authority to discuss the proposed cuts in health care: 24 per cent. in orthopaedic beds, when there has been a 51 per cent. increase in the waiting list this year; 18 per cent. in surgical beds; 19 per cent. in medical beds; and the closure of a hospital? All this in an area that the Black report described as one of the worst in the country for health provision. Will she come with me to Tameside to meet the doctors, nurses and patients to gauge their opinion of these Government-imposed cuts?

The Prime Minister: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman. I have made inquiries from the Tameside and Glossop health authority. The number of patients that it has been treating since the reorganisation of 1982 is substantially up. In-patients are up by 34 per cent., and out-patients by 10 per cent. On capital building, there has been completed in the Tameside and Glossop health area a £2·6 million geriatric unit and there is under construction a £16·6 million phase 2 redevelopment of Tameside general. It has received £110,800 extra from the waiting list fund for additional orthopaedic, gynaecological and ear, nose and throat patients, et cetera, et cetera.

Mr. Ralph Howell: May I congratulate my right hon. Friend and the Government on the firm and proper stand that they are making on the question of extra finance for the National Health Service? Does she agree that there is no shortage of funds, but that those funds are being improperly used and that what we need is greater efficiency? Does she further agree that in the whole 40 years of the lifetime of the National Health Service it has never been properly managed? [Interruption.] Why is it that we have 12 chairmen employing a total of 870,000 people in the other nationalised industries — [Interruption.]—but have never had a chairman with full and effective power to look after the National Health Service.

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. Well over a million—nearly 1¼ million—people work in the National Health Service. It can be properly run only by effective management. It was in the lifetime of this Government that managers were appointed. It is not the Government who provide finance; it is the taxpayer. This year the average family of four provided to the Health Service £1,500 in taxes and charges. Next year the average family will provide in taxes and charges £1,600 to sustain the National Health Service. It has a right to expect that money to be effectively used.

Q5. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 January.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Fields: Despite the Prime Minister's pathological hatred of the Health Service, which she sees as a manifestation of Socialism to be destroyed, is she aware that on Wednesday 10 February Health Service workers and trade unionists in Liverpool will be engaging in a day of action to defend the Health Service? Will she now, at the eleventh hour, instruct the Chancellor, instead of giving tax handouts to the rich, to divert that money to the Health Service, or is she prepared to accept full responsibility in the event of a nationwide National Health Service dispute?

The Prime Minister: I had hoped that the hon. Gentleman would condemn those who take strike action at the expense of the patients—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Prime Minister has the right to reply.

The Prime Minister: They are hitting out deliberately at the patients. It sounds as if the Labour party supports that strike and that industrial action.

Business of the House

3.31 pm

Mr. Frank Dobson (Holborn and St. Pancras): May I ask the Leader of the House to state the business for next week?

The Lord President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. John Wakeham): Yes, Sir. The business for next week will be as follows:

MONDAY 25 JANUARY—Second Reading of the Regional Development Grants (Termination) Bill.

Motion on the London Regional Transport (Levy) Order.

TUESDAY 26 JANUARY—There will be a debate on the Army, on a motion for the Adjournment of the House.

Motion on the Church of England (Legal Aid and Miscellaneous Provisions) Measure.

WEDNESDAY 27 JANUARY — Opposition Day (8th Allotted Day). There will be a debate on an Opposition motion entitled "The Government of Scotland".

Motion relating to the statement of changes in immigration rules (HC 208).

Remaining stages of the Income and Corporation Taxes Bill [Lords], which is a consolidation measure.

THURSDAY 28 JANUARY — Second Reading of the Merchant Shipping Bill [Lords], followed by Second Reading of the Welsh Development Agency Bill.

FRIDAY 29 JANUARY—Private Members' Bills

MONDAY 1 FEBRUARY—Remaining stages of the Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Bill.

Mr. Dobson: I am grateful to the Leader of the House. First, will he give an undertaking that the new guidelines on the immigration rules, which directly affect the rights of hon. Members, will be debated on the Floor of the House in prime time before the consultation period expires?

Will the right hon. Gentleman commit the Merchant Shipping Bill to the scrutiny of a Special Standing Committee?

In view of the reports that the Secretary of State for the Environment is now planning to sell off the Crown Suppliers, with the possible loss of 1,900 jobs, may we have an urgent statement on that latest proposed rip-off?

Will the Leader of the House also tell us when we can expect a debate on the social fund? The proposed changes are devastating for the very poorest people in our society, and the House must be given an opportunity to debate, and I hope reject, them.

Will the Leader of the House confirm that we shall soon have an opportunity to debate Members' accommodation and other facilities, in view of the continuing problems faced by many Members, especially new Members?

Finally, when will the televising of the House be debated? Will the right hon. Gentleman tell us, for the convenience of his right hon. and hon. Friends so that they can make the necessary arrangements, whether the Prime Minister intends to put on a three-line Whip to get them to vote against that?

Mr. Wakeham: The hon. Gentleman has asked six questions, which I shall do my best to answer.

First, I can confirm that there will be a debate on the immigration rules on the Floor of the House, I hope at a convenient time before the consultation period has expired.

I note the hon. Gentleman's request that the Merchant Shipping Bill should be committed to a Special Standing Committee. That matter is best pursued through the usual channels. It might be convenient if the hon. Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Hughes), who leads for the Opposition on these matters, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport were to have a discussion about it; I think that that can be arranged.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has been considering various options for the future of the Crown Suppliers, following advice from consultants. When he is in a position to make an announcement, I shall ensure that there is consultation through the usual channels about the form of that announcement.

I have nothing to say about the social fund today, but I shall refer the hon. Gentleman's request to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

I recognise that Members' accommodation and the new building Sub-Committee report on phase 2 is an important matter and I shall certainly arrange for a debate. When that report is received, a suitable occasion can be arranged.

I told the Leader of the Opposition last week that I hoped to be able to announce the date of the debate on televising the House today and I can inform the House that, subject to there being no unforeseen events, the debate will take place on Tuesday 9 February.

Mr. Nicholas Soames (Crawley): In order to facilitate the passage of the Government's business through the House, will my right hon. Friend have a word with the Serjeant at Arms about the unacceptable heat in the Palace of Westminster? Is he aware that in the Committee rooms upstairs the temperature is sometimes over 80 deg? Does he agree that, not only in the interests of economy but also in the interests of clear thinking, the heating should be turned down in what is a mild winter?

Mr. Wakeham: I shall take on board what my hon. Friend says about the heat in the Committee rooms, although I am not entirely sure that all the heat is generated by the heating system.

Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): Have there been any developments in the past seven days which will allow the House to give further directions to the Committee of Selection on the setting up of a Select Committee on Scottish Affairs?

Furthermore, the Leader of the House will be aware of the dismay that a major statement on the future of radio broadcasting should be made by way of a written answer. In view of that, will the House have an opportunity to debate that in the relatively near future?

Mr. Wakeham: Discussions are still going on to see whether we can find a satisfactory solution to the problem of the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs. I have written to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) and, when I have heard from him, I hope that that will help the matter.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has answered questions about the announcement on broadcasting today. The form of any announcement by the Government is obviously a matter for the Government's judgment, but we shall find time for a debate. When legislation comes forward, that will be an opportunity.

Mr. Allan Stewart (Eastwood): Will my right hon. Friend draw to his colleagues' attention the need for the Government to table an amendment which will draw to the attention of the House not only the disastrous consequences for Scotland but the most serious implications for the House of the Opposition's proposals for the future government of Scotland? Does he agree that the Labour party has spent the past ten years failing to answer the West Lothian question? Is it too much to hope that we shall have an answer on Wednesday?

Mr. Wakeham: Obviously, those are exactly the points that I know my right hon. Friend and others will want to make in the debate. The question of an amendment to the motion is best left until we see what the Opposition motion is.

Mr. Ray Powell (Ogmore): Will the Leader of the House reintroduce the 10-minute limit for speeches in major debates? You said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, in reply to a point of order by my hon. Friend the Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), that on Tuesday of this week, on a major debate on the Health Service, affecting all constituents of all hon. Members, 25 Members were called and 30 were not. A number of speeches by Privy Councillors could have been cut much shorter. Many Back Benchers would have been afforded the opportunity of speaking if the 10-minute limit had been introduced. I ask the Leader of the House to arrange an urgent debate on the matter.

Mr. Wakeham: I recognise the strength of feeling. In the past few days I have been in contact with the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), who leads for the Opposition on House of Commons matters, and through the usual channels, to find out when it would be best to deal with this matter and some other outstanding matters in the report of the Procedure Committee.

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow, East): Does my right hon. Friend share my concern and the concern of other members of the Select Committee on European Legislation that many items are piling up which have not been put down for rapid debate, including all aspects of the present and future EEC budgets? On too many occasions Ministers may, either unwittingly or because they are in a difficult position, allow approval of measures which should gave been scrutinised by the House and the Select Committee in the proper way.

Mr. Wakeham: I recognise that there have been one or two such cases, as my hon. Friend points out. In each case the Minister concerned has properly written to the Scrutiny Committee explaining why he felt it necessary to take the action, but I recognise that there is concern, and I will do my best to meet it.

Mr. Greville Janner (Leicester, West): May we have a debate on solvent abuse, because in my constituency and elsewhere young people are turning from glue sniffing to sniffing butane gas for gas lighters, which is freely available to people irrespective of their age? Should not this matter have the attention of the House before it gets very much worse?

Mr. Wakeham: Yes, that is of course a very important matter. I know that the hon. and learned Gentleman is concerned about it, but I am afraid that I cannot see an early opportunity for a debate, although I will certainly bear it in mind.

Mr. Tony Marlow (Northampton, North): My right hon. Friend will be aware of the synthetic indignation of the Opposition about the actions of the Patronage Secretary with regard to private Members' business last week. As he is also aware that hypocrisy is not an ingredient of the debates in the House, I wonder whether, through the usual channels, he could make inquiries of the Labour party to see what pressure is being put on its members as to how they should vote tomorrow, and whether some of those pressures might infringe the rules of privilege of the House?

Mr. Wakeham: I have said to my hon. Friend before that I recognise his concern about this matter, but I believe that the usual channels are best kept to private discussions. I am not sure that I shall be asking the questions he wants me to ask.

Mr. Jack Ashley (Stoke-on-Trent, South): Is the Leader of the House aware that I received a letter this morning from a woman whose father almost died six years ago after taking the drug Opren? she said that she is ashamed to say that she now wishes he had died, in view of his appalling suffering. He is now bedridden, in pain, needs constant attention day and night, and has no hope and no dignity. I have many hundreds of similar letters about the sufferings of those who have taken Opren. Will the right hon. Gentleman recognise that all my Adjournment debates, early-day motions and parliamentary questions are inadequate and that we must have a full debate in order to knock some sense into the multinational company, Eli Lilly, which is offering an average of £2,000 for such injuries? We must debate how to avoid similar drug disasters in future.

Mr. Wakeham: I think the whole House recognises that, when the right hon. Gentleman takes up a case, he pursues it with great vigour and sincerity. Having said that, I do not believe that I can immediately offer a debate on the subject, but I will have a word with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Mr. Michael Fallon (Darlington): Will my right hon. Friend arrange for an early debate on the work of the Liaison Committee, which seems to be putting Thomas Cook to shame as it sends Select Committees to the far east, the Mediterranean and the United States? In view of the fact that overseas travel now costs a third of a million pounds a year, would it not be better to have a more rigorous and independent assessment of the applications for such trips rather than the secretive back-scratching that goes on between Select Committee Chairmen?

Mr. Wakeham: I am not sure that I can promise a debate on the Liaison Committee at the moment, but if it should make a report to the House obviously we shall concern ourselves with the matter. As I understand it, the Liaison Committee scrutinises such applications with the greatest possible care.

Mr. Andrew Faulds (Warley, East) rose——

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Faulds: I thought I was called——

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): Called what?

Mr. Faulds: If I might have a word in this conversation——

Mr. Speaker: I would welcome it.

Mr. Faulds: Thank you, Sir. Before the worst elements in the Government, including the Prime Minister and the Home Secretary, have their destructive way with public service broadcasting in this country, would the right hon. Gentleman determine to allow the House to debate and defend this principle, and in particular the BBC?

Mr. Wakeham: I recognise that debates on broadcasting are an important part of the debates in this House and that there must be a debate on this issue before too long. I cannot promise anything more than I have already said, but it is certainly a matter that I will consider.

Mr. Tim Smith (Beaconsfield): On the question of over-lengthy speeches raised by the hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell), is not the problem the fact that there are now too many Privy Councillors and ex-Ministers in this House? Will my right hon. Friend have a word with the Prime Minister to see whether some of them could be sent to the House of Lords, where there appears to be a need for good people?

Mr. Wakeham: That may be so, but the principal problem of over-long speeches is that hon. Members speak for too long.

Mr. Alex Salmond (Banff and Buchan): Will the Leader of the House allow a debate, in early course, on the Government's policy towards mergers and acquisitions, given the remarkable circumstances whereby the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry refers the Kuwaiti minority investment in BP—a company with no golden share—to the Director General of Fair Trading while, simultaneously, the Chancellor of the Exchequer refuses to take effective action in BP's bid for Britoil — a company with a golden share? Indeed, the Chancellor gave a clear commitment to Britoil's independence before the House of Commons on 31 March 1982. We need a debate so that the Government can explain the apparent hypocrisy in their policy towards Britain's and Scotland's largest company.

Mr. Wakeham: We obviously will have debates on these subjects from time to time. However, I do not believe that the events of recent weeks make the need for such debates more urgent than it was. I believe that, in both the cases referred to by the hon. Gentleman, my right hon. Friends the Chancellor and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry acted entirely properly. Indeed, the actions of the Chancellor were the subject of a statement to this House.

Mr. Patrick Cormack (Staffordshire, South): Reverting to the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith), would it not be a good idea if all Privy Councillors, with the obvious exception of the Father of the House, were restricted to four priority speeches a year?

Mr. Wakeham: I do not know that I can necessarily go along with that. I am not sure that we need too many rules about speeches. I believe the basis upon which the Speaker selects who should speak in debates—it is one that has served us for many hundreds of years—is probably the best basis.

Mr. Norman Buchan (Paisley, South): Is the Leader of the House aware that a kind of creeping censorship over the spoken and written word is occurring under this Government? We saw it last Friday and we are now seeing it with the announcement of a possible debate, some time in the future, regarding broadcasting when organisation outside the House is already discussing it not time that we had a little glasnost in Britain a discussed what is happening to the spoken and w word?

Mr. Wakeham: I do not accept the hon. Gentle analysis. Subjects for debate in this House are not e a matter for the Government. As I said, I shall see can be done, but there are other ways in which the Gentleman might press for a debate.

Mr. Ivan Lawrence (Burton): There is growing evi that perpetrators of Nazi war crimes are sheltering i country, yet there is no provision in British law for to be brought to justice. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary is examining the matter and considering wh there should be a change in the law, would it n appropriate for us to have a debate to consider wheth House is in favour of the introduction of measu change the existing law?

Mr. Wakeham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary mentioned that matter in the debate earlie week. He said that, when the Government have consi the matter more fully, he will ensure that the Ho informed. The best plan is to wait until that happen then decide how best to proceed.

Mr. William O'Brien (Normanton): Will the Lea the House agree to an urgent debate on the threa closure of the only hospital in south-east Leeds? W accept that the regular statements and rhetoric fro Dispatch Box do not help the people of Rothwell, the closure of St. George's hospital will cause tremen hardship? Will the right hon. Gentleman agree to an debate, before Budget day, so that we can explain in the problems that we face as a result of hospital clo in south-east Leeds and my constituency?

Mr. Wakeham: As the hon. Gentleman knows, w a debate on the Health Service earlier this week, would not be reasonable to expect me to find tim another debate quite so soon. If the hon. Gentl wishes to raise the matter, he could perhaps try his at securing an Adjournment debate.

Mr. Bowen Wells (Hertford and Stortford): M bring to my right hon. Friend's attention once mo question of the debate recommended to him by European Legislation Committee on steel closures i Common Market? The matter has been outstanding o list since the beginning of December, before the Mi went to express his views and vote in the Coun Ministers, yet it has still not been debated. It seri affects steel makers in this country and, indeed denationalisation of the steel industry, which is proposed to the House.

Mr. Wakeham: I recognise the importance of subject, and I know that my hon. Friend has taken a interest in the matter. I shall refer it to my right hon learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lanc and Minister of Trade and Industry, but I do not pro a debate in the next week.

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): May I with the Leader of the House for the fourth time question of Kuwaiti purchases of BP shares and the that the Arabs are buying up the North sea through

As no Minister has yet made a statement on these matters at the Dispatch Box, is it not time that such a statement was forthcoming? Will the right hon. Gentleman impress upon Ministers the fact that we want questions answered in the Chamber?

Mr. Wakeham: The question whether there should be a statement in the House is ultimately for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. If the hon. Gentleman is not satisfied with that, his right course is to table a question.

Mr. James Kilfedder (North Down): May we have an urgent debate on the warning issued yesterday by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, who told the people of Ulster to expect a fresh and terrible campaign of terrorism as a result of support given, and arms provided, by Libya to the Provisional IRA? Those arms were apparently landed in the Irish Republic in three separate shipments. The Ulster people have suffered two decades of terrible terrorism and are now demoralised by the Anglo-Eire Agreement, which they perceive as weakening their position in the United Kingdom. Therefore, is it not vital to have a debate—quite apart from Tuesday's debate on the Army—to enable all Northern Ireland Members to express their fears and investigate what the Government intend to do to protect the people of Northern Ireland and the members of the security forces from further atrocities?

Mr. Wakeham: I recognise the importance of debates on Northern Ireland. I regret that I cannot offer my hon. Friend a debate on the subject next week. However, he can question the Secretary of State on Thursday during Northern Ireland questions.

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): Will the Leader of the House accept that I would welcome a debate on the largely pin-striped meetings of the Liaison Committee because the vote on the £300,000 expenditure referred to by the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) would reveal that there was a 9 to 1 vote in favour and that I was the sole Member to vote against it?

I want to make a suggestion about the problem of continuing hospital closures and the debating system. Will the Leader of the House ask the Secretary of State for Social Services next week to come to the Dispatch Box to make a statement about the various closures proposed by the area health authorities, most of which have puppet Tory chairmen in charge? The Secretary of State could then explain why Bradford area health authority is proposing hospital closures and not fulfilling appointments, which amounts to a cut of more than £3 million in two years. We could question the Secretary of State about that. If those matters are going to take a long time, as seems likely, Opposition Members would be quite happy to take the time to examine the massive cuts that are continuing to take place.

Mr. Wakeham: In any debate about the Health Service, we should refer to the expansion as well as the closure of facilities. The picture is not as the hon. Gentleman described.

I do not believe that I should say anything more than I have already said about the Liaison Committee. If the Liaison Committee reports to the House, we will find an opportunity to debate its report if that seems appropriate.

Mr. Neil Hamilton (Tatton): May I invite my right hon. Friend to be less resistant to the advances from the Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds) and the hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. Buchan), and to have a debate on public service broadcasting because many of us believe that that would be a useful innovation for the BBC? Has my right hon. Friend seen the report in today's newspapers that the "Panorama" team intends to make a programme on the National Health Service? However, to prove that the hospital service is overstretched, the team has had to import bogus patients into a waiting room to make it look as if it was full. When one of the constituents of my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. French), who had undergone two hip replacement operations by the National Health Service, offered to be interviewed, the "Panorama" team lost interest because he was not going to be critical of the National Health Service and the Government's role.

Mr. Wakeham: My hon. Friend puts his points very persuasively. I said that I would look at it again, and I will. I will bear in mind my hon. Friend's point.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): May I draw the attention of the Leader of the House to early-day motion 533 about the Nicaragua and Guatemala accord?

[That this house warmly congratulates the President and Government of Nicaragua on complying with the terms of the Guatemala Accord; asks the United States Congress to vote down any proposal from President Reagan to provide additional funds for the Contra terrorists; and calls upon the United States Government to respect the sovereignty of Nicaragua and allow the countries of central America the freedom to determine their own political futures.]

May I ask the Leader of the House, in view of the fact that on 3 February the United States Congress will discuss a proposal from President Reagan to extend further assistance to the Contra terrorists, to arrange a prior debate in this House because of the interest in this country about what is happening in central America and because of the presence of British forces in Belize? At least the United States Congress would know the views of the British Parliament about the further arming and funding of terrorists by President Reagan.

Mr. Wakeham: I cannot promise an early debate on that subject. However, the central American Presidents, at their meeting on 15-16 January, stated that they were not entirely satisfied with the implementation of the agreement so far, and they agreed to fulfil their undertakings immediately. We appeal to all central Americans, especially those from Nicaragua, to meet that new undertaking.

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): Has my right hon. Friend noted early-day motion 275 calling for the abolition of the national dock labour scheme, which now has the support of the very large number of 209 hon. Members?

[This House believes that the National Dock Labour Scheme is an anachronism which both endangers the viability of jobs in the scheme areas and acts as a deterrent to job creation by new ventures; and calls on Her Majesty's Government to abolish the scheme, and open negotiations immediately with employers and unions to bring that about.]

That support is representative of the frustration felt in the House at the continuing existence of this anachronism, which is having a bad effect on the growth of employment in the inner cities where most of the scheme ports are located. Will my right hon. Friend talk to our right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for Employment with a view to getting on with the negotiations, which will allow legislation to be tabled in the House?

[Mr. Jacques Arnold]

Mr. Wakeham: The Government are aware of the views of many of my right hon. and hon. Friends about the drawbacks of the national dock labour scheme. However, as we have made clear to the House, there are no plans at present to change its operation.

Mrs. Alice Mahon (Halifax): May I draw the attention of the Leader of the House to early-day motion 512, which draws attention to the Sex Discrimination Act 1975?

[That this House calls on the Government to strengthen the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 in ways to ensure that: (a) those bringing claims of sexual harassment under section 1(1) of the Act cannot be subjected to questioning on their sexual attitudes, nor should such information be relevant to the case (b) compensation cannot be reduced as a result of reference to views of the victim's character and (c) compensation reflects the seriousness of the offence.]

Recently, a tribunal allowed an employer to question a woman who had won her case about her sexual attitudes and, consequently, it reduced the compensation. Will the Leader of the House make time to debate this serious issue?

Mr. Wakeham: I agree that it is a very serious issue. The Equal Opportunities Commission has recently completed a review of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975, and we expect it to be submitted to my right hon. Friend shortly. He will consider its proposals for any changes in the legislation, and that might give us the opportunity of a debate on the subject.

Mr. Bill Walker (Tayside, North): On Wednesday next week we shall again have an opportunity to debate the government of Scotland. When will we have an opportunity to debate the good government of the United Kingdom, particularly the needs of London and the south, as the Opposition parties have difficulty in finding Members who represent that area to staff Committees? My right hon. Friend will be aware of the difficulties that we have been having in Standing Committee, with interruptions caused by difficulties of that nature coming from the north.

Mr. Wakeham: We have plenty of opportunities to debate the good government of England, Wales and Scotland, and that is the best way to proceed. The Opposition have chosen Scotland for their debate next Wednesday, which is their right.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Will the Leader of the House take the appropriate steps to ensure the publication of the 1988 Register of Members' Interests so that those of us who sympathise with nurses working in hospitals and those who are taking action can send them photocopies of the appropriate pages showing all those Tory Members of Parliament who are attacking nurses for being moonlighters when they themselves have page after page of directorships, like the right hon. Member for Chingford (Mr. Tebbit), who has more than four directorships with salaries adding up to more than £50,000? He is biggest moonlighters in this building, yet he has to attack nurses who are on paltry wages. We register so that we can get that point across to who matter.

Mr. Wakeham: The register will be publishe as possible. I shall look into why the printing ha dealt with, although the register is available in th Damage is done to the Health Service by the ex and excessive remarks of the hon. Gentleman ar his hon. Friends—they are much more dama anything else.

Mr. Tim Boswell (Daventry): Will my right h bear in mind the importance of an early agriculture? The National Farmers Union is abo its annual meeting, and with the vital negotiatio proceeding in Europe, the pressure on farmin clear disparity in the green pound, would this entirely appropriate and seasonal moment for

Mr. Wakeham: I agree with my hon. Frie subject that I have in mind for a debate in th distant future.

Mr. Tom Clarke (Monklands, West): Does t of the House accept that many people in social se social work departments share the concern o Friend the Member for Holborn and St. Pan Dobson) about the consequences of the socia those departments? Does he agree that the pre in the National Health Service means that there greater demand on social workers? The morale workers in this country is at a low ebb. Therefo have an urgent debate on these urgent matters'

Mr. Wakeham: These are important matters, are two sides to most of the points that Gentleman raises. I cannot add anything to wha the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pan Dobson).

Mr. Michael Jack (Fylde): My right hon. F realise that, in spite of many probing parl questions, 16,500 aerospace workers in Lancash concerned about the future of the Europe aircraft? Will he find time to have a word Secretary of State for Defence, so that he ca statement to reconfirm the British Gov commitment to this vital project and tell us doing to persuade the German Government themselves to the project as fully as our Gover

Mr. Wakeham: I shall certainly refer the ma right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for De

Mr. George Foulkes (Carrick, Cumnock Valley): Will the Leader of the House, in consult the Home Secretary, arrange for any Co Members intending to participate in the debate on the government of Scotland to be encourag the excellent novel, "Scotch on the Rocks"?

Mr. Wakeham: I am sure that many of my ho will take part in the debate next week. I shall list contributions with interest, but they will be in with a number of speeches from the Oppositio suspect will not be quite as good.

Mr. Patrick McLoughlin (Derbyshire, West): Will my right hon. Friend take time to look at early-day motion 342?

[That this House deplores the appointment by Derbyshire County Council of Mr. Reg Race, former honourable Member for Wood Green, former Research Officer for the National Union of Public Employees, former head of the Greater London Council's programme office, former consultant to the Association of Cinematograph, Television and Allied Technicians and former researcher to the Labour-funded London Government Information Unit, to the £46,000 a year post of County Director; and believes that all local authority employees should be politically impartial and that Derbyshire County Council is making appointments on the basis of whether or not candidates are acceptable to the ruling group's left-wing views and not on the basis of merit and experience.]

He will see that it relates to the appointment, as county director of Derbyshire county council, of a former Labour Member of Parliament. Does he agree that this raises some disturbing questions about the conduct of good local government? This is only one of a number of political appointments in paid employment on long-term contracts that have been made by that authority which damage Derbyshire's reputation as an employer. Does he agree that this should be the subject of a debate under the title of "The code of local government"?

Mr. Wakeham: I recognise that this is an important matter. Effective local government rests solidly on politically neutral officers serving, with equal commitment, whichever party may be in political control. There is increasing concern that in some cases appointments are politically motivated. The Widdicombe committee has put forward proposals aimed at preventing such abuses, and the Government are giving them careful consideration.

Points of Order

4.7 pm

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Given the reply of the Leader of the House, for which you have no responsibility, may I raise a point with you as Chairman of the House of Commons Commission? Would it be possible, if the Register of Members' Interests is further delayed, for nurses to be allowed to be conducted into the Library so that they can see for themselves the Register of Members' Interests? Would it be possible for the Library to be open for one day so that the Government can show that the register is not being delayed and that the point about hypocrisy and double standards is not being shielded from the public gaze? If, unfortunately, nurses are driven out on strike by the Government's policies, it would be a good opportunity for them to come here and see the background of those hypocritical Tories who are attacking them.

Mr. Speaker: That matter was raised with me yesterday. I said that I would look into the reason for the delay in publishing the register. However, as the hon. Gentleman correctly says, it is available to hon. Members in the Library.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): I wonder whether I might take up the attitude that you, Mr. Speaker, intend to take towards points of order. Inevitably, if we believe that the House is not being treated properly, hon. Members—this has happened for hundreds of years a will continue long after we are gone—raise the mat with the Speaker.

Yesterday, I understand that you did not want to ta any more points of order, Sir. There was, if I may say with respect, an important principle—the Governm had decided to publish a White Paper without makin statement. The Home Secretary has, from his point view, defended and justified that. Clearly, we are satisfied; we were not satisfied at the time and we tried raise a point of order. I know that a rubbishy arti appeared in one of the newspapers saying that you w not exercising sufficient control. As I understand it, House does not sit for the convenience of the Governm —certainly not for the Government alone—and Ba Benchers—those of us who hold no jobs, official otherwise—take the House of Commons seriously. If did not, we would not spend so much of our time her

It is rather unfortunate—I hope that you, M Speaker, will take this in the way that it is being presen and not as a criticism—that if we try to raise a point order, even before we can get a word out, like yesterd you shout us down, or tell us to sit down—[Hc MEMBERS: "Oh!"] I corrected that. Therefore, I hope th you will recognise that it is a legitimate way for Ba Benchers to raise matters, and if we are refused we sh have to find other ways, such as Standing Order No. applications, which I do not think you would apprecia I hope that this point is understood.

Mr. Speaker: This matter was raised by an ho Member yesterday and he was supported from his Fro Bench. If the hon. Gentleman looks at Hansard he will that question was not directed to me but to the Leader the House across the Chamber, and he responded. T point about the written question was a matter Government business, not a matter of order at all.

I think the House will always support the Chair dealing with points of order which are points of order, b points of controversy across the Chamber must be de with in different ways. If it is legitimate to raise such matter through a Standing Order No. 20 application, th is the correct way to deal with it, not as a result of a po of order.

I should add that some hon. Members—not many might be tempted to get in early by raising a point of ord rather than by making a speech in the debate to con Yesterday, and indeed on other occasions this week, large number of right hon. and hon. Members wished take part in our debates. That is equally true today. Poi of order delay them and ensure that they do not get a f chance.

Mr. Allan Stewart (Eastwood): On a point of ord Mr. Speaker. May I seek your guidance on a question privilege and refer you to the precedent——

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. Gentleman has question of privilege, he should write to me in the usu way and I will consider it. That is the rule, and has be so for some years.

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South a Shoreditch): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wond whether you could help the House. My hon. Friend t Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) is, as he has ju told the House, a member of the Liaison Committee.

[Mr. Brian Sedgemore]

understand that that Committee met in closed session recently to discuss the expenditure of large sums of money for trips and that my hon. Friend gave the vote of that Committee. My understanding is that it is a rule of this House that matters that take place during private proceedings should not be brought to the House until the Committee has reported. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether you could reprimand my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, South.

Mr. Speaker: I reprimand him.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): Further to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick). You will recall that on Tuesday I raised as a point of order the Home Secretary's release of information by way of a planted parliamentary question on the reorganisation of radio in this country. It may come as a bit of a surprise to you from time to time, Mr. Speaker, but I want to try to support the Chair as often as I possibly can. I should like that to be every single time.

However, I should also like to put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that we have the right here to attempt to raise certain matters—for example, when we see the Home Secretary treating the House with what we believe to be contempt—certainly with discourtesy—in the way in which important Government announcements are sneaked in in that fashion.

Although Government business and the business of the House may not be your responsibility, Mr. Speaker—indeed, they are not—when Back Benchers, and indeed Front Benchers, are treated with contempt by Ministers, you, Sir, can certainly use your influence to intervene on our behalf so that we can call Government to account in the Chamber, which we are elected so to do. I should add that I have received complaints from Conservative Members about the way in which the Home Secretary acted on Tuesday.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Gentleman should study the Order Paper more carefully—[Interruption.] Well, if he had studied the Order Paper yesterday he wou that there would be an opportunity to rais matters on questions 6 and 7 today. The hon will recognise that I allowed a full run on Indeed, every hon. Member who wished to Question Time today on that question including the hon. Gentleman.

In relation to an earlier point of order, I "unreprimand" the hon. Member for Brad (Mr. Cryer) because I now see from the Proceedings which have been shown to Committee of which he is a member has rep House. I apologise to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Cryer: Further to that point of order, I I was, in fact, going to draw that to your should like to conclude this amicable discus us, in which the Committee has been hig saying that when my hon. Friend the Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgem the House he had a reputation for defendi would not trust him to adopt that positio future.

BILL PRESENTED

OVERSEAS AID (ASSISTANCE TO THE PO

Mr. Brian Wilson, supported by Miss Joan Bernie Grant, Mr. Tom Clarke, Miss Marjor Mr. Sam Galbraith, Mr. David Blunkett, Mr Mr. George Galloway, Mr. Donald Anders Diane Abbott, presented a Bill to amend t Development and Co-operation Act 1980 to the bulk of United Kingdom official assistance is concentrated on the poorest coun poorest people living in them; that a proportion of aid spending is devoted to agric development to benefit especially women and to require the Overseas Development Admi establish a timetable during which overall of Nations aid targets may be reached: And th read the First time; and ordered to be read a upon Friday 12 February, and to be printed.

Orders of the Day

Firearms (Amendment) Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

Mr. Speaker: I have to announce that I have selected the amendment in the name of the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) and his hon. Friends.

I must also draw to the attention of the House yet again the fact that about 26 right hon. and hon. Members wish to take part in the debate. I noticed that the issue of 10-minute speeches was raised during business questions. It would be most helpful to the Chair if brief speeches could be made today, so that not too many hon. Members return to their constituencies in distress this weekend.

4.15 pm

The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hurd): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

The House hardly needs me to recall the background to this Bill. The tragedy at Hungerford in August last year did not create the problem which the Bill, like the 1968 Act, seeks to tackle but it underlined the nature of that problem indelibly, in terms which no one will forget. Well before then, we had set work in hand in the context of proposals for a firearms amnesty this year. Well before then, there had been tragic incidents and strong calls from the police for firmer controls. Hungerford ensured that there would be no let-up. Every tragic crime since then —there have been several—involving the use of firearms has intensified the loss of public confidence in the present system of control. It is not in anyone's interest to leave unchanged such a shaky system. The need for a reformed Act in which both public and shooters can have confidence is overwhelmingly felt, and this Bill is the result.

I hope that I have been careful throughout not to overstate the argument. I do not pretend that what is offered in this Bill can provide any absolute guarantee against criminal abuse or negligent misuse of guns. Hungerford cannot be guaranteed against a Ryan. What the Bill can and does do is to reduce the risk, to the individual citizen and the community at large, of such disasters. The safety of the citizen and the community has been our main concern in working out the Bill.

That does not mean that we have ignored the rights of the legitimate shooter. Wherever possible, we have sought to accommodate the needs and interests of the many responsible shooters from all walks of life. I have declined to be hustled by the opposition parties or by the media to go faster or further. We have no desire to hinder the legitimate sportsman, the gamekeeper or the farmer in pursuit of his sport or work. But obviously our overriding obligation is the protection of the citizen in the community.

Before I describe the main provisions of the Bill let me say that, although we believe that the central pillars of our policy are right, we remain ready to listen to legitimate concerns on matters of detail. Indeed, our White Paper was designed to enable people to study and comment on the proposals in a way that would inform debate in proceedings on the Bill.

It is entirely natural that the proposals should cause some anxiety among legitimate shooters. As it happens, I have spent a large part of my life among people guns. That comes of having been brought up o and now representing a country constituency always known shooters to be highly sensible and people, which is, on the whole, borne out by my e over recent weeks.

There have been shrill, and I think largely un tative, voices in the shooting press — [Int There have been some. Many of my hon. Friends received strong letters of protest, as we have in t Office. I congratulate them on the way in which resisted particular pressures and returned to th argument. I have been impressed—and surpr the number of individual shooters who have co me and said that they thought we had got it ab At the last meeting I had with my National Farm constituency parliamentary committee, I led o proposals on firearms, expecting a good opposition, because I suppose everyone in t owned a shotgun. Instead of opposing, thos urged me to get on with it, because there were unknown people with guns wandering about land.

Of course, users of guns, whether shotguns pistols, have legitimate concerns and represent make. That is why, contrary to some pressure, w to be stampeded on this, and have proceeded s way of debate, statement, White Paper and no

With the genuine anxieties that exist very muc we have been concerned that representative shooting community should be properly heard. consulted widely, with organisations represen ticular shooting activities and with those with a in shooting generally. There have been meeting officials and over 20 such organisations, as we police and local authority and other representati met the British Shooting Sports Council, led Swansea and my hon. Friend the Member for (Sir H. Monro), which includes a very wide constituent bodies covering sporting and trade My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Se State has met the council on two further occa has also met the Shooters Rights Association, t Association for Shooting and Conservation United Kingdom Practical Rifle Commission. received views from a number of organisations specifically asked to comment, as well as from of clubs and the public generally. I apologise fo that, because of the volume of such correspon have not been able to reply as quickly as we w I assure the House that all views have been t account.

As I proceed, I shall illustrate ways in whic accommodated particular concerns expressed by There are some that we cannot meet without dam pillars of the Bill; but there are others on which will find that our mind is not closed.

The Bill is relatively short, but also, technical and complex. Clause 1 goes to the h because it extends the list of prohibited wea ammunition that can be held only with th authority of the Secretary of State. Such autho normally given to private individuals, and the various types of weapons and ammunition whic unsuitable for private possession. First and among these are full-bore self-loading rifles o used by Ryan at Hungerford, and full-bore pump-action rifles. Self-loading or pump-action shotguns, which are short-barrelled or less than 40 in. in overall length, and revolving magazine shotguns, will also become prohibited. We have in addition taken the opportunity to prohibit a number of other weapons, including rocket launchers, mortars and stun guns. As for ammunition, explosive bullets will be banned, and, if capable of being used with a firearm, grenades, bombs, rockets, and shells. It is odd that some of those items were not already on the prohibited list. I hope the House will agree that there can be no justification for such weapons or ammunition being possessed by the private individual.

[Mr. Douglas Hurd]

We have not gone in, if I may so put it, with a blunderbuss. It will be seen that .22 rim fire pump-action and self-loading rifles, which are widely used for vermin control, are not caught by the ban. When I first outlined our ideas in September, I indicated that we were minded to ban all short-barrelled smooth-bore guns. The shooting organisations have drawn my attention to the legitimate, traditional uses for such guns. Examples include rook guns, muzzle-loading guns, Very signalling pistols and stag-dispatching guns. We decided that those could properly remain under section 1 control.

I recognise that the ban on self-loading rifles will affect the practical rifle shooter, who will not be able to continue his sport with that gun. The House will have to weigh a number of considerations, as we have had to do, including lethality and the extent of use. In my view, the limited sporting use of such weapons is outweighed by the power to kill, and I do not feel that we should ask the House to accept the risk of further misuse.

We have no wish to hinder practical shooting as a sport. It may be little consolation to the self-loading rifle enthusiast, but he will of course be able to use the traditional bolt action rifle, or to join in other practical shooting events that use pistols or shotguns.

The issue of compensation arose at Question Time. I recognise that compensation for those whose weapons will be prohibited causes considerable concern to many of my right hon. and hon. Friends, and possibly to Opposition Members as well. As my hon. Friend the Minister said in answer to questions, there are serious objections to compensation. I am prepared to give further thought to the fresh arguments that are put forward. However, I must add that I see considerable difficulties of both principle and practice in any form of compensation scheme.

Sir Bernard Braine (Castle Point): My right hon. Friend has been touching on the practical difficulties. Will he consider the man with a legitimate licence, whose legitimate weapon is now to be made illegal? All the advice that he has been given so far is that he can sell his weapon back to the trade. Has my right hon. Friend thought of the greatest difficulty of all—that the only outlet for such weapons will be sale overseas, as a ready gift to terrorists?

Mr. Hurd: I am afraid that huge quantities of such weapons are awash in the world. I do not believe that that argument is decisive. One of my hon. Friends has put it to me that we should not give compensation because on other occasions when certain products have been banned by domestic or European legislation, no compensation has been paid, and it would therefore be inequitable to pay it in this instance. I am using that argument simply to show some of the difficulties of principle, as
But, as I have said, we are prepared to giv to argument on the matter, and my hon.
listen carefully to points made on the sub debate or in correspondence we have re

Mr. Graham Riddick (Colne Valley): C
Friend give some instances of certain being hit in the pocket by Bills passed i

Mr. Hurd: The example given to me in described as a scented eraser, which was a certain constituency and cannot be m longer. The machinery and process manufacture therefore have lost their va that as a small example of the principle

Mr. Peter Hardy (Wentworth): The may wish to consider two points. First, banned weapon may well be prepared, pa are adverse financial circumstances, to that weapon unlawfully to someon particularly concerned about complying

My second point concerns a constitue responsible young man, whom I have k time—he is a student, with very little weapon, and is going to find that his hol very dear. Such cases surely merit consid

Mr. Hurd: The hon. Gentleman put clearly, but I do not think that the first is weapon is already listed on a section 1 fi and its destination would be a matter fo

Mr. Tony Marlow (Northampton, No right hon. Friend, in these exceptiona justify paying compensation, on the basi these weapons out of circulation? Other a risk that we shall find some of our sold Ireland being killed by weapons that have the system, because they have not be circulation as a result of the measure?

Mr. Hurd: I do not think that the illegally, for the reason that I have alr point will clearly come up in the debate.
we are prepared to give it further thou suggestions can be made to resolve some that I have mentioned, it will be helpful.

Mr. David Tredinnick (Bosworth): I a right hon. Friend for giving way. I am he is prepared to reconsider compensat approached by an engineer, a respectabl community, who has three self-loadin assumption that he will be forced to s approached six dealers, all of whom said rifles were virtually unsaleable. Four w unable to accept any price, and the other about £30 and about £10 respectively—
the rifles, would represent a loss of £735

Mr. Hurd: I note that illustration of

Mr. William Ross (Londonderry, Eas

Mr. Hurd: No; I have given way four this point.

Clause 1 also provides a reserve power of State to make an order to add to the weapons and ammunition. Such an additi in respect of any firearm or ammunition, but not an air weapon which is not prohibited but which appears to be especially dangerous. This is not a power to be used lightly — it should be exercisable by statutory instrument subject to the approval of both Houses of Parliament, the affirmative procedure, but I feel it is essential because of the rapid development of weapons technology.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones (Ynys Mon) rose——

Mr. Hurd: No; I must get on.

Some may feel that the provision is drawn rather too widely, but do we really need primary legislation every time a new weapon which ought to be prohibited comes on to the market? It is because of such developments that we have in the Bill provision to deal with burst fire weapons and stun guns; stun guns have caused a good deal of concern. If we seek to qualify the reserve power too much we may limit the scope for dealing with the unforeseen.

The effect of clause 2 is to lift pump-action and self-loading shotguns of normal length to section 1 control under the 1968 Act— the same level of control, that is, as exists for pistols and bolt-action rifles. This is justified by the significantly greater rate of fire which such guns have over conventional single and double-barrelled shotguns. There are relatively few sporting purposes for which a conventional shotgun will not serve just as well as a pump-action or self-loading one, and in future there is no question of prohibition but those who want to hold such weapons will have to satisfy the police that they have a good reason for wishing to do so. This clause also lifts the more lethal types of shotgun ammunition — cartridges which contain the larger pellets of shot, for which, again, there is little sporting justification—under full section 1 control.

Clause 3 details the new criteria for the issue and renewal of shotgun certificates. There have been a number of recent incidents involving the misuse of legally held shotguns. We want to reduce the danger of shotguns falling into the wrong hands and to ensure that where they are held lawfully they are kept safely and cannot easily be acquired or used by those with criminal intent.

Under present legislation, a chief officer of police must grant a shotgun certificate unless he has reason to believe that the applicant is prohibited by the Act from possessing a shotgun, or that such possession by the applicant would endanger the public safety or the peace. Clause 3 requires the chief officer to be satisfied that the public safety or the peace will not be endangered. This will give the chief officer discretion to satisfy himself, by means of a home inspection if necessary, that shotguns are being stored securely.

Sir Dudley Smith (Warwick and Leamington): My right hon. Friend will know that various chief constables are zealous in certain departments, such as booking people for speeding, drink driving, and so on. Can he assure the House that chief constables will be more or less even-handed under the good reason provision of the Bill? On refusal, will there be a right of appeal for the individual?

Mr. Hurd: The answer to the second point is yes. That is very important. On the first point, I am coming to parts of the Bill which limit the discretion of chief officers of police for the kind of reason that my hon. Friend has in mind when we come to good reason. We shall also be issuing guidance. I think it is reasonable in p chief officers of police should apply their po light of local circumstances, knowing that the of appeal. In some cases, particularly the shotguns from one place to another during o of a shoot, there have been problems. We c some of those by guidance. I am keen that w so to remove friction, which does not serve purpose.

I was coming to the secure keeping clause. to amend the Firearms Rules 1969 so that the to keep a firearm in a secure place when not i also extends to shotguns. In 1986 there we incidents in which shotguns were reported to stolen, including over 500 thefts from properties. I am aware of concern that such a should not operate unreasonably on people w carry guns from one place to another. It is imp there should be sensible guidance to the police related points.

Clause 3 also provides for a shotgun application to be refused where the police are s the applicant has no good reason for wishing shotgun. This will not affect the majority of sh where the reason for holding a shotgun wil apparent. The existence of a good reason is n for arbitrary decision. I know that there is a rea a future Labour Government might seek to use expression to their views on what they call blo declare, for example, that sporting purposes constitute a good reason for having a shotgu

That is why we have put on the face of the in primary legislation which could be chang further primary legislation, that a good reas sporting or competition purposes and vermin will not be grounds for refusal merely that wants to hold, but not use, shotguns that sentimental value, for example. In my view th in practice need to make further inquiries only are genuine doubts about an applicant's inte a shotgun. They cannot do so at present. I do that is right if judgments are to be made pro

Mr. Robin Maxwell-Hyslop (Tiverton): The of substance on which my right hon. Frien advise the House. He has referred to giving guidance. So far as I know, this is not a statu What is the status of the guidance which he police, and in what way does it bind the police it?

Mr. Hurd: Guidance is not a direction. My knows the system of policing well enough to kn relationship with the Home Secretary is not th receive directions from me on matters outsi Guidance is guidance. Chief officers on the wh with guidance. The guidance will be worked between the Home Office and the police representatives of the shooting community be conscious that we will not get it right unle involved in advising on sensible guidance, w phrase I use.

Mr. Henry Bellingham (Norfolk, North-W my right hon. Friend agree, in regard to guid would make great sense if the Bill contained provisions for a statutory expert, consultative committee that could advise Home Secretaries?

[Mr. Henry Bellingham]

Mr. Hurd: I understand that point. The question would then arise as to who should sit on it, what should be the police representation and what should be the representation of people who may not be so keen on the legitimate shooter's rights as I and my hon. Friends are. As I think we have shown in recent months, I am keen to keep in close touch with representatives of shooters, and I have given examples of that. When we come to the drafting of guidance, I believe that keeping in close touch will continue to be important. I would rather do that than set up a consultative body, given the arguments that would arise about its composition.

Mr. Roy Hattersley (Birmingham, Sparkbrook): Will the Home Secretary tell us what he regards as the boundaries of acceptable guidance? From time to time we on the Opposition Benches talk about guiding chief constables and it is called political interference. When does one start and the other end?

Mr. Hurd: Interference would occur if the proposals of the Labour manifesto were ever to be implemented, which would by law put the operations and priorities of chief constables under the control of local authorities. The right hon. Gentleman's red herring is not even particularly ingenious.

Clause 4 provides for the listing on a shotgun certificate of details of all the shotguns possessed by the holder and for notification of transfers. I found it odd that the police should have so little knowledge about the type or numbers of shotguns which are legally held. I believe it represents an important improvement in the nature of controls that the police should have more detailed information about the possession and movement of shotguns. Clause 5 deals with the sale of shotgun ammuntion. At present, the only control on shotgun ammunition is that it may not be sold to persons under the age of 17. There is nothing to prevent someone who does not possess a shotgun certificate, and who might qualify for one, from purchasing large quantities. This clause provides that, in future people seeking to purchase shotgun ammunition will, unless they are exempt from control, have to produce their shotgun certificate, or one belonging to a third party, together with an appropriate authorisation, when buying ammunition. This is a sensible and straightforward provision.

Let us consider the effects of the provisions of clauses 3 to 5 on the holder of a traditional single or double-barrelled shotgun. The police will be able to come and check that he is keeping his shotguns safely. When his current certificate expires, he will need next time to list the guns that he holds on his new certificate, with numbers or a description. If he sells one of his shotguns, or buys another from someone who is not a registered dealer, he will need to tell the police. If necessary, the police will be able to ask him, when renewing his certificate, about his reasons for wanting one, but his sport, leisure activity or profession will count as a good reason by law, as will the fact that he has inherited shotguns, or wishes to collect them, without any intention of using them, provided other conditions, including security, are satisfied. That hardly amounts to an onerous burden on the legitimate, reponsible shotgun holder, but it keep an account of the weapons keep track of them when they ch give them the power to make clo doubt.

Mr. Tim Boswell (Daventry): W clarify the position on temporary and on weapons which are norma in shared possession, where fathe use them on alternate days, or shooting, his gun is unserviceable one to continue the shoot?

Mr. Hurd: The Bill effectively interference in those kinds of Perhaps my hon. Friend the Unde comment in detail on those three li he winds up.

I think that I can deal with the Bill rather more briefly. Clause 7 problem of conversion from a hi lower classification or, indeed, d that such weapons will retain classification. There is a good de trade in military and other firearr to a lower classification. In many c be restored to their original condi knowledge or tools. The standar widely, and the legal status of suc The clause aims, therefore, to intr this area and serves to guard ag converted weapons.

The purpose of clause 8 is to two——

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: Will the one point in respect of clause 7? D the prohibition on weapons wh deactivitated, perhaps by being tu and cannot, in any circumstances, kind of weapon?

Mr. Hurd: As the hon. Gentlem is that it is all too often possible Gentleman's suggestion, which has by some of my hon. Friends, would could find a simple way of testing bureaucracy or paperwork. We such points in greater depth in C given a Second Reading. I acknowl problem here.

The purpose of clause 8 is simpl to two the number of photographs under the Firearms Rules, to acco for a firearm or shotgun certificate. to prescribe the form of a firearm c extended to include a power to requ a photograph of the holder.

Clause 9 deals with firearms de in future, the status of registered f confined to those who can sta firearms is a substantial commerc here is to ensure that only bona fid by the police. It has been pointed o into account the position of thos ll enable the police to ld by individuals, and nge hands, and it will r inquires in cases of my right hon. Friend pan or changes of use held within a family,

nd son might want to ere somebody is out
d he needs to borrow rovides against undue ansactions or loans.

Secretary of State will ly contingencies when ther provisions of the eals with the difficult er classification to a ctivation. It provides eir original, higher of concern about the

which are converted es, such weapons can n without specialised of conversion vary weapons is not clear.
uce greater clarity in st possible abuse of

ncrease from one to ome Secretary clarify

s he intend to retain have been totally
ed into an ornament,
e converted into any knows, the problem

reactivate. The hon.
lso been put forward ave some force if one hout involving great willing to consider mittee, if the Bill is ge that there is a real

to increase from one ich may be required,
pany an application
addition, the power shotgun certificate is e a certificate to bear

rs. It provides that, arms dealers will be sh that dealing in activity. The point dealers are registered that we should take who genuinely need

dealer status because of their research activities, for example. I accept that we should consider what more can be done in this respect.

We propose to extend the period of validity of a dealer's registration from one year to three years. This should reduce the administrative burden on the police and the dealers without sacrificing control.

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): Does the Home Secretary agree that the definition "substantial extent" is very unsatisfactory? What about taking into account those people who run gun clubs in addition to small dealerships in firearms? There are a number of private, legitimate gun clubs, so will the turnover of a gun club, which is a commercial enterprise, be taken into account when assessing dealership in guns, or will only the trading in guns be taken into account?

Mr. Hurd: As the hon. Gentleman knows, one of the problems is the connection between dealers and gun clubs, which some people believe is too close. We have drafted clause 9 to try to solve that problem.

Clause 11 sets out revised arrangements for approved rifle and pistol clubs. This is important because the membership of an approved club can be a significant point in the grant of a firearms certificate in the first place. Clubs will have to fulfil a number of criteria in order to qualify for approval. We shall be looking to see that they are properly constituted and have suitable arrangements for full and probationary members; that they are run by fit and proper persons; that adequate arrangements are made for the security of club firearms and ammunition; and that they have access to a firing range target practice with only those types of rifles or pistol as are specified in the approval. The approval will be renewable on a six-yearly basis, and will be subject to the payment of a fee.

Clauses 12 and 13 deal in a sensible way with the position of visitors to this country. Section 14 of the 1968 Act represents a potentially serious gap in existing controls because it allows any visitor to this country to hold or acquire a shotgun without a certificate. We are replacing that with a straightforward visitors' permit scheme, based on sponsorship, for those who wish to come here to shoot for sporting or competition purposes. We have changed this, in the light of comments received, and we are taking care to preserve the position whereby visitors can acquire shotguns for export purposes only so that damage to such business does not result.

Dr. Alan Glyn (Windsor and Maidenhead): Thousands of visitors come to this country to shoot. Will the acquisition of a licence not be extremely difficult? Will it not spoil the shooting rights of people who have many visitors over to this country for the shooting?

Mr. Hurd: Indeed not. We have tried to design the legislation in a straightforward and simple way, comparable with the arrangments of other countries. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State can spell this out in greater detail. The scheme, based on sponsorship and the issue in advance of the requisite certificate, will work satisfactorily.

Special arrangements for museums are set out in the schedule to the Bill and are introduced by clause 14.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: Will my right hon. Friend deal with a point in respect of museums?

Mr. Hurd: I have hardly started on t museums. It is not a very long passage.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: I suspect the Hon his speech will not cover the schedule so clause 14. Is he aware that clause 14 gives a list of museums? Is it not bizarre that such put forward by the Home Office does not co and local museums, which have been give another Government Department, for exa Office? A local holder of the Victoria cross won it by capturing a German machine gun given by the War Office to a local museum.
Secretary ensure that every museum wh considered fit by another Government Dep given, for instance, a captured weapon is by the Home Office to be unfit to hold it?

Mr. Hurd: I congratulate my hon. Frien and I shall certainly look into it carefully.
comments before I had outlined the policy, we accept that, for the many people who museums or with large collections of firearm with section 1 requirements in respect of would be unreasonably burdensome. That i introduced this proposal for a museum simplify things.

This not a new system. We accept the pri categories of the Firearms Act 1968. I ha accept proposals that sound good but would for public safety and would inconvenie shooters. I agree with shooters that demand holding weapons at home, for example, loading of ammunition, should be resisted. I provided that security is adequate — tha precondition—individuals should keep res their guns rather than having them held b merely because of the numbers that woul them, would be bound to become the targ and terrorists.

I agree with shooters that we do not nee limit on the number of firearms held certificate. A good reason for each one shou
I agree with them that it is not justified section 1 controls on shotguns, with all the that that would involve, but the provisions worked out and that I have sketched today and anything less would represent a weak re has happened. I say to my hon. Friend th Dumfries that a response that is too weak would be swept away by fresh events. I hop strengthen the system so that it can last a 20 years.

I have gone through the Bill in some det
this matter, it is the details that count.
intention to harass the legitimate shooter o sport. Rather, we aim to ensure that all shoo working or sporting, can be pursued in the a straightforward and effective control, wh ordinary citizen the safeguards from the m that he has the right to expect. The cha propose to existing controls aim to do tha build upon the Bill sound administrative p guidance, which are essential to its effecti that the shooting interests will play their that process. Together, all this will provide flexible system which will operate to the ultimate advantage of shooters and the general public for many years to come. I commend the Bill to the House.

[Mr. Hurd]

4.52 pm

Mr. Roy Hattersley (Birmingham, Sparkbrook): I have already offered the Home Secretary my apologies, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and I want to offer them to you and the House, for the fact that I must leave the House early this evening and shall not therefore be here at the conclusion of the debate. However, I want to put on record my general, if qualified, approval of the Firearms (Amendment) Bill that the Home Secretary outlined this afternoon.

There are certainly reservations about the Bill among Opposition Members—some stronger than others. Some of those reservations are stronger than my own, and a number of them have been included in a reasoned amendment tabled by some of my hon. Friends. Many of the changes that they propose, some of which I support, and many of the changes that I anticipate will be offered from both sides of the House as the afternoon wears on, can be accommodated in Committee. I understand that the Government accept the need for some specific changes and intend to meet some of the technical objections in amendments of their own. Indeed, the Home Secretary spoke of his willingness to meet legitimate criticisms. He may have as much difficulty in defining them as he had in defining legitimate guidance, but no doubt he is open to the view that if the Bill is given a Second Reading, as I hope and believe it will be, there will still be improvements to be made.

In my view, this Bill, like any other, must be judged on the balance of its merits, and I judge it in the same way as I judged the parts of the Criminal Justice Bill that dealt with the control of knives. Those clauses contained provisions to which I was deeply opposed. I am opposed to some items in this Bill—less so, but opposed. My reservations notwithstanding, however, there can be little doubt about the need for the tighter controls on firearms that the Bill provides, so I believe that it is worthy of the House's approval and deserves and will get a Second Reading.

Mr. David Nicholson (Taunton): The right hon. Gentleman mentioned the Criminal Justice Bill and knives. When he spoke on 26 October, he made great play of his views on the proposals for knives. Would he take this opportunity to assure the House that he was not then telling my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary to crack down on guns, which are predominantly—though not entirely—the preserve of Conservative supporters, and he would then give my right hon. Friend an easier passage on knives? That would be both sinister and reprehensible.

Mr. Hattersley: That is both ludicrous and wrong. The hon. Gentleman will discover as the debate continues that what I call—with no intention of being offensive—the gun interest is not confined to any one party; nor are shooters confined to any one voting pattern. I support the Bill on its merits, as I supported the proposals on knives on their general merits. I think the Home Secretary will confirm, if any confirmation were necessary, that when he was kind enough to tell me about his proposals on knives I gave him my unqualified support before we even knew that a Firearms (Amendment) Bill was in prospect.

I repeat my view that the need for tighter controls on guns is obvious, and not only in the context of the tragedies of Hungerford and Bristol. We would do this measure a great disservice were we to represent it as a response to Hungerford and Bristol. I neither intend nor want to minimise the suffering that those two tragic events caused, but I do not see them in themselves as reasons for the Bill. Those tragedies focused the nation's attention on the need for tighter firearms control, but that need existed long before the murders at Hungerford. As the Home Secretary well knows, in March 1987 my hon. Friend the Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) wrote to him on behalf of London Labour Members of Parliament saying that there was a need for tighter gun control. Throughout that year, my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) raised on the Floor of the House the need for tighter provisions. I say again that the major provisions of the Bill would have been necessary with or without Hungerford. It is enormously important to make that clear, particularly to the legitimate shooters who will undoubtedly be inconvenienced by the Bill. It should be made clear to them that they should offer their wholehearted support to this necessary measure because it is not an overreaction to an isolated tragedy but a necessary improvement in the law governing firearms which I and some of my hon. Friends advocated long before the horrors of Hungerford were known to us.

We all accept that legislation, no matter how comprehensive or draconian, cannot protect society from a sudden act of lunacy. Perhaps it cannot even protect society from the calculated criminal decision to obtain or use a gun. But proper legislation can prevent casual ownership and the lethal use of weapons that is sometimes the consequence of casual ownership. Those two objectives seem to me so desirable that the price that must be paid for comprehensive and adequate control is a legitimate price to ask.

I repeat that of course we all accept that the Bill will increase the inconvenience experienced by genuine gun users and owners. I include farmers, collectors and gun club members. Nobody — least of all the Home Secretary, judging by his speech this afternoon — will deny that they will find some of the new regulations irksome, but I think it enormously important not to overestimate that inconvenience. I do not believe that the irksome nature or the inconvenience of the new provisions amounts to anything like the major infraction of liberty suggested in some of the circulated pamphlets. The freedom to own a certain type of weapon, even for a legitimate purpose, has to be balanced against the freedom to feel secure, for instance, from armed robbery. In my view, the freedom to feel secure from armed robbery is a great deal more important than the freedom to own and use, even legitimately, a certain sort of weapon.

I believe that most legitimate owners and users accept that point. I share the judgment of the Home Secretary that, on the evidence of the last two months while his proposals have been under discussion, most shooters are prepared to accept the new responsibilities with good grace. The National Farmers Union, whose members will obviously be affected, wrote a letter to me, which I suspect is identical to letters sent to other right hon. and hon. Members, saying that it welcomed the Bill, and specifically commended the new criteria against which applications for shotgun licences will be measured. The British Shooting Sports Council used the same expression, and said that it explicitly welcomed the Bill, promising full co-operation in its implementation.

If we look at the provisions of the Bill in detail, we see how reasonable their acceptance is, particularly if we look at the area around which most of the controversy hovers —the more stringent control of shotguns.

During the debate on 26 October the Opposition called for two major changes in shotgun control. I am delighted that in fact, if not in words, both those changes have now come about. The Opposition do not claim authorship of those proposals. Their origin, as far as I was concerned, was in the Police Federation. I do not want to be part of some childish competition about who had the idea first; I merely say that we advocated those changes to the Home Secretary in October. I am delighted that the two major proposals on our part are now Government policy.

The first proposal concerned individual certification of shotguns to replace the present practice of a single certificate covering any number of unspecified guns. Clause 3 provides that power in fact, if not exactly in words. Every shotgun is now to be identified in the certificate — a proposal which, in October, some hon. Members said was impossible. It matters not to us whether each gun is identified on a separate piece of paper or all the guns are identified on the same piece of paper. The listing of each weapon is clearly a proper precaution.

First, it will deter a number of undesirable purchasers. The fact that an undesirable purchaser must have the identification number or other identification elements written on his certificate will be a greater deterrent than the present situation, when he or she simply has to go into a gun shop, wave the certificate and buy an additional shotgun.

Secondly, and perhaps more important, the registration of each weapon by number, or by identifying characteristics, is essential if we are to have a national register, and a national register seems to me to be absolutely necessary if we are to have the sort of control that the Home Secretary, the Government and, I believe, the country in general want. We support that proposal.

Clause 3 also deals with what is called the "good reason" requirement. On 26 October I argued that shotgun certificates should be issued only to applicants who had a good reason to possess such a weapon. In his winding-up speech the Under-Secretary of State specifically ruled out that provision. I think that he is looking it up, but I assure him that I am about to read what he said:

"My fear is that if we impose a good reason requirement on the possession of shotguns, we shall face massive non-compliance."—[Official Report, 26 October 1987; Vol. 121, c. 67.]

I am delighted that wiser counsels have prevailed. The Under-Secretary's comment was, in any case, a sad and, I believe, wholly inaccurate reflection on the public spirit and responsibility of most shotgun owners and users. We believe, and I think that the country believes, that there should be a good reason for possession of a potentially lethal weapon. I know that, to avoid the embarrassment of agreeing with what they appeared not to agree with three months ago, the Government have stood the idea on its head, and a chief constable must now be satisfied that there is not a good reason for withholding, but it is the same principle. There has to be some reason, some purpose, some justification, and that seems to me to be wholly right, just as it is to strengthen the power appropriately, when it is married to the other half of the clause, by requiring the chief officer of police to be satisfied that the applicant is suitable in other respects.

I know that some hon. Members are worried about the amount of discretion that the clause allows to chief officers of police. For instance, the hon. Member for Warwick and Leamington (Sir D. Smith) raised exactly that point and asked for political guidance from the Home Secretary about how chief constables should behave. It is quite extraordinary how chief constables are held in doubt by hon. Gentlemen when it is thought that they are likely to interfere with subjects which touch those hon. Gentlemen.

In this particular let me make it absolutely clear that I am wholly prepared for responsible chief officers to make their judgments. I believe that they will make those judgments without interference from the House and the Home Secretary. My opinion is that if they err at all it will not be on the side of caution; they will feel it inappropriate to make the individual decisions which those of us who want tighter controls might expect them to make. This is my judgment, particularly since their attitudes are in part circumscribed by clause 3(1) (1B) of the Bill, which, wholly legitimately in my view, stipulates some of the activities which make the legitimate use of a shotgun obvious and the issuing of a certificate almost mandatory on chief officers.

Sport, competition and vermin control are all specified as legitimate purposes and clearly they are legitimate purposes. Nobody disagrees with that, but I hope that the Home Secretary will tell us more about one strange phrase and what its real purpose is. It relates to the criteria by which legitimacy shall be measured and good reason and proper cause judged. It states:

"an application shall not be refused by virtue of that paragraph merely because the applicant intends neither to use the gun himself nor to lend it for anyone else to use."

If it is sentimental, if it is nostalgic, if it is concerned with family possessions or heirlooms, I understand it exactly and think that that might be appropriately specified in these terms in the Bill. That was the example that the Home Secretary gave. But the clause goes a great deal wider than that.

I understand exactly what ought to happen. If a chief police officer, who is approached for a certificate, asks what the gun is wanted for and the individual says that he or she wants it for sport, competition or vermin control, the chief officer will say that is a legitimate use. But I should be rather perturbed if a chief officer, or his representative, were approached and told by the individual concerned that he or she did not want it for anything, but just wanted it. That seems to me to cast very considerable doubt on the legitimacy of gun ownership and on the psychology of the man or woman who might give that answer.

Therefore, I hope that the Home Secretary, reinforced by the fact that some of his hon. Friends are nodding agreement to the proposition—and they do not nod at much of what I say on the subject—will consider the possibility of tightening up that clause.

On clause 2, I know that there is some controversy concerning self-loading and pump-action shotguns, not all of which have equal fire power and some of which are used for legitimate sports by women and the disabled because such guns have minimum recoil. No doubt that point will be contested in Committee, and no doubt the Home Secretary will hear more about it this afternoon as it has been the subject of a great deal of legitimate argument and correspondence. I urge him to continue to err on the side of caution. The hon. Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham), who moans, should not be surprised that I, together with the Home Secretary and other hon. Members, take the view that our first obligation is to protect the general public from the risk that ownership might involve.

[Mr. Hattersley]

I hope that my suggestions about other matters will be less controversial and less obnoxious to Conservative Members.

Mr. William Ross: The right hon. Gentleman has just referred to self-loading automatic shotguns. Is he aware that in Northern Ireland, where restrictions on firearms are comparatively tighter than they are here, it is still possible to own a self-loading shotgun?

Mr. Hattersley: I am aware of that, but it does not give me any comfort. Again, we should err on the side of caution, rather than follow the restrictions that operate in Northern Ireland, which are not in themselves always the right procedure. I do not mean to joke about this sensitive subject, but I am sure that the hon. Gentleman shares my view that it is self-evidently right and necessary that the sale or ownership of burst-fire weapons, rocket launchers, mortars, explosive bombs, grenades and electric shock devices should be included in the class of prohibited weapons. It is equally self-evident that the obligation to store guns and ammunition securely is absolute.

The Bill rightly limits the purchase of ammunition to certificate holders and their authorised representatives. There is much to be said for the proposals of the Police Federation that the authorised acceptable conditions in which ammunition is to be stored should always be described on the certificate, and that the man or woman who sells the ammunition should use his or her best endeavours to ensure that the ammunition is to be stored in the way described on the certificate.

I wish to represent to the Home Secretary a second point from the Police Federation, pausing only to make two asides about the views of the federation. Hon. Members have received correspondence from shooting organisations which describes stringent or more stringent controls as a waste of police manpower and time. It is notable that none of the police organisations, which talk about the waste of police time most eloquently in other contexts, suggest that more stringent controls would have that effect. There is something to be said for supporting the views of the men and women who are likely to face someone with a sawn-off shotgun when they are on patrol at night.

The second point about the police and guns concerns a dispute that we had in the House on Monday that the debate on this Bill allows me to put right. There was much shouting from the Treasury Bench about the Police Federation supporting life sentences being imposed on criminals who carry guns in pursuit of crime. The president and the secretary of the Police Federation told the Leader of the Opposition and me on Tuesday evening that they are desperately anxious that the penalty for carrying a gun should not be the same as that for using a gun. I hope that the Home Secretary and the Under-Secretary of State will take note of the position of the police. I Government's control of guns, they should take par account of the views of the men and women whos may be put in jeopardy, rather than the men and who legitimately use guns for sport.

That argument also applies to compensation. respect, I must say to the Home Secretary that he enormously heavy weather of dealing with interj about compensation. He was asked whether he cou any other instances in which such onerous obli were applied. Every time that there have bee regulations about what is a safe motor car, people w cheap motor cars have suddenly discovered that th no longer use them and must sell them for scrap. almost exactly the same situation.

Secondly, the hon. Member for Northampton, (Mr. Marlow) said that if the Minister prohibited t of those weapons but refused to compensate for ther would be passed into the hands of terrorists and illegal organisations. That does not say very much shooters, whom the Home Secretary went out of h to describe as honest and public-spirited character prepared to give them the benefit of the doubt, and that, if the law requires certain behaviour, they will with it.

The hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) sa gun owners must be compensated. The hon. Gen said that one of his constituents, who has three gu told by a gun dealer that they are no longer s because they have no value. The Home Secretary have no obligation to compensate gun owners fo which no longer have a market value. That is the p of the market. Conservative Members, who have so eloquently about allowing market forces to o should not whine to the Home Secretary compensation when market values have been remo legislation. I am sure that the Home Secretary will that point in Committee.

I should like to hear the Under-Secretary of response about an omission that I hope will be dea in Committee. It is an omission that the Police Fed believe should be in the Bill. I do not understand w Home Secretary has so firmly set his face agai prohibition of mail-order sales. It seems obviou evident and undeniable that it is easier improp purchase a weapon through mail order than thr shop in the high street. It would be absurd if the more stringent, and generally desirable control undermined by the continuation of mail order. I ho the Home Secretary will think about that before comes back to the House on Report.

Finally, in its evidence to the Home Secreta Police Federation said that since the introduction Firearms Act 1968, the sales of guns have beco business. That is true. More than that, during the years, gun culture in Britain has been encoura television, some newspapers and some films. culture, I mean not the sporting, competit agricultural use of guns, but their illegal use. The i been encouraged that there is something special and about the possession and occasional use of a gun. needs to be encouraged in the belief that the legitim of guns is the only use to be tolerated or acceptabl legitimate use should carefully be prescribed by st regulations about ownership. The proper place proper way in which guns should be used must be c defined and strictly limited. The Bill, despite its faults, provides a definition and specifies a limitation, and for that reason it is worthy of having a Second Reading.

5.18 pm

Mr. Edward Heath (Old Bexley and Sidcup): I wish to make only one point that greatly concerns my constituents in a residential area. It has been emphasised by delegations and deputations who have come to see me. Before I make my point, I assure the Home Secretary that I give the fullest support to the measure that he is introducing. To use his own words, I believe that he has got it absolutely right. However, I am sure that his broad-minded and flexible approach will accommodate the many detailed points that were made by my hon. Friends on the Back Benches during their interventions in his speech.

Those who came to see me were mainly members of gun clubs. I was a member of a gun club in my last years at school. They have emphasised that many of those clubs originated in the 19th century as part of the national defence. That argument is no longer valid. Those who are of age can join the territorial forces if they so wish and they can then help to deal with a national emergency. It is also true that this measure cannot be guranteed never to allow another ghastly incident. We can only hope and pray that it will lead towards that.

I want to give the strongest possible support to those of my hon. Friends who, in their interventions, have asked about compensation. This is a unique situation. The action that is being taken is right, dramatic and drastic, and comes into effect as soon as the Bill becomes law. It is not a normal question of the market. By making these weapons illegal, the market is being closed completely. That is the situation with which we must deal.

The people who have these weapons are, I am convinced, for the great part, people of integrity. Moreover, they could not possibly have foreseen the events of Hungerford or, following them, the Government's actions. Therefore, they are a small group in the community who are exposed to considerable financial loss. Nor is the comparison, made by the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) with others who suffer when the Government take action, a just comparison.

A considerable time is allowed for the changeover to lead-free petrol. That is designed to cover most of the life of cars that use normal petrol. When the Government ban the use of particular furnishings, the present ownership is not affected, only future purchases. For that reason, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has a strong case to argue. Moreover, I am told that there is already a precedent, which I think concerns Northern Ireland, in which compensation was paid in a similar case. Therefore, I hope that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will press strongly for compensation to be paid to those who will be affected by the Bill.

My right hon. Friend emphasised the practical difficulties. I can see only one practical difficulty, and that is in persuading my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to provide the money with which to compensate. No one, least of all myself, would underestimate the difficulty of that, but I hope that when my right hon. Friend approaches the Chancellor he will point out that he has the solid support of the Conservative party and also, I believe, despite what the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook said, of many Opposition Members as well. Therefore, I hope that my right hon. Friend will be successful in obtaining compensation for those of my constituents who will be affected, as well as those affected in the rest of the country.

5.22 pm

Mr. Gordon Oakes (Halton): The right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) has said that in his opinion the Home Secretary has got the legislation right. I welcome the Bill, but I do not think that the Home Secretary has got it absolutely right. He has got it mainly right, but many amendments can, and I hope will, be made in Committee. I hope that the Home Secretary will carry out his undertaking to the House to listen to matters of legitimate complaint.

I should declare that many of the points that I am about to make come from the Association of County Councils, of which I have the honour to be an honorary vice-president.

The Home Secretary listed the large number of shooting organisations with which he had had correspondence and from which he had had representations on the Bill. The county councils, via their chief police officers, the chief constables, will be responsible for the administration of the Bill, and they consider that on a number of matters the Bill does not go far enough. I do not expect the Home Secretary to agree, as I do, with the association's principal policy point that the same licensing conditions should apply to shotguns as apply to part 1 firearms. That is the considered view of the county councils—which, I repeat, will have to administer the Bill through the police.

A great deal of confusion has been caused by clause 3. When I read it I was somewhat confused by the difference between it and what was said in the White Paper. The White Paper said specifically that it is not intended to impose an obligation on all applicants to establish positively the existence of a good reason. Clause 3 seems to say the opposite of that. The Government seem to have stood their original proposition on its head. I listened to the Home Secretary explaining clause 3, but the Act seems to say one thing and the guidance quite the opposite.

I agree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) that the Government should not give guidance in that way. The Government should state specifically in legislation what they want chief police officers to do. The public then know that that is their duty by statute, not as a result of some hidden form of guidance. The Act could say one thing while the guidance gave chief police officers a nudge and a wink to do what was said in the White Paper, which would be wrong, in principle and as a matter of policy.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Sparkbrook also drew attention to clause 3(1B), showing what a nonsense it is. If a chief constable has no reason, because of the person concerned, to refuse an application for a gun licence, it is an open gate policy to allow that person to go to the chief constable and say that he wants a gun, not to use or to lend, but just to have. The chief constable may be slightly suspicious and wonder why he wants it, but, as far as I can see, he would be debarred from refusing such an application because he is specifically debarred if a man says that he does not want to use or lend the weapon. That will lead to endless trouble and difficulty and could be a dangerous loophole.

The Association of County Councils firmly believes that there is a need in the statute for a standard condition to provide for the safe keeping of the guns and ammunition authorised by the certificate. That should appear on the face of the Bill. The association also points out that, as far as it is aware, there is no specific provision in the Bill for certificate holders to notify the police of a change of address. Clearly, that is a vital provision and should be in the Bill.

[Mr. Gordon Oakes]

The association also points out that there is no minimum age in the Bill for a person who can hold a gun certificate. However, I have heard rumours that the Government are to do something about that. I am sure that the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup was a most responsible person in his last years at school to be a member of a gun club and to hold a certificate, but that does not necessarily apply to all youngsters. If the Government say that they will stipulate a minimum age in subsequent legislation, why not put it in this Bill?

Another point arises on the number of shotguns and the amount of ammunition which may be held by certificate holders. At the time of the Hungerford case and other recent cases, the country was appalled at not only the variety and type, but the sheer quantity, of weapons and ammunition held by individuals. Under the present law, if a certificate is issued there is no limit whatever. A man can have an arsenal of guns and ammunition. The Bill deals with that problem, but——

Mr. Ron Davies (Caerphilly): Does my hon. Friend know that the weapon that Ryan used at Hungerford last August to inflict most of the injuries was a Beretta pistol, and that that firearm will not be affected by the legislation?

Mr. Oakes: I am not certain whether that is the position, but if my hon. Friend says it is, I accept what he says. The legislation should be comprehensive. That omission would cause a glaring anomaly, if what my hon. Friend says is correct.

Will the Government agree that on the certificate there should be a limitation on the number of firearms or amount of ammunition that a person can hold? I can see no reason why the Government should step back from this single procedure to prevent arsenals from being built up by a person.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Sparkbrook referred to mail order. I cannot understand why the Government have set their face against prohibiting the sale of guns by mail order. Under clause 8, the number of photographs to be attached to the certificate has been increased from one to two. What is the use of photographs if a person can write to a mail order firm and get a gun? How can a mail order firm, dealing by post, know whom they are dealing with? How do they know that the photograph is of the person whose name is on the certificate?

Mr. David Gilroy Bevan (Birmingham, Yardley): Does the right hon. Member agree that there would not even be the need to write because many mail order firms that advertise such weapons would take a credit number over the telephone in payment for the weapon?

Mr. Oakes: I do not think that it is quite as bad as that, because a person will have to send with his application to the mail order firm his firearms certificate. How could the mail order firm check this? People who deal in firearms are overwhelmingly very responsible traders. If t suspicious of a person who applied for a gun believed that there was something wrong certificate, they would have a sixth sense to k something was wrong because they deal with the the time. Just like any other trader, they would something was wrong, but the mail order firm do anything about it because it would have no i it was dealing with. If the Government were to an age limit in subsequent legislation, how woul order firm know the age of the person with wh dealing through the post? That loophole should up in Committee.

I welcome the Bill. Amendments could be improve and strengthen it from the point of v public. The Home Secretary was quite right wh that the Bill cannot guarantee that there w another Hungerford. No Government cou prescient as to bring in legislation to prevent th thing. What they can do is lessen the risk of it, a extent I warmly welcome the Bill.

5.33 pm

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson (Newbury): In Paper that preceded the Bill my right hon. H Home Secretary asserted that the proposal he w before the House marked a considered and signi in the balance of controls between safeguarding at large and protecting the interests of the shooting community. The White Paper state Government

"cannot eradicate entirely the possibility of th legitimately held firearms by an unstable o individual. For that reason the Government must those firearms which are held legitimately are s degree of control which reduces this risk."

I do not quarrel with that statement, any m quarrel with the contents of the Bill. It would the two statements I have read out that the B White Paper, is more a response to the sh Hungerford, Bristol and Wolverhampton last the end product of a review of the Firearms although I do not doubt that such a review w before August 1987. I do not complain about t three crimes at Hungerford, Bristol and Wolv drew our attention to the increasing number incidents in our ever more violent society, incid we can expect to recur, although I hope appalling scale of Hungerford.

Because you have called the amendment to be the subject of the debate, Mr. Deputy Spea to say that I cannot see what value would be further public inquiry into the massacre at Hu say "a further public inquiry" because the chie of Thames Valley has already produced a full r has been made publicly available. There has be long television programme and, although crit been made before about the police operati August in Hungerford — criticisms, needle which have the benefit of hindsight—I canno a further inquiry would hope to tell us that we d already.

I am speaking on the Bill because Hungerfo constituency. I do not claim to be a shooting any more than I am opposed to the sport. I Army, have fired on various ranges and posses but beyond that it holds no special interest or attraction for me. I am aware from the many letters I have received that the sport has a wide following and a large variety of weapons are used. The shooting fraternity feel that because of the terrible actions of that one man, Michael Ryan, they and their sport are being penalised by the legislation. Perhaps if I were one of them I would share their feelings but, as I have said to many people who have come to see me about the subject, I do not believe that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary could have let Hungerford come and go without reacting as he has; without introducing a firearms review and ultimately some sort of legislation.

Sixteen people were killed and 14 were wounded at Hungerford. Families still mourn and will mourn for many years to come. Almost every week somewhere in the world someone seems to emulate Ryan. I well remember that at the memorial service in Hungerford I found myself standing next to an Australian clergyman who had had a similar sort of massacre in his parish. I believe therefore that the Government had to make a strong response to Hungerford and the circumstances surrounding it.

I welcome the Bill and find much in it to commend. I applaud the decision to outlaw certain weapons such as semi-automatic rifles and to bring other weapons within section 5 of the Firearms Act 1968. It is right to make owners register guns individually on firearms and shotgun certificates and it is right that the police should tighten up their procedures for the issue of the certificates. I cannot help wondering whether the time is fast approaching when we should discontinue having two separate documents, one for weapons described as firearms and another for shotguns, as both are equally lethal, the main difference being in the range over which they are effective. Two certificates must mean that the police spend more time to ensure that the applicant meets the demands of the legislation. Can we not have one certificate? Those who want to own only a shotgun can have the same certificate as those who have firearms, and there could be the same requirement on each certificate to state which weapons are held. Administratively it would seem much cheaper and practically more logical to follow that practice.

To have two classes of firearm, one of which is more difficult to acquire than the other, lends credence to the argument of those shooters who consider that the White Paper and the Bill are aimed more at those who are presently gun owners or shooters rather than those who possess weapons criminally or illegally; in other words, that we are making already strict laws stricter for those who enjoy shooting without affecting the pool of illegally held weapons from which an ever-increasing amount of crime is resulting. The weapon most commonly used in crime appears to be the sawn-off shotgun. I believe that my criticism of the changes has some validity since it is not inconceivable that the Bill as drawn will increase the number of illegally held weapons.

I am not clear whether pump-action shotguns, now to be brought within section 5 (1) of the 1968 Act and to be held on a firearms certificate, will be restricted to use on a shooting range in common with other semi-automatic weapons or will be able to be used for shooting game and vermin if their magazine is converted to take only two shots as opposed to the present five or eight shots. I would be grateful if my hon. Friend could say something about that when he replies.

It has been put to me that if pump-action shotguns are restricted to shooting ranges present owners who possess them legally on a shotgun certificate will simply continue to keep and use them without telling the police or, more seriously, will dispose of them to whomsoever will buy them, particularly if the owner believes that he is likely to be refused a firearms certificate. At this moment I doubt whether anybody knows how many of those weapons are in private hands. One shotgun certificate covers any number of shotguns that may be owned. Therefore, who will know whether the law is effective? Indeed, what extra steps are being taken to encourage pump-action shotgun owners to register their weapons? It has been suggested to me that if such people were offered a half-price firearms certificate for the first year that might provide an inducement. Otherwise, as I have suggested, there seems to be a fair chance that such weapons will not be registered and may even find their way into the wrong hands.

I am sure that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary saw the article that appeared in the Yorkshire Post in October 1986 and the subsequent article that appeared in The Sun in August 1987. Those articles described how a reporter from those papers managed to buy weapons illegally. The Yorkshire Post reporter commented:

"In a few short weeks the following list of weapons were made available:
A single-barrelled sawn-off shotgun for £55.
A double-barrelled sawn-off shotgun for £85.
A Magnum hand gun for £200.
A hand grenade for £30.
A 9mm rifle and ammunition for £100.
An unmodified double-barrelled shotgun for £150.
Other items were offered for hire: A Luger pistol with ammunition for £80; a 9mm automatic pistol, again with ammunition for £50 and two replica revolvers".

That list must cause the House grave concern. I find it desperately worrying. Indeed, after believing that the Hungerford massacre was the work of one demented man, Michael Ryan, who held all his weapons—five firearms and several shotguns — legally, it now transpires that Ryan also illegally owned a Thompson sub-machine gun and another pistol. Although it is true that Ryan was gun-crazy, he was a countryman who could hardly be expected to know where to purchase such sophisticated weapons illegally. However, he held such weapons and I believe that we should count ourselves lucky that he did not use the sub-machine gun instead of the semi-automatic in his killings.

I am bound to ask whether illegally held weapons are as easily available as apparently suggested by those newspaper reports? If they are, what will this legislation do to help the police seize those weapons?

Let us consider the storage of ammunition that has already been raised by a number of hon. Members. That matter is the cause of considerable concern to the Association of Chief Constables. They believe that adequate provision for the safe storage of ammunition should be a feature of the Bill. I hope that the Government will consider introducing an amendment in Committee, bearing in mind that the legal limit per weapon is 500 rounds of ammunition. That is a large amount of ammunition to possess for one weapon and, as we are not intending to restrict the number of weapons held at home, it is clear that we could be talking about thousands of rounds of ammunition held by an individual. I agree with the chief constables that that ammunition should be kept as securely as the weapons. I believe that it would be an oversight if the Bill did not include something about that matter.

[Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson]

My right hon. Friend will also be aware that some members of the police force believe that armour-piercing ammunition of the kind that Ryan used should be banned. The chief constable of Thames Valley has told me that such ammunition can easily pierce the bullet-proof waistcoats worn by police marksmen and could just as easily penetrate the side of a police Land Rover. Again, I can see no possible reason why armour-piercing ammunition should be required by any sporting shooter.

When we are considering the proposed amnesty, it is right that we should encourage a person with weapons to hand them in if they are held without any form of certificate, or, as a result of the Bill, held illegally. However, numerous people have asked me why the amnesty should be for a limited time only. Anyone wishing to hand in a weapon at another time can be prosecuted. The idea of an amnesty covering a specific time may encourage weapons to be handed in, but should it be illegal to do so at another time? Let us consider the case of an elderly widow who goes through her husband's possessions and finds among them a first world war pistol —a souvenir, perhaps treasured all his life. Her natural reaction may well be to hand over the gun to the local police station, but unless she does so while the amnesty is operating she will be guilty of an offence. That does not appear fair or sensible.

There is also the matter of compensation, particularly for those who are legally in possession of a particular weapon now, but will not be when the Bill becomes law. The Bill offers them nothing, just as it offers nothing to those who hand in their weapons during the amnesty. Indeed, in an earlier debate I told the House that, after the previous amnesty, the Home Office sold the weapons handed in to the gun trade. That is indefensible. I do not believe that we can defend it and I think it is a totally unsatisfactory state of affairs.

Some of the weapons that may be handed in may be antiques that could make a lot of money at auction. They may be legally held in so far as they are so old as never to have required a firearms certificate when first obtained. I do not believe that we can expect people to part with those weapons for nothing or that we can possibly allow the Home Office, having received those weapons,22tt to make a profit from them. I suggest that antique weapons should be exempted from the bounds of the amnesty. In that category I include all muzzle-loading weapons. Other weapons, those breech-loading weapons that fire metal-cased or metal-jacketed ammunition, are in a different category. In terms of the amnesty such weapons should have a cut-off point of 1945. Weapons made between 1867 and 1945 should be treated as souvenirs rather than effective weapons. They are valuable collectors' pieces. Can we really argue that they should be handed in without compensation? What happens when they are handed in? Are we to have an assurance that the Home Office intends to have them melted down or will they, too, find their way to the gun trade?

Let me tell my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) why I have chosen those two dates. In 1867 we went over from muzzle-loading to weapons and between 1900 and 1945 we wars which produced a mass of souvenir

On the question of compensation, in Firearms (Amendment) (Northern Irelan debated the then Under-Secretary told the

"A direction has already been issued whic holding of bullet-firing weapons by dealers, a handed over their stocks of these weapons
Arrangements are being made for the dealers the weapons handed over. The dealers have every way with the police and the Ministry o and I want to emphasise that there is no firearms dealers are not entirely trustworthy was issued because, about a month ago, for dealer's premises were raided."—[Official Re
1973; Vol. 853, c. 1672.]

If we can introduce such an order in North provide for compensation, I see no reason Office should resist compensation arising f wonder whether it would not be wiser for th to use registered firearms dealers as its agent the amnesty so that they can offer the tru weapons handed in to them—albeit a min particularly in respect of weapons handed i can no longer be legally held under the Bil

Mr. William Ross: Many hon. Membe aware that many of the weapons ha compensated for in Northern Ireland classified as personal protection weapo members and ex-members of the security weapons could readily be resold to new me forces if they could be held by the firearms purchase represents a net loss to the Gover country as a whole, as they could be sold els person buying a personal protection weapo a new one into Northern Ireland. I cannot u we should be placed in that position. I fu compensation should be paid for weap
Britain, too.

Mr. McNair-Wilson: I am grateful
Gentleman for that intervention. I think th wrong for the Government simply to confi without any form of compensation. I ren Friend the Minister of the many examples tion being paid to people who have lost prop of legislation, compulsory purchase orders, of planning permission already given, the gold coinage under the Exchange Control arrangement with the employees at GCH made in respect of environmentally sensit sites of special scientific interest and com livestock affected by radioactivity after Ch list is almost endless. Therefore, I see no re group of people should be put at a financial

As I have said, I welcome the principle b and the intention to tighten up the gun laws.
doubt that remains in my mind is that the only to make those who are already obse aware that they have somehow been picked attention while the pool of illegally held wea untrammelled by its effects. Therefore, I Government will consider whether somethin added in Committee to make the Bill more

5.54 pm

Mr. Menzies Campbell (Fife, North-East): I suppose that it is only proper to declare an interest on occasions such as this. As the holder of both a shotgun certificate and a firearms certificate, I shall plainly be affected by some of the proposals. I doubt whether such an interest is unique in the House, but it may be rare among my hon. Friends.

It was almost inevitable after Hungerford that there would be a review of the law. Whether that review was provoked by the tragic events of Hungerford or accelerated by them is now neither here nor there. The understandable concern caused by those events made it clear that it was the Government's duty to re-examine the Firearms Act 1968 and consider whether its terms were appropriate to the circumstances of 1987. That review had to be carried out calmly and rationally because, as the Home Secretary has acknowledged, we are dealing with a variety of competing interests — not least, the public interest. I believe that we are justified in saying that responsible shooting interests always recognise the public interest. I suspect that if one possesses or uses a lethal weapon, in the shape of a shotgun or firearm, one is more conscious than anyone of the need for safety and security.

I am pleased that it now appears to be accepted that those who have an interest in shooting are drawn from all walks of life. At one stage, it was being suggested in the House that the interests of those concerned with shooting were somehow related to class. I am happy that that idea is no longer current.

When the White Paper was published, my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) broadly welcomed it, and I wish to repeat that welcome. But, however well-intentioned the Government may have been, they have got matters wrong in the Bill in a number of ways. When the Home Secretary introduced the White Paper to the House, he undertook to listen carefully to detailed comment on legislation. It will be known that some of the shooting organisations believe that there has been a lack of proper consultation. The Home Secretary told the House of a number of organisations that he and other Home Office Ministers had consulted. However, it is still believed among shooting organisations that the period of consultation was not long enough. If that is so, it serves only to underline the importance of the Home Secretary's undertaking to listen carefully to detailed comment on legislation. I hope that the Government will be open-minded in this matter and that they will consider amendments in Committee, not as defeats but as improvements.

I should like to associate myself with the observations made about compensation, particularly by the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath). I was grateful to hear that that was one element that the Home Secretary was prepared to reconsider. I hope that he will take seriously, too, the points put to him about deactivation. It seems rather curious that a weapon should retain its original classification however much it has been altered, sometimes so that it can no longer be used. The Government might demonstrate the flexibility that they say they are prepared to bring to bear in this matter in dealing with that.

A number of other matters are of particular concern to me. Like other hon. Members, I have received many representations from my constituents and organised bodies. I am particularly concerned about clause 2 and the conversion of pump-action and self-loading shotguns i weapons that require a section 1 permission for convers into firearms. I listened carefully to the Home Secretary hear his justifications for that proposal. I was rat disappointed, because I did not understand him to o the House any rational or considered reason why tha necessary.

It is said that there are about 200,000 of those weap in the United Kingdom. They were legitimately purcha in good faith. They are used in sport, on farms and, as already been said, because of their lack of recoil, ar particular advantage to the disabled and to women. rather curious that, when the opportunity to posses shotgun is being made more stringent and strict, it sho have been thought necessary to reclassify shotguns of type. The Government should reconsider that elemen their proposals. If they were to do that, they would h substantial support from hon. Members on both side the House.

Clause 3 requires good reason to be established bef someone may have a shotgun certificate. There is conc about the uniformity of application of those provision the various chief constables. Substantial discretion afforded to chief constables even with the partic elements on which that discretion is to be exercised enumerated in the Bill. We must bear in mind tha challenge to discretion is much more difficult to sus legally than an appeal. Inviting a court to hold that a c constable has unreasonably exercised his discretion ma very difficult to prove.

I hope that the Government will accept the critici that have already been made in interventions about extent of the discretion afforded to chief constables clause 3 and consider a way to ensure uniformity application. It would be ridiculous if someone was abl obtain a shotgun certificate in Inverness, but denied in Dorset. A lack of uniformity of application would ridiculous.

I hope that the Government will take account of fact that many people collect weapons. I hope that will regard good reason as necessarily embra collection. I hope that they will be prepared to cons that point in Committee and accept it as a point that c legitimately be included in the Bill.

Any responsible shotgun owner would be happy accept the idea of specifying the description of a shot on a certificate. Most people who own those weapons h them insured and, for the purpose of insurance, necessary to specify the weapon's make, year and s number. The provision of that information canno regarded as an undue imposition or an intolerable bur It would not be unreasonable to oblige a person ow a shotgun to keep that weapon securely. Indeed, that be stipulated as a condition of insurance, to which I h already referred.

Clause 4 suggests that there should be notificatio transfers within a 48-hour period. The Government m consider the suggestion that that is a remarkably s time and that a period of seven days or 14 days may b appropriate and effective. Similarly, the Government wish to consider whether it is necessary for there to be notifications rather than one.

According to clause 8, it appears that photographs be fixed to shotgun certificates. I do not regard tha unreasonable. Hon. Members can only gain entry to House on presentation of a pass containing a photogr

[Mr. Menzies Campbell]

A photograph is a regular method of identification these days, and I do not believe that it could in any sense be regarded as an intolerable or unreasonable burden.

I hope that the Government will accept my criticisms as constructive. My experience is that the majority of shotgun and firearm certificate holders are conscientious and responsible. Like everyone else, they were deeply troubled by the events at Hungerford. I accept that, with or without those unhappy and tragic events, the Firearms Act 1968 cannot be treated as being set in tablets of stone. We will support sensible changes in the law relating to firearms, but we hope in return that the Government will be receptive to the responsible and sensible criticisms that have been made of the Bill and will accept that it will be susceptible to considerable improvement in Committee.

6.5 pm

Mr. Alick Buchanan-Smith (Kincardine and Deeside): Like the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell), I declare an interest in this matter as I am a very occasional user of a shotgun. That use gives me some knowledge, experience and understanding of these matters. It is significant that many hon. Members who speak in the debate tonight may refer to their experience and knowledge, and that always brings more character to debates of this kind.

My interest in this matter is more than personal, as I also have a constituency interest. Obviously, in a constituency such as mine, many people's livelihoods rely on the use of a shotgun or firearm. For gamekeepers, stalkers, trappers, farmers and landowners, the use of a gun or firearm is totally legitimate and normal. In addition, in a constituency such as mine, many hundreds if not thousands of people enjoy game and rough shooting. Clay pigeon shooting, which is a long-standing and very popular sport, is especially popular in my area. People who belong to gun clubs and indulge in target shooting also have a thoroughly legitimate interest in the use of guns and firearms.

I want to emphasise those legitimate interests. I recognise the necessity for the Bill, after the events described by my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson). I support the Bill in principle for those reasons. However, I do not support it wholeheartedly. Many of the representations that I have received regarding particular aspects of the Bill are legitimate and I agree with many of the reservations that have been expressed about it so far.

I know that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has a delicate and difficult balance to strike. However, in a number of respects he has struck that balance against the interests of a large section of totally law-abiding, responsible members of the community. I do not intend to go into details, as many of my hon. Friends wish to take part in the debate, but I want to refer to my major concerns.

My first concern is that I genuinely believe that the police receive too much discretion. That discretion extends too widely. As the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East said, we must ensure that there is even treatment in different parts of the United Kingdom with respect to discretion. Treatment must be even-handed among the many different forces.

In my area, excellent relations are e police and legitimate users of guns and good trust, and it often gives the police local knowledge and information that g purposes.

If the discretion given to chief con too widely and not exercised responsibl important and useful relationship bet section of the community and the poli something that I should not like to ha

Mr. Ron Davies: Will the hon. Gentl that the problem of achieving uniform one of achieving uniformity not only place but between time and time? The H that he would give guidance—presum —to chief constables from time to ti
Gentleman accept that that guidanc
Home Office may change its views o good reason. An applicant my be acc good reason this year but be refused because the Home Secretary has chang

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The hon. anticipated what I was about to say.
because I am not satisfied that the issu
the way to deal with this matter.

The Home Secretary has a duty to s in statute precisely what he expects. O is security. There are many different int security of a gun or firearm. I am in weapons should be held securely. Agai which there could be different and Those practices may change in time guidance. Therefore, I am not satisfied
hon. Friend the Home Secretary said.

The second matter about which whether it is right to classify, under sec pump-action shotguns. That weapo important to clay pigeon shooters an people and women have been mentio and I was glad that the right h Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hatters that point. There is no evidence—if t seen, understood or accepted it — weapon with the commission of crime.
on my right hon. Friend to show th connection, but without it I am unhappy
The classification of that weapon will a administration. There are 200,000 weapons, so there will be enormous add tion without achieving anything.

Thirdly, I am concerned about the self-loading rifles. These weapons are u deer stalking, which is a proper pursu constituency, also by civilians for sometimes along with the military. I ho will be looked at.

Finally, with regard to compensation an acknowledged threat to life are ment Paper. However, they are not an ackn life in the hands of current licence ho these weapons have legally obtained
They are holding them because of certificate under the law. In those circ been obtained legally and held under a

the statutory authorities, those weapons are not held casually. There is an onus on my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary to consider the question of compensation. A constituent of mine wrote to me yesterday. A matter of months before these circumstances arose, he legitimately spent over £500 on a weapon. Will he lose that weapon automatically with no compensation as a result of the Bill? That matter must be considered.

As one who supports the principle of the Bill, I am still unhappy. I shall remain so unless the Minister gives assurances not only that he has listened but that he is prepared to reconsider the matter and perhaps introduce changes at a later stage. I shall listen carefully to what he says in winding up, because these concerns are shared by a vast number of law-abiding citizens.

6.15 pm

Mr. Martyn Jones (Clywd, South-West): I beg to move, to leave out from "That" to the end of the Question, and to add instead thereof:

"this House declines to give a Second Reading to a Bill which will not achieve the aims stated in the Government's proposals for reform, in that it ignores the statistics of armed crime and the circumstances of the enforcement of existing legislation, which will only become apparent by the holding of a public inquiry into the tragic events in Hungerford in August 1987."

I should like to expand on the reasons for tabling our amendment. I agree with certain provisions of the Bill. I obviously agree with the need to control firearms.

I shall first examine the supposed aims of the Bill and consider the Government's White Paper, which states that one aim is to "ensure . . . the safety of the general public from the irresponsible or criminal use of firearms".

Another aim is to protect the rights of legitimate interests.

I do not think that the Bill will do either of those things, and it is interesting to note some of the statistics. For example, in the London area, between 1954 and 1986, armed robberies increased from four to 1,579. In the same period, firearms certificates were reduced by one third.

The statistics up to 1986 have shown a consistent picture and are similar to the 1986 figures, which, for all offences in England and Wales, excluding criminal damage were: pistols, 1,308 offences; shotguns, 1,068; and rifles, 27. Yet the Government propose to ban one type of rifle. The Home Office could not find one other case of misuse of a self-loading rifle, apart from Hungerford.

Looking at the figures, why have the Government not placed more restrictions on the availability of shotguns? Do the Government expect shotguns to be willingly registered? Judging from previous experience, it is unlikely that more than 20 per cent. will be, which will leave a massive pool of criminalised firearms. Would not a measure to impose safe-keeping restrictions on shotguns be more effective than anything else in preventing firearms falling into criminal hands?

This review was supposed to have begun early this year. It bears an extraordinary resemblance to a discredited Green Paper of 1973, which was rejected by the House at that time. Why introduce discredited legislation with indecent haste? It contains unworkable provisions of definition and it contains inconsistencies, for example, the anomalies of museum provision, the implication that arms cannot be deactivated, the inclusion of pump-action but not lever-action firearms and the lending anomaly regarding shotguns. The list is endless.

Why are the Government introducing this legi
I suspect that it is because they want to be seen reacting to the tragedy at Hungerford in Augus
Why do they not first inquire into the backgrou circumstances of the tragedy? I suspect that it is it would disclose some unsavoury facts th Government would rather were not made public. It show that the existing legislation would have pr
Hungerford if it had been applied properly.
uncovered a catalogue of incompetence, inefficie perhaps partiality on behalf of the police adminis which is horrendous in its implications.

As a small-bore shooter unaffected by the Bill, I aware of and grateful for the existing necessarily st provisions of the Firearms Act 1968. It struck me as incredible that an official report, which was ha
"inquiry" as the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. M Wilson) described it, glibly stated:

"on 10 December 1986 an application was mad
Firearms Certificate and enquiries revealed that he w member of the Dunmore Shooting Centre"

That is a Home Office-approved club at Abingdo report added that:

"Nothing was known to Ryan's detriment and already obtained a gun cabinet. The application was on 11 December 1986, with the condition that the could only be used on approved ranges."

That is frankly impossible if the proper checks are Even if, as the police suggest, he had applied befo and he was merely directed to headquarters at Kid on that date, the procedures that are necess headquarters are, according to an official docume

"That the certificate would have to be prepared".

That is 20 minutes of police time.

"That it would have to be approved and signed assistant chief constable".

He would not be waiting at the end of a typewriter
one firearms certificate.

"That indexes are created for reference purposes certificates dispatched".

I suggest that that is impossible in 24 hours.

My inquiries, unlike those of the police, have r that Ryan was not a full member of the club w applied for the certificate. He joined the club September 1986 and was a provisional member. T has a three-month provisional membership. No check was made to establish whether he subse became a full member. I am sorry to go on in de this is crucial to my point.

It is clearly laid down in existing law that an ap for a certificate should be a full member of Furthermore, and more pertinent to the case, whe varied his certificate to obtain the so-called "Kalas style" weapon — a self-loading rifle — he was member of any club at which he could legitimate used such a firearm.

Mr. Ron Davies: Will my hon. Friend confirm is saying that Michael Ryan was not legitimately ar of a Kalashnikov weapon, which the Bill will no

Mr. Jones: That is not quite the case. After the the certificate, Ryan was a legitimate owner. Howe issue of such a certificate by the police was an ex dubious event. Indeed, I suggest that its iss illegitimate.

Mr. Davies: So that we can be clear on this m my hon. Friend telling the House that Michael Ry

[Mr. Davies]

legitimately issued a firearms certificate by the police in circumstances when he was not a member of a shooting club, which membership would, under normal circumstances, have allowed him the issue of a certificate to purchase a Kalashnikov?

Mr. Jones: I am, indeed, confirming that.

As proof of the fact that he was not a full member of any club that had full-bore shooting provision and that he was a member of only one club, the Wiltshire Rifle and Pistol Club, I have a photograph of his membership card, showing clearly his provisional status at the club. He was not even a full member at the time of the incident.

One could say that it was only a matter of time before he would have obtained full membership. Well, that brings me to the issue of an inquiry which, I believe, would prove beyond a shadow of a doubt that he should not have been granted a certificate on at least three grounds. First, he was known to carry his guns in public when not on the way to or from a range. That is illegal under the present Act and enforcement would have prevented the massacre. Secondly, he was reported to have used his firearms in public before the incident. That is illegal under the present Act and enforcement would have prevented the massacre. Thirdly, he was known — it is reported that certain police officers knew this — to have already possessed illegal weapons. I have spoken to an eye witness of one of the weapons and there is evidence under oath to that effect. That is illegal under the present Act and enforcement would have prevented the massacre.

Other facts may or may not be confirmed by an inquiry. Ryan is reputed to have had a social worker. Why? He was not disabled or under a probation order. Did he suffer from mental instability? Ryan is reputed to have been a heavy drinker. Was that true? Ryan is reputed to have physically abused his mother. Was that true? Any of those things would have prevented his ownership of a firearm under the existing Act. Was that "inefficiency" due to the 25 per cent. undermanning of Thames Valley police or is there a more insidious reason? At least one member of the Thames Valley police authority has written to me and he would like to know.

Any investigation might suggest sensible amendments to the Firearms Act 1968, such as statutory control of the "shooting gallery" style of gun clubs, which cannot and, I believe, often do not wish properly to control their membership. There could be statutory examination of an applicant's health and social security records and there could be a reduction of the grounds for appeal and the ease of appeal. Other obvious measures to increase the implementation and, consequently, the effectiveness of police enforcement of the existing legislation may become apparent. Sadly, they may have been all that was necessary to prevent the needless slaughter of 16 people.

Finally, it is essential that an inquiry be held, as the Bill, if it becomes law, could be found to be more unworkable and less effective than the existing Act, at least as far as certain categories of firearms are concerned.

6.26 pm

Mr. Cranley Onslow (Woking): I am grateful, Mr. Speaker, for catching your eye and hope to speak only briefly. I have not spoken in any of the debates on this subject in this Parliament. I hope for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones not follow what he said about his

I must begin by declaring an i member of the National Rifle Ass of the council of the British Field claim to speak for either organisat is based more on the fact that Bi headquarters of rifle shooting in constituency. Many of my consti one kind or another and I have various kinds for twice as long as of the House. Perhaps that enti comment on the legislation.

I cannot begin by saying that I welcome. However, it is necessary. make it necessary are most unwelc reminded of them. However, I adv Under-Secretary of State that substantial improvements in Con hear that my right hon. Friend already persuaded of that in part,

The legislation is necessary to re both about the possession of firear community today and about eff armed crime. It would be most un on this important measure was background of resentment on th community. I advise my hon. Frie of the law-abiding shooting com users of guns — have felt deep classed as potential criminals. The to put that right.

Many more shooters are under some of the proposals in the Bill, ineffective or unfair. An example is the denial of compensation to firearms which are to be made illeg an adequate precedent for that. Friend that scented erasers do not c He might, with a bit more justice, with flick knives or gin traps or othe value, which are rendered totally However, I think that it is conced House that something needs to be in Committee. I was pleased to not hear it from him directly — Friend the Member for Old Be Heath) agrees with this point. It is side as him.

I also feel that my right hon. Frie must do more if he is to justify the repeating shotguns — that is to pump-action guns. He must show have an effect on crime. They w classes — particularly clay pigeon argued with considerable force tha could be amended so that self-lo magazine capacity of no more t brought within them, everything w it extraordinarily difficult to unde present proposals, and the apparen hon. Friend to amend them.

What I also find curious about of my constituents — is that it attempt to limit the burden on pol at the hon. Member will forgive me if I do mendment.

erest. I am a council iation and a member orts Society. I do not
. What I want to say
y camp, which is the is country, is in my nts own firearms of ot with firearms of
have been a Member me to make some

gard the legislation as ne circumstances that ne and we have been my hon. Friend the is legislation needs ittee. I was glad to Home Secretary is not in whole.
ore public confidence and shotguns in the ive policing against rtunate if the debate onducted against a art of the shooting that many members
unity — owners and offended at being Home Office has still ndably aggrieved at ich they see as either what is clearly unfair ossessors of certain

It is difficult to find dvise my right hon.
ne into that category.
ve drawn the parallel rticles of some small ueless by legislation.
on both sides of the ne about the matter
rn — although I did hat my right hon.
y and Sidcup (Mr.
ce to be on the same

l the Home Secretary
ed for restrictions on ay, self-loading or at his proposals will hit hard particular nooters — who have
f only the proposals
ng shotguns with a n two rounds were ld be all right. I find and the logic of the eluctance of my right

e Bill — as do many tains no conscious manpower that the new regulations would impose. I do not know which firm of management consultants came up with the figure that the new proposals can be adminstered by the addition of a mere 80 police and civilian staff. I should have thought that the burden would be considerably more than that, certainly in the initial stages. I also feel that it would be sensible to consider reducing the present burden on the police by extending the life of some certificates — particularly shotgun certificates — and lengthening the interval at which they must be renewed. That could easily be done through a simple amendment to section 26(3) of the Firearms Act 1968, substituting five years for three. I hope that that will be probed further in Committee.

The hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West mentioned the seemingly perfunctory way in which Ryan's application for a firearms certificate was dealt with by Thames Valley police—and, indeed, the perfunctory way in which the processes of issuing such certificates are dealt with in the chief constable's report. There is no reference whatever to the normal rules and procedures of that force, and we are left to suppose that it is quite standard for a firearms certificate to be issued in 24 hours to someone who holds a shotgun certificate.

Mr. Hurd: This is an important point, and I am grateful for the opportunity to correct the misleading impression that could easily be derived—indeed, has been derived—from the chief constable's report to the police authority on Hungerford.

In fact, Ryan's application was received at divisional level on 26 November 1986. The customary checks were carried out to ensure that he had no criminal record and nothing was known to his detriment; that he was a full member of an approved gun club; and that security was adequate for the weapons that he wished to possess. [Interruption.] On 10 December—the date of the chief constable's report — the application was forwarded by the division to headquarters for the issue of the certificate. Having checked the point in view of the report, I understand that a reasonable time was taken, from 26 November to 10 December, and that the usual checks and procedures were carried out.

Mr. Onslow: I understand that the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West wishes to pursue the point, but he cannot intervene on an intervention in my speech. Before he speaks, may I say to my right hon. Friend that I do not know how on earth the chief constable got away with the report without a correction when he made it to his committee.

An important point has been clarified some time after the event. I am glad that it has been clarified, but the processing of the application in just over a fortnight is still rather better than some parts of the country can achieve. Applicants for a firearms certificate do not resent the fact that it takes some time to check their applications for validity; indeed, I believe that they positively welcome it. Having paid for it, they feel that they might as well get value for money.

Mr. Martyn Jones: I apologise for the interruption on the Home Secretary's intervention. However, I would like to point out again that Ryan was not a full member, as reported in the chief constable's report. That should have been picked up at the time, and obviously was not. Ryan was not a full member of any club at that time. The earliest date on which he could have become a full member was 9 December, and he could have done so on agreement of the club. The police did not che club whether he had become a full mem December.

Mr. Onslow: I do not wish to dwell on the I feel that, both in cases such as this and in House has a right to expect that section 27 of th Act is complied with by the police.

Having said that, I must ask whether we content, as my right hon. Friend proposes, to wide and undefined powers to the police as app proposed in clause 3, under nothing more subst guidance. Some members of the shooting fra that pressure from the police side stems from to enforce the law in the spirit in which it is would be a great pity if the new legislation me relationship between law-abiding shooters and was one of mutual suspicion and distrust; should be to avoid that.

However, I can testify that the feeling exists from an editorial that appeared in Police, the the Police Federation, in September last Shooting Times is quoted as having respon proposal for increased security by asking sensible question:

"What about the shoot lunch, when the guns local pub?"

The editorial comments:

"an interesting juxtaposition of shooting with b

Any policeman or spokesman for the poli write that has no business to be dealing with su The House should not be content to leave discretion where there is evidence of such at more than we should have confidence in orga in this case, the Shooters Rights Associa claim that the Bill as drafted will increase the crime. I do not believe that either. I think tha have as much effect, in certain respects, as supporters say. It may create more offences, bu quite the same thing.

There is undoubtedly a need for a consulta the kind that has been proposed. There ar people who could staff such a body. For i former chief constable of Surrey, Sir Peter knows a good deal about such matters, and very wise head on that body, and it would no find some other competent people to serve o

In discussing the matter with outside in House must make it clear that we do not arguments based on the case of the right to which is so familiar in the United States. It i body such as our own NRA in particular conti a major role in the promotion of military ma through Services meetings at Bisley, and the a arms meeting is recognised as part of military must, however, make it plain that defence of the task of the armed forces, and not of loca It is important that the public should be legislation that we are dealing with what som as the paramilitary fascination of self-loadin

It must also be recognised that self-lo technology of weapon development is likely It may come to the point where magazin superseded for international competition purp single-shot rifles were superseded by the ma We must be careful not to legislate the Briti sports community out of the right to compete at international level. That, too, should be watched over by an advisory body.

[Mr. Onslow]

Legislation has to be seen to be sensible and fair. Any Government need the support of the shooting community in its many activities if legislation in this area is to work. This Government are entitled to it more than any alternative Government. It is against that background that I ask Ministers to recognise the need to improve the Bill in Committee to take account of the constructive criticisms of my hon. Friends.

6.39 pm

Mr. Andrew Faulds (Warley, East): I trust that Members will forgive me if I do not range over the wider ramifications of the Bill. I should like to direct the attention of the House to a specific matter — the implications of this legislation for certain museums.

After the passing of the first Firearms Act in 1920, national museums with a statutory duty to collect firearms were exempted, either de jure or de facto, from Acts of Parliament regulating the possession of firearms. This legal basis for exemption was withdrawn from the royal armouries and the service museums by the passing of the National Heritage Act 1983; some of us had the pleasure of serving on the Standing Committee on that legislation. That Act devolved the running of these and other museums to boards of trustees. As a result, employees were no longer

"in the service of the Crown" and, therefore, the basis of their exemption from the Firearms Acts has been lost.

Since the National Heritage Act 1983 the relevant national museums and their sponsoring Departments and the Home Office have had discussions on ways of overcoming the problem of how to deal with the large firearms collections of the major national museums under the existing firearms legislation. The national museums, as the Home Secretary will know, have continually asked for a return to the status quo ante 1983; in other words, exemption from the Firearms Act.

There is a range of arguments for this: the lack of any recorded abuse of this privilege by national museums or their staff in the past; legal opinion that this course is perfectly feasible and acceptable; the safeguards which exist through Treasury audit, the national museums' security adviser and the individual museums' security infrastructures.

The Home Office has so far, I think misguidedly, rejected this approach and drawn up the present legislation, which includes provisions for giving museums licences of exemption, but on conditions to be laid down by the Home Secretary.

The major national museums with large collections of firearms are very concerned about a number of the details of the present proposals. The principal concern is the irretrieveable damage to objects of heritage which may ensue. The Bill gives the Home Secretary absolute powers to insist that museums hold firearms on conditions laid down by him. The present incumbent may be very concerned about the national heritage, but it may be that other incumbents of his office will not share that concern. It is the unrestricted nature of the powers that concerns the major national museums.

The Home Secretary, or another, may seek to impose conditions that physically affect the firearms in question, and could lead to the physical destruction or alteration of the original whole or part of these firearms. The national museums argue that a statutory distinction could and should be drawn, on the one hand, between the duties of the trustees of the museums in question to keep heritage objects in their original condition for the benefit of present and future generations, and, on the other, the duty of the Home Secretary to ensure that the firearms are held in secure conditions which will not endanger the safety of the public. They are also concerned to ensure that the licences of exemption, so-called, for museums should also cover all types of ammunition. The Bill needs clarification from the national museums' point of view.

The museums affected are fully prepared to secure their firearms in such a way as the Home Secretary accepts will keep the peace and security of the general public. But they urge that the damaging implications of the Bill should be reconsidered on the issues that I have raised. I trust that that will be done, and hopefully done successfully, in the deliberations in Committee. I am grateful to you, Mr. Speaker, for letting me in so briefly.

6.44 pm

Mr. Alan Haselhurst (Saffron Walden): I fear that I may sound like a pale echo of many of my hon. Friends, particularly my right hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Buchanan-Smith), although I may be an even paler echo when I declare that I am not a shooter, unlike my distinguished predecessor but one as the Member for Saffron Walden.

I also confess to being nervous of guns. Apart from the school cadet force, the first time I picked up a gun with live ammunition in my adult life was on 9 January of this year when I visited a clay-pigeon shooting club in my constituency. When I say that it was Stansted airport clay-pigeon club my hon. Friends will say, where else?

I am all too well aware of the respectable role that the gun has in the rural community and amongst the wider shooting public. I have been impressed by the many representations that I have received, as I was when I was Parliamentary Private Secretary to Home Office Ministers in 1973 when the matter was last discussed in detail.

The Government had to do something in the wake of the Hungerford tragedy. Many legitimate shooters accept that the present law can and should be improved. As has been said time and again in the debate, it is a matter of arriving at the right balance between the legitimate interests of sportsmen and shooters, on the one hand, and the safety of the public, on the other. I have some unease about whether there is a direct connection between the problem as it is perceived by the public, and perhaps described by the police, and the action proposed by the Government.

If certain types of guns are banned, if there is control of ammunition and if there are tighter requirements for security, one must imagine that there will be a measurable improvement for the safety of the public. However, the danger is surely not the legal owner of the gun using it for crime but rather that the legally-owned gun may be stolen. That, it would appear, is the main cause for concern.

I gather that in 1986 there were 800 incidents of shotguns being stolen. In the same year firearms were used in 7·7 per cent. of homicides, 8·8 per cent. of robberies and 4·5 per cent. of crimes of violence endangering life. In what percentage of those cases were stolen guns actually employed?

I think we are right to question responsibly and constructively the advance that the Bill will achieve in curbing serious crime. That advance should not be overstated by my right hon. Friend. There is not such a conclusive case that amendment to the Bill should be beyond consideration. I hope that my right hon. Friend will not regard the Bill as it stands as a perfect entity, incapable of amendment.

Having confessed my general ignorance of the sport, if I dare venture into the types of guns, I am persuaded that the self-loading shotgun—a weapon which I handled on 9 January and with which I performed better than with any other weapon—should be used for sporting purposes. I noted that it had less recoil than other weapons. I am glad that my right hon. Friend is considering whether self-loading guns, with a restricted magazine capacity, might, after all, be exempted from clause 1 controls. Having handled such a gun, I wonder whether it is crucial that the dividing line should be between two and four cartridges. I cannot believe that having four cartridges rather than two makes that weapon inherently more dangerous or adds measurably to the danger to the public. What proportion of stolen guns, used in that small percentage of serious crimes involving firearms, were self-loading guns? The figure must be extremely small.

I share my hon. Friends' fears about the powers of the police. Constituents frequently express their worries to me about the possible variations of approach between different police forces and different police officers. I have been asked to countersign a shotgun application only twice in my life, and only quite recently. One countersigns passport applications any number of times, but rather more thought is involved in countersigning a shotgun application. I had known both people concerned perfectly well for many years and was pleased to sign their applications, but I could not possibly guarantee that some trauma might not happen to either of those people in later life, which could cause them, as owners of weapons, to do something wholly regrettable and tragic. It is a far-fetched possibility, but I could not guarantee that it might not happen, nor do I believe that any police officer could give such a guarantee.

There is a tremendous variation when officers of the state are given such responsibility. It happens time and again. For example, a factory inspector may demand one set of standards, yet his successor may demand another. It also happens when fire officers introduce fire precautions in various establishments throughout the country. It is not far-fetched to imagine that legitimate shooters might be worried about what might happen in one part of the country compared with another and about the conduct of one officer compared with another. My right hon. Friend must reduce the risk of variation in the best way possible.

I should also like to emphasise the point about compensation, and I welcome my right hon. Friend's promise of further consideration. It seems the unkindest cut of all to many legitimate gun owners that people should believe that they might misuse their weapons and that, if those weapons were taken from them, there should be no compensation. The fear has been expressed that guns which were not allowed to be handed in, with compensation, could find their way into the wrong hands. That idea was dismissed by the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) and others, but it is a reasonable fear. We need only recall that a few years ago we tried to stop anything getting into Rhodesia, and we failed badly. We need only consider what is happening in any hot spot in the world where weapons are used to realise that they are getting into those places by all sorts of devious routes. The person who parted with the gun would not be responsible for the final destination. It would follow a shadowy trail, but it would get there in the end.

Mr. Faulds: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Haselhurst: I promised to speak briefly, so I shall not take any interventions.

This is an immensely difficult matter in which my right hon. Friend may find the precedents discouraging, but he would do a great service if he were brave and made a special case for compensation in respect of those weapons. He was obliged to bring forward legislation. I hope that he will maintain a listening stance and be prepared to perfect the balance of his Bill in those matters which obviously cause a great deal of concern among our hon. Friends and those many people whom they represent. Then, indeed, his legislation will deserve to survive.

6.53 pm

Mr. Eric Illsley (Barnsley, Central): Like the hon. Member for Saffron Walden (Mr. Haselhurst), I am not a shooter and my experience of all weapons is limited. My speech is based on the lobbies that I have received from both inside and outside my constituency.

Any legislation which controls the illegal and criminal use or possession of firearms must be welcomed. However, the legislation will do nothing to affect illegally held firearms. The Bill seeks only to regulate legally held and regulated firearms. It imposes further restrictions on firearms holders who, in the vast majority of cases, are law-abiding and respectable people who have chosen shooting as their hobby. The Secretary of State has said, and it was admitted in the White Paper, that legislation cannot eradicate criminal intent. The question, therefore, is whether there is a need for this legislation and whether these proposals address that need.

Under the present law, there is very little regulation of shotguns, but there is considerable and necessary control of other firearms, such as rifles and pistols. The White Paper recognises the public's right to hold firearms for sporting and working purposes. Almost all firearms can be used for sporting or working purposes. Indeed, the self-loading rifle, which is at the heart of this legislation, is used in target competition. The balancing of the rights of shooters with the security of the public is a difficult task, but it must be clear that further regulation of known firearms will not stop any further incidents, such as those which occurred at Hungerford and elsewhere. The only way to achieve that is by the total prohibition of firearms which, as the Government said in the White Paper, is unrealistic.

A factor that should be made clear, and which constituents have made clear to me, is that a competent shooter can probably do as much damage using an old bolt-action type rifle as he can using a self-loading rifle. We should consider, in that light, whether that type of weapon should be prohibited. Therefore, if the law is being changed simply because of such incidents as Hungerford —the White Paper states that those events have shown potential weaknesses in existing legislation — this legislation is inadequate. The only way to prevent such incidents is to ban all guns. The Bill cannot reduce the risk to the public because the firearms which remain under clause 1 are just as dangerous as those which the Bill seeks to prohibit.

[Mr. Eric Illsley]

What, therefore, is the real reason for the Bill? It cannot put any further control on illegal weapons, so the real reason may simply be to discourage shooters, to reduce their numbers by making it more difficult for firearms to be obtained, or to discourage them by not giving compensation. The granting of powers to the Secretary of State further to prohibit some categories of firearms will also discourage shooters from obtaining any type of gun which they fear could be barred by an order of the Secretary of State at short notice.

If the shooters are a responsible and law abiding group, there should be no question that their guns will be used in crime or that they will find their way into the hands of criminals. Here, I differentiate between firearms and shotguns, to which I hope to refer later.

All firearms covered by clause 1 are listed on a firearms certificate or licence. There are strict conditions governing the purchase and sale of such firearms and ammunition. The police, therefore, should have adequate records of these firearms. Further regulation can do nothing to prevent armed crime. The real problem is the firearms which are illegally circulating throughout the country. Recently, there have been five cases of shipments of arms from Libya finding their way to Northern Ireland or to this country.

There is perhaps a need for further regulation in respect of shotguns. At present, there is no record of the number of guns held by a certificate holder, so the proposal to list all shotguns is welcome. The Home Secretary may consider methods of ensuring that all such guns are recorded and that a serial number is stamped on each one, perhaps through an amnesty. The tightening of conditions regarding the shotgun certificate is also welcome as, to a certain extent, this will prevent shotguns being obtained, for no real reason. However, one can only guess at the numbers of unregulated and unlicensed shotguns that are in the country now.

Hon. Members know of the lobby against the prohibition of self-loading rifles, and I can only echo the concern expressed to me by my constituents and ask the Secretary of State to consider something like an approved list of self-loading rifles to enable disabled and frail shooters to continue their hobby. No one in his right mind would object to banning such weapons as rocket launchers, bazookas and mortars.

As well as having shotguns listed on the certificate, perhaps the Home Secretary should consider bringing them under section 1, as with firearms, and abolishing the shotgun certificate altogether, to give some sort of uniformity to the firearms legislation.

Compensation, to which several hon. Members have referred, is the one thing that is not in the Bill that most of the shooting fraternity want in it. Many shooters will lose considerable sums of money as a result of having to hand in guns that come under section 5 and that are prohibited. They will not be able to sell them on the domestic market or abroad. I am informed that there is no market for those sorts of firearms. The Home Secretary might consider the point that compensation will ensure that prohibited firearms are handed in when an amnesty comes into effect, whereas now there is a risk that some firearms will not be handed in because there is no compensation.

The Bill does not cover mail order sales. Public confidence cannot be maintained as long as people can look along the newsagents' shelves and see firearms advertised in glossy magazines and available for a small deposit. I suggest that further consideration be given to restrictions on mail order selling, not only of firearms but of other implements that form part of the packages offered in survival magazines—martial arts equipment, wheels darts and so on.

I think there should have been more consultation and that a better and more comprehensive Bill could have been brought forward. It will seem to the public that the Bill has been quickly brought forward in response to the Hungerford tragedy. Its main proposals were outlined by the Secretary of State in September at the conference of the Association of Chief Police Officers. The public will be disappointed when they find the Bill will do nothing to reduce the rates of armed crime.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): Before I call the next speaker, I remind the House that Mr. Speaker appealed for 10-minute speeches. Few hon. Members have responded to that appeal so far.

7.2 pm

Mr. Paul Marland (Gloucestershire, West): If being a game shooter makes it necessary to declare an interest in the debate, I do so. Unlike many other hon. Members who have spoken, I shoot game.

When discussing the Bill it is important to try to strike the right balance between liberty and restriction. Virtually all who enjoy shooting realise that their weapons are lethal and that if they fall into the wrong hands the consequences could be appalling. As a result, shooters respect their guns and treat them accordingly. Most people already keep their guns and ammunition under lock and key and are aware of the responsibility involved in owning a firearm. I understand also that shooting is now one of the fastest growing participatory sports in the country.

It would require a massive amount of legislation to prevent a gun from falling into the hands of a determined thief or killer, but Hungerford has added an urgency to our work on the Bill. I believe that today's legislation can stand a little tightening. However, as other hon. Members have said, we must be careful not to allow "Ryanitis" to cloud our judgment, or to allow the Bill to become a vehicle that could be put to a more sinister use in future by those who would seek to outlaw game shooting or wildfowling.

I cannot see the point of the proposal to transfer automatic-loading shotguns to section 1 of the Act. Automatic or pump-action shotguns are no more dangerous than the standard double-barrelled shotgun. In fact, they are less so, because the double-barrelled shotgun has a higher rate of sustained firing than an automatic which means that one can fire 10 cartridges down a regular double-barrelled shotgun more quickly than through an automatic. Furthermore, a double-barrelled shotgun can be cut down to a mere 12 in. and still work. It makes a handy little weapon for a bank robber. Automatic or pump-action shotguns cannot be cut down, as their mechanisms will not work if shortened—so they cannot be concealed, like sawn-off shotguns. To move automatic guns to section 1 seems illogical. If we do so, we shall be the only country in the west that differentiates between shotguns in this way.

The powers that will be given to the Secretary of State and to chief constables under the Bill seem too vague, for we have no clear definition of what is a good reason to own a gun. We have no way of knowing that the chief constables will interpret the powers in the same way. As things stand, the Home Secretary could amend designations at will without consultation, and could eliminate whole classes of shooting sports, together with their firearms and ammunition. How do we know that a future Home Secretary or chief constable might not be an enthusiastic supporter of the League against Cruel Sports and could, at a stroke, eliminate all classes of game shooting? That would destroy a sport that is enjoyed by a growing number of people, and bring havoc to a growing industry in rural areas. We have the finest gunmakers in the world in this country. Thousands of gamekeepers, game dealers, game farmers, game feed merchants and manufacturers would lose their livelihoods overnight—not to mention the impact that such a move would have on farmers, who are today looking for alternative ways of raising money. Game shooting will undoubtedly be one of those.

If discretion in these matters is given to 52 chief constables, how do we know that they will interpret their instructions in the same way? I urge that this part of the Bill should be clarified. Why should uncertainty exist about how many guns a citizen may own and about the conditions under which they must be kept? Is it a good reason to keep a pair of Purdeys if one does not shoot, merely because one's grandmother gave them to one? Is it a good reason to own six guns because a person is a keen shot and wants to have an 8-bore for goose shooting, a 12-bore magnum for rough shooting, a pair of sidelocks for driven birds, a 20-bore for his wife or other members of the family and a muzzle loader for muzzle-loading shooting competitions? Is it a good reason to own 25 ancient guns because one is a collector, an investor, a student or a researcher of old guns — but not a practising sportsman? Museums will be allowed to do that, but what about individuals?

These doubts must be cleared up because, as others have said, relations between the shooting community and the police have never been better than they are today, and that is the way that we want things to stay.

The White Paper mentioned the secure keeping of shotguns in some detail, but little is said about that in the Bill. Here again, it is essential that clear guidance be given; otherwise, the police could use their powers seriously to curtail shotgun ownership.

There is confusion, too, over guns in transit—taken when travelling to a shoot or staying overnight, or sent through the post. Is control over transit to be tightened up or changed, and, if so, how? Shall we expect every bed and breakfast establishment that accommodates shooters overnight to instal a gun safe? We need clarification about that.

On the positive side, I hope that my right hon. Friend will be reassured to learn that I approve of the suggestion that police should keep records of all guns and be notified of transfers of ownership on long-term loans, and that gun licences should be produced on the purchase of ammunition. Records should be kept of who owns what gun and where it is. I do not suggest that ammunition purchases should be recorded, but the production of a licence implies an approved user and all shooters, regardless of what type of shooting sport they indulge in, accept that gun ownership implies responsibility.

It is interesting to note that, as others have said, the effects of firearms and shotguns have been held at a remarkably constant level over the last few years, which is a credit to the security arrangements of today's gun owners.

I believe that it is right that, as set out in the Bill, visitors to this country should be required to have a gun licence and a sponsor before bringing a gun into the country.

Turning to the very considerable extra police responsibilities envisaged in this Bill, with the need to keep these and the number of hours of work involved to a minimum so as to keep the cost to shooters to a minimum, I wonder whether it would be feasible to get organisations such as the National Rifle Association, for example, to take responsibility for ensuring that their affiliated clubs meet approved police standards. In this way an affiliated club would be a guaranteed establishment; it would be guaranteed to be responsible and secure. Surely this would cut down the amount of time needed for police inspection and approval and therefore reduce the costs to the club. Then, on approval of the club or of the sportsmen, what chance would there be, I wonder, of extending the period to the next inspection, as has already been discussed.

Lastly, I want to turn to the proposed amnesty. I am sure that it will work. I am sure that many people will hand in their guns, but I have two thoughts on that. Would it be possible to try to preserve ancient weapons which may be handed in during this amnesty by allowing interested parties such as museums and approved collectors to inspect the guns handed in to see if there is anything that is worth saving? Secondly, as we are all anxious that as many unwanted weapons as possible should be handed in, I too believe that some sort of compensation should be paid for these guns—not necessarily varying according to the value of the gun, but a flat-rate amount offered to everybody in return for handing in guns.

Those are the four points that I wished to contribute to this debate.

7.11 pm

Mr. William Ross (Londonderry, East): I declare an interest. I have fired a considerable variety of weapons in my lifetime, but I do not shoot in Great Britain, except when representing the House at Bisley against the other place. I am afraid that we have not done as well in recent years as we might have wished.

I was not surprised that the Home Secretary would not give way to me during his speech whenever I rose to challenge him on the question of compensation, because he was formerly the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and presided over the system of compensation for weapons handed in by those who no longer needed them. I think that he would find it rather difficult to defend the position that he is now adopting in regard to compensation in Great Britain. It is quite clear that compensation is needed, but that is a matter that I can safely leave to right hon. and hon. Members who represent constituencies in Great Britain while I deal with the general thrust of the arguments for and against the legislation that is before us today.

[Mr. William Ross]

I think that the House will agree that, coming as I do from Northern Ireland, I have a clear interest in gun control. When I look at the history of gun control in Ulster, I question very seriously the whole theory of gun control as at present practised in this country.

Hungerford has been referred to. I have to tell the House that last Sunday week a constituent of mine went to church early, returned home, let his wife go to church, proceeded to shoot dead his three small children, including a 14-month-old infant, shot his wife when she came home, and then shot himself. That happened in a part of the United Kingdom that has the most ferociously tight gun laws, and it could not be prevented by those gun laws. This is a matter to which I will return briefly.

Therefore, when I look at the Hungerford incident and at what has been put before the House, I really wonder what the Government are trying to do and what general principle underlies this legislation. The control of weapons in Northern Ireland is extremely tight. Also, in Northern Ireland there is a vast number of personal protection weapons, pistols and hand guns of various types, carried by many members of the security forces, present and past. The only net result of that has been that the incidence of suicide by young men using those weapons seems to have increased dramatically. One of my neighbours was such a victim. That would indicate that such weapons held by persons legally entitled to have them are not generally used in crime at all, even in the very violent situation in which we live in Northern Ireland.

Secondly, it is not only guns that are tightly controlled in Northern Ireland. If one buys ammunition for any sort of weapon the amount is restricted and noted on the firearms certificate. We have firearms certificates for all shotguns and bullet-firing weapons. What ammunition one buys, from whom one buys it and the date on which it is bought is shown. The ammunition dealer has to keep a similar record, which is looked over by the police at regular intervals. The reality is that this has not made a blind bit of difference to the number of weapons that are used in crime. It has not mattered.

I cannot understand why the Government are now trying to draw a line between the lethality of the various types of weapons that are available. This matter has been dealt with in passing by other hon. Members. The reality is that a shotgun is the most deadly weapon of all at short range. It is a surprisingly difficult weapon to transport and has to be cut down if criminals are going to use it; but it is still the deadliest and most murderous weapon of all, because it is much easier to hit one's target with a shotgun than with anything else.

All the controls in Northern Ireland have not stopped weapons of all sorts getting legally into the hands of unstable persons, such as the one who perpetrated the tragedy in my own constituency. Something must have gone wrong, but I understand there was nothing to show that even the day before. It was the same at Hungerford. The changes that are proposed in the Bill will not prevent another Hungerford or another Maghera. Nor will they prevent domestic murders by the use of legally-held weapons, and I think that a very large number o murders committed in the country generally w domestic murders.

The criminal will continue to steal legally-held we if they are available. We have heard mention of that t but we were not told how many stolen legall weapons were recovered. I suspect that some at l and perhaps a very large percentage—of those weapons were recovered. Terrorists, of course, i Province and elsewhere, will steal legally-held wea but that is not how the terrorist carries on his war.

The legislation that goes through the House is sup to be decided by rational argument. It seems to m that is the one thing that is completely lacking Government's approach to this matter. There has be real attempt to look seriously and in depth at the matter, to take advice, or to try to find out what countries are doing and what the result of legi controls in those countries has been. The Bill is the pr of haste and, above all, emotion.

I can remember—and I think that all hon. Me can remember—the introduction of the Preventi Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act. Every tin subject comes up in the House those who shouted l for it at the start now apologise and want to get ric as far as I can see. I can remember the dissolution Stormont Parliament because the Army shot d number of people in the Bogside in Londonderry Stormont Parliament had nothing to do with that, was perceived that in some way it was responsible. an action of haste and panic which has borne evi throughout the years.

The Anglo-Irish Agreement was signed by the Minister and supported by practically all hon. Me It was supposed to bring peace, stability and reco tion. We have seen the result in the extradition legi in the Irish Republic. Weapons have been brought the shipload by the IRA. Apparently, Prot paramilitary groups are bringing in by the c weapons that we are now told have to be removed their possession—mortars, rockets and heavy m guns. Terrorists do not go out looking for fi certificates for those weapons; they smuggle them use them. Firearms legislation will not stop terrorist getting weapons and using them.

The two measures that I mentioned were all, to extent, the product of emotional reactions to inciden had to be seen to be doing something.

Mr. Barry Field (Isle of Wight): A number o members are incarcerated in the prison on the Wight. What are the hon. Gentleman's views on ad self-loading rifles, so that they are no longer aut weapons, by plugging or welding up the gas inl removing the pistons?

Mr. Ross: That would make it more difficult fo weapons to be used. However, if gas-operated we were treated in that way, people would have to go b bolt-action weapons. In competent hands, a bolt- weapon is a most deadly weapon. It is extremely acc Such weapons were used by our military forces in t world war, to such effect that the attacking Ge thought that they were machine guns. Trying to de gas-operated weapons does no good at all.

The Government have adopted a fundamentally approach to the control of firearms. Reaction in h usually wrong. Whenever I see the two Front Benches agreeing that something must be done, I am confirmed in my view that it will be wrong. Whenever they agree on something, it invariably turns out to be wrong. Whenever the Home Secretary, who was the author of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, supports something, I am further convinced that it is wrong.

Emotional reactions, especially reactions to horrific deeds such as that at Hungerford, cannot lead to a sensible and rational method of dealing with guns. The Bill is wrong. If the House divides tonight, I shall be glad to vote against it. I hope that, even at this late stage, the Home Secretary and other Home Office Ministers will listen carefully to what is being said against the Bill and will take it away, consider in depth what is wrong with present firearms law and come back to the House with a sensible recommendation.

7.23 pm

Sir Dudley Smith (Warwick and Leamington): I have listened to every speech in the debate. It is most remarkable that the Bill has very few friends. The speech of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary was the only one that was fully in support of the Bill. I am not suggesting that there will be a Division tonight, or that people will vote against the Bill. Most hon. Members agree that the gun law needs to be tightened. But I am certain that the fallacies that have been exposed by right hon. and hon. Members on both sides of the House will give my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and other Home Office Ministers great pause for thought.

Experience tells me that early reactive legislation is usually the worst kind. The Bill is an example of that. I have little doubt that the law needs to be tightened. All hon. Members agree that the Hungerford affair was horrific, but it was exceptional in our national life. Even in this dangerous age, I doubt whether there will be as serious an incident in the next 20 years. If there is not, it will not be because of the Bill.

I agree that the banning of certain firearms is probably desirable, but they should never have been available to the public in the first place. What happened at Hungerford was unique. It was imitative of what had recently happened in Australia and America. It was a copycat incident.

Like other hon. Members, I have had a considerable number of representations from constituents who belong to shooting and gun clubs. They have been writing to me articulately and have also come to see me. They ask, pertinently, why they should be penalised because of the actions of one man—however mad and terrible he was. They say, rightly, that the new laws will not stop murder and mayhem. They resent the implication that they are latent criminals because they own firearms. There can be no effective legislation against a man who eventually becomes unhinged and has access to firearms or other weapons. In my constituency, there was a terrible case of a man who wiped out his entire family, killing three people, and then committed suicide, but who had been perfectly normal until that time. Such things happen.

I fully support all that has been said by those who regard it as totally wrong that those who own particular weapons that they will now have to surrender should not be compensated. Those people regard it as a fine. If they must surrender firearms worth £200, £300, £400, or £500, the state would be fining them for daring to possess such weapons under the law as it then was.

I have great sympathy with the views of people whose sport is shooting, even though they are a small minority of the population. I am not a member of a shooting club, although I own a shotgun and am interested in game shooting and rough shooting. I do not do it on a regular basis because, as a Member of Parliament, I do not have the time. I wonder whether my licence will be renewed, because I do not shoot regularly.

The vast majority of people are not interested in firearms, or in owning them. However, they are influenced by the superficial instant reaction of the media to what happened at Hungerford and to the superficial calls for the public to be protected. A recent television documentary, to which my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson) referred, sought to establish that the police were negligent and much too slow in responding to the horror of Hungerford. Given the unique circumstances of that case, I do not blame the police, who had to face an extraordinarily difficult and unusual situation. However, I do blame them for granting a licence for the acquisition of a whole range of deadly weapons to a young man who, by any standards, should not have owned them and who appeared to be unstable. This afternoon we heard the worrying suggestion that he was probably only a provisional member of a gun club.

As a result of what happened, all who possess guns will now be put to considerable inconvenience and cost. Yet those holders of guns, whether firearms or shotguns, are in 99 per cent. of cases among the most law-abiding citizens. Gun clubs and collectors will suffer most from the Bill. However, what will the Bill prevent? I submit that it will be very little indeed. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary was asked how many stolen guns are used in criminal activities. I do not have the figure, but I believe that I am right in saying that there are very few. I understand that the firearm most used in the pursuit of crime is the pistol. That weapon is currently subjected to the most restrictive licence. But most pistols used in crime have not been stolen—they have been acquired illegally by criminals through criminal networks.

One of those shooters who will be affected drew my attention to the British Medical Association's publication, "Living with Risk", which studies the various hazards which can cause untimely death or injury in our society. Accidents with firearms, or the deliberate use of them against a person, come very low in the order of risk, especially with regard to legally held firearms. There are many other hazards facing us. For example, road accidents kill and maim far more people every 48 hours or so than did the exceptional case of Hungerford.

It may well be wise to remove repeater weapons from the public and to tighten up on licences, but I hope that my right hon. Friend and his successors will monitor and review the law regularly and analyse the situation. There are deep flaws in the Bill. Whatever view one takes of game and rough shooting and gun clubs, there must be fairness while such pursuits are tolerated and within the law. They must be permitted and they must be treated fairly.

7.30 pm

Mr. Nicholas Baker (Dorset, North): I shall repay your kindness in calling me, Madam Deputy Speaker, by being brief, because, apart from anything else, most of my foxes have been shot, whether with a shotgun or other firearm, I know not.

[Mr. Nicholas Baker]

The annunciator screen should announce when the Front Benches are united on a piece of legislation, so that Back Benchers are suitably warned. Having said that, I support the Bill with a few qualifications, most of which have been mentioned, enabling me to be correspondingly brief.

The Bill is not and should not be a response to the tragedy at Hungerford. The proper response should be action on the spot — instruction to the police, and, possibly, the adjustment of how they behave to try to prevent similar catastrophes.

The Bill is not a response to the tragedy. It is necessary —I declare an interest as a possessor of a shotgun and a shooter of game — because the law is out of date. I support the Bill because a number of new and different species of weapons should be prohibited. There is a need for tighter control over guns and there is a small advantage to the prevention of crime in trying to limit the number of weapons in circulation. However, as many of my hon. Friends have already said, it is difficult to quantify the number of arms, and that is something that the Home Office should try to do.

In several respects, the Bill may have gone too wide and in others it needs more precise definition. However, the Bill is far better than the White Paper suggested it would be.

To those — no doubt all of us — concerned about crime, and possibly to those who think that crime will be reduced by legislating against legal holders of shotguns and other arms, I would say two things. First, we do not have the same kind of society as the United States, where the right to defend oneself with a gun is an important human right. We might be going that way, and I hope that, when the Home Secretary wears his other hat to look after broadcasting, he will do what he can to reduce the amount of, by our standards, violent, but by American standards apparently quite ordinary, material on our screens—in particular, violence with the use of guns. Increasing penalties for crimes aggravated by the possession of weapons is one way in which the kind of crimes that we are concerned about can be prevented.

Shooting interests in Britain are strong, and I suspect that there are many more interested in shooting than the Home Office calculated when it started on this legislative road. Many jobs depend upon shooting. Shooting as a field sport, in which I have a personal interest, is largely responsible for the maintenance of the countryside as it appears to us today. It is a vehicle by which a large amount of money goes from the urban areas, spread as they are over the south of Britain, to the rural areas, and that is good. Shooting also contributes to the ecological balance of our countryside. Shooting as a sport is a positive force for good, and I would not want to see anything in the Bill that would allow any future Secretary of State—I have in mind clause 1(5)—the power to diminish the rights of proper sportsmen and legal holders of shotguns.

On the granting and renewal of shotgun certificates and the good reason point, the interests of a bona fide collector should be specified. The hon. Member who suggested that that is already recognised has read the Bill inc wonder whether the interests of a genuine inves be specified.

I am less concerned than my hon. Friends abo the police to handle the safety and pe community aspects. That approach may wo enormous difficulties in trying to lay down in the precise storage, safety, and peace-to-the-c requirements. However, I have no doubt Committee will want to discuss that. I favour guidance procedures for police.

I agre that the three-shot pump-action shotg safe as an ordinary double-barrelled shotguns a not be cla sed as section 1 firearms. I also agre Home Off ce should press for compensation for firearms, a point that has been well covered.

One po t that has not been covered co estimate o police manpower that will be req application the Bill in practice will depend on it costs the mmunity. I hope that the estimate police is correct, but I cannot believe that that i but a considerable underestimate of the numbe and civilians who will be needed to enforce the that my right hon. Friend will look carefully a

The British Shooting Sports Council, wh pleased to say has its base in my constituency, that 220 more policemen and 50 more civilia required. That would be far too high a price to Bill such as this, particularly when, like many Members, I have lobbied the Home Secretary re an increase in the number of policemen to adm law in the streets of my constituency.

The proper and responsible use of firearms the country, the sporting community and verm Unlike my right hon. Friend the Member for and Sidcup (Mr. Heath), I do not think that th defence implications, although on other matt great pleasure to be able to agree with him for o may be defence implications. We do not need t as an earlier constituent of my constituency, Tory Prime Minister, Lord Salisbury, who sa that he would laud the day when there was a ri cottage in England, but I do believe that firearm owners and users will support the Bill that it is properly amended on the lines that I ar Friends have suggested.

7.38 pm

Mr. Michael Colvin (Romsey and Waterside) what my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, Baker) said, in particular about police manpo take some 200,000 weapons from the category now qualify for shotgun certificates and inclu category 1, where they will require firearms that will have considerable implications manpower. I see from an answer to a par question that it takes the police 45 minutes shotgun certificate and 145 minutes to grant certificate, so if that difference is multiplied weapons it will mean a lot of additional wo police.

I must first declare my interests as an owner and rifles and as a user of them from a very ear father's advice to his son was,

"If a sportsman true you'd be,
listen carefully to me.
Never, never let your gun pointed be at anyone."

It is because the British shooting fraternity has followed that advice that it was so outraged and shocked by the Hungerford tragedy on 19 August and other more recent events. It cautioned, quite rightly, against over-reaction by the public and the authorities. Shooting sportsmen accept that tighter controls may be required to protect the public and that the Government have a duty to respond to calls for reform.

We must, however, ask ourselves during the passage of the Bill, which I hope will proceed tonight, whether it will give greater protection to the public or will merely penalise the law-abiding shooting community for a crime they did not commit. That shooting community comprises some 4 million shooters and a considerable trade to support Britain's second most popular participatory sport. That is probably why so many sportsmen and supporters of the sport, who do not necessarily shoot, have reacted to the Government's proposals. Our mail bags and surgery lists are evidence of that. No one can deny that they have had a fair hearing, and I applaud the way in which Home Office Ministers have reacted to representations made to them.

A great deal of consultation has taken place. I part company with some of my hon. Friends who have said that there has not been enough consultation and that the Bill is being rushed through. There has been a great deal of consultation, from my right hon. Friend's speech in Torquay on 22 September, only a month after the Hungerford tragedy, through to the publication of the White Paper. In all that time Ministers have been only too ready to respond to representations made to us. There has been a constructive debate on the issue throughout that time.

I particularly pay credit to the work of the British Shooting Sports Council under the chairmanship of Lord Swansea. It represents a number of organisations, which I will read out so that their members will know that their views have been represented to Ministers. The council consists of the following organisations: the British Association for Shooting and Conservation, the British Field Sports Society, the Clay Pigeon Shooting Association, the Gun Trade Association, the Muzzle Loaders Association of Great Britain, the National Pistol Association, the National Rifle Association, the National Small-bore Rifle Association, the Shooting Sports Trust and the United Kingdom Practical Shooting Association. I add to the list of organisations the Shooters Rights Association, which has also been diligent and energetic in its contribution to the debate.

I welcome the Bill, but it is far from perfect. It will have to be amended during its passage because, in seeking to protect the public against the misuse of firearms, there is a danger that we militate unintentionally and unjustifiably against the legitimate, sensible and responsible owners and users of firearms. Farmers are major users of firearms. Four out of five farmers have at least one shotgun which can be fairly described as an essential tool of trade. They welcome most of the Government's proposals, but they have one major reservation about clause 3 relating to the grant and renewal of shotgun certificates by the chief officer of police. This will require certain shotgun owners and those seeking to possess one to show good reason why they want it. The onus is on the shooter to show good reason, but the onus should be on the police to say why he or she should not have the certificate.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hogg): I am reluctant to interrupt my hon. Friend, but the onus he prefers is the onus set out in the Bill.

Mr. Colvin: I am very pleased to hear that. Nevertheless, there could be great disparity in the implementation of the law relating to good reason as between one police authority and another. There are 51 police authorities and it should not be left to them to apply their own interpretation, nor should it be left to the courts to decide as a matter of common law. Although the Bill goes a great deal further than the White Paper on that subject, it is not nearly specific enough. It is far better to have clear guidelines as to what constitutes a good reason incorporated in the legislation. No mention has been made in the Bill of reasons such as investment or private collections.

In welcoming the statutory requirement that, for safekeeping, responsibility for weapons must be placed on the shoulders of the person, I feel that a code of practice is necessary. This raises the question of who should advise the Home Secretary on drawing up such guidelines and codes of practice. My hon. Friend will have seen the voluntary code of practice for safe custody of weapons and ammunition produced by the British Sports Shooting Council. It has suggested—the suggestion has received wide support in the House—that an expert consultative committee should be established to assist my right hon. Friend on an ongoing basis.

I refer briefly to compensation. The slogan on which we should fight this issue is "No confiscation without compensation". There is no doubt that if the measure is being introduced to protect the public, the public must be prepared to foot the bill for that compensation. The hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross), who is expert in the use of firearms and has great experience of their misuse, said that many banned firearms that ought to be surrendered may find their way on to the black market and his constituents rather than mine will be on the receiving end of their bullets.

The analogy has been drawn between the firearm and the motor car. People ask why we should have such restrictions on firearms when people are allowed legitimately to drive around in fast motor cars, but one must have a driving test before one is allowed to drive a car. Some people have expressed concern that the European legislation on firearms—dare I say it—when the harmonisation takes place, will apply to this country. Firearms legislation controlling the use of weapons in this country is almost the toughest in the world and any legislation we import from Europe is likely to be harmful to the control of weapons.

In some European countries it is necessary to take a test before one is permitted to use firearms. It might be worthwhile to consider that idea. We should also bear in mind that before one is allowed to drive a motor car it is necessary to have third party insurance and perhaps the Committee should also consider that in the context of firearms.

I believe that the Bill deserves a Second Reading. However, in the interests not only of the public, but of the growing number of people of all ages and both sexes who enjoy shooting, I hope that it will not reach the statute book before it has been amended along the lines suggested by my hon. Friends.

[Mr. Colvin]

7.40 pm

Sir Hector Monro (Dumfries): I declare my interest as president of the National Small-bore Rifle Association and vice-president of the National Rifle Association, the Clay Pigeon Shooting Association and others. I find it hard to believe that a Conservative Government are putting the Bill to the House. I believe that the Ministers are out of touch with the members of the shooting world, many of whom are, of course, Government supporters.

In common with every hon. Member, I accept that we must have extremely clear, concise and effective firearms legislation. However, on this occasion the Government have got the balance hopelessly wrong, and it is heavily against those legitimate shooters who have carried the brunt of the battle on the effects and results of Hungerford.

Both target and sporting shooting are a recreation enjoyed by many thousands of responsible people. I am rather disappointed at being unable to speak to a Minister about a subject that concerns me greatly. The shooting world feels seriously let down and many have written to me to say they will not support our party again.

I spoke in the previous debate. As I said then, it is difficult to understand why there were no consultations — despite requests — before my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary made his policy speech on 22 September. From that date on he has hardly changed a thing, either in the White Paper or in the Bill. My hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) appears to have got the idea that there was close association, but he has been badly misinformed. The British Shooting Sports Council is hopping mad about the way in which its advice has been treated in the past two months. One might well ask: what is the point of a BSSC or other responsible bodies if Ministers will not accept advice, even on technicalities? The Bill contains many errors that will have to be corrected in Committee. Could one imagine a Minister of Sport changing legislation affecting cricket or football without first going to the Test and County Cricket Board or the Football Association, before making a policy statement? However, that is what has happened with this Bill.

The sheer technicalities of firearms encourages me to support warmly the idea of establishing a statutory expert consultative committee. That would help the Home Secretary with the administration of firearms legislation. It could also create a co-ordinated view among chief constables. Hon. Members have today drawn attention to the fact that the views of chief constables vary enormously throughout the country.

Advice on weapons — extremely technical stuff — should be welcomed by the Home Secretary, and it would certainly reduce the number of cases that will inevitably go to appeal. Attempting to draft the Bill is a bit of a nightmare because it is attached to the Firearms Act 1968. Most people would have great difficulty in finding their way through the Bill. The only immediate lighthearted comment I can make about the Bill concer We should all like to know how to f "simultaneously" out of any gun.

I am a strong supporter of the polic chairman of the Dumfries and Galloway pol Nothing I say is any criticism of the polic believe that the view of the police has swam Office firearms division. The Bill is what th it is not a fair balance between its views an responsible shooting public. The polic enormous powers under the Bill and this security and police discretion.

I am glad that my right hon. Friend has use" on the face of the Bill as an accept having a firearm. We already have the 1969 Those rules insist that security is mentioned a firearms certificate. I take it that those ru route by which my right hon. Friend will bri measures affecting shotguns. I believe that th be part of the Bill so that we can see what discuss them. In that way we could ensure be effective in the future. The Bill will have right of entry to inspect security and so on

Besides the firearms rules we have the guidance. Hon. Members have already s guidance is important. We should like to kn guidance is and how it will be effected. The guidance covers the security of weapons in is going to Bisley or to a shooting club and s of tea or whatever, it is necessary to lea locked in the boot of the car. However, peo prosecuted by the police for leaving weapo car boot. Such prosecutions are unsati represent a breakdown in relations betwee public and the police. The Home Office improve matters during the passage of the

When the rules are introduced, they w inspection of the home of every owner certificate or the home of a person applying the renewal of a shotgun certificate. Ther shotgun certificates. Consider the polic needed to inspect all those homes. Indeed, t inspect clubs. The Shooters Rights Associati estimate that more than 1 million police man necessary to undertake such work. However, that police manpower will be increased by that that means 80 civilians working compu headquarters. I repeat the question that I as debate: will the Minister tell us how many hours will be required to carry out the a onerous duties required under the Bill? W cost?

The Minister has clearly stated that he h the costs of shotgun and firearm certificat years and recover the full cost. A firearm c £33 and a shotgun certificate costs £12. If th certificates is meant to reflect the cost of 1 man-hours on the part of the police, heaven those certificates will cost. The prices of cert outwith the pocket of the normal man wh recreation.

I accept that the shotgun certificate ma number of shotguns held by a person, but th thousands of variations month by month and sell shotguns or lend them because a fri is broken. Has my right hon. Friend considered the man-hours involved in checking all those variations in shotgun certificates as shotguns move from dealer to owner, owner to dealer and owner to owner? It will be a bureaucratic nightmare. My right hon. Friend has underestimated what he is taking on.

Self-loading shotguns are a contentious issue, and the Minister has gone too far. In the debate today we have explained umpteen times that the lack of recoil in the self-loading shotgun is important for women and the disabled and for others, especially in the world of clay pigeon shooting. I took the Wildlife and Countryside Act through the House of Commons after great consultation with everyone, including the Home Secretary of the day. We agreed on the two-round magazine and that one up the spout would be right for the self-loading shotgun. That is now to be put on a firearms certificate. I cannot get any sense from the Home Office as to how it believes that will make a dramatic difference. We have already explained that any competent operator with a double-barrelled shotgun can get off 20 shots far quicker than someone with a five or seven-shot self-loading shotgun, which takes so long to reload. There is no difference in terms of overall fire power, so it is quite unnecessary to put a pump-action or self-loading shotgun on a firearms certificate. That simply must be changed in Committee, and I hope that the Home Secretary will agree to that tonight.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Buchanan-Smith) explained that many stalkers throughout Scotland use self-loading rifles. Many roe stalkers throughout the United Kingdom use five-shot self-loading rifles which are efficient and allow them to fire a second shot at a wounded beast. Those guns are not to be classified under section 1 but are to be banned for ever under section 5. That is surely illogical. The Home Secretary simply must re-examine the practical requirements of those who use self-loading guns.

I am glad that my right hon. Friend is reconsidering the question of visitors. There is a huge income to be had from wealthy people who come here to buy the best shotguns in the world. We must not make it too difficult for them to do that or to come here for shooting competitions. Bisley and other centres have a world reputation. If we are to hedge round such competitions with special regulations, we shall lose that reputation and lose our reputation for world marksmanship.

Conversions pose a whole host of problems. An expert committee would give the Home Secretary a tremendous amount of help. Hundreds of people have converted rifles to .410 shotguns. Those guns cannot be converted back; the gun cannot be re-rifled. Why on earth must they be dealt with in clause 1? In addition, there are a number of silly footling issues. Under clause 7, any weapon that has been converted will remain at its highest position on the list. Hand grenades and shell cases will be prohibited under section 5. Therefore, anyone with a first world war hand grenade which has been made safe will suffer. It will now be a criminal offence to have a hand grenade that has been made into a cigarette lighter sitting by one's fireplace to light one's pipe, because it will revert to being classified as a hand grenade. It will now be a section 1 criminal offence to have a shell case in which one is growing an aspidistra. The Home Secretary has not begun to think of what he is doing in the Bill.

I am glad that the hon. Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds) referred to museums. We have the finest armouries in the world—particularly at the Tower of London. Is my right hon. Friend really intending weapons there to be reactivated, ruining the actions or the bolts or the breeches? That would be like punching a hole in a Canaletto.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My hon. Friend should bear in mind that holders of such collections can apply for a section 1 certificate.

Sir Hector Monro: We shall have to see about that in Committee. We must consider the Bill as drafted. As matters stand, it is entirely for the Home Secretary to decide what may go on in museums, as the hon. Member for Warley, East explained.

I am glad that the issue of clubs was raised. Of course the NSRA and the NRA would gladly supervise and manage the arrangements for clubs' licences. There is no need to involve the police. Think of the money that could be saved in that direction.

Lastly, we come to dealers and compensation. My right hon. Friend must have a guilty conscience about some aspects of the Bill. Paragraph 47 of the White Paper states

"We have concluded that as a matter of principle it is undesirable and unjust to require the taxpayer at large to pay for the removal from the public domain of weapons which are an acknowledged threat to life."

However, it is implied that one need have no worries if one wants to sell them abroad. It is immoral for the Home Secretary to adopt the attitude that it does not matter as long as one does not sell the weapon in this country.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) and other hon. Members have emphasised the importance of good compensation. Indeed, our friends from Northern Ireland have pointed out that there has been legislation in Northern Ireland. It has been acknowledged that there are various precedents for the payment of compensation. It would be unjust if many of our friends lost substantial sums because weapons that are legal today were made illegal at the end of July at the drop of a hat because those people would be losing money through no fault of their own. That is unacceptable.

I hope that the Home Secretary will consider the question of dealers. If we must sell section 5 firearms to dealers, we must bear in mind that in Scotland, for example, there are only six licensed dealers, who are allowed to have only five section 5 weapons at a time. How on earth are we to unload tens of thousands of weapons on to so few dealers?

While the Government are right to try to toughen up the firearms legislation to make it effective, all in all, they have gone too far. They have produced a ragbag of matters that will need to be corrcted in Committee because they are technically incorrect, and I certainly could not support the Bill tonight.

8.5 pm

Mr. Ron Davies (Caerphilly): I gather that the hon. Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) used to play rugby. I am tempted to remark that if he had treated his opponents on the field with the ferocity with which he has treated the Home Secretary, he would have been banned for life—even in Wales.

Three aspects of the Bill concern me, and I shall attempt to deal with them as briefly as possible. First, the provision that bans paramilitary firearms for the first time represents a significant development in the British Government's treatment of the private ownership of firearms. It is an entirely new principle and it is being introduced without public announcement, debate or acknowledgement. When taking a step that represents such a radical departure from agreed practice, the Government should be honest about their intentions.

[Mr. Ron Davies]

Secondly, it is proposed to introduce a registration system for shotguns. I understand why the Home Secretary is doing that, and most of us would regard that provision by itself as innocuous. However, it will set in hand a process that will result in every shotgun in the country being identified, located and registered in three, four or perhaps five years' time. I am worried that it will then be a fairly easy step for the Home Secretary of the day to follow the advice offered by the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson) and abolish the distinction between shotgun certificates and firearms certificates. Once shotguns have been identified it will be relatively easy to require section 1 certificates to be obtained in respect of their ownership. That course of action is being pressed on the Home Secretary and will be available to him under the Bill. That development has not been publicly acknowledged. There has been no public debate and no justification has been offered for it.

My third reservation concerns the discretionary powers in the Bill. Clause 1 gives the Secretary of State discretionary powers to ban any firearm or ammunition without further primary legislation; it can be done by order. Are we to expect widespread public debate or consultation on that? I suspect not. Clause 3 contains the good reason provision. The Home Secretary explained that he would advise chief constables how to operate that provision. He said that he would give guidance by means of a circular. In an earlier intervention I tried to suggest that guidance might change from year to year. Therefore, not only would different parts of the country perhaps be treated inconsistently but there could be an inconsistence of treatment from one year to the next and from one Home Secretary to the next. We should give such a discretion to any Home Secretary only grudgingly.

We are all conscious of the disaster that befell Hungerford and sympathetic to the distress that it caused. However, I disagreed with the assertion of the hon. Member for Newbury that the Bill was not a response to the events at Hungerford. The House is divided on this point because the Opposition believe that this legislation is nothing more than a political response to the events at Hungerford. However, I accept that that view is not shared by all Conservative Members.

I want to draw to the attention of the House two items of evidence to support my contention that this legislation is merely a political response. The first piece of evidence is contained in the White Paper that was introduced to the House before Christmas. With reference to Hungerford it states:

> "These events have shown potential weaknesses in the existing controls. They have also created a climate of public opinion."

The Bill is a response to that climate of public opinion.

My second piece of evidence is to be found in the reply to a question that I tabled to the Home Secretary on 18 December 1986. Ironically, that w
Michael Ryan was granted his firearm
the Secretary of State
"whether he has any proposals to r firearms."
The Minister replied:
"there are no plans at present to ame
1968."—[Official Report, 18 Decembe
642.]
Of course there was a review. Gove legislation at all times. However, as lat the Government had no plans to in
That is why I believe that this Bill is
The Government had to be seen to b events at Hungerford. The Governme to the Bill being rushed, inadequa consultation. It is a political response had to be done and it contains major

All hon. Members who have spoke Tory Members, have criticised so legislation. We have all realised that th
I want to refer to the three illogicalitie referred to so far. Much reference ha banning of pump-action shotguns. I why the Home Secretary believes shotguns have a greater rate of fire th by-side, double-barrelled shotguns.
competent, dextrous shooter can achie of fire with a double-barrelled shotgun action shotgun and with a greater de the Home Secretary is concerned about
I further suggest that a pump-action reduced to a sawn-off shotgun. Th shotgun is the usual sawn-off wea
Secretary wants to deal with the increa held weapons, and if that could be a weapons, the logic of the argument barrelled shotgun should be banned a shotgun should be retained. Howeve have not accepted the logic of that ar

In my second point I want to retu Hungerford. Michael Ryan used a Be his victims in Hungerford. We have he Kalashnikov. The Kalashnikov is ban will not be banned. How on earth ca response to the events at Hungerford? I the Government should introduce suc

Thirdly, when the Secretary of Stat
2, he mentioned the reclassification unition. He said that some ammunitio other ammunition. The question of the ammunition does not depend on the g the distance from which it is fired. If someone with any gauge of shotgun a range, that person would be killed.
over distances of less than 20 ft. He shotgun with any ammunition at that

Mr. Kenneth Hind (Lancashire, We

Mr. Davies: Twenty feet is the dista and the hon. Member for Lancashire who wants to intervene.

Mr. Hind: Perhaps the hon. Gentle the principle that it is impossible to l activities of a man such as Mr. Ryan.

one week after certificate. I asked ew legislation on

the Firearms Act
986; Vol. 107, c.

ments review all
s December 1986,
oduce legislation.
political reaction.
esponding to the s reaction has led and lacking in ecause something logicalities.

onight, including aspects of the e are illogicalities.
hat have not been been made to the nnot understand hat pump-action traditional, side-
Any reasonably a far greater rate
han with a pump-
e of accuracy. If wn-off shotguns, otgun cannot be double-barrelled
n. If the Home
g pool of illegally eved by banning that the double-the pump-action
the Government
ment.

to the events at ta to kill most of d much about the l, but the Beretta that be a logical eggars belief that neasures.

referred to clause shotgun ammmore lethal than hality of shotgun ge; it depends on he were to shoot
nunition at close chael Ryan fired uld have used a stance.

rose——

e between myself
West (Mr. Hind)

n will appreciate slate against the o doubt the hon.

Gentleman can appreciate the anger of one of the most law-abiding sections in our community, the shooters, at the Government's response to that incident and the fact that they will lose some of their weapons without compensation. That anger is particularly felt among those using pump-action shotguns to whom the hon. Gentleman has referred.

Mr. Davies: If the hon. Gentleman follows my argument, that is precisely the conclusion he will draw.

Those are the three illogicalities that I wanted to submit to the House. My hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) moved an amendment and I hope that the House will have an opportunity to divide on it later. He made a compelling case about the gross irregularities that occurred in Hungerford when Michael Ryan was issued with a firearms certificate. I want to summarise those irregularities.

First, Michael Ryan should not have been granted a firearms certificate. Secondly, the speed with which the certificate was offered was wrong. Inadequate checks were made. Thirdly, he should not have been granted the variation which allowed him to purchase a heavy calibre rifle. Finally, he should not have been allowed to retain his certificate once it had been granted because there was more than adequate evidence in Hungerford of his unsuitability to hold such a certificate.

If there are ways in which controls can be introduced to enhance public safety, those controls must apply not to the weapons but to the individual. If an individual is fit to have a particular firearm, he must be fit enough to own any firearm because of the lethality, power and potential of any firearm for taking human life. Controls must be placed on the individual to ensure that the individual is fit. The control should not be aimed at ensuring that someone is fit to possess certain firearms but not others. That is the difference between the Government and the Opposition.

The Opposition have called for an inquiry into these matters. Most hon. Members who have spoken tonight are familiar in some sense with firearms. We all understand the power of firearms and we therefore understand the great courage that is required of a police officer facing the use of firearms. When we put the case that we should learn the lessons of Hungerford we are not being critical of the police. We are not detracting from our immense admiration of the courage with which the police face their task. Rather, we want to ensure that the lessons are learnt.

If we want to avoid a repetition of Hungerford, that can be achieved only if we learn the lessons. We can only do that if we have a full public inquiry into how Ryan broke every rule in the book to gain possession of his weapons. We must also have a proper inquiry into the police response. That is not to say that the police reacted wrongly. Mention has been made of a television programme that was supposed to be critical of the police. I saw it, but I did not think that it was critical. I thought that it asked questions. We have a right to ask those questions and the only way in which they will be answered properly is to hold an inquiry into the procedures leading up to Ryan becoming an armed maniac and into the police response. If we believe that there is an overriding need to safeguard the public we must examine the elements of what happened in Hungerford as well as the nature of permitted firearms.

There must be two pre-requisites. There must be a full and searching inquiry. Secondly, and I endorse the comments made by many Conservative Members, must be a statutory consultation committee to all Home Secretary to have access to expert opinio advice so that we do not again have the sorry s affairs of a Home Secretary coming to the Ho Commons with a set of proposals and failing to single Member of Parliament who will support the

8.19 pm

Mr. Henry Bellingham (Norfolk, North-West) pleased to follow the hon. Member for Caerphill Davies), who spoke a great deal of sense, particular regard to the need for an expert consultative com It is sad that he has been unable to persuade mor colleagues to attend and support his views.

I should declare an interest because I own a sh I consider myself to be a responsible shotgun use have owned one for many years. I also have a consti interest—representing a large rural constituency, hardly surprising—and, as a result of the White and the publication of the Bill, I have received letters.

We understood the pressures that the Governme under to react to the Hungerford tragedy, but always subscribed to that excellent Tory dictum tha it is essential to legislate it is very necessary not to le The Government have rushed into this matter with right amount of consultation. Unless we tear the Bi in Committee, we shall end up with an Act that we regret.

A number of hon. Members have said that by e this legislation we shall go some way to reduc number of firearms-related crimes. There has b increase in such crime of 237 per cent. between 19 1986, and the figure has doubled since 1979.

We have not considered the examples o countries. Switzerland has a 625,000-strong milit all keep their weapons and ammunition at h possesses 6,000 assault weapons and 2 million weapons in total. Kalashnikovs are very easy to there and no certification is required on transf armed crime in Switzerland is minimal.

The home guard in Denmark provides cover mobilisation and its members possess 60,000 weapons, all of which are kept at their homes. In 25 years, there have been only 13 homicides attr to those 60,000 weapons.

By contrast, Germany has the most draconian legislation and control, but its record of firearms crimes is far worse than those other two countr ridiculous to pretend that by legislating in this way reduce the number of firearms-related crimes and shall prevent a recurrence of the Hungerford trag shall not be able to achieve that.

With regard to the semi-automatic and self-loa clause, Kalashnikovs and other types of infantry weapons should be prohibited. We must draw somewhere. In the past, it has been drawn at guns, grenade launchers and weapons of that na

A number of self-loading rifles are used in com work, and I do not see why the Minister will not an amendment being moved in Committee that wi number of self-loading rifles that can be competition work.

I should like to make a new point relatin national defence aspect of the clause. If the through, it will be the first time in British history that civil marksmen will be prevented from owning and training with a current British service rifle. It will act retrospectively by banning previous self-loading rifles. Under the Bill as it stands, the last British service rifle that could continue to be used by civilians would be a world war 2 Enfield No. 4. I hope that the Minister will seriously consider that matter.

[Mr. Henry Bellingham]

Does the Minister feel strongly about the standard of marksmanship in the community? Going back, does he remember the firearms amnesty of 1936 or 1937, when we had to appeal to the Americans to let us have weapons for the Home Guard? Has the Minister or the Home Secretary discussed that matter with the Ministry of Defence?

I entirely support my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) about compensation. Surely it is morally indefensible not to offer compensation. We are talking about law-abiding citizens who have proved to the police that they have a good reason to own a firearm, and were given a certificate, and who will have their weapons taken away. The arguments that have been made in favour of that so far do not stand up. I urge the Minister to listen to what has been said about compensation. If the Bill goes through and compensation is not offered, many people will think that we have acted in a thoroughly draconian and uncivilised manner.

A number of hon. Members have mentioned pump-action and self-loading shotguns. The hon. Member for Caerphilly and my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester, West (Mr. Marland) said that it is far more difficult to adapt a pump-action or self-loading shotgun for crime because the barrel cannot be cut down. Those weapons are owned by people who cannot afford a more traditional type of shotgun, and they shoot clay pigeons or rough shoot. So far, no sustainable argument has been made that there is a link between the existence of these weapons and armed crime involving them.

In his speech to senior police officers at Torquay, the Home Secretary had to offer something, so he chucked this proposal at them. We are now on a hook that it will be difficult to get off. Unless we get off it completely, I urge the Minister to accept the limited magazine capacity compromise. I mentioned this to him and he said that it needed careful monitoring. Must we monitor more closely a sensible, orderly group of people? I suggest not. We could have a compromise. If someone broke the law on the limited magazine capacity, he could be prosecuted. The excuse of lack of monitoring for not agreeing to it does not stand up.

The good reason clause must be set out very clearly. During the election campaign I visited someone in a housing association flat. To begin with, the conversation was fairly difficult because he obviously did not share my politics. I discovered that he was a member of the local wildfowling club and that in his bed-sit he had no fewer than four shotguns. Why not — he was a keen wild-fowler? He had an 8-bore, a Magnum 12-bore and two other 12-bores. He was a law-abiding sportsman who was fanatical about the sport. If someone like that has a run-in with the local police — perhaps he is a bit of a character and the police have got it in for him — they could easily say, "You cannot have a firearm certificate. We do not believe that you have a good reason to possess one, and you have inadequate securi what is a good reason. What is out inadequate.

An expert consultative committ
Home Secretary on many different p play a part in setting up a code of p cannot think why the Home Secretary not nodded in approval when man Opposition Members have urged th up a statutory expert consultative co we shall miss a major opportunity i

The Bill is unnecessary for the reas Unless we amend it substantially in create a Bill that will lead to an bureaucracy and time. This legislatio in a spirit of good will and co-operati and the sporting community. As some said, the relationship between the po community has never been better. Ho through, if the police have the powe they will have under the Bill as it no no expert consultative committee, a example, one will be able to obtain in certain circumstances whereas in antagonism will be rife. We shall int shall deeply regret in years to com many of our best and most loyal supp
Bill on Second Reading only on the heavily amended in Committee. I definitely vote against it on Third R

8.29 pm

Mr. Michael Lord (Suffolk, Centra following my hon. Friends the Me
North-West (Mr. Bellingham) and Monro) that their experience of this s mine. Indeed, I hope that not only th eloquence of my hon. Friend the M will move the Front Bench.

I shoot a little and own a shotgu a county in which game shooting an major parts of our activities. In addi depend greatly on owning a gun.

Much of the ground has been cov of the time, so I shall gallop a litt Deputy Speaker. I want to speak, fir of the Home Office. I agree with the c Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davie now says that it was in the process of That may well be the case, and per that. However, no one among us wi the Hungerford incident did not initi accelerated it. We must all take that even today the Home Secretary talke the Hungerford tragedy, which I thin
the reason why the Bill has bee Hungerford is crucial, if not to the d legislation, to the reason why it is be was a tragic event. However, it says nature of Michael Ryan than abou controlling firearms in this country.
do that kind of thing in any circumst to initiate legislation because of that

If my memory serves me correctl boasted about the guns that he own took them to work loaded and that ." We must clarify

ed in the clause is could advise the

nts and, above all, ctice on security. I r the Minister have Conservative and Government to set mittee. Without it
he Bill.
s that I have given.
ommittee, we shall ncrease in police
nust be carried out between the police on. Members have e and the sporting ver, if the Bill goes of discretion that stands, if there is if in Dorset, for shotgun certificate
rfolk one will not,
duce a Bill that we
It will antagonise rters. I support the asis that it will be t is not, I shall ding.

I am conscious in
bers for Norfolk,
Dumfries (Sir H.
ect greatly exceeds experience but the nber for Dumfries

I represent part of shooting clubs are n, all our farmers

ed. I am conscious
if I may, Madam
about the attitude
nments of the hon.
The Home Office
paring legislation.
s we must accept doubt that, even if the Bill, it greatly read. I believe that f "responding" to as very much been brought forward.
ailed nature of the re us. Of course, it r more about the
the legislation on ch a person could es, and it is wrong

Michael Ryan has
. I believe that he had used 30-mile

an hour signs for target practice and boasted of that to friends and workmates. I think that is true. If it is, it points to the responsibility of ordinary men and women to bring such things to the attention of the police. That is a far more important aspect of the case than firearms legislation. We all bear such a responsibility. I am certain that had Michael Ryan's friends or acquaintances been the kind of shooters that we are talking about — responsible men and women who shoot regularly — those things would have been brought to the attention of the police.

I am sure that, following that event, the attitude was that something must be done. How often we hear those words, but now something is being done. I am prepared to accept that the legislation will do some good and that possibly it will be effective. It has some good points. For example, I thoroughly welcome the amnesty, provided that it is properly handled.

The number of shotguns listed on a certificate is crucial. That point was brought firmly home to me recently when I was talking to the police. Police are frequently called out to an incident where they know that there are shotguns. They sometimes visit a house, take the shotgun and leave. As they may be called back on another occasion, it is important that they know that the first shotgun that they took was the only shotgun and that they know exactly how many shotguns are held in the house. Otherwise they may go back to be confronted by another gun. It would help if they knew the number of guns owned by an individual. Some of the measures about the safe keeping of weapons are also good.

A few weeks ago I spoke at a conference in Suffolk. Towards the end of the conference I had a discussion with between 15 and 20 police inspectors who were drawn from police forces throughout East Anglia and the east midlands about the whole question of firearms legislation. Towards the end, I asked them their views about the need for further legislation. They were unanimous in saying that there is no need for further legislation. I think that is important.

My hon. Friend the Member for Saffron Walden (Mr. Haselhurst) and other hon. Members have said that most crimes are committed with illegally-held weapons. Therefore, how will crime be reduced if regulations are tightened up on people who hold weapons legally? It does not make sense. Little has been said about the fact that most crimes involving weapons are committed with handguns—[Interruption.] It is true.

Mr. Jerry Wiggin (Weston-super-Mare): The figures for 1986 for notifiable offences in which firearms were used show that of 9,363 offences, 5,886 were committed with air weapons. That point has been totally overlooked during the debate.

Mr. Lord: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for making that point. The point that I am seeking to make is that the majority of crimes that are committed using weapons are committed not with shotguns. It just happens that shotguns, especially sawn-off shotguns, are emotive and always seem to be hitting the headlines. Therefore, sadly, shotguns are always dragged to the forefront of our debates. That point should be remembered.

I shall deal quickly with two or three points of detail. First, it does no harm as far as my right hon. and hon. Friends on the Front Bench are concerned to repeat that it will be absolutely scandalous if compensation is not paid to people whose weapons are confiscated. The le may not technically be retrospective, but its effec that of retrospective legislation. It will be unworth party and Government if compensation is not pa

Secondly—this point has already been made- action shotguns are of great benefit. They have le than other weapons, and that is of enormous h worth pointing out that that greatly benefits wo young people who are keen shooters. I understu some of those who hope to represent us at the fort Olympics use such shotguns. The point has bee "What about allowing the gun to hold onl cartridges?" I can see no reason why that shoul taken on board.

Thirdly, the question of converted weapons raised with me. They could be old guns, often 410 have been converted a long time ago and may be 80 and 90 years old. There is no way in which th possibly be converted back to their original use. W happen to such guns? If they cannot be used lega will either be used illegally or handed to someone is less fussy about such things. I should like Friend to comment on that.

The safe keeping of firearms and the issue locked in car boots causes great concern. The p that arise when one goes to shoot elsewhere have to me. One must take one's gun and can lock it on car boot. But what does one do when one stops fo It is most important that the police take a sensib

A further point about police discretion is that treatment. The point was made earlier that it absolutely crackers if the rules governing the gra licences in one county are different from those in That would be intolerable and must be considere

I hope that when my hon. Friend replies to th he will devote his attention to some of these point are not new, but have been made several times du debate.

I shall support the Bill because I believe it to be attempt to reduce crime. It may succeed to som I believe, and hope, that my right hon. Friend th Secretary will listen to the shooting fraternity a alterations where he believes that they are respon appropriate. I beg him to listen carefully so that does not do more harm than good and that it does the innocent pleasure of thousands of shooters w shown themselves to be one of the most respons law-abiding groups of sportsmen and women society.

8.38 pm

Mr. David Nicholson (Taunton): One thing ma about this debate—the timing is right. There time to allow the understandably angry and atmosphere of last autumn, following the Hu tragedy, to settle. Since then, the minority of virtually all of whom are entirely law-abiding, v and carry guns have been subject to a degree of the media and the very definite threat of great bu this legislation. That concern was recognised by Friend the Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair- All hon. Members should note carefully what he

I refer to a letter that was sent to me by a con It is a copy of a letter that he sent to the Sunday which is hardly an anti-field sports newspaper, ref a comment in its editorial column. It states:

[Mr. David Nicholson]

"I object to being described as a 'gung-ho Briton', together with many thousands of others, I have used firearms for nearly fifty years. The only time anyone was in danger was when the Government instructed me to use them against the nation's enemies for three years, when they were no doubt very grateful for the fact that I could shoot straight!"

My hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker) and, at greater length, my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham) pointed out the military value in the past of rifle clubs and so forth. The Shooters Rights Association, whose meeting last night the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) and I sponsored, pointed out that, in 1859, the then Secretary of State for War became the first president of the National Rifle Association. The hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross) observed that, at the battle of Mons in 1914, the day was probably saved by the rapidity and accuracy of our rifle fire.

I must admit that I approach the matter with some care because, unlike most who have spoken in the debate, I have no vested interest axe to grind. Indeed, I have never used a firearm or similar weapon, apart from some innocent target shooting with an air rifle in my teens. I have, however, a constituency interest. My constituency is rural, and includes most of Exmoor. In terms of numbers of firearms and shotgun certificates, Somerset and Avon, my own police authority, ranks seventh of all the police authorities in England and Wales. Over 6,000 firearms certificates and over 30,000 shotgun certificates are held.

That is slightly counterbalanced by a trivial but sad episode, which I mention to show that I am not a gung-ho Briton. Just before Christmas our cat was found dead, close to our home, having been shot through the lungs by a ·22 bullet. With two very young children, my wife and I were understandably concerned that there was someone about with a firearm who, to put it at its most innocent, could not tell the difference between a cat and a rabbit.

Yet, with those disclaimers, the more I read about the Bill, and the more that I have read constituents' correspondence and met the groups concerned, the more I feel that it is a somewhat heavy-handed approach. Is it not true, I ask the Front Bench, that the Bill is substantially based on the draconian 1973 Green Paper, with which the then Government, and their successors—both Labour and Conservative—did not proceed?

Reference has been made—and we can argue about it until doomsday—to the role of the Hungerford tragedy in the bringing forward of the Bill at this time. However, Ministers admit that the Bill cannot prevent a repeat of Hungerford. In that respect, it is a sledgehammer that cannot deter or impede a nutcase. Nor, I fear, will it curb the use of guns in crime.

The Bill does, however, bear heavily on a small minority. A number of improvements have already been suggested, two of them by Opposition Members, which would strengthen the Bill in certain respects. One suggestion was that it should provide for a minimum age for holding firearms or shotgun certificates; the other was that it should pay some attention to—indeed, ban—armour-piercing ammunition.

The British Shooting Sports Council, on the subject of self-loading and pump-action shotguns, says:

"There is a very real fear that the Bill will increase the likelihood of crime with these weapons. There is some evidence of an increase in sale in advance of the Act. There is no record of the ownership of these shotguns. When the Act is passed those who do not secure a self-loading certificate will have to dispose of them at a time when the market has collapsed. There is a danger that they will find their way into the criminal market."

Another proposal made by the BSSC, and mentioned briefly by a number of hon. Members, is the establishment of a statutory expert consultative committee, which "will create and keep up to date a Code of Good Practice covering all aspects of firearm security. It will maintain a watch on the development of firearms in sport. It will advise the Home Secretary on which firearms should be the subject of control, within the limits set by the Act."

I have had constituency correspondence from the members of the Sealed Knot organisation. I do not know how far the Bill will damage that organisation's interests, but it is sufficient to the atmosphere of alarm that the White Paper and the consultation on the Bill have produced that it is worried that its important traditional pastimes will be hindered.

Let me give another constituency example. A very responsible farmer, a near neighbour of mine, who occasionally has to protect his winter root crops by shooting deer, writes to me:

"As it is not always possible to kill cleanly with one shot, it is necessary to fire two or three to avoid a painful and lingering death to the animal. . . . My rifle is a 30·06 calibre rifle with a magazine holding only 4 rounds—not the larger magazine type of the military automatic rifle that was used so tragically at Hungerford."

He is afraid that he will lose the use of that gun.

That brings me to compensation. Every Conservative Member who has spoken has strongly urged the case for compensation. The only person who seems not to have supported it—indeed, to have positively opposed it—is the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley). I am amazed that he should, in his later days, have found such concern for public expenditure.

I have noticed, in some of the briefings on the Bill, that the precedent has been cited of no compensation being granted to business in respect of changes in the law with regard to health and safety or environmental factors. That is hardly a viable parallel. We are talking of business that exists to make profits, employs people and, no doubt, has an effect on the environment. The Bill is concerned with private individuals who have owned valuable property and now face the possibility of its being taken from them without compensation. Far from committing a crime, those people have scrupulously observed the law. However, they will be in a worse position than the holder of illegal arms who will sell them on the black market.

My hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, North has referred to the burdens on police administrative time and the dangers of prohibited weapons without a proper compensation scheme finding their way into criminal hands. I understand that at present the police support the Bill. If their view does not change, it is a view to which my hon. Friends and I will no doubt have to defer. I hope very much, however, that, as the Bill goes through Parliament, the police will study those two points as a matter of urgency. In the view of many of the Bill's critics, they are most important. I hope that, as the Bill goes through its remaining stages, we shall have the benefit of evidence from the police on those points. I hope that these and the other substantial criticisms made by hon. Members on both sides will be urgently considered in Committee and the remaining stages.

This is a matter on which this House rather than the other place should wield an amending power, for the simple reason that, in a sensitive matter of this kind, to leave the other place to make drastic amendments might play into the hands of the somewhat irresponsible political heirs and successors of the late first Earl Lloyd George.

I will support the Bill's Second Reading to ensure that it goes forward. However, I assure my right hon. and hon. Friends that much more work needs to be done.

8.49 pm

Mr. John Greenway (Ryedale): It is a proper convention of the House, much in evidence in the debate, to declare one's interest. One of two interests which I have to declare is unique; it is an interest of experience in that when I was a young police constable in the west end of London in the mid-1960s, aged 19, I had the unfortunate experience of being shot at by an armed criminal. It was indeed a frightening experience.

When a policeman is faced with a gun pointing at him, he does not stop to ask whether the firearm is legally or illegally held, whether it is a part 1 or a prohibited weapon, or whether it is a shotgun and, if so, of what type. His sole concern is the safety of the public and of himself and his colleagues. Recent incidents in which two armed gunmen were shot dead by police only serve to highlight the risks that the police face in policing our safe country. A split second decision has to be made. It is proper for us to pay tribute to the bravery of our police force in regard to firearms attacks on them and on the public.

It is of the gravest concern to me, as it should be to the House and is to the public, that in the 20-odd years since I had my unfortunate experience such incidents have increased. Reference has been made in the debate to the statistics on the use of firearms in the pursuit of crime. There was a 237 per cent. increase between 1972 and 1986. The number of incidents has more than doubled since 1979. That leads me to two possible conclusions. In 1968, not because of my experience, although it may have been a contributory factor, the Firearms Act which we are amending was passed. With the increase in armed crime one wonders whether the right conclusion to draw is that that legislation had no impact on illegally held weapons or on weapons used in crime. The alternative view is to ask how much worse things might have been if the regulations had not been tightened in 1968.

What strikes at the heart of the debate is that we do not know what effect the proposed legislation will have, but we dare not take the risk of not amending the present law. It is a responsibility peculiar to Parliament, which we must face with an open mind and a willingness to listen to all the arguments.

Many arguments have been put to hon. Members by interested parties. Here I declare my second interest, in that I represent a constituency where the use of the gun by sportsmen, gamekeepers, farmers and everyone concerned with the land is inextricably linked with the rural way of life. The voice of those people deserves to be heard just as much as the voice of those involved in the enforcement of the law.

There is another irony which perhaps only this House is capable of throwing up. Within the space of 24 hours in this Chamber we will have had a debate on a Firearms (Amendment) Bill, which is designed to preserve life, and another debate on the Abortion (Amendment) Bill, which is designed to protect life. As Members of Parliament we have a great responsibility to respond to our consciences as well as to the views that are put to us.

Much has been said in earlier debates in Parliament and at the time of the publication of the White Paper about the need to achieve a balance between the need to protect the public and the right of the genuine sportsman to use firearms. It is the effectiveness of the legislation rather than its success in striking a balance between conflicting viewpoints that really matters.

The debate has shown that many issues remain to be settled in Committee. I was much encouraged by a conversation with my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary about the willingness of the Government to make improvements. We all look forward with interest to his response to the debate.

Because of the pressure of time I need not go over much of the ground already covered in detail. As to compensation, it is offensive for the Government to say that it will be all right for a weapon which is illegal in this country to be sold into another country. That is indefensible. I hope that as a result of the comments today my right hon. Friend will agree to press for a compensation scheme.

Mention has been made of proper arrangements for visitors. Many visitors from abroad come to my constituency to enjoy their shooting and they bring a great deal of employment and wealth. The proposals in the Bill must not act as a deterrent to them coming here; instead, we must make sure that weapons do not get into the wrong hands.

Guidelines for the police have been discussed at length. Reference has been made to the need to have a proper set of precise directives which will apply uniformly across police forces. Concern has also been expressed about the amount of police time that will be spent on firearms. If I were a young police constable, reacting to the Bill, I would want to know much more clearly and precisely than has so far been apparent just what my powers and duties are. That matter needs to be addressed properly in Committee. Whether it can be done through the formation of an expert advisory committee on the use and control of weapons is another matter to be considered. Certainly no explanation has been put forward so far from the Government as to why such a committee would not be appropriate.

The proposals relating to shotguns also require detailed examination, in particular whether pump-action and self-loading shotguns should be classified as class 1 firearms. I cannot understand the logic of wanting to raise into a much more serious category of certification people who have a pump-action shotgun. It has become very much the vogue to quote correspondence from constituents. I should like to read briefly from a letter which a young constituent wrote to me last week:

> "I recently purchased a Beretta 303 Semi-Automatic which was designed . . . as a special sporting gun . . . they have very little recoil which . . . is why the gun is so favoured by me . . . because of a neck injury sustained by me in an accident 6 years ago. The man that hit me was on a motor-bike and was drunk, and I am left with this serious neck injury. I feel I would like to bring in a law banning motor-bikes!"

Is there not a danger that, in the Bill, we have concentrated our attention too much on the types of weapons and not given enough regard to the person possessing the gun? It is not the gun that kills; it is the person who pulls the trigger.

[Mr. John Greenway]

The editorial of the December issue of the magazine of the Police Federation stated:

"Every year there are dozens, if not hundreds, of incidents, involving the misuse of shotguns by holders of certificates who have satisfied the simple requirements of the law on age and absence of convictions for crime. In many cases, including tragic fatalities, evidence has emerged that such people should never have been allowed to possess a weapon, by virtue of their way of life, including their known temperament, alcoholism, mental state, and so on. The new law appears to leave the situation as it was. It has to be said that the safe keeping of a shotgun in the certificate holder's house is less important than finding some means to ensure that he can safely posseses a shotgun."

For me, the most disappointing comment of the White Paper is in paragraph 44, which states:

"The Government is not attracted at this stage to the option of seeking medical references from qualified practitioners in support of applications for firearm or shotgun certificates."

It goes on to say that

"reference to an applicant's medical record would provide no guarantee against the issue of a certificate to an unsuitable person."

There is no guarantee that the Bill, in its present form, will effectively reduce crime or prevent another Hungerford. We must consider the matter further and it should be reflected in the Bill.

Recently, I spoke to a number of shooters at one of England's famous game shoots at Helmsley in my constituency. I asked them what they felt about the Government's proposed firearms legislation, and they all welcomed its objectives. So do I, but there are many imperfections in the Bill which will need to be addressed in Committee.

9.1 pm

Mr. Graham Riddick (Colne Valley): Like so many other hon. Members who have spoken in this debate, I ought to declare an interest. I am a very keen sporting man and, like many others, enjoy my shooting.

There is a problem when a Government reacts to a specific event. That is what is happening in this case. There is a danger that the resulting legislation will be ill-considered, not to say hasty. When the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) suggested that the Government were simply reacting to the Hungerford tragedy, he was right. If we want to stop incidents such as Hungerford, we should ban all guns. We should also ban all cars and motor bikes because they are probably far more lethal than guns. If an individual goes off his rocker, there is very little one can do to stop it.

I accept one or two proposals in the Bill which strengthen the gun laws, but it is vital that we protect the rights and freedoms of individual people. The shooting fraternity is, in my experience, a law-abiding and responsible group of people. Opposition Back-Benchers must warn their Front Bench colleagues about this point because, at the last debate on this subject on 26 October 1987, the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) introduced the issue of class interest and said:

"guns are owned by one class of people and knives"— he said that we were hitting the knife-owner harder than the gun-owner—

"are feared to be owned by a different class of society".—[Official Report, 26 October 1987; Vol. 121, c. 32.]

The right hon. Gentleman's hon. Friend the Member Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor), a Front Bench spokesman, on the "World at One" on 15 October that she agreed proposals to place sporting shotguns in the same categ as rifles. She said:

"I think that no one should have a gun without very g reason".

Asked whether having a shotgun for sport was a g reason to have a gun permit, she replied:

"to my mind I would want to see more reason than t Certainly I would not allow someone who just wantec shoot birds for sport to hold a gun in their private home. N So I hope that Opposition Back Benchers will make it cl to their Front Bench that this is not a class issue and t millions of people from all sorts of different backgrou participate in, and enjoy, shooting of all types.

I make no apology for discussing the issue compensation, although it has already been wid discussed throughout the debate. Thousands of l abiding citizens have valuable property and own perfectly legally; but they will now have it taken av from them without compensation. None of those peo has committed a crime of any sort. On the contra because they have scrupulously observed the law they probably be in a worse position than the holder of ille arms, who will sell them on the black market.

I know that my right hon. Friend the Home Secret is a keen European. Perhaps he is doing his bit European solidarity and friendship, but I am not s whether the European countries that he believes will be recipients of the newly prohibited weapons will thank h for this part of the Bill. It is monstrous for us to take view that these weapons are too dangerous for people hold in the United Kingdom but that it is perfectly all ri for them to be exported overseas. There is a seric danger, too, that some of the weapons will fall into hands of undesirable people and terrorists. That is serious concern. The Government's refusal to g compensation is fundamentally immoral. It is a lo established right that a citizen's property should not taken away from him without proper compensation.

I was a little discouraged by my right hon. Frien response to my earlier intervention in his speech aski when compensation had been refused in simi circumstances. He mentioned scented erasers. At the tir I was not sure what he was talking about — perha rubbers of some sort. The right hon. Member Sparkbrook mentioned cars. When we made it mandato for car manufacturers to fit seat belts, for example, the c that were already made at the time did not have to ha seat belts fitted, and people were not forced to wear the either. So the owners of those cars suffered no financ loss. Of course there are precedents for compensation. O of my hon. Friends mentioned the sheep farmers who, or last year, received compensation after the disaster Chernobyl. So there are precedents, and I believe that t Government have taken that point on board. It has be made by almost every speaker in the debate.

But it must be absolutely unprecedented that the should be not a single Member of the House from a party prepared to support a Bill put forward by t Government. So I hope that they will take notice of tha

It really is absurd to transfer self-loading and pum action shotguns to section 1. These weapons, because their minimum recoil, are used widely by young peopl elderly people, handicapped people and, not least, wome

Therefore I suppose it could be said that this Bill is sexist as well as everything else. These guns are also considerably cheaper, which I believe is something that we should consider, since this brings shooting to many thousands of people who otherwise might not be able to shoot. I must ask my hon. Friend where the evidence is that criminals have been using weapons of these types to further their criminal pursuits. There is no evidence whatever, as far as I can see.

I realise that I must wind up now so that a response can be given to all the points that have been made, and they are certainly numerous. I must say, however, that the more familiar I have become with the Bill the less happy I have felt over recent days and weeks. Indeed, as I have listened to this debate I have become even more convinced that the Bill is seriously flawed. I shall be able to support it on Second Reading only because I am confident and hopeful that the Government will bring forward serious and numerous amendments at Committee stage. If they do not, I shall certainly find it necessary to vote against the Bill on Third Reading.

The Bill is clearly an ill-considered reaction to an appalling tragedy. The Government have a duty not to alienate and in some cases criminalise perfectly respectable and responsible members of the community.

I hope that my hon. Friend will take all these points on board.

9.12 pm

Mr. Robin Corbett (Birmingham, Erdington): May I first apologise again for the absence of my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) on duties outside the House. He made clear, and I wish to underline, the need for a proper response to the murders at Hungerford and elsewhere. The public expect it and have a right to do so. The presence and the speech of the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson) in this debate remind us of that, should any reminder be needed.

The public concern over the adequacy of the laws to control the possession and use of firearms and shotguns and their full enforcement is entirely justified and I think that the Government have been right to give the House the opportunity to revise them. Indeed, had they not done so there would have been loud complaints from the Opposition, because this is something that we have been urging for a long time, well ahead of the massacre at Hungerford.

I believe that, while recognising and trying to meet public concern, there are two tests against which these proposals must be judged. First, do they win the confidence of the police, who must enforce them? Secondly, do they have the general support of the holders of the present nearly 200,000 firearms certificates and almost 1 million shotgun certificates?

As to the first, I say to the Government that piling yet more duties upon the police, already sorely stretched in the battle against rising crime, is no guarantee of adequate enforcement. If the provisions of this Bill are to be effectively enforced—and if they are not we are wasting our time—the Government need to provide adequate resources. To that extent, I welcome the remarks of the hon. Members for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker), Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) and Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) and other hon. Members. We know now that there are to be an extra 300 police officers only in London in 1988-89 and as few as 500 in the other 42 forces in England and Wales. In the west midlands alone there was a request for an extra 1,000 officers over the next three years. That has been rejected and the chief constable has warned that this can only mean a poorer service to the public. Replacing police officers with civilians is some help, but there can be no proper substitute for a proper number of officers in preventing and combating crime. Certainly, without an adequate number of trained police officers, law enforcement on firearms as on other things will suffer.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) said, the chief constable of Thames Valley police, in his report, said that Michael Ryan applied for a firearms certificate on 10 December 1986, and was given one the next day. I have to question whether that involved proper and full checks. It strikes me that it was an amazing coincidence that at that particular time the necessary clerks, police officers and an assistant chief constable were all readily available to carry out such a process which elsewhere can take weeks rather than hours.

Perhaps in that context the Minister will explain why an application form for a shotgun licence does not ask about the occupation of the applicant, although it requires a counter-signature. When people apply for a firearms certificate, on renewal, they have to say what they do for a living. Perhaps he can also say why, although both forms include the question: "Do you suffer from any mental disorder or defect?", there is no check that has to be made with an applicant's GP. That was mentioned with some force by the hon. Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway), who was a former police officer. I find that astonishing, especially given the judgments which police officers are called upon to make when considering applications.

That is important for applicants and for those seeking renewal. Indeed, it is important during the lifetime of a licence, since mental illness can strike at any time. A GP who had to comment on an original application would then be able to advise the police of any change affecting the applicant's suitability to hold either or both licences. I hope that the Minister will think again about that.

It seems wrong that the handling of applications for either firearms or shotguns should be left to any police officer who happens to be on duty. Surely there is a case for experienced officers in each police station to be designated as firearms officers and allowed to build up experience and expertise in the same way as we have custody officers under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. Similarly, it would be better for the inspection of premises of licensed dealers to be carried out by officers who are familiar with weapons rather than sending the last police officer who walks through the station door to make such inspections.

I am puzzled as to why the Bill does not require dealers to keep a daily, up-to-date inventory of the stocks of weapons and ammunition that they hold. They have to record the sale, but not the number and types of guns and ammunition that they have in stock. That is wrong, and opens the door to theft, which, without proper checking, could go undetected for a long period. I do not mean to be facetious, but if supermarket managers have to check their shelves, how much more important is it that shelves of weapons and boxes of ammunition should be similarly checked?

As for the storage of shotguns, it is admitted that under the present law we do not know how many shotguns the holder of a certificate may have, let alone where he or she keeps them. I suspect that they are sometimes kept in various buildings around the farm or on separate farms some distance apart under the same management or ownership. That must enhance the risk of theft or illegal use.

[Mr. Robin Corbett]

In paragraph 22 of the White Paper, it was noted:

"there is no obligation on him to store his weapons securely when he is not using them. The Government believes that this control is too weak."

In paragraph 23, there was the categorical statement:

"This means that shotgun owners will be under a statutory obligation to keep their shotguns in a secure place when not in actual use."

The shotgun licence application asks no question about where shotguns will be kept, although the firearms application does. Can the Minister confirm that the new rules to be dealt with by statutory instrument will make that mandatory? Can he tell the House why that provision, which is recognised to be important by the Government in their White Paper, is not on the face of the Bill?

Why is it not possible to insist that every firearm and shotgun carries an identification number? I just do not understand it. I am advised that that can be easily achieved at a minimal cost and would be of great value in assisting police in tracking down the source and travel of weapons used illegally in the course of crime.

Why is there no provision for a national register of holders of firearm and shotgun certificates, again to assist the police? It is proposed that applicants should provide two rather than one photograph when applying, although there is no provision, as with passports, to have those endorsed by a responsible person who has known the applicant for some time.

What will happen to the second photograph is not explained. If, as I suspect, they are to be held by the police force issuing the certificate, probably alongside computer records, why cannot the system become a national computer register to give police immediate access to those records in the case of suspected crime? If that is good enough for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre in Swansea, how much stronger is the case for dealing with suspected illegal unauthorised use of firearms? It can be achieved easily, at minimum cost, and would doubtless be welcomed by the police whom we expect to deal with such matters.

Can the Minister confirm that dealers will only be authorised to sell ammunition for the type of weapon covered by the licence? I can think of no legitimate reason for a certificate holder attempting to buy ammunition for a weapon for which no certificate is produced.

The Minister will recall that in our earlier debates the Opposition expressed concern about the mail order trade in firearms and questioned whether that could ever be fully proofed against misuse. Indeed, my right hon. Friend the Member for Halton (Mr. Oakes) mentioned that tonight, along with others.

Incredibly, paragraph 38 of the White Paper makes the astonishing assertion that "there is no evidence that such sales are being used to evade the law."

I do not know how such evidence could be acquired. I appreciate that mail order sales are covered by the same legal restrictions and controls as over-the-counter sales, but surely effective enforcement is more difficult w order where the person attempting to purchase a or weapons is not physically present.

I do not want to weary the House, but I ha advertisements from magazines which make aste reading and should perhaps be referred for prosecution under the Obscene Publications Act. that one order coupon does is to provide a little sp the words:

"I declare that I am over 17 years of age."

Of course, if that is signed by somebody, they must 17, must they not, because nobody ever signs declaration falsely.

Another advertisement does not even go that fa is no space for a signature. All it says is:

"Age declaration required over 17 years."

Another whole page of advertisements for som fearsome looking pump guns and shotguns, afte that our flexible friend and others will be welcom

"Please enclose shotgun certificate when shotguns".

I know that certificates have to be sent with ord at the moment there is no way in which the ma dealer can check that the person who has placed th and enclosed the shotgun certificate is the aut holder of that certificate. Perhaps that is another ar for a national register so that a quick phone ca provide a check that that was the case. It must be that there is at least a risk of the improper use of c for mail order purposes where certificates hav reported stolen or lost or, unknown to the aut holder of the licence, they have simply been borro loaned for the purpose of making an order. It ca unknown in many families for youngsters, impatie their hands on those kinds of weapons, to find ou mother or father keep the licence and, at the very l tempted to use it to purchase weapons by mail or

The debate has been astonishing, although remember what happened last Friday. When a Prime Minister, the right hon. Member for Old Bex Sidcup (Mr. Heath), and many of his hon. Friends hon. Friends have expressed concern over the m compensation for prohibited weapons, I suspect th Minister will tell the House that he is prepared t again. If it is any encouragement to him, I tell him will listen if the Government will.

Mr. Hurd: That is a change.

Mr. Corbett: Labour is listening. The righ Gentleman should watch television more — we listening party now. When my right hon. Frie Member for Sparkbrook opened the debate, he ma his view. I have sympathy with the point that Conse Members are making and I have a suggestion abo it should be dealt with. If the choice were put constituents about taxpayers' money being paid t holding firearms which will become illegal unc legislation or into the Birmingham children's hos ensure that every child who needs heart surgery g the time he or she needs it, there is no question th vote would be to put that money into the National Service. Conservative Members must face up to tha are quite willing to dig their hands into the tax pockets for this purpose, but they will not join w right hon. and hon. Friends on larger and more im purposes.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: That is a totally absurd parallel. Is the hon. Gentleman in favour of nationalisation without compensation?

Mr. Corbett: No, I am not, but that has nothing to do with the debate. It has been estimated that guns to the value of some £50 million could be put at risk by the Bill. These are, as many hon. Members have said, weapons that were bought in good faith and legally and responsibly held by people. I understand the complaints of harshness. We were told during the debate that, perhaps not surprisingly, dealers are trying to take advantage of the position and to offer derisory amounts of cash for weapons which will become illegal. There is a temptation for even a handful of less scrupulous people to bypass authorised dealers and dispose of weapons on the black market.

I have heard a suggestion which may have some attraction for Conservative Members. The Government should pay compensation because, as was said by the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside, there should be no confiscation without compensation. That brings me to the point of where the money will come from. It has been suggested that the money could be paid out of the Treasury and repaid over a period, either by a levy on new or renewed licence applications, so that all legitimate shooters share the cost of the change, or by a levy on the sale of weapons.

Let me repeat that we are faced with a choice about taxpayers' money. Conservative Members have a leader who keeps reading lessons about taxpayers' money. Some £50 million is at stake here and that money could get rid of a lot of the agony and misery presently suffered in the Health Service.

The Minister is aware that I have written to him about people who have private collections of guns. He will know that one of my constituents can trace his family back as far as Napoleon Bonaparte and more recently to the person who developed the Maxim machine gun. He has inherited a collection of antique weapons, many of which are incapable of being fired and he says it is virtually impossible to obtain ammunition for those that can be fired. He is not a member of a gun club and has no interest in shooting. I should have thought that there was a way that weapons held in such private collections could be certificated—perhaps via a proof house such as we have in Birmingham — so that they formed an exempted category. Restrictions on their transport and storage would also seem to be sensible. Perhaps an exemption certificate could disqualify, where necessary, the holder from the purchase of ammunition. I hope that the Minister will write to me about this matter in due course.

There is an enormous amount of concern about the impact that the proposals will have on visitors to this country, especially those who wish to take part in competitions. I believe that we can learn from countries. Spain, for example, operates a system whereby the United Kingdom licence is translated into Spanish by the London embassy for a cost of between £1·50 and £2. A duplicate of that certificate, together with a photograph, is then sent to Madrid. On arrival, the holder presents the authenticated translation and, for the payment of another £4, obtains a licence to take part in competitions in Spain. I refuse to believe that we cannot do something similar. If we do not act, we risk damaging not only competition shooting, but the tourist trade in rural areas that depends heavily on shooting.

I want to be told why the Government chose the route of listing weapons by type and class—this has already been mentioned in the debate. It has been demonstrated that such classification causes confusion and contention. Other countries have acted by prohibiting magazines with more than three shots. Indeed, the hon. Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) described it as one up the spout and two in the magazine. It has already been said that rapidity of fire can be achieved with weapons which, on the face of it, do not look lethal, but which, in practised and experienced hands, can deliver. If we limited the number of bullets that can be carried in a magazine we could achieve what the Bill is seeking to do. An example was given about the need for a second killing shot after a stag has been culled for conservation purposes. A second shot may be needed to drop the stag.

We appreciate the need for a revision of firearms legislation, but we do not believe that there has been adequate consultation with the shooting interests. I hope that the Government will make no attempt to hurry us through the Committee in an attempt to avoid a proper discussion of the proposals. In the course of meeting public concern we must not needlessly restrict the rights of law-abiding shooters or land them with rules and restrictions that are complicated and unworkable. We shall approach the Bill with that attitude and for that reason we shall not divide the House.

9.33 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hogg): I am not certain whether it is necessary for me to declare an interest, but I do so. In common with almost every hon. Member who has spoken—certainly from the Conservative Benches—I have a shotgun certificate. I shoot frequently, although perhaps not as frequently as I would like, and I rather fancy that after this debate I will receive fewer invitations.

When my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary introduced the Bill, he reminded the House of the need to achieve a proper balance between the legitimate interests of the shooting community and the need to provide a proper and sufficient system of firearms control. Both of those considerations are important to us and when we framed our proposals we tried to take them both into account. Our purpose has been to make firearms legislation more effective in its implementation and more reassuring to the public, without imposing on the shooting community restrictions that are unjustified in their objective or unreasonable in their application.

I acknowledge that we have brought our proposals before the House with some dispatch. That was our duty. However, we have consulted widely and shall continue to do so. The pillars of the policy are in place and I hope that they will remain in place. But my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I are not so arrogant as to assume that the Bill is necessarily perfect. [Interruption.] I fancy that that observation is attractive to my hon. Friends. Because we are not arrogant, we shall examine carefully the suggestions and criticisms that will certainly be made during the Bill's passage through Parliament.

Let me say something brief about the official Opposition. It merits only a few brief words. The right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) claimed responsibility for some of the Bill's provisions. He flatters himself. He referred to our discussions of the "good reason" provision on 26 October

[Mr. Douglas Hogg]

1987. On that occasion he called for the full application of section 1 control to shotguns. The Government decided that that was wholly unjustified because under section 1 control the applicant has to establish a good reason in each and every case. That is not what we propose for shotgun applicants.

Moreover, we have taken care to ensure—I shall return to this—that the definition of "good reason" is placed on the face of the Bill to protect the legitimate interests of the shooting community, of which I am a member. Therefore, it is wrong for the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook to claim that he was responsible. Furthermore, in October the right hon. Gentleman said that there should be a justification for each shotgun and said that it should be subject to an individual certificate. Once again, the Government took the view that that was a wholly unjustified proposal.

The Opposition's approach to the matter was well summarised by the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook on 26 October. He said:

"If youths in the inner cities are to be searched for knives, we cannot allow more prosperous adults to hang around country public houses with shotguns in the boots of their cars, or allow ammunition to be carried carelessly and pointlessly from place to place."—[Official Report, 26 October 1987; Vol. 121, c. 33.]

That gives a flavour of the attitude adopted by the Labour party, and it is not good enough.

I said that I would refer briefly to the Labour party's position, because that was all that it merited. I have finished with Opposition Members; I have nothing more to say about them.

Mr. Corbett: But——

Mr. Hogg: No. I have made the position wholly plain and I now propose to deal with the constructive contributions of my hon. Friends.

First, I want to consider the question of compensation. I feel like the boy on the burning deck. All my right hon. and hon. Friends have called for compensation. I clearly understand the force of their arguments. However, I hope that they will understand that we have confronted difficulties of principle and practice. Indeed, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary referred to some of the problems. However, in view of what has been argued so powerfully, we are prepared to look again at the issue of compensation and we will do so against the background of what has been said in the debate. However, I must emphasise the difficulties to which I have already referred.

Mr. Corbett: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Hogg: No, I am afraid I will not.

I now want to deal with many particular points. My first point concerns Ryan. Mr. Ryan has been referred to frequently in the debate and I want to re-emphasise what my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has said. It is not true that Mr. Ryan was given a firearms certificate the day after he applied for it. His application was received at divisional level on 26 November 1986. It was processed and sent to headquarters and the certificate was issued on 10 December.

Mr. Ron Davies rose——

Mr. Onslow: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Hogg: No, I want to finish this point.

With regard to Ryan's possession of unlawfu there is no evidence to show that he possessed a sub-machine gun. There is evidence to suggest a pistol crudely converted from a Belgian However, the evidence suggests that that i weapon that Ryan owned unlawfully.

Mr. Onslow: My hon. Friend will understan has been said about the 24-hour issue of a lice from what was said by the chief constable Valley police in his report to his police comm did that erroneous statement come to be mad

Mr. Hogg: I think that it was made because for compression. We have looked into this m carefully and the account which my right hon.
Home Secretary and I have given to the H account that we believe to be accurate.

Mr. Ron Davies: Will the Minister give way

Mr. Hogg: No.

The procedure took 24 hours at headquarte application was received at divisional level mu

Mr. Ron Davies: Give way.

Mr. Hogg: I have made it perfectly plain t
Gentleman that I do not propose to give way

I now want to consider the question of a which is the subject of the reasoned amendmen Friend the Member for Newbury (Mr. McN rejected that call and I entirely agree with him.
already been an investigation into the relevant not think that anything of particular value discovered. What is more, I am certain that t would cause increased misery to the people of H
I am fortified in my view of that by the support
Friend the Member for Newbury.

Mr. Martyn Jones: Will the Minister give w

Mr. Hogg: I want to consider pump-action self-loading shotguns, because I appreciate that matters of great concern among my right hon
Friends. Anxiety has been expressed by aln
Conservative Member who has spoken in t
There are two justifications for putting large guns in section 1. The first is their increased firep the period of initial discharge.

Mr. Ron Davies: On a point of order, Mr.
can understand that the Minister is not prepa
way to Labour Members wishing to check cer with him, but is it in order for him to igno
Members so completely that he turns his back

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that the Ministe order. I think that he was addressing the Chai

Mr. Hogg: One of the difficulties tha
Members are not facing up to is the need to a Chair. They frequently ignore the Chair, whic not recommend to any hon. Member.

During the initial period of discharge, large guns have a higher rate of fire than the more side-by-side or over-and-under guns. For m activities for which self-loading or pump-actio used, a traditional side-by-side or over-and-un do as well.

I can well understand the argument that advanced by my right hon. and hon. Frien happens if manufacturers bring pump-action or self-loading shotguns on to the market, the magazine of which cannot take more than two cartridges? As a proposition, it would be highly attractive to exempt those guns from the application of section 1.

I can well understand that my right hon. and hon. Friends would also say, "What happens if existing owners of magazine shotguns can have their guns converted in such a way that the magazine cannot hold more than two cartridges and cannot be readily reconverted to a larger magazine?" There is considerable attraction in the proposition that those should be exempted from section 1. There is a problem in ensuring that the conversion is reasonably carried out and that reconversion is not readily possible.

I am giving urgent and careful thought to the ways in which we might be able to achieve that. I cannot give a guarantee, save that I am seriously considering it.

Mr. Riddick: I still do not understand the need to put this category of weapon in section 1. Will my hon. Friend give one instance in which such a weapon has been used in the pursuit of crime?

Mr. Hogg: There is no evidence that they are used more frequently in the pursuit of crime, but there is an increased degree of lethality over the period of discharge. A pump-action shotgun is not necessary for most of the activities that shooting people pursue.

My hon. Friend the Member for Newbury mentioned armour-piercing ammunition. There would be a great deal to be said for what my hon. Friend has suggested if we could do it. The problem is to identify what is meant by armour-piercing in a way that gives itself to a statutory definition. So far, we have been unable to achieve that. There is a residual power in section 1(5) to put certain specified classes of ammunition and guns into section 5.

I appreciate that the discretion of police officers and the meaning of "good reason" cause considerable concern to some of my right hon. and hon. Friends. I have already given the approach that we propose to adopt for shotguns. It is not for the applicant to prove a good reason. A shotgun certificate will issue, subject to the other criteria, unless the chief constable is satisfied that there is not a good reason.

We have put on the face of the Bill a definition of "good reason" which we believe is wide enough to protect the legitimate interests of those constituents whom most of us represent. I do not agree that the last element in the definition of "good reason" has the effect described by the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook. However, I fancy that that is a Committee argument, rather than a Second Reading argument. Incidentally, if hon. Members feel that the definition of "good reason" is not sufficiently wide, that matter can be explored at length in Committee, where it will be seriously considered by my right hon. and hon. Friends.

On the question of the discretion of chief police officers, to which many of my right hon. and hon. Friends referred, notably my right hon. Friends the Members for Woking (Mr. Onslow) and for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Buchanan-Smith) and my hon. Friend the Member for Warwick and Leamington (Sir D. Smith), it is obviously desirable to achieve as much uniformity as possible. However, there are many activities for which total uniformity is not possible—for example, applications for liquor licences. That is one reason why we have put "good reason" on the face of the Bill. However, there is the right to go to court on appeal which, again, will give a degree of uniformity.

My final point in this context relates to guidance. Since 1969, the Home Office has put out a memorandum of guidance, the purpose of which is to achieve a degree of uniformity. The document is not legally binding in itself because, ultimately, it is subject to the courts. However, it is guidance. I recognise that the shooting community would like to be involved in the formulation of what goes in to that guidance. Indeed, that has happened and will happen. In fact, we consulted the shooting interests at considerable length about the contents of a new memorandum of guidance. We shall do so again. When the Bill is enacted, we intend to publish a new memorandum of guidance. Before that is done, we shall consult the shooting interests and we will publish the memorandum.

Mr. Martyn Jones: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Will you confirm that we are discussing my amendment? If so, and as there are only eight minutes left, can I rely on the Minister to give a view of my amendment?

Mr. Speaker: That is correct. The hon. Gentleman's amendment was called.

Mr. Hogg: The amendment was called, and I said that I could not commend an inquiry to the House. I summarised my arguments in about two lines, which is what the amendment deserved.

Mr. Jones: Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hogg: No, I shall not give way—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. It may not be a point of order; it may be a point of disagreement.

Mr. Jones: It is a point of order.

Mr. Hogg: I am not giving way. If it is a point of order, that is one thing; if it is an intervention, that is another. [HON. MEMBERS: "That is for Mr. Speaker."] I am not giving way to an intervention—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hogg: I shall deal briefly with the matter of a consultative committee. I know that it has troubled several of my right hon. and hon. Friends. Although I am not sure that an advisory committee of a non-statutory kind will add to the consultative process, through which we are prepared to operate as it is, I am not wholly hostile to it by any means, and nor is my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. This matter needs consideration and we shall give it serious consideration.

On the question of foreign shooters, which has been raised by several of my right hon. and hon. Friends, for example, by my hon. Friend the Member for Windsor and Maidenhead (Dr. Glyn), we agree entirely that it is right that people who want to come to shoot in this country should be able to do so. We have set out a regime in the Bill—I think it is clauses 12 and 13—which we believe will enable them to do so without unreasonable restrictions, but with reasonable restrictions still being imposed.

A balance must be struck. If my right hon. and hon. Friends feel that the balance has not been struck correctly, the Committee is a way to explore the matter further. However, I think that we have got the balance broadly right.

[Mr. Hogg]

Mr. Hardy: The Minister has mentioned facilitating arrangements for foreign visitors. Would a foreign visitor be required to have a licence? Secondly, will the Minister confirm that the certificates will continue to be a self-financing exercise? Will his right hon. and hon. Friends be pleased with the deluge of complaints when the licence goes up so substantially?

Mr. Hogg: In answer to the hon. Gentleman's first question, the provisions on visitors' licences are clearly set out in the Bill, and I recommend that he read it. On the question of licence fees, we intend that the shooting interests should be fully consulted, and that they should play a part in a working party. However, we anticipate that the costs incurred in the licensing regime will be recoverable.

We intend to require shotgun owners to keep their guns in a secure place. I cannot say that I regard that as wrong; it is something that I do myself, and I hope that everyone would do the same. However, I recognise that there are difficulties when people transport their guns from the place where they keep them to the place where they use, repair or even wish to sell them.

That is precisely the kind of question that we can resolve in discussion—first with the shooting community and secondly in Committee — and that is what we propose to do. For today's purposes, our proposal is that we should have powers to require a gun of that kind to be kept in a secure place.

Mrs. Ann Taylor (Dewsbury): Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Hogg: I am afraid not. I am running out of time.

Mrs. Taylor rose——

Mr. Hogg: I am afraid not. I am running out of time.

Mrs. Taylor rose——

Mr. Hogg: I am becoming very repetitive. I am afraid not; I am running out of time.

My hon. Friend the Member for Gloucestershire, West (Mr. Marland) referred to the power under clause 1(5) of the Bill to put other weapons into section 5 control. The justification for that residual power is the risk that some manufacturers will put on to the market a gun designed to be outwith section 5. For example, a paramilitary shotgun with a barrel measuring less than 24m will be controlled by section 5 if the Bill is carried. But if the barrel was extended, it would not be so controlled. It could never be a sporting weapon, but the manufacturer would have designed his way out of the restriction. That is not satisfactory, and we wish to take reserve powers to deal with it. The question is whether we should qualify those reserve powers.

I can well understand the argument being put by my right hon. and hon. Friends, that a Labour Government might behave unreasonably: I am sure that they would, if they ever returned to power. I am advised that the Bill would not lend itself to that, but I will look again at whatever the powers should be restricted to, for example, fast-firing guns, which would, I think, go a long way to meet points made in the debate.

Several of my right hon. and hon. Friends to deactivation, and I understand their point considering the possibility of finding a way, bureaucracy, of certifying that a gun was tru — that is, that it could not readily be firing state.

I appreciate that there are many points t answered—[Interruption.] I feared that tha reaction—but I mean no discourtesy to h Time, not discourtesy, is the cause. I shall m we are in the business of trying to impr legislation without imposing undue Inevitably, that is a question of judgment cases, or of striking a balance.

We are not so arrogant as to assume necessarily got it entirely right. We hope tha the policy will stand, and, on the basis that a fair and reasonable assessment of what nee but with a willingness to re-examine so Committee, I commend the Bill to the Hou

Question put, That the amendment be m

The House divided: Ayes 55, Noes 185.

Division 148]

AYES

Armstrong, Ms Hilary
Barnes, Harry (Derbyshire NE)
Battle, John
Beggs, Roy
Bennett, A. F. (D'nt'n & R'dish)
Buchan, Norman
Callaghan, Jim
Campbell, Ron (Blyth Valley)
Cummings, J.
Davies, Ron (Caerphilly)
Dixon, Don
Dunnachie, James
Eastham, Ken
Evans, John (St Helens N)
Ewing, Mrs Margaret (Moray)
Flannery, Martin
Flynn, Paul
Forsythe, Clifford (Antrim S)
Golding, Mrs Llin
Hardy, Peter
Haynes, Frank
Howarth, George (Knowsley N)
Hoyle, Doug
Hughes, John (Coventry NE)
Illsley, Eric
Jones, Ieuan (Ynys Môn)
Kilfedder, James
Lamond, James
Macdonald, Calum
McKay, Allen (Penistone)
McLeish, Henry
Madden, Max
Mahon, Mrs Alic
Martlew, Eric
Meale, Alan
Molyneaux, Rt H
Morgan, Rhodri
Morley, Elliott
Mowlam, Marjor
Nellist, Dave
Patchett, Terry
Pike, Peter
Powell, Ray (Og
Primarolo, Ms D
Redmond, Martin
Ross, William (L
Salmond, Alex
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, Andrew (
Steinberg, Gerald
Thomas, Dafydd
Walker, A. Cecil Welsh, Andrew (
Wigley, Dafydd
Williams, Alan W

Tellers for the Ay
Mr. Martyn Jo
Mr. Bob Cryer

NOES

Alexander, Richard
Alison, Rt Hon Michael
Allason, Rupert
Amess, David
Amos, Alan
Arbuthnot, James
Arnold, Jacques (Gravesham)
Arnold, Tom (Hazel Grove)
Ashby, David
Ashdown, Paddy
Aspinwall, Jack
Baker, Rt Hon K. (Mole Valley)
Baker, Nicholas (Dorset N)
Baldry, Tony
Batiste, Spencer
Beith, A. J.
Bellingham, Henry
Bennett, Nicholas (Pembroke)
Benyon, W.
Bevan, David Gil
Boscawen, Hon
Boswell, Tim
Bottomley, Peter
Bowden, A (Brig
Bowis, John
Braine, Rt Hon S
Brazier, Julian
Bright, Graham
Brooke, Rt Hon Brown, Michael ( Browne, John (W
Bruce, Ian (Dors Bruce, Malcolm (
Buchanan-Smith,
Budgen, Nicholas
Burns, Simon

Burt, Alistair
Butcher, John
Butterfill, John
Campbell, Menzies (Fife NE)
Carlile, Alex (Mont'g)
Carrington, Matthew
Carttiss, Michael
Clarke, Rt Hon K. (Rushcliffe)
Colvin, Michael
Coombs, Anthony (Wyre F'rest)
Coombs, Simon (Swindon)
Cormack, Patrick
Currie, Mrs Edwina
Davis, David (Boothferry)
Day, Stephen
Dorrell, Stephen
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord James
Dunn, Bob
Durant, Tony
Fookes, Miss Janet
Forman, Nigel
Forsyth, Michael (Stirling)
Galbraith, Samuel
Garel-Jones, Tristan
Goodhart, Sir Philip
Greenway, John (Rydale)
Ground, Patrick
Grylls, Michael
Hamilton, Hon A. (Epsom)
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hampson, Dr Keith
Hanley, Jeremy
Hargreaves, A. (B'ham H'll Gr')
Harris, David
Haselhurst, Alan
Hawkins, Christopher
Hayward, Robert
Heath, Rt Hon Edward
Heathcoat-Amory, David
Hicks, Mrs Maureen (Wolv' NE)
Hogg, Hon Douglas (Gr'th'm)
Howarth, Alan (Strat'd-on-A)
Howarth, G. (Cannock & B'wd)
Howell, Ralph (North Norfolk)
Howells, Geraint
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunter, Andrew
Hurd, Rt Hon Douglas
Irvine, Michael
Jack, Michael
Jackson, Robert
Janman, Timothy
Johnson Smith, Sir Geoffrey
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert B (Herts W)
Kennedy, Charles
Key, Robert
King, Rt Hon Tom (Bridgwater)
Kirkwood, Archy
Knapman, Roger
Knowles, Michael
Lang, Ian
Lawrence, Ivan
Leigh, Edward (Gainsbor'gh)
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lord, Michael
Lyell, Sir Nicholas
Macfarlane, Sir Neil
MacKay, Andrew (E Berkshire)
Maclean, David
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, M. (Newbury)
Major, Rt Hon John
Malins, Humfrey
Mans, Keith
Marland, Paul
Marshall, John (Hendon S)
Martin, David (Portsmouth S)
Maxwell-Hyslop, Robin
Meyer, Sir Anthony
Michie, Mrs Ray (Arg'l & Bute)
Miller, Hal
Mitchell, Andrew (Gedling)
Mitchell, David (Hants NW)
Morris, M (N'hampton S)
Moss, Malcolm
Needham, Richard
Neubert, Michael
Newton, Rt Hon Tony
Nicholls, Patrick
Nicholson, David (Taunton)
Nicholson, Miss E. (Devon W)
Onslow, Rt Hon Cranley
Page, Richard
Paice, James
Patnick, Irvine
Pawsey, James
Peacock, Mrs Elizabeth
Porter, David (Waveney)
Portillo, Michael
Raffan, Keith
Redwood, John
Renton, Tim
Rhodes James, Robert
Rhys Williams, Sir Brandon
Riddick, Graham
Roe, Mrs Marion
Rowe, Andrew
Ryder, Richard
Sayeed, Jonathan
Shaw, David (Dover)
Shephard, Mrs G. (Norfolk SW)
Shepherd, Colin (Hereford)
Sims, Roger
Smith, Sir Dudley (Warwick)
Speller, Tony
Squire, Robin
Stanbrook, Ivor
Steel, Rt Hon David
Stern, Michael
Stevens, Lewis
Stewart, Andrew (Sherwood)
Stradling Thomas, Sir John
Summerson, Hugo
Taylor, Ian (Esher)
Taylor, Matthew (Truro)
Taylor, Teddy (S'end E)
Thompson, D. (Calder Valle Thompson, Patrick (Norwich
Thorne, Neil
Thurnham, Peter
Townend, John (Bridlington)
Tracey, Richard
Twinn, Dr Ian
Waddington, Rt Hon David
Wakeham, Rt Hon John
Walden, George
Wallace, James
Waller, Gary
Ward, John
Wells, Bowen
Wheeler, John
Widdecombe, Miss Ann
Wiggin, Jerry
Wilkinson, John
Wilshire, David
Wood, Timothy
Yeo, Tim

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Mark Lennox-Boyd
Mr. David Lightbown.

Question accordingly negatived.

Main Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read a Second time, and committed to a Standing Committee pursuant to Standing Order No. (Committal of Bills).

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at this day's sitting, The Duchy of Lancaster may be proceeded with, though opposed, until any hou

[Mr. Maclean.]

Firearms (Amendment) Bill [Money]

Queens Recommendation having been signified—
Motion made, and Question proposed,

That, for the purposes of any Act resulting from the Firearms (Amendment) Bill, it is expedient to authorise—

(a) the payment out of money provided by Parliament of any administrative expenses incurred by the Secretary of State in consequence of that Act; and

(b) the payment into the Consolidated Fund of any sums received under that Act by the Secretary of State.—[Mr. Douglas Hogg.]

10.12 pm

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): Money resolutions tend to go through the House rather too easily. I suspect that the money involved in this Bill is not great, but we have had no explanation of how much is involved. The Minister said that the intended costs of the licensing regime will be covered. That shows that there will be some sort of increase in the licensing fee. In addition, we should be interested to know what calculations have been made, because the people interested in shooting as a sport are reasonably entitled to know what the new regime will cost.

Secondly, the legislation places more duties on the police. There is an extension of the licensing system, and the Government have argued that that has been introduced—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will hon. Members who are standing beyond the Bar kindly be quiet?

Mr. Cryer: No one would object to an improved and safer regime. The questions that have been raised tonight are whether the Government have acted over-hastily and whether they have planned for and calculated the effects of their legislation. I should have thought that, when planning the legislation, they would have had some consequential notion of the increased load on the police. For instance, chief constables will provide scrutiny of people who engage in trade as firearms dealers, under clause 9. They will have to decide whether a person engages in a substantial way. That involves work and that will not be carried out by the chief officer of police; it will be delegated. The police will be required to scrutinise more people for firearms certificates. I do not suppose that any hon. Member would object to that, provided that it is recognised that this is going to produce a higher standard of safety, because that is the whole point and purpose of the Bill.

What sort of increase in police time is this going to cause? Clause 11(5), for example, gives extra powers to police constables in relation to entering premises occupied or used by a club approved under this clause.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. I must remind the hon. Gentleman that the money resolution is comparatively narrow. He is now going rather wider than that. It deals with the administrative expenses of the Secretary of State under clause 11 and payments into the Consolidated Fund of any fees received by the Secretary of State. The debate must be restricted to those provisions, which are what the money resolution involves.

Mr. Cryer: That is precisely my point, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am making the point that, first, there are going to be increased administrative expenses. That is precisely the point that I made about the work of the chief constables, because they are going to be carrying out the administration of this legislation——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sor
hon. Gentleman again. This issue Administrative expenses are covered by t money resolution.

Mr. Cryer: I am naturally grateful f
Mr. Deputy Speaker.

None the less, there are going to licensing fees, and all we have had so fa Minister is an indication that the cost regime will be recovered. That is his int the area covered by the money resolutio Minister the opportunity to elaborat resolution, which consists of about half a relevant clause and on the Order Pape assure us that the planning behind th indeed been done and that the admini covered by the money resolution are Government in relation to the propose
If there are going to be any increases i
House should be told about them.

If, in the course of his reply, the Minis
the additional costs to the police, becau
the Home Office, that would be of adva

10.18 pm

Mr. Edward Heath (Old Bexley a Second Reading some of my right hon.
and I asked about compensation for thos are now made illegal under this Bill. M Minister is this: if his right hon. Fr
Secretary and the Chancellor of the Exch conclusion that compensation should included in the definition of "adminstrative expenses incurred by the S
If it is not an administrative expense have thought from my experience that difficult to define it as an administrati will it be covered by Her Majesty's Gov

10.19 pm

Mrs. Ann Taylor (Dewsbury): I was speak in this debate until I heard the Mi
I wish to raise the point raised by the ri for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) that the Minister made certain statemen up speech which are very significant and for the money resolution attached to th

As it is written, the money resol expenditure on increased police resources will be offset by increased income from f for the expenditure incurred by the Sec connection with the approval of clubs museums, which will also be offset approvals and licences. There is no menti extra money being made available compensation scheme that the Minister willing to look at, and half indicated he w
hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham Corbett) outlined how a self-fundin scheme could be produced. The Minister relied entirely on vague promises to Co
Benchers about his own compensati Minister may have conned some of his voting with him, but he owes it to the explain whether the financial resolu possibility of compensation.

10.21 pm

Mr. William Ross (Londonderry, East): The previous two speakers raised the question of compensation. Whatever the Minister said in his winding-up speech, he made it perfectly clear that the Government were prepared to look at the Bill in great detail in Committee. From that I assume that we will be able to consider that matter in depth in Committee, including the amount of money that will be needed.

If hon. Members will cast their minds back to the proceedings on the Shops Bill, they will recall that a large number of amendments were tabled, and the Home Secretary gave an undertaking that the Bill would not be guillotined. Will the Home Secretary give a similar undertaking so that the Bill can be properly explored and made into a real vehicle to improve the firearms legislation?

10.22 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hogg): Three points have been raised. The first was raised by the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer). It is nice to see the hon. Gentleman in the debate, but it is a pity that he could not spare a few minutes of his time during Second Reading.

Mr. Cryer: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The Minister is rather ignorant and rather arrogant. He failed to notice that I was present during most of the opening speech by the Home Secretary. Hansard will show that I received a courteous response from the Home Secretary to my intervention. Unfortunately, I must confess that I also heard the appalling speech made by the Under-Secretary.

Mr. Hogg: That means that the hon. Gentleman was here for about 40 minutes and that he was not here for about five hours and 30 minutes. That is not a particularly constructive approach to the debate.

As for the hon. Gentleman's question, the answer is fairly well summarised in the explanatory memorandum. He raised the point about the working party and firearms fees. It is perfectly true that it is intended that the cost of implementing the scheme shall be largely recoverable. We intend to discuss the level of the fees with the shooting interests. Before embarking on those consultations, it would be unwise of me to pluck a particular figure out of the air. However, the hon. Gentleman will be aware of the existing fees.

Turning to the point raised by my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) and the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor), as the Home Secretary and I said during the debate, there are considerable difficulties of principle and practice in the way of a compensation scheme. We said that we will go away and look again at those difficulties and see if we can find a way through them. Until we have decided the principle of compensation, and its precise form, it is not possible exactly to identify the source of the money. Therefore, with the greatest respect to my right hon. Friend, I cannot answer his question, because we must first decide the policy. The same response applies to the hon. Lady.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Is the money resolution adequate to allow for the type of compensation scheme that he would consider? After all, what is the point of considering a compensation scheme in the context of the Bi money resolution is not sufficient to cover a scheme? What does he intend to do if there are costs and the money resolution is inadequate them? What will be his proposals in Committee?

Mr. Hogg: Our proposal will be to put our order. First, we must determine the policy. On th my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I ha our position plain. We have not come to the Hou with a compensation policy. I accept that my ri Friend has said that we shall look again at the is must determine that fundamental question o before I can answer the wholly relevant and question of my right hon. Friend the Member Bexley and Sidcup. I cannot respond until the p been determined. Therefore, I hope that my ri Friend and the hon. Member for Dewsbu understand that I cannot answer in precise f questions that they have posed.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I am not asking the Ministe precise cost of any compensation scheme. I am ask he is considering the compensation scheme if it be allowable under the money resolution.

Mr. Hogg: If there is a problem, we shall hav our house in order in one way or another. That do if we determine the policy in the way that, for my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Be Sidcup has commended that we should.

10.26 pm

Mr. Ron Davies (Caerphilly): I do not know my questions can be answered by the Minister or you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, will have to guide understand it, we are about to determine wh approve the money resolution, which will auth payment of any expenditure arising from the imp tion of the Bill.

If I understood his remarks properly, the Mi his winding-up speech, gave a fairly broad hint hon. Members who had raised the matter of comp that that would be looked at sympatheticall understand it, a nod is as good as a wink.

I have looked again at the Bill and there is no of compensation in its long title. There is cert clause which will allow the question of compen be raised. Therefore, unless the Government i table a new clause or to introduce new princip Bill, they would not be empowered under the money resolution to incur expenditure on comp

If that is the case, can you, Mr. Deputy Speak appropriate, the Minister, confirm that if the resolution and Bill are accepted, the Governmen prevented from introducing any further me Committee or subsequently allowing any compe

10.27 pm

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South) listened only to the end of the debate and say no m this. It occurs to me that if the long title does no terms of compensation, there is no way in which brought into the Act. Therefore, the Minister is, ways, misleading the House by saying that he wi the principle again. If that is not within the lon cannot be within the Act.

[Mr. Gerald Bermingham]

That leads me to my second point. I declare an interest, having a shotgun or two. If the Government have to pay compensation, on what basis will they do so? Will it be upon the basis existing before the Act or after the Act? If it is on the basis before the Act, compensation will be small. After the Act—[Interruption.] I realise that I may be going outside the terms of the debate, so I return to my original point. Are we being misled by the Minister? Perhaps you can advise us, Mr. Deputy Speaker. If the long title does not contain any reference to compensation, any assurance that the Minister gives us has no meaning.

10.28 pm

Mr. James Molyneaux (Lagan Valley): I too feel that we must have some fairly clear guidance before we can agree to the money resolution. With great respect, the Minister has not replied specifically to the point that has been made about compensation. It would seem from what the Minister has said that if he and the Home Secretary agree to accept the principle of compensation, the logic would be that they would have to return with another money resolution.

Mr. Cryer: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. During my remarks you intervened and said that the money resolution was very narrow and related only to administrative expenses of the Bill. As a consequence, I decided to ignore compensation, as you had helped and guided me in the matter, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and I always follow your guidance very gratefully. Does it follow from what you said about the very narrow resolution that compensation cannot arise under the Bill because it is not an administrative expense?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not quite as simple as that. The hon. Members who followed used their normal skill and linked the remarks on compensation to administrative expenses, so that was just — but I stress only just — within the bounds of order. Before I call another hon. Gentleman to speak, I say that the money resolution is narrow and we must stick to its terms.

Mr. Cryer: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. You are saying that the administration of a compensation scheme might be within the terms of the Bill, but not the compensation money. That would render any compensation proposal by the Minister completely void and meaningless, because the Government would only be able to push about bits of paper on compensation, but could not give any compensation at all. That is how I understand the gist of your remarks, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is a matter for argument; it is not a matter of order for the Chair.

Mr. John Evans (St. Helens, North): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Will you reconsider your last remark, as all resolutions passed by the House are absolutely binding on the Committee that will consider the legislation? There are no circumstances in which the Committee, whether by Government or Opposition amendment, could move outside the terms of the money resolution. Does it not seem odd that the Minister has told the House that the Government intend to bring in some form of compensation scheme, but not make any provision for compensation in the Bill?

I ask the Home Secretary whethe under the money resolution before th be able to introduce any amendment Committee which could give effect scheme. Is it not remarkable that we after the Second Reading debate whic principles in the Bill, with the Home come to the Floor of the House and resolution to the House before he ca a grave dereliction on his part that, u no hon. Members will be able to Committee about a compensation s
Chairman of the Committee will rule a out of order, as the Committee will be money resolution? This is a remark remarkable Bill.

Surely the Home Secretary has don House by bringing forward such a resolution. He should have come p provision in the long title to ensure th produce a compensation scheme, it modated without having to return t
House.

Mr. Ron Davies: On a point of Speaker. I seek your advice, because th importance. The Second Reading of th largely on the ground that the undertaking to look seriously at understand that, in the light of th Government got their majority on the
it is the case——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This order. The hon. Gentleman has made cannot make a second speech on the n
he has a point of order, it must be a
I can deal with.

Mr. Davies: It is. I ask you to bear w
Speaker. If the money resolution is Second Reading be null and void and w have to reintroduce new legislation resolution?

Mr. Douglas Hogg: With permis
Speaker, I will seek to answer the p troubling right hon. and hon. Membe

First, we must determine the policy Right hon. and hon. Members who ha the debate know the Government's have determined that question we shall House, one way or another, with our c time we shall have to ensure that there for the money, whether it is done by a or by money resolution. It is evident th do that. There is no way that we shall with a compensation scheme that we decide to commend a compensation p we shall make arrangements to ensure funded.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Will the Ministe change to allow compensation can Committee—as he earlier implied to unless there is a change in the money r my hon. Friends and myself will be incli the money resolution if it is inadequa implied earlier by the Minister.

he is aware that House he will not or new clauses in a compensation
all be faced, just has agreed to the cretary having to ut a new money proceed? Is it not ess that happens,
ble anything in eme because the such amendments
und tightly by the le situation in a disservice to the appalling money

pared and made
, if he desired to ould be accom-
the Floor of the

der, Mr. Deputy matter is of grave
Bill was accepted
inister gave an compensation. I assurance, the cond Reading. If not a point of is speech and he ney resolution. If

int of order that

me, Mr. Deputy efeated, will the
the Government
d a new money

on, Mr. Deputy t that is clearly

n compensation.
been present for sition. When we ve to come to the clusions. At that s sufficient cover x gratia payment
we shall have to me to the House
nnot fund. If we cy to the House,
hat it is properly

confirm that the ot be made in
hon. Friends—olution? Some of d to vote against for the purpose

Mr. Hogg: I cannot confirm that. Clearly this is an extremely technical matter, upon which myself and others will require advice, because it goes to the root of the proceedings of a Committee. I would be astonished if the Committee did not have ample opportunity to discuss the question of compensation.

Mr. John Evans rose——

Mr. Hogg: I will just finish this point and then I will give way.

No Conservative Member will stand on the technicalities so as to frustrate the efforts of hon. Members to discuss the question of compensation.

Mr. Evans: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Will you confirm that the Committee will be unable to discuss any compensation scheme because there is no clause in the Bill that mentions any such scheme? Therefore, no amendment may be tabled referring to it. The Minister is either wittingly or unwittingly deceiving the House or himself. The Committee will simply be unable to discuss a compensation scheme because there are no terms on which to hang it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is a matter for the Committee, not for me now.

Mr. Heath: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I understand full well why my hon. Friend cannot give a precise answer at this stage to the question that I posed. I welcome the assurance that he has given to the House that should the Government reach the conclusion that compensation, in some way or other, should be paid, they will take the necessary steps, with the House, to finance that decision. I welcome that assurance and I hope that the House will accept it as such.

Mr. Frank Dobson (Holborn and St. Pancras): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. A considerable number of my right and hon. Friends have supported the Bill, in principle, throughout and did not vote against it tonight. They heard assurances from the Minister of State——

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Parliamentary Under-Secretary.

Mr. Dobson: I am sorry that I have over-promoted the old Etonian hon. Gentleman and I duly apologise to whoever I have offended.

The Parliamentary Secretary——

Mr. Hogg: The Parliamentary Under-Secretary.

Mr. Dobson: Worse still, I apologise. The Parliamentary Under-Secretary gave undertakings that a compensation scheme would be considered. A considerable number of my hon. Friends and, I have no doubt, Conservative Members accepted those undertakings in the belief that, as in the usual way, it would be possible for the Committee to consider and deliberate on a compensation scheme. We now understand that it is impossible for the Committee to deliberate on such a scheme because of a shortcoming in the money resolution.

Before this matter is put to the vote we seek your guidance, Mr. Deputy Speaker, on whether it is true that the Committee will be unable to consider amendments or new clauses in relation to a compensation scheme without the prior passing of a different money resolution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As I have just said, it is not for me to say what will be in order in Committee. That will be a matter for the Committee when it eventu
I am sorry but I cannot help the hon. Gentlem stage.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Further to that point of Deputy Speaker. It is within your remit to co suspicions about the money resolution. Is it not even if the Committee could discuss compens money resolution as it stands does not allo funding of a compensation scheme? That is the we are discussing. The money resolution is ina deal with the question of payment of compe which the Under-Secretary used to persuade s
hon. Friends to vote with him this evening. E Committee can discuss compensation, the G will not be able to pay out compensation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg With the permission of t
Mr. Deputy Speaker, there are many thing Government can do in an ex gratia way. If we make compensation available, it must be funde think that compensation need necessarily be pr in the money resolution. It could be part of a scheme. If that is what we decide to do, the r simply have to be made available.

Mr. Cryer: Does the Minister agree——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon.
raising a point of order? He cannot make anot on the money resolution.

Mr. Cryer: On a point of order, Mr. Deput
The Minister said, "With the permission of the assume, therefore, that the House has given th permission to speak a third or fourth time. Coul confirm that when the Bill emerges from Comm be subject, in the usual way, to amendments o
Will the usual rules apply on Report? You sa cannot comment on the Committee stage, bu comment on the position on Report? Will the the same—that is to say, that the money res drafted will not allow for the introduct compensation scheme?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman a long way ahead. I have already made it cl House that it is not for me to say what will be Committee. Until the Bill has had its Commi amendments to the Bill on Report ar hypothetical. We should conclude our proceedi money resolution.

Question put:—

The House divided: Ayes 158, Noes 37.

Division 148]

AYES

Alexander, Richard	Bennett, Nicholas (I
Allison, Rt Hon Michael	Benyon, W.
Allason, Rupert	Bevan, David Gilroy
Amess, David	Boscawen, Hon Rob
Amos, Alan	Boswell, Tim
Arbuthnot, James	Bottomley, Peter
Arnold, Jacques (Gravesham)	Bowden, A (Brighto
Ashby, David	Bowis, John
Ashdown, Paddy	Braine, Rt Hon Sir I
Baker, Rt Hon K. (Mole Valley)	Brazier, Julian
Baker, Nicholas (Dorset N)	Bright, Graham
Baldry, Tony	Brooke, Rt Hon Pet
Batiste, Spencer	Brown, Michael (Br
Beith, A. J.	Browne, John (Win

Bruce, Ian (Dorset South)
Buchanan-Smith, Rt Hon Alick
Burns, Simon
Burt, Alistair
Butcher, John
Butterfill, John
Campbell, Menzies (Fife NE)
Carlile, Alex (Mont'g)
Carrington, Matthew
Carttiss, Michael
Clarke, Rt Hon K. (Rushcliffe)
Coombs, Anthony (Wyre F'rest)
Coombs, Simon (Swindon)
Currie, Mrs Edwina
Davis, David (Boothferry)
Day, Stephen
Dunn, Bob
Durant, Tony
Fookes, Miss Janet
Forman, Nigel
Gale, Roger
Garel-Jones, Tristan
Greenway, John (Rydale)
Ground, Patrick
Grylls, Michael
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hampson, Dr Keith
Hanley, Jeremy
Hargreaves, A. (B'ham H'll Gr')
Harris, David
Haselhurst, Alan
Hawkins, Christopher
Hayward, Robert
Heath, Rt Hon Edward
Heathcoat-Amory, David
Hicks, Mrs Maureen (Wolv' NE)
Hogg, Hon Douglas (Gr'th'm)
Howarth, G. (Cannock & B'wd)
Howell, Ralph (North Norfolk)
Howells, Geraint
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunter, Andrew
Hurd, Rt Hon Douglas
Irvine, Michael
Jack, Michael
Jackson, Robert
Janman, Timothy
Johnson Smith, Sir Geoffrey
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert B (Herts W)
Key, Robert
King, Rt Hon Tom (Bridgwater)
Kirkwood, Archy
Knapman, Roger
Knowles, Michael
Lang, Ian
Lawrence, Ivan
Lennox-Boyd, Hon Mark
Lester, Jim (Broxtowe)
Lightbown, David
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lord, Michael
Lyell, Sir Nicholas
MacKay, Andrew (E Berkshire)
Maclean, David
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, M. (Newbury)
Major, Rt Hon John
Malins, Humfrey
Marshall, John (Hendon S)
Martin, David (Portsmouth S)
Maxwell-Hyslop, Robin
Miller, Hal
Mitchell, Andrew (Gedling)
Mitchell, David (Hants NW)
Moss, Malcolm
Needham, Richard
Neubert, Michael
Newton, Rt Hon Tony
Nicholls, Patrick
Nicholson, David (Taunton)
Nicholson, Miss E. (Devon W)
Paice, James
Patnick, Irvine
Pawsey, James
Peacock, Mrs Elizabeth
Porter, David (Waveney)
Portillo, Michael
Redwood, John
Renton, Tim
Rhodes James, Robert
Rhys Williams, Sir Brandon
Riddick, Graham
Roe, Mrs Marion
Rowe, Andrew
Ryder, Richard
Sayeed, Jonathan
Shaw, David (Dover)
Shephard, Mrs G. (Norfolk SW)
Shepherd, Colin (Hereford)
Sims, Roger
Smith, Sir Dudley (Warwick)
Speller, Tony
Squire, Robin
Stanbrook, Ivor
Steel, Rt Hon David
Stern, Michael
Stevens, Lewis
Stewart, Andrew (Sherwood)
Stradling Thomas, Sir John
Summerson, Hugo
Taylor, John M (Solihull)
Taylor, Matthew (Truro)
Thompson, D. (Calder Valley)
Thompson, Patrick (Norwich N)
Thorne, Neil
Thurnham, Peter
Tracey, Richard
Twinn, Dr Ian
Waddington, Rt Hon David
Walden, George
Ward, John
Wheeler, John
Widdecombe, Miss Ann
Wiggin, Jerry
Wilkinson, John
Wilshire, David
Wood, Timothy
Yeo, Tim

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Alan Howarth and
Mr. Stephen Dorrell.

NOES

Beggs, Roy
Boyes, Roland
Callaghan, Jim
Clwyd, Mrs Ann
Corbett, Robin
Davies, Ron (Caerphilly)
Dewar, Donald
Dixon, Don
Dobson, Frank
Eastham, Ken
Evans, John (St Helens N)
Flynn, Paul
Forsythe, Clifford (Antrim S)
Foulkes, George
Galbraith, Samuel
Golding, Mrs Llin
Haynes, Frank
Howarth, George (Knowsley N)
Jones, Ieuan (Ynys Môn)
Kilfedder, James
Lamond, James
McKay, Allen (Penistone)
Madden, Max
Martlew, Eric
Maxton, John
Molyneaux, Rt Hon James
Nellist, Dave
Powell, Ray (Ogmore)
Randall, Stuart
Ross, William (Londonderry E)
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, Andrew (Oxford E)
Steinberg, Gerald
Taylor, Mrs Ann (Dewsbury)
Walker, A. Cecil (Belfast N)
Wigley, Dafydd
Williams, Alan W. (Carm'then)

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Bob Cryer and
Mr. Gerald Bermingham.

Resolved,

That, for the purposes of any Act resulting from the Firearms (Amendment) Bill, it is expedient to authorise—

(a) the payment out of money provided by Parliament of any administrative expenses incurred by the Secretary of State in consequence of that Act; and

(b) the payment into of the Consolidated Fund of any sums received under that Act by the Secretary of State.

Duchy of Lancaster Bill

Not amended (in the Standing Committee), considered.

New Clause 1

LEASES FOR MILITARY PURPOSES

'Any lease of land for military purposes to a Secretary of State shall cease to have effect if the land ceases to be used for military purposes.'.—[Mr. Dobson.]

Brought up, and read the First time.

10.54 pm

Mr. Frank Dobson (Holborn and St. Pancras): I beg to move, That the clause be read a Second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): With this it will be convenient to take the following amendments: No. 5, in page 1, line 14, at end insert—

'(2C) No land or property within a national park shall be leased by the Chancellor and Council of the Duchy of Lancaster for military purposes to a Secretary of State for more than 21 years and the lease shall cease to have effect if the land ceases to be used for military purposes.'.

No. 7, in schedule 2, page 2, leave out lines 8 to 11.

Mr. Dobson: New clause 1 and amendments Nos. 5 and 7 refer to what might be described as military use of Duchy of Lancaster land. At present, the use of land belonging to the Duchy of Lancaster is restricted by the provisions of the Military Lands Act 1892. That restricts the capacity of the Duchy of Lancaster and the Duchy of Cornwall to grant leases for military purposes to a maximum period of 21 years. That section in the Military Lands Act also requires such a lease to cease if the land is no longer to be used for military purposes. Our Victorian predecessors obviously anticipated what might be described as the Crichel Down principle, as long ago as 1892. The Bill would provide for no restrictions whatever on the capacity of the Duchy of Lancaster to lease land for military purposes.

On Second Reading, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster claimed that there was a need to lift the restrictions that generally applied to leases granted by the Duchy, because developers would not be willing to take a lease of Duchy land for as little as 99 years because they would not be able to obtain the funds on the market for an invesment on that basis. One may think it strange that the sharks in the City, who are trying to make money in about 20 minutes flat, find a 99-year lease too short a period over which to lend money. However, that is apparently the case. I am dubious about some of those claims about the present state of the market in property speculation, but that is what we have been told.

Over the past few years, the Government have brought forward proposals that extended the maximum period of leases of the Crown estate and the Duchy of Cornwall from 99 years to 150 years. The Bill would lift that time restriction altogether. Whatever justification the Chancellor of the Duchy has put forward for lifting the restrictions on urban land that might be the subject of speculative property developments into which the Duchy might like to enter in, say, the Savoy estate around the Strand, which is undoubtedly its most valuable property, that has absolutely nothing to do with lease of land for military purposes.

Our Victorian predecessors were clearly sensible and prudent in deliberately limiting the power of the Duchy to grant leases of land for military purposes. At that time —1892—they thought that a maximum period of 21 years was quite sufficient to alienate land for use for military purposes. They also required that such a lease should cease if the military use ceased.

Those requirements cannot possibly have any effect on the sites and properties in the Savoy part of the Strand on which the Government are attempting to justify the general changes. If the Army, the Navy, the Air Force or the Marines want to lease a piece of Duchy land, they do not have to raise the capital for it on the market—at least so far. No doubt the Prime Minister is considering privatising the armed forces, in which case they would have to raise money on the market if they wanted some of the property. Therefore, the lessees do not face any problem in having a restriction as short as 21 years. It seems wholly artificial for the Government to suggest that, in the case of leases of land for military purposes, the present limit needs to be either extended or lifted altogether.

11 pm

Mr. George Foulkes (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley): I am slightly confused by the arguments put forward by my hon. Friend. I am not clear whether he is arguing that there is likely to be military activity in the Strand, or whether there is any likelihood of the Army and the Navy having leases in the Strand. I can understand why the Army and the Navy might want leases in Victoria street, but the Strand is slightly outwith my comprehension.

Could my hon. Friend, the shadow Leader of the House, explain the exact relationship between the Strand, the Savoy and military leases? I am at a loss, and I think that some of my hon. Friends are as well, to relate military leases with what is happening around the Savoy. I know that sometimes men, and even women, of military bearing are seen going in and our of the Savoy, but I cannot quite relate the military context to that of the Savoy properties. I hope that my hon. Friend will explain the connection.

Mr. Dobson: I am sorry if I have not made the position sufficiently clear to a person as acute as my hon. Friend, whose constituency has such a long name that I can never remember it. The Duchy of Lancaster, in its peculiar way, owns more land in Yorkshire than in Lancashire, but the bulk of its property—36,000 acres—is agricultural land. A further 15,000 acres is moorland in north Yorkshire and south Wales, and the estates include 175 agricultural tenancies and about 3,000 acres of woodland. But, quite distinct from that, the Duchy holds the freehold of properties in the Manor of Savoy—as it was—along Lancaster place, the Embankment, Savoy hill and the Strand——

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Is that why they do not have television licences?

Mr. Dobson: Probably.

Mr. Hal Miller (Bromsgrove): Could the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) help his hon. Friend by referring him to the Savoy operas and the Duke of Plaza Toro, who led his regiment from behind? That would seem to me to be the military use involved.

Mr. Dobson: I would not suggest for a moment that the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is leading from behind, although in his role as a Cabinet Minister he seems always to be one step behind someone in the House of Lords.

Mr. Foulkes: I am sure that my hon. Friend would agree that the Chancellor is

"the very model of a modern Major-General."

Hon. Members will notice that I did not sing that, for obvious reasons.

Can my hon. Friend tell me, while he is reading out the property owned by the Duchy of Lancaster—I think that he has a clear account of it there—whether any of it is in Scotland, and particularly whether any of it is in the constituency of Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley? That will give him a clue to the name of my constituency.

Mr. Dobson: To the best of my knowledge—I am dependent on a parliamentary answer, and we can all make our own assessments of the accurancy of parliamentary answers—no property of the Duchy of Lancaster appears to be within the whole of Scotland, least of all in—[HON. MEMBERS: "Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley."]

The position is this. The property that the Duchy owns at the end of the Strand, which is less than three acres, is of immense value. It is developed land, and it offers immense gains to those who are willing to join the Duchy in speculating there, if they knock it down and put up new buildings. It is for those purposes that the Chancellor of the Duchy has come to the House and said that 99-year leases are too short and that these far-sighted people in the City wish to invest for 150 years or more in that property. However, they are unwilling to invest for about five years in something productive, such as a factory. Indeed, they are willing to invest in property there only if they have leases for 150 years or more.

That is not the case with agricultural land so far or with moorland in the north Yorkshire moors national park. In the patches of agricultural land and in the property in north Yorkshire and south Wales there are examples of land which is presently let for military purposes. None of that land requires a lifting of the Victorian maximum for a lease of land for military use, which was set in 1892 at 21 years. Therefore, it would be consistent for the Chancellor of the Duchy to accept the restrictions which are proposed in the new clause.

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): Is my hon. Friend sketching a position which shows that the Government, in a shabby manoeuvre, are allowing the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to link up with speculators of the sort condemned by no less a personage than Prince Charles—who, one would have thought, might have had some influence in the Tory ranks, but apparently not—and to raze buildings to the ground in order to build monstrosities with long tenure which the Prince and many ordinary working people, with just as good an eye as the Prince, have long deplored because they ravage the skyline of our capital city?

Mr. Dobson: It is undoubtedly the case that the Duchy of Lancaster wishes to join private speculative developers in the further development of land on the Savoy estate. I am not sure in this case whether the Prince of Wales, who is also Duke of Cornwall, is entirely, so to say, in the clear in the matter——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must remind the House that references to the royal family, particularly if used in support of arguments, are not in order.

Mr. Dobson: It might undermine my argument, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

I make no reference to the Duke of Cornwall, but not very long ago the Duchy of Cornwall came to the House to seek to extend the maximum period for its ordinary leases from 99 to 150 years.

Mr. Foulkes: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I should like clarification from you. We are talking about the Duchy of Lancaster. Is it in order in doing so to make reference during the debate to the Duke of Lancaster?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is certainly in order to refer to the Duchy of Lancaster in so far as it is relevant to the debate. I am saying that it is not in order to invoke in argument, to criticise or, indeed, to praise members of the royal family. That is the distinction that I am drawing.

Mr. Foulkes: And that includes the Duke of Lancaster?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Indeed.

Mr. Dobson: I am glad that that point has been clarified.

I am subject to correction, not necessarily directly by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, who is gracing us with his presence, but by those who advise him. So far as I know, the Duchy of Cornwall remains subject to the 21-year maximum period for leases of land for military purposes. My copy of the legislation currently in operation suggests that that restriction still applies to the Duchy of Cornwall; and to the extent that the Duke of Cornwall is responsible for that, it is praiseworthy.

As it is extremely unlikely that there will be any military, sub-military or semi-military use of the expensive Savoy estate and its surroundings at the end of the Strand, or of the other urban properties owned by the Duchy in Harrogate, and—in bits and pieces—in Leeds, Leicester, Bradford, Lewes and London—I assure my hon. Friends that I am referring to Lewes near Brighton, not to Lewis in Scotland——

Mr. Skinner: Have we any assurances in the Bill that the Kuwaiti Investment Office cannot extend its little empire beyond the oil industry and get on to the end of the Strand? I do not know what repercussions that might have. Perhaps we should be discussing whether there are any such safeguards.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We must stick to leases for military purposes.

Mr. Dobson: To the best of my knowledge, the Duchy of Lancaster is completely indiscriminate in this matter, and is willing to sell to anyone who has the money. I do not know whether it would be willing to let a lease to the Kuwaitis if they wanted it for military purposes—to keep the discussion within the rules of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker—but as far as I know, if some potential speculator or developer has the money, the Duchy will deal with him, whatever his nationality or origin. As I have been trying, and perhaps failing, to explain, it seems extremely unlikely that there will be any military or paramilitary use of the really valuable urban properties of the Duchy of Lancaster, yet that is the basis on which the relaxation of restrictions is proposed in the Bill.

The bulk of the property that might be let for military purposes will be rural, probably in north Yorkshire or south Wales. A considerable quantity of the land that might be used for military purposes is likely to be in national parks or other beautiful areas, far from major centres of population; so wildlife, flora and fauna are likely to be damaged by use for military purposes. That applies not only in the areas that are leased but to areas outside their boundaries. We should try to keep military uses to a minimum, particularly in areas of significant beauty such as I have been discussing.

In 1892, when the Military Lands Act was passed, the number of people in the British armed forces was much greater than it is now, yet our Victorian predecessors felt it right and proper to place these limitation restrictions on the use of Duchy of Lancaster and Duchy of Cornwall land for military purposes. We should stick by what they did.

There is a great deal of technological change in military affairs at present, and it is ludicrous that the Duchy should be empowered to enter into leases for the use of land for military purposes that might be rendered wholly out of date within five years. Even if a lease ran out, it would still be possible for the Ministry of Defence to keep the property and deny ordinary people access to it on the ground that it might be needed at some time in the future. We should keep that sort of alienation of useful, beautiful land to a minimum.

11.15 pm

If there is not some hidden explanation for the Government's proposal to apply this to military land, I cannot see any reason why the Chancellor of the Duchy, who is here tonight, should not be quite willing to accept the specific terms of this new clause and the two amendments. The new clause provides:

"Any lease of land for military purposes to a Secretary of State shall cease to have effect if the land ceases to be used for military purposes."

One would have thought that it was in the interests of the Duchy of Lancaster to have that power in the Bill. It seems to me that it is ceding some of its powers as a landowner to the Ministry of Defence unless it maintains the protection that was provided in the Act, part of which will be amended by the Bill.

Amendment No. 5 would be less restrictive in a sense than the new clause, because it would provide:

"No land or property within a national park shall be leased by the Chancellor and Council of the Duchy of Lancaster for military purposes to a Secretary of State for more than 21 years and the lease shall cease to have effect if the land ceases to be used for military purposes."

That element of protection that we propose would apply only to Duchy of Lancaster land within a national park.

There is no way on earth that a property speculator is going to demand a 150-year lease on property in a national park—unless such parks are going to be privatised as well. It may be that this is a sort of paving measure for all sorts of monstrous activities on the part of the Government.

Finally, amendment No. 7 would delete from the schedule of Acts to be repealed the section of the Military Lands Act 1892 which maintains the protection that I have been advocating. It seems worth recalling at this point that at one time the Duchy of Lancaster had no restrictions on the way it conducted its affairs, and the Crown chose then to dispose of its assets, get the capital and spend it. That bears a remarkably close resemblance to the policies of the present Government, who are selling off public assets and using the capital as revenue, which would be unacceptable to the auditors of any private organisation. If they were not the Government, they would get done by the auditors.

Parliament, in its wisdom, decided over the years that this was not a sound way of going on and that if Crown revenues were to be maintained, restrictions should be imposed. One of those restrictions was the restriction on the use of the Duchy's land for military purposes. It seems to me that the reasoning applied by our Victorian predecessors is wholly sound and solid. The Prime Minister talks about Victorian values. These are Victorian values set out in a Victorian Act of Parliament. If the Chancellor of the Duchy wants finally to get that position in the Cabinet where he is the boss of his own Department, and get the failed property speculator who is his boss in the House of Lords out of the way, the best thing he can do is stick by the Victorian values in the Military Lands Act 1892 and accept the new clause that I am proposing.

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and Minister of Trade and Industry (Mr. Kenneth Clarke): The Bill's purpose is to free the Duchy of Lancaster from some rather outdated restrictions on its ability to lease land. The Duchy of Lancaster is a fairly substantial landowner, as the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) has described from an accurate answer to a parliamentary question. Obviously, it is the duty of the Duchy to administer the estate in the best possible way to maintain the long-term health of the estate and to obtain a reasonable return for the benefit of the privy purse.

All that the Bill, including the part that we are now considering, seeks to do is to put the Duchy on exactly the same footing as any other major landowner, with no legal restrictions that are no longer required, but with no intention of behaving other than as a sensible developer and maintainer of its land.

As far as I am aware, in Committee and again today, no one has so far raised the slightest criticism of the behaviour of the Duchy towards any part of its estate. It is fair to say that in modern times the Duchy has given rise to no kind of controversy. I do not think that we are responsible for any undesirable development; if anybody thinks we are, I shall be only too anxious to consider such representations about the way in which we are dealing with the estate or any of its tenants or property.

The Bill is necessary because in the last century quite a bit of legislation was passed which put restrictions on the Duchy's ability to manage, lease and dispose of its land. The hon. Gentleman is right to say that the origins of the oldest legislation with which we are dealing go back to times when the estate was beginning to be managed somewhat irresponsibly, when royal finances were in a fairly desperate state and parliamentary interest in the Duchy may not have been as strong as it should have been. However, largely in the early 19th century, all kinds of restrictions were placed on the Duchy which at that time were essential to make sure that the estate was not run down and capital used for discharge of royal debts over which Parliament thought that it should take an interest.

It is an anachronism that all this legislation still lies on the statute book. Modern practice in the management and development of land has changed. Some of the restrictions are now getting in the way of our being able to develop some of the more important holdings of land in a desirable way. That is the principal purpose of the Bill and the repeals that are covered by this part of it.

[Mr. Kenneth Clarke]

Mr. Dobson: Does the Minister accept that the collapse of the speculative property market in the early 1970s would suggest that, as well as modern practice being around, there is also modern malpractice? The fact of the matter is that the restrictions presently placed on the Duchy of Lancaster, which, as the Minister said, has a good record for managing its estate, spring partly from the fact that it is restricted and does not do anything stupid or venal as do a considerable number of other property companies.

Mr. Clarke: Sensible practice and development of land in the end depend on well-judged decisions being taken on good advice about what is right for a particular plot of land, a well-put-together proposition and the Duchy acting in its own best interests and entering into a lease with a developer on terms that the market at that time is used to and requires for that kind of development.

I have no evidence that at the time of the collapse of the property market in the early 1970s, these statutory restrictions on the Duchy played any part in protecting the Duchy against any schemes that might otherwise have gone ahead. I do not think that any of the provisions of the Acts that we are now repealing have had the slightest practical effect on anything for many years, except that now they inhibit the Duchy's ability to contemplate some of the more ambitious development schemes that we would like to have a look at, in particular for parts of the Savoy estate.

We are dealing with the Military Lands Act 1892. The hon. Gentleman is concerned with one of the least significant of the statutory restrictions. First, let me describe the extent of our interest in military land. To the best of my knowledge and belief, the entire Duchy estate has one drill hall used by the Territorial Army. That is the full extent of our military property that I have been able to discover on, admittedly, a fairly cursory search. That drill hall is not let under the 1892 Act, nor is it covered by that measure. So at present we have absolutely no property covered by the Act and I think that we have not had any covered by it for a long time.

The Duchy is at present not contemplating any military use for any part of its estate. So not only is the provision about which we are talking applicable to absolutely no real live situation, but there is nothing pending which is likely to cause us to need to look at the provisions of the 1892 Act.

Mr. Foulkes: In view of the extensive nature of the lands of the Duchy, is it not surprising, given the extensive military activity throughout the United Kingdom — I have land in my constituency being used for that purpose — that no Duchy lands are being used for military purposes, apart from the Dad's Army type of drill hall to which the Minister referred? If I were permitted to refer to the Duke of Lancaster, I would ask whether this had anything to do with the fact that she is also Commander in Chief of the armed forces. Is it not strange that none of the Duchy's lands are being used for that sort of patriotic purpose?

Mr. Clarke: The great majority of land in the Kingdom is not used for military purposes. The bulk Duchy of Lancaster comprises agricultural estates, castles, some woodland, some moorland including the national parks—so we are sensitive to the n preserve the wildlife and its natural beauty—this estate in the middle of London and estates in a few in the north, including Harrogate.

I do not think that the military have seen any it; we have not received any applications for its n use and none has been let for years. So this importa Act which the hon. Member for Holborn and St. P is defending has not played a great part in our n affairs, or even the affairs of the Duchy, for a lon

The Duchy would contemplate the use of its la a military purpose only if any of the military auth showed interest in any of it, which they are not d present, and if the national interest in some way re part of the land to be made available for military u would contemplate that only if that hypothetical sit arose, and we would go along with that only if w persuaded that the national interest was involve would give a lease for more than 21 years only if tha requested, and then only if it were in the interest Duchy.

The Duchy is not giving up any landowner's pow this measure. We will remain in the position of any landowner approached by the military authorities possible use of its land, and we would be able to ac refuse in the usual way, subject to the representations of the Secretary of State for Defe whomever wanted to use it.

We are talking about a wholly academic point repeal of a late 19th-century piece of legislation whi not made the slightest difference to any part of the C Palatine for years and is not likely to make any diff in the future. While the hon. Member for Holborn a Pancras put his case well, he is pressing a minor po this and later amendments standing in his name.

Mr. Dobson: Is it not a fact that the Duchy woul a power, since the measure would make any land us military purposes revert to the Duchy as soon as it st being used for those purposes?

Mr. Clarke: Our power would be to let or not to land, in the same way as any other landowner would that decision, and to let it on whatever term conditions we wished, with a possible reversion if not needed for military purposes. At present, the 18 imposes a constraint on the Duchy because, unlike landowners, this statutory provision would restrict 21 years and make the land revert if the military cea use it. With the repeal we would still be free, like any landowner, freely to consider any approach by the m authorities, in the event of any approach being ma

I think that this is a minor point. Given the fac this opportunity is being taken to repeal obsolete la might as well repeal the lot. There will not be many Bills; now that there is one, we might as well tak opportunity to get rid of all the 19th-century legis that is no longer serving a worthwhile purpose.

The hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras g reason for a 21-year limitation. He used the extraordinary argument—that, because it was th to be right in 1892, for reasons which, as far as I ca he has not looked up, it must still be right in 1988. That is not a proposition that usually commends itself to the House. Our Victorian forebears no doubt had some reason at the time for imposing the restriction, but none of us knows what on earth it was. As it no longer has any application to the current management of the Duchy land, I suggest that there is no need for it to continue. Therefore, I hope that the House will reject the new clause and the associated amendments.

11.30 pm

Mr. Dobson: Does the Minister not accept that a 21-year lease was the standard short lease in 1892?

Mr. Clarke: It may have been, but it is not now. The fact that it was the practice in 1892 should not guide us when legislating in 1988.

Mr. John Marston (Glasgow, Cathcart): I am interested in what the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has said about Victorian Acts of Parliament. For eight years I have listened to his revered leader saying that this Government were based upon Victorian values. Why is he suddenly throwing them out of the window in this callous manner?

Mr. Clarke: In the parlours of Victorian England, their values may have been regarded as largely determined by the Military Land Act 1892, but I doubt it. I think that this Act was regarded as fairly obscure at the time that it was passed. I do not think we shall be shattering Victorian values if we repeal it now.

Question put and negatived.

New Clause 2

Treatment of Receipts

'The premium element of any transaction carried out under the provisions of this Act shall be treated as a capital receipt not available for payments to the Keeper of the Privy Purse.'.—[Mr. Dobson.]

Brought up, and read the First time.

Mr. Dobson: I beg to move, That the clause be read a Second time.

The new clause goes to the heart of the Government's intentions. On Second Reading, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster said:

"The Duchy's original Charters of Incorporation were not subject to any limits on the powers of the Chancellor and Council of the Duchy of Lancaster to act as they saw fit"—

I draw attention to the words "as they saw fit"—

"in the management of the Duchy's inheritance. But certain improprieties took place, largely during the time of the Stuarts and those abuses had to be corrected."

The official view is that the Duchy's revenues, along with those from the Crown estates, were severely depleted during the 17th century and the early part of the 18th century. Duchy property was charged to provide income for members of the royal family, other than the sovereign, or was sold to make up the revenues which could not be obtained from Parliament. Further depletions were checked by the Crown Lands Act 1702, which included the Duchy of Lancaster in its application. This Act, whose detailed provisions have subsequently been amended, but the principles of whose restrictions remain in place, prohibited all grants of the freehold, restricted powers of leasing by limiting terms of years up to a maximum of, as it was then, 21 years and required a rent to be paid of not less than that paid previously and not less than one third of the market rental value.

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster then went on to say:

"A limit was imposed, which, at present, is 99 years on the term of what can be conveniently described as a 'building lease' and a restriction on the amount of rental, receivable under such a lease, which could be received by way of premium. A maximum of one third of such rental value can be capitalised in that way." — [Official Report, Second Reading Committee, 17 November 1987; c. 3.]

That applies at the moment. The proposal is that in future there should be no limits whatever on the length of leases granted or on the proportion of rental value that can be capitalised.

One of the reasons restrictions were first put on, in the immortal words of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, was that the Chancellor and the Council could act "as they saw fit". That was regarded as objectionable. The Bill says that they will be able to

"lease land forming part of the possessions of the Duchy on such terms as they think fit."

In other words, it is proposed that we revert to a position that was regarded as objectionable because it was thought appropriate to place restrictions on the way in which the Duchy conducted its business.

Those restrictions have worked rather well over the years. As the Chancellor himself said, there have been no scandals. They have not been able to fiddle on the capitalisation because the law prevented it. There has been no temptation. It was stopped by the law.

We believe that there is a need to put continuing restraints on all organisations. Restraints, in a limited way, are usually good for most organisations and if all the restraints on the conduct of an organisation are taken away, sooner or later it is likely to get out of hand. We might as well shut up shop in this place if we say that all the organisations in the City work well and there is no fiddling or financial chicanery. We would not need laws to control companies or anything like that. We could rely on the good faith and common sense of the managing companies.

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster says to us now that we can rely on the competence, common sense and good faith of those who will be, from time to time, the Chancellors and Council of the Duchy. It is an absurd proposition that there should not be any restrictions on the way in which they conduct business; obviously there should be some restrictions.

We are talking about sensible limits. One of those sensible limits would be some sort of restriction on the length of time over which they can sell a lease, which is at present 99 years. In recent changes in the law that were made to extend the powers of the Duchy of Cornwall and of the Crown Estates, neither of those organisations sought extensions beyond 150 years. What is different about the Duchy of Lancaster; why does it need all its restrictions lifted?

Mr. Foulkes: Will my hon. Friend help the House by saying who are the other members of the Council of the Duchy of Lancaster? We know the Chancellor only too well. He is the deputy supremo of the enterprise culture. I realise that I should know the answer. I should have done my homework as well as my hon. Friend. It would be helpful for us to get a picture of who it is we are expected to place our trust in.

Mr. Dobson: We shall have to rely on the Chancellor to disclose his colleagues. The only thing that I was able to verify in Committee was the fact that Lord Young of Graffham, who was once a property speculator but gave it up because he was losing money, is not a member of the Council of the Duchy of Lancaster. We are all grateful for that. The great deregulators apparently want wholly to deregulate the Duchy of Lancaster. That is an unsound proposition.

[Mr. Dobson]

I come to the nub of the amendment, which is how the Duchy of Lancaster should treat the premiums it receives when leases are entered into. In Committee I pressed the Chancellor about how premiums would be treated and whether the change in the law might make it possible for the Government—as is their custom these days—to treat premiums, which are capital, as revenue and thus disburse the money and spend it. The Chancellor was good enough to write to me to explain. In his letter, he said:

"The treatment of the premium element of the transaction as a capital receipt is a matter of established accounting practice."

Apparently we are now to rely on "established accounting practice" to make sure that the Duchy of Lancaster treats these premiums as capital and not as revenue.

As hon. Members know, accounting practices change and unless we have some provision in law to ensure that these premiums are treated as capital, it is possible for accountancy practice to change and for the Duchy to be able to spend the premium income as if it were revenue. If it did that, it would be following the example of every Government Department that has disposed of public property since the Government came to office in 1979. That might be described as "established Government practice."

If the Duchy followed established Government practice, it would take the money in as capital and then spend it as revenue. We want to prevent that, and that is why we tabled new clause 2. That new clause imposes no new restrictions whatever on the Duchy of Lancaster because, according to his letter, that is "established accounting practice." I am sure he accepts that accounting practice can change. Therefore, this is not at present an additional restriction on the way that the Duchy conducts its business. However, it is a prudent provision to make sure that the capital possessed by the Crown and the revenues that it receives from that capital are maintained in future against any pressure at any time to treat the capital as revenue. I see no sound reason whatever why the Chancellor should not accept the provision in this new clause.

Perhaps the new clause is not drafted as well as it ought to be. I am always willing to acknowledge, indeed proclaim, the shortcomings of my drafting and would be quite willing to accept new drafts put forward by the Chancellor or by his staff or colleagues. It would be wholly sound and prudent to apply this restriction for the future in order to protect the ultimate revenues of the Crown. I hope that the Chancellor will accept my proposition. If this is not the right way to do it, I hope that he will do something through the House of Lords to meet the objective that I hope I have set out.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) would be on a perfectly sensible and serious point if there was a risk that the Duchy would revert to the long outmoded practice of treating its capital receipts, its premiums, as if they were revenue available as payments to the Keeper o Purse. The hon. Gentleman fears that there is of the Duchy Council being able to revert to th reputable practices that it followed at the t feckless Stuarts and in the days of the early H when Parliament felt obliged to put some rest the way the Duchy of Lancaster was operated

11.45 pm

Mr. Foulkes: Will the hon. Gentleman give

Mr. Clarke: I see that the old pretender from and Doon Valley is roused by my remarks.

Mr. Foulkes: The young pretender.

When the Chancellor is talking about th Stuarts, perhaps he would answer the questio hon. Friend the Member for Holborn and St. Pa Dobson) was reluctant to answer and tell us w as his 'oppos' in the operation—not in all things he is doing; we have faith in him in his Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. Who do about him — John of Gaunt and all th chappies? We want to know who they are so whether the House can put its trust in him.

Mr. Clarke: My starting point is that the trust the present Duchy Council not to start b a disreputable way and using the premiums a The Attorney-General of the Duchy is Mr. member of the Bar in silk; the vice-chancel County Palatine is Mr. Justice Scott, a High C in the Chancery Division. The other membe Council are Sir Ashley Ponsonby, Major Shar Mr. John Slater, and Mr. Simon Towneley, v Lord Lieutenant of Lancashire. It is a reputa which has had a good record in managing th recent years. If the composition of the Duchy Co to change and we were to come under improp to apply premium income as revenue, I assur Member for Holborn and St. Pancras and his ho and the House that they would not be free to d without his new clause.

I have written to the hon. Gentleman and I this matter in Standing Committee, but he is rig the point. I will spell out the combination of restrictions, accounting practice restrictions an restrictions, coupled with an assurance that I am to give on behalf of the Treasury to reassure hi fears are groundless.

The manner in which premiums should be de clear, having regard to the statutory requiremen remain and will not be repealed by the Bill. The Lancaster Lands Act 1855 and earlier legislation the treatment of proceeds of disposals. The D remains subject to the proper accounting proce practices when preparing accounts by the D Lancaster and Cornwall (Accounts) Act 1838. G in the last debate, the hon. Gentleman expre respect for venerable legislation, he will be glad that these two Acts are surviving.

The Duchy of Lancaster Lands Act 1855 mak that, although all proceeds of the dispositions property belong legally to the sovereign in rig Duchy, capital receipts must in accordance wit be retained and invested by the Chancellor and C the Duchy. Receipt of a premium as a re disposition of land would be a capital receipt. I have already given assurances on the point in my letter to the hon. Gentleman and in the Standing Committee, when I quoted my letter yet again.

I give a further assurance to hon. Members, in case they still think that the treatment of a premium is in some way discretionary by the Duchy Council. The Treasury has confirmed that all proper accounting practices and procedures are followed and would, if ever required, make a direction to the effect that premiums should be treated as capital. That safeguard is in addition to the independent audit of the Duchy accounts, which I have already given assurances about. No reputable auditors would accept a sudden decision by the Duchy to start using premium income as revenue, as is feared.

I told the Standing Committee the name and standing of the auditor the Duchy uses, who seems to be extremely reputable. Any fear that the passage of the legislation might enable the Duchy Council to behave in some irresponsible way is ill founded; for that reason, I advise the House that the new clause is simply not required.

Question put and negatived.

Clause 1

Extension of powers to lease Duchy land

Mr. Dobson: I beg to move amendment No. 8, in Page 1, line 8, after 'Duchy', insert

'within Greater London and the District of Harrogate'.

The amendment seeks to restrict the deregulation of the Duchy of Lancaster, if I may describe it thus, to the Duchy's property in those areas on which the justification given by the Chancellor of the Duchy is based. Throughout the whole piece he has made it clear that the problem of partnership developers wanting longer leases than 99 years is apparent in the urban areas where the value of the land is extremely high.

The Chancellor has made no suggestion—indeed, no one in his right mind would make such a suggestion—that anyone has said that they will not take an agricultural lease because it runs for less than 150 years or that people refuse to buy a lease for less than 150 years for shooting on the north Yorkshire moors because they cannot raise the money on the market.

The justification for lifting the restrictions is based upon the alleged need to develop further the estate owned by the Duchy around the Savoy in the Strand, and possibly in Harrogate, which I understand is the Duchy's next most substantial land holding in an urban area.

We must get this matter into perspective. So far as I can discover, there are 2·5 acres on the Savoy estate, including the Savoy chapel and the surrounding garden. It is understood that no revenue is derived from them. Presumably the Prime Minister did not pay anything when her son got married at that chapel. One would have thought that that marriage would have occasioned some revenue, but apparently not.

On the assumption that the Duchy does not intend to redevelop the Savoy chapel and its garden, there are probably less than two acres of land on the Savoy estate available for development. Therefore, the whole justification for lifting the statutory restraints on the conduct of the Duchy are based on the possible needs of two acres in central London as against an estate of 36,000 acres of agricultural land. There are 2,800 acres in Northamptonshire and Lincolnshire, 13,000 acres in Staffordshire, Cheshire and Shropshire, 10,900 acres in Lancashire and 9,300 acres in Yorkshire. On top of that there are 15,000 acres of moorland in north Yorkshire and south Wales, most of which is subject to common rights, and some other smaller sections of developed property in Leeds, Leicester, Bradford, Lewes and parts of London other than the Savoy estate.

I believe that it is preposterous for the Chancellor to say that he must lift all the restrictions on all the thousands of acres of land on the basis of a justification that springs from problems arising on less than two acres of land down the other end of the Strand. Such a justification is an absolutely preposterous absurdity.

The Chancellor has mentioned absolutely no need, let alone backed it up with argument, for the lifting of the restrictions to apply to the rest of the Duchy's estate anywhere in the country. The problems are specific to the limited urban sites. The proposal in the amendment would limit the lifting of the current restrictions to areas within greater London and the district of Harrogate. That is wholly proper and reasonable. I am happy to concede that if it is reasonable for the Duchy of Cornwall and the Crown Estate to have restrictions lifted in respect of their urban property, it is all right for the Duchy of Lancaster to have restrictions lifted in respect of its urban property. But it is to stand the whole thing on its head to change the law affecting such a large area of land simply because of the problems of one small area.

The Chancellor of the Duchy and I read the history of the estate completely differently. The right hon. and learned Gentleman is a lawyer, and one might have thought that he would believe that the law affected people's behaviour. Apparently he does not. He seems to think that the existence of a body of law over a considerable period has had no effect whatever on the conduct of the Duchy of Lancaster. As a junior Minister, and now as a senior Minister, he has brought Bill after Bill to the House on the basis that if one changes the law, one changes the way in which people do things. Yet he now says, "You can change the law and it will not make a ha'p'orth of difference."

I cannot believe that. Perhaps that is because I am not a lawyer and hold the law in more respect than the right hon. and learned Gentleman, who is so familiar with it. However, his proposition that changing the law does not change the way in which organisations act is preposterous. It is just as preposterous to suggest that we should change the law covering 50,000 acres of land because of the problems that occur on less than two acres. I hope that he will come up with a better justification than hitherto for the sweeping deregulatory changes that he proposes.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The hon. Gentleman spoke to the amendment in his usual pleasant manner and style, but he used fairly strong language, calling the Bill an absurdity and the argument that we should lift the restrictions on the more rural parts of the estate preposterous. With respect, his argument contains a slight illogicality. The main restriction that the Bill seeks to repeal is the 99-year restriction on anything in the manner of a building lease with which the Duchy is still fettered. He says that there is not the slightest prospect of the Duchy ever wanting to give a lease for more than 99 years in the moors o

[Mr. Kenneth Clarke]

Goathland. He then says that because of that we should keep a restriction legally to prevent the Duchy from granting a lease for more than 99 years.

The hon. Gentleman demands that we maintain the present restrictions in the law for those parts of the estate where he says they are meaningless and ineffective anyway. It is probably true that most of the 19th century provisions have never had the slightest effect upon the behaviour of the Duchy in the moorlands of south Wales and north Yorkshire, the agricultural estates of Cheshire and Lancashire or the large tracts that the hon. Gentleman described. It would be nonsense for the Bill removing the restrictions to apply only to London and Harrogate. I now realise the logic of that rather curious geographical definition.

The hon. Gentleman sought to identify the urban part of the estate, where he thinks that the repeal of the restrictions might have some relevance. As he conceded, he has not mentioned all the urban areas; he mentioned Bradford, Leicester and Leeds in passing in his own list. In addition, we have property on the outskirts of Crewe, Pontefract and Newcastle-under-Lyme. Furthermore, the Duchy is perfectly free to acquire——

Mr. Eric Martlew (Carlisle): Is the right hon. and learned Gentleman aware that the property in Pontefract is a castle? I doubt whether the right hon. and learned Gentleman would try to raise revenue on a castle.

12 midnight

Mr. Clarke: I do not think that we are considering a major building lease on the castle. The hon. Gentleman is quite right on that point. However, that is not the only property that we have near the town of Pontefract, although the castle is probably our most distinguished holding there.

The Duchy is perfectly free to acquire more land. It is not a fixed estate and it does not simply comprise all the land owned by John of Gaunt. The Duchy manages the estate and sometimes makes acquisitions and sales. We have no means of knowing whether the Duchy will acquire property in future and the present limitations in the law would impose restrictions for no good purpose on the ability to manage the estate. Therefore, I think that the hon. Gentleman's point is not worth pressing.

It would be nonsense to keep all the old restrictions on the parts of the estate where the hon. Gentleman argues that the estate has no relevance. While we are taking the opportunity to free the Duchy from restrictions, we might as well do that properly and not include the extraordinary amendment which would involve passing an Act that would apply only to London and Harrogate. No doubt that would be unprecedented in 19th and 20th-century legislation.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. Dobson: I beg to move amendment No. 6, in page 1, line 14, at end insert—

'(2D) Before any new lease shall be granted for any land or property forming part of a National Park, or area of outstanding natural beauty or of special scientific interest, the Chancellor and Council of the Duchy of Lancaster shall consult (a) the appropriate National Park Board, (b) the Nature Conservancy Council, and (c) the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds; and in the event of any of these bodies objecting to the terms of the new lease the Chancellor and Council of the Duchy of Lancaster shall following an affirmative resolution by bo Parliament.'.

This amendment is intended to provi protection for land owned by the Duchy o national parks, areas of outstanding natur areas of special scientific interest.

It is particularly appropriate that we sh to provide additional protection now understand that the Secretary of St Environment is considering privatising prop the Nature Conservancy Council. If the Cha Duchy of Lancaster is a reluctant deregulato right hon. Friend the Secretary of S Environment is an absolutely fanatical dere all, his family made its money out of der mines a long time ago. There is every reason in favour of deregulation to try to get them b as possible.

The Government are in the process of great deal of deregulation in rural areas. I ha the idea of selling land belonging to Conservancy Council. There are also substan in the Department of the Environment and of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for c approach to the control of development in r have the opportunity tonight to provi protection for some of the property which public sector at the moment, if I can descri of Lancaster in that way.

It would be right to place restrictions granting of new leases in national par outstanding natural beauty or areas of spe interest, as the Bill proposes to lift all othe We need some compensatory protection. If no limit to the period for which leases can b for such sensitive areas as national par outstanding natural beauty and areas of spe interest, it is only proper to introduce some ensure that the purposes of the national p outstanding natural beauty and areas of spe interest are protected. It would be a failure allow the Duchy to have utterly free play ov those areas, as is envisaged in the Bill.

The amendment proposes that, before the into any new leases, with its new unbounded what will be the Duchy of Lancaster Act 19 lease is granted for any land or property fo a national park, area of outstanding natu special scientific interest, it shall consult th national park board, the Nature Conservan the Royal Society for the Protection of Bi those bodies objects to the terms of these unfettered, leases, the Duchy of Lancaster w proceed only following the affirmative resol Houses of Parliament. The Chancellor may is going a bit far and that it might not be th providing the protection that we are seekin

I have no great brief for the amendment drafted. They may be faulty in their detail, bu faulty in their intention. It is right and prop compensatory protection. I hope that the C accept the wording as it stands or promi protection will be introduced when the Bi House of Lords.

Mr. Martlew: I was a little puzzled when I read the Bill and its Committee stage, but, having heard the Chancellor, I am completely confused. I gained the impression that he was trying to say that he wants to put the business of the Duchy on a more professional basis.

I note that there are two clauses missing from the Bill. The first should be to get rid of the post of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. In reality, a professional organisation would have a highly paid chief executive. I understand that the Chancellor is paid £2,000 per annum. I do not know whether, for the work that he does, that is highly paid or not.

Under the present arrangements, the person holding the post is a politician—he may be a very good politician—and for political reasons he needs to be in the Cabinet. The Prime Minister is of the opinion that the right hon. and learned Gentleman cannot be trusted with a Department so she has made him Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. I do not want to offend the Chancellor, but the cap fits.

Perhaps the Chancellor will say how much of his time is spent on the duties——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I realise that the hon. Gentleman has not been a Member of the House for long, and I have allowed him a preamble. I hope that he will come to the amendment.

Mr. Martlew: Amendment No. 6 is specific and if it is not dealt with it would consume more of the Chancellor's time if he had to bring it back to the House because of a disagreement. One of the Chancellor's predecessors in the 1930s said that he spent half an hour a week on the business of the Duchy.

Parts of the Duchy's property—other than the Savoy, which does not have much wildlife; it might at various times of the night—lie in areas of outstanding natural beauty, such as Cheshire, Staffordshire, Lancashire and Yorkshire. Unfortunately, it has sold its land in Cumbria.

If the Duchy were to be put on a par with the private sector, its tax arrangements would have to be altered. I understand that the Duchy's taxes go straight into the privy purse.

We should not expect to get rid of the Duchy or change its tax position, because it is something special which should be preserved. The Duchy is not a property company; it has looked after the countryside and its wildlife since 1265, so far as I am aware. There is no reason why, for short-term financial gain, we should change that or endanger any of the areas of outstanding natural beauty. Therefore, we do not need to change the leasing arrangements of the Bill, and perhaps we need to accept the amendment. If I have one criticism of my hon. Friend's amendment, it is that there is an omission from it, but I hope that the Minister will accept that we should consider it.

Being a Cumbrian Member of Parliament, I am aware of the debate that took place only yesterday in my area about the problem of fox-hunting in the national park. I hope that the Chancellor or the Duchy will consider whether, as well as protecting the wildlife in the area, we should ban the use of hounds for hunting animals on land that is owned by the Duchy of Lancaster. It is barbaric that we should allow that practice to continue. Although it is part of our history—just as it is part of the history of my constituency that we did not allow Scotsmen to walk around the city after dusk and we also used to hang sheep stealers — [Interruption.] There were exceptions with regard to Scotsmen. Although it is part of our history, it should be forgotten. Therefore, I should be happy to hear the Chancellor of the Duchy say tonight that he is prepared to accept the spirit of my hon. Friend's amendment and to consider banning the use of hounds for hunting animals on Duchy land.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am entirely in sympathy with the spirit and intention of the amendment moved by the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson). Although I do not go along with the arguments of the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) about field sports on Duchy land, I share his desire to look after its natural beauty.

The amendment seeks to get the approval for every new lease that we enter into of the appropriate national park, the Nature Conservancy Council and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds. I have been a member of the RSPB for years. I am not sure whether I have got my new status correct, but I think that I am now a fellow— [HON. MEMBERS: "Hear, hear."] It is an absolute qualification for being Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. I am sure that my colleagues on the Duchy Council share a general desire to make sure that we look after the wildlife and preserve the countryside on tracts of land that are owned by the Duchy, inside the national parks. So far as I am aware, the Duchy has never been accused of doing anything to damage sites of scientific interest of national park areas—certainly not in my time in the House. However, I shall look at any complaints, if people can find any, in any part of the County Palatine.

The Acts that we are repealing have not had much to do with that. Previous legislation allowed building leases up to 99 years. During a 99-year lease one can do a lot of damage to a stretch of moorland or to the foreshore that we own. In this case, I do not think that it is legislative protection that has made the Duchy a reasonable custodian of the areas of natural beauty that it owns.

The hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras correctly predicted that I would think that his amendment went too far. In his enthusiasm, he has sought to require that every new lease should require consultation with the three bodies, and that if any one of the three objects to a new lease it should have to come to both Houses of Parliament for an affirmative resolution. In the areas of land that we are discussing, enormous numbers of transactions could be described as new leases. The amendment would mean that every cottage letting, every farm letting and every sporting letting would have to be submitted to each of the three bodies for its opinion.

I am not sure that any of the three bodies concerned would welcome that, because they would require substantial staff to be able to handle the flood of matters on which they would have to report back, and we would have an unnecessary restriction on the whole estate.

12.15 am

In case the House feels that the Duchy Council and I are a band of amateurs for seeking to protect the national parks — the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) understandably doubted my qualifications for being chairman of the Council managing such a large estate—I hasten to assure the House that I receive £2,000 a year, which is probably all that I am worth as Chancellor of the Duchy. My belief when I was appointed that the £2,0 was a bonus extra to my salary as a Cabinet Minister was rapidly shattered: my Cabinet salary is docked by the appropriate amount, to ensure that I am not better paid than any of my colleagues. The hours that I spend on the Duchy each week are therefore not wildly rewarded, but they are rewarding in themselves.

[Mr. Kenneth Clarke]

More to the point, there is a professional staff. There is a clerk to the Council, and people with expertise in surveying all the aspects of the estate who carry out a good deal of the management of the Duchy lands, and do so very well.

I hope that the House is persuaded that the Duchy is an extremely reasonable custodian of areas of great natural beauty and interest, and that this proposal would be excessive and probably unworkable.

Amendment negatived.

Motion made, That the Bill be now read the Third time.

[Queen's Consent, on behalf of the Crown, signified.]

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read the Third time, and passed.

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS, &c.

Motion made and Question put forthwith pursuant to Standing Order No. 101(5) (Standing Committees on Statutory Instruments &c.)

Local Government Finance

That the Code of Local Government Audit Practice for England and Wales, a copy of which was laid before this House on 26th November, be approved.—[Mr. Lennox-Boyd.]

Question agreed to.

PETITION

Abortion

12.16 am

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): With nine and a half hours or so to go before the debate on the Abortion (Amendment) Bill, I beg leave to present a petition signed by Sandra Grice of Burnett place, Bradford 5, and 343 of my constituents, many of whom are students at Bradford university, who wish to pray

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland Parliament assembled, the Humble Petition of United Kingdom Residents Showeth That The Abortion (Amendment) Bill, which proposes to reduce the upper limit for abortion will, if enacted, restrict women's choices, endanger their health and open the door to further attacks on the 1967 Abortion Act. Wherefore, your Petitioners pray that your Honourable House do Vote against the Abortion (Amendment) Bill.

To lie upon the Table.

Kampuchea

Motion made, and Question proposed do now adjourn.—[Mr. Lennox-Boyd

12.17 am

Mrs. Ann Clwyd (Cynon Valley): I opportunity of this Adjournment debate

It is now nine years since Pol Pot and regime were ousted from Kampuchea Vietnamese army. Some weeks ago, w country visiting Oxfam-supported pro senior Government officials, the first p resolve the conflict were taking place Kampuchea's Prime Minister, Hun Sihanouk, former ruler of Cambodia an president of the so-called Coalition Democratic Kampuchea, which is dom Rouge and receives cash and recogniti Governments. At this moment, the secr is going on in Paris.

People in Kampuchea are very excit about the talks, because they are desper is not surprising in a country where ov were killed, tortured, starved and persec and 1978.

The Vietnamese invasion at that time Kampucheans from being killed by Po reason that they stay there, and the K their presence, is that the Khmer Ro launch guerrilla attacks within the coun border.

Incredibly, Pol Pot and the Khmer international recognition at the United the components of the Coalition Democratic Kampuchea. Britain w Governments who, incredibly, support

On our first day in Phnom Penh we guide to see a school in which the K imprisoned, tortured and killed about 16 Only five were known to have esca Vietnamese liberated the city from Pol guide, in a shocking reminder of the months and 20 days of Pol Pot terror, before the Pol Pot regime. "A student said, "hoping to become a teacher." "An dreams have been changed," he said qu

We were taken to see the mass grave of the villages. The remains are now to exhibition. Hundreds of skulls were stac other human bones were in a separate saw the film "The Killing Fields" will rec those scenes.

In Phnom Penh itself, the capital, on civilised city, now almost no house ground floor level and there are few ind cattle and hens wander around the main supply is erratic. There is little street lig curfew at 9 o'clock every night becau guerrilla attacks by the Khmer Rouge.

The city's waterworks is one of the pro assists. It would cost millions of poun Without bilateral aid, that would be im currently has a £1·5 million programme supporting such infrastructure work no the United Nations or by bilateral Government do not recognise the Kampuchean Government. They consider them to be a puppet of Vietnam and therefore give no aid. Oxfam is assisting in the rehabilitation of an essential ferry link and workshop, and also with the important jute industry. These have all been the object of guerrilla attacks by forces morally backed by Western Governments.

Since 1979, Kampuchea has made progress in education, health and industry, but it is still a long way behind the standards of other developing countries. At the rate it is going, it will be many years before it can restore the damage done by wars to the country and especially to the people. The lack of educated and technically skilled people is a major problem for a country attempting to rebuild. Thousands were deliberately exterminated by Pol Pot.

There are only five vets in the entire country, and of 20,000 teachers only 5,000 remain. By 1979 Pol Pot had destroyed education, money, industry and culture. There was no public transport, no telephones or postal system and hardly any clean water, electricity or sanitation. Now only 1 per cent. of the population has access to a clean water supply.

In the main paediatric hospital in Phnom Penh the doctor in charge told us that only six doctors out of 500 of his generation had survived. Now one in six children under five dies from fever, typhoid, dysentry and diseases related to malnutrition.

Compared with several African countries, Kampuchea clearly has many resources. It has the potential to be self-sufficient in food and even to export. Today it cannot even produce enough to feed itself. The quantity of aid received by the country means that it can only stay at that level of development. Other countries are generous in emergencies, supplying food and seed, but they will not provide the tools that would help Kampuchea to rehabilitate, for example, the irrigation sector to enable it to improve control of the water or the equipment to increase the catch of fish. The absurdity of the present position is that everything is there to make the country self-sufficient.

There is a feeling of great insecurity. People do not know what is going to happen tomorrow, let alone next week or next year. They are afraid and discouraged. They cannot get the kind of aid they want. The backing they had hoped for from from the West is not there, and they are being dragged into a strong alliance and debt with the Eastern bloc, especially Vietnam.

From conversations with senior Government Ministers, officials and others in Kampuchea I am certain that they do not want that. They would like a more open system and relationship with the West. Under the present climate of hostility and repeated warfare, the Hun Sen Government in Kampuchea have never been given a chance to establish good relations with the West. Certainly no one would dispute that in foreign affairs and security matters there is a strong Vietnamese influence because they see Kampuchea as a legitimate security interest for them. They do not want a country backed by China on their southern as well as their northern border. So it is important for them that Kampuchea remains friendly.

There seems no reason to doubt Vietnam's repeated assertions that it is prepared to withdraw completely from Kampuchea by 1990, and before then, if a political settlement can be reached. A few miles from the border of Kampuchea in Thailand, about 275,000 Kampucheans are living in eight closed camps. They are controlled by three political groupings that make up the United N recognised Coalition Government of Dem Kampuchea. The strongest military group is the Rouge, still led by the same people who were res for killing the Kampucheans between 1975 and 1

Although ostensibly civilian, the camps serve th function of supporting the anti-Vietnamese re movement. According to the International Co Voluntary Agencies and the Foreign Affairs Committee, the camps are all used as rest and re centres for soldiers returning from the front. Fou camps run by the Khmer Rouge are closed monitoring, which is ironic, as one of the argume by the West for not giving aid to Kampuchea i cannot be monitored. That does not seem to matt it comes to giving aid on the border.

Surely the greatest need is to get people ou camps because they are virtually prisoners there. not want another Palestinian camp on the bo south-east Asia. How long are the West and th prepared to leave those people rotting on the bo

Meanwhile the people of Kampuchea cont suffer. Trapped between super-power and rivalries, they are still isolated by the majo Governments as though they were personally to bl the presence of the Vietnamese.

I urge the Government, who could play important role in this matter, to reconvene th Geneva conference on Indochina, which was co-ch the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union, promote a negotiated settlement that would isolate and the Khmer Rouge. In the meantime, I Government, as a matter of the greatest urg provide reconstruction and development aid as possible to Kampuchea, a country that has suf much for so long.

12.28 am

Mr. Jim Lester (Broxtowe): I am pleased to be join the debate briefly. It deserves more time on occasion.

I agree very much with the description by t Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) of our Kampuchea, Phnom Penh and the other regio pleased that, since we returned and spoke to Friend the Minister for Overseas Developm Government have changed their policy and are to consider humanitarian schemes in Kampuche is a step forward that we welcome.

Kampuchea is a victim of international circu trapped between the two major nations of Thail Vietnam. Historically, it has always been a between them, either for security or for env potential for agricultural development. Ther question but that the talks yesterday and the n rounds of talks give hope for the peace th desperately desired by the people living in Kam and for an end to the uncertainty and nightmare occurred there since I entered the House in 197 when Pol Pot arrived and was defeated.

Then there must be progress, as the hon. La towards self-sufficiency. Kampuchea is a country potential. It is beautiful, and could not only sufficient but could play a part under a recon Government in ASEAN. It would be helpfu Government, with their traditional diplomatic sk asked by ASEAN and other countries to reconvene the international conference, which, it is to be hoped, would follow an agreement between Prince Sihanouk and Hun Sen that would restore that part of the world.

[Mr. Jim Lester]

I have also travelled to Thailand and have visited the camps on the border. There is no way in which those people have a future in the present situation. There is no opportunity for third country development. There has been an agreement since we went to Kampuchea before Christmas, with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, I think, that those refugees can now, should they be allowed to leave the camps, return to their homes and to the acres of potential agricultural development. One million hectares are currently lying idle.

I support the suggestion that we play as active and as diplomatic a role as possible to bring an end to the suffering of that country and that region.

12.31 am

Mr. Chris Mullin (Sunderland, South): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) and the hon. Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on raising this issue. I think that the British public will be very surprised that Her Majesty's Government are supporting, and have supported for some years, the dreaded Khmer Rouge. It is in my view a wicked and cynical state of affairs, the purpose of which is to bleed Vietnam. I know that many British diplomats in the area who have dealt with this in one capacity or another are deeply ashamed of what has quietly been going on.

I recognise that we are a very junior partner in this enterprise and that the main villains are China, which supplies the guns, Thailand, where the guns are transported in Thai army lorries directly to the Khmer Rouge, and the Americans, who have organised the lobby at the United Nations that causes our representative and the representatives of many other Governments to vote each year, first of all for the Khmer Rouge directly, and in the last few years for the coalition which is a thinly disguised front for the Khmer Rouge. As I say, we are only a junior partner in this enterprise, but it is one of the most humiliating examples of our satellite status in relation to the United States.

I have travelled in that region quite a lot in the last 15 years. I was in Kampuchea during the war, before the rise of Pol Pot, and I was there in the immediate aftermath of Pol Pot.

A couple of years ago, in Bangkok, I called at the British embassy and said to a gentleman there that we appeared to be supporting the Khmer Rouge. He said, "Oh, no. It is all going to be different this time. Mr. Reagan has promised that the Khmer Rouge is to have free elections." I said, "Please tell me that I am not hearing this." He repeated what he had said. He said, "I know why you are worried, I have read the books; but it is all going to be different this time." I repeated, "Please tell me that I am not hearing this." He said "Are we talking off the record?" I said that we were and he said, "Quite frankly, I think it is appalling." That was a representative of Her Majesty's Government.

Everybody connected with this shameful enterprise is deeply ashamed of it and I hope that in his speech this evening the Minister will face up to the situation squarely and not try to pretend that we are not supporting the coalition with Mr. Son Sann and Sih look respectable. The people who a are the Khmer Rouge. The guns are The food is coming from the We contribution to that food. We knov going, and the only way we have got years is by not talking about it, and the days when we do not talk about end.

12.34 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretar and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Th hon. Friend the Member for Broxto the hon. Member for Sunderland, So congratulating the hon. Member for Clwyd) on raising this subject and graphic account of her recent visit to

During this debate I will refer to C Kampuchea, because, of course, Ca which is preferred by the majority inhabitants to the term Kampuche brought into vogue by the Khmer R

Let me say at the outset that th share the concerns raised by hon. Me of the House in this debate. We too w can to help the Cambodian people terrible hardships that they have su continue to suffer.

I very much welcome this opportu policy. Our policy is based on the peace, stability and long-term prosper country, and, indeed, of the region, establishment of an independent Cambodia. That means a Cambodia troops. It means a Cambodia with a chosen by its own people.

Our policy is rooted in the fundar the United Nations' charter and I am a Members for Cynon Valley and for have not referred to that. At last year's proposals based on those principles w overwhelming majority. Indeed, th endorsed for the past nine years.

The tragedy is that that annual end necessary, that we should have to say a these basic principles should apply to apply to the rest of the world. The rea do that is simple and straightforward completely illegal occupation of C Vietnam's cynical and flagrant disregar of international law.

Mr. Mullin: Will the Minister give

Mr. Eggar: The hon. Gentleman has in the debate. I want to try to make my Government's position clearly and I Gentleman will understand if I prefer

The description given by the hon. M Valley of the relationship of Cambo might most charitably be described as Vietnam can be in no doubt about th opinion. Last year 117 countries—mor — supported the United Nations Cambodia. Those 117 countries could h as they have been tonight, as "a group". But Vietnam, and its Soviet paymasters, ignore the views of that overwhelming number of countries, just as they ignore Cambodian demands for freedom. We cannot, and will not, accept this unlawful, cruel and oppressive occupation.

Cambodia is governed by a regime which is utterly without legitimacy. [Interruption.] The dependence of the so-called Heng Samrin — [Interruption.] The hon. Member for Sunderland, South has not been a Member of the House for long, but he should have learned by now to listen to the contributors to an Adjournment debate. I did him that courtesy, despite the fact that he did not tell me that he wished to take part. I request at least some courtesy in return.

Cambodia is governed by a regime utterly without legitimacy. That regime was hastily cobbled together by the Vietnamese on the eve of their invasion. Without the presence of massive Vietnamese forces, the regime simply would not exist.

Vietnam's supporters say that the United Nations' vote is a vote for the odious Khmer Rouge. That is nonsense. The annual vote is a ringing endorsement of the rights of the Cambodian people. But when the Vietnamese seek to join the worldwide protest at the Khmer Rouge record on human rights, let us not forget that for years it was the Vietnamese who tried to block discussion in the United Nations and elsewhere. Is this a conversion on the road to Damascus, or a cynical tactic? Only yesterday the House was hearing of the continuing plight of the boat people. The House yesterday drew a clear conclusion about the regime in Vietnam.

We have no doubt that, given a free choice, the people of Cambodia would resoundingly reject the Khmer Rouge. We withdrew recognition from the appalling Pol Pot regime in 1979. Hearing the words of the hon. Members for Cynon Valley and for Sunderland, South tonight, it is strange to recall that it was a Labour Government who saw fit to establish relations with Pol Pot in 1976.

The resistance to the Heng Samrin regime is broadly based. The resistance, in the shape of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, represents not simply the Khmer Rouge but the non-Communist groups of former Head of State Prince Sihanouk and of Mr. Son Sann.

Prince Sihanouk in particular retains widespread loyalty among Cambodians, both within and outside Cambodia. The Vietnamese know this only too well; it is one reason why they retain such massive military forces in Cambodia. They cannot trust Heng Samrin's troops to fight the resistance. Too many of the regime's troops share the aims of the resistance.

The continuing talks between Prince Sihanouk and Hun Sen are a welcome breakthrough in the diplomatic impasse. We hope they may be the first steps towards a negotiated settlement, but we cannot underestimate the obstacles.

Vietnam should withdraw all its troops from Cambodia now and signal its readiness to enter serious negotiations. Sadly, we have seen no evidence of a change of heart in Hanoi. Instead, Vietnam, supported by the Soviet Union, flagrantly and consistently ignores world opinion. It talks grandly of international conferences, but shows no readiness to negotiate. Vietnam's talk of an international conference is nothing but a smokescreen and a propaganda ploy.

Hon. Members have rightly raised the appalli of the ordinary people of Cambodia. We alr substantial aid to the most affected Cambodia forced by Vietnamese aggression to flee across t to Thailand. In 1984, there were 230,000 peo camps. Today there are 275,000. More are arriv day. They have fled in search of safety. Yet Vi aggression on the Thai-Cambodian border ha further casualites. Last year saw the cynical shelli Vietnamese of the main refugee camp, site 2.

We and most other aid donors agree that it help these people, and I too have visited the ca view was endorsed by the Foreign Affairs Com this House only last year. Since 1985, we have c £3·7 million through the United Nations bor operation, the UN High Commissioner for Refu Red Cross and other voluntary agencies, and I p to the work of those agencies.

We are ready to respond to further appeals organisations, within the limits of resources av should stress that this aid is solely humanitarian medical and food supplies. We give no military and no aid whatever goes to the Khmer Rou directly or indirectly.

Hon. Members have also called for aid to C itself. I understand, and share, their desire to suffering. With other donors, we keep under review the possible need for emergency relief. I hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe that we w open-mindedly at support for any interr organised relief effort inside Cambodia.

But we cannot accept that at this time we sh development assistance to a regime which depe very existence on Vietnamese occupying forces. W allow Vietnam to bankroll its oppression of C with western aid. It would be a negation of principles of aid itself.

Vietnamese cynicism knows no bounds. Vi bankrupt. Even its Soviet paymaster is grumbli misuse of aid it has given. But, instead of pulli Cambodia and setting its own economy in order, holds out a begging bowl to the west. A Go whose policies have led to the forced expulsion million of their own inhabitants plead for "huma assistance. What an irony.

We watch with interest recent diplomatic m wish them well, but the fundamental require change of heart in Hanoi and in Moscow. We on Vietnam to enter negotiations, and on the Sov to use its influence to promote those negotiations for a will to negotiate and a will to find an end to

Our condemnation of Vietnamese occupati the widest international support. Our position is our partners in the European Community, it is our friends in the Association of South East Asia and it is shared widely, as evidenced by the among the non-aligned.

The Government believe that we must maintain and strengthen this unanimity of int view. It offers the best, and indeed the only, p restoring independence to Cambodia and safeguarding the lives and well-being of its peo

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at fifteen minutes to O

House of Commons

Friday 22 January 1988

The House met at half-past Nine o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITIONS

Abortion (Amendment) Bill

9.35 am

Mr. Chris Smith (Islington, South and Finsbury): I have the honour, Mr. Speaker, to present a petition on behalf of about 400 or 500 of my constituents. It is headed "Fight Alton's Bill" and states:

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland Parliament assembled, the Humble Petition of United Kingdom Residents showeth that the Abortion (Amendment) Bill which proposes to reduce the upper limit for abortion, will, if enacted, restrict women's choices, endanger their health and open the door to further attacks on the 1967 Abortion Act.

Wherefore, your Petitioners pray that your Honourable House do vote against the Abortion (Amendment) Bill.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): I wish to present a petition, Mr. Speaker, to the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

The petition

showeth that the Abortion (Amendment) Bill which proposes to reduce the upper limit for abortion will, if enacted, restrict women's choices, endanger their health and open the door to further attacks on the 1967 Abortion Act.

Wherefore, your petitioners pray that the Honourable House do vote against the Abortion (Amendment) Bill.

It has been signed by 1,065 people, the majority of whom are my constituents. I am pleased to be able to present the petition on their behalf, and I fully support it. I trust that the House of Commons will reject the Bill that is to be debated today.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Geoffrey Lofthouse (Pontefract and Castleford): I beg leave to present a petition from the women's council of the Pontefract and Castleford constituency, signed by hundreds of my constituents. They beg to ask the House not to pass the Abortion (Amendment) Bill.

Wherefore, your petitioners pray that your Honourable House do vote against the Abortion (Amendment) Bill.

To lie upon the Table.

Abortion (Amendment) Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

9.38 am

Mr. David Alton (Liverpool, Mossley Hill): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

In coming to the debate this morning, three months after I presented the Bill, I thank those hon. Members on both sides of the argument for the way in which, generally, the debate has been conducted. This is a difficult issue, which rouses sensitivities, anger, bitterness, and, sometimes, even hatred. By and large, Members of this House have conducted the debate in the country with great dignity and decorum, giving this issue the respect to which it is entitled. I hope that we shall be able to mirror that in the House today.

Fifty-nine years after the passage of the Infant Life Preservation Act and 20 years after the passage of the Abortion Act, it is my hope that the House will today allow this Bill to proceed to Commitee. Public and parliamentary opinion clearly believes that, in the light of medical and scientific advances, a clear upper time limit beyond which abortion may not occur should be established.

Wherever we come from in this debate, be we pro-life or pro-choice, opposed to or in favour of abortion, no one can be sanguine about the nature and consequences of late abortions. That is the issue before the House today and this Bill provides a vehicle for public policy to be reviewed.

The existing statute regulating abortion comprises three pieces of legislation—the Offences Against the Person Act 1861, the Infant Life (Preservation) Act 1929 and the Abortion Act 1967. No upper time limit when abortions may occur is specified in the 1967 Act. No distinction is made between late and early abortions. Indeed, section 5(1) declares:

"Nothing in this Act shall affect the provisions of the Infant Life (Preservation) Act 1929."

Those who framed the 1929 legislation came to the question after an assize judge had before him a case in which a child had been killed shortly before the moment of birth and before it had an existence independent of its mother. It emerged that the killer could not be charged with any criminal offence, so a Bill was introduced in the House of Lords by one of the Lords of Appeal to fill the gap between abortion and murder. In framing the legislation, it was considered necessary to exclude the case where a foetus was destroyed at a time when it was not capable of being born alive, so a rule of thumb was created in section 1(2) of the Act to the effect that, at any time after the 28th week of pregnancy, the child is, prima facie, assumed to be capable of being born alive.

It does not seem unreasonable, 59 years after the passage of that Act, to ask Parliament to reconsider this rule of thumb. Indeed, given the gigantic strides in medicine and technology, where medical knowledge has increased by leaps and bounds, it is incumbent on any civilised or ordered society to review its public policy and to strike a proper balance between claimed rights and responsibilities.

Many of us hold powerfully held convictions about the right to life over the notion that we have the right to choose to take life, but this debate is not about that. It is about what, in the judgment of individual Members of

[Mr. David Alton]

Parliament, the public interest requires and what people as a whole can be brought to accept as a rational solution to an intractable problem.

Sir Jim Spicer (Dorset, West): The hon. Gentleman will know that I wrote to him three days ago, enclosing a letter which I sent to my constituents concerning this point about what the time should be. Most hon. Members agree that 28 weeks is not acceptable, but, equally, many hon. Members do not accept 18 weeks. Will the hon. Gentleman give the House an assurance, during the debate, that he is prepared to accept a middle-ground time, which will bring many people on to his side?

Mr. Alton: That is a helpful intervention and I am happy to answer the hon. Gentleman's question. Many hon. Members have written to me. Some have suggested that the time limit should be more in line with other European countries where the average is about 14 weeks. Other hon. Members have suggested that it should be 14, 16, 18, 22, or anything up to 28 weeks. I have made it clear that, although in my judgment 18 weeks is about the right time, I recognise that there are strongly held views on this subject throughout the House. Indeed, it would be proper to examine in Committee other possible points where a time limit might be established. I give the hon. Gentleman and the House the assurance that, if an amendment were suggested, provided it did not emasculate the Bill beyond the point of recognition, I should be happy to accept anything that could be done to rationalise the law.

Mr. Dafydd Wigley (Caernarfon): The hon. Gentleman said that, in his judgment, 18 weeks was about the right time. What does he have to say to the parents of one, two or three disabled children who are yearning to have another child who is not disabled? How does he advise the mother when the choices are either to have a disabled child with whom they cannot cope or to have a child who will suffer so much that they are not willing to see such suffering? Is he prepared to close the door on that family having additional children?

Mr. Alton: The hon. Gentleman and I have discussed this matter, for obvious reasons, many times. We both have very personal, strongly-held views about the eugenics question and about whether abortion might take place on the ground of disability. The Bill contains an exclusion clause for those cases of disability which are incompatible with life. If a child has anencephaly, or there is Potter's or Edward's syndrome it would be proper, under the terms of the Bill, for a termination to occur, but I disagree with the hon. Gentleman about the legitimacy of taking life on the ground of disability. However, I recognise——

Mr. Barry Field (Isle of Wight) rose——

Mr. Alton: ——the power of the hon. Gentleman's comments. I also recognise that, given that 92 per cent. of all late abortions involved healthy children, if an exclusion clause were included in the Bill in Committee to deal with the question of disability it would still be a worthwhile measure. The widespread debate which accompanies such an initiative is of equal importance to the Bill. That is where attitudes can be challenged and the climate changed. I refuse to believe that anyone is in favour of abortion, and that is why it is right that, time and again, politicians, public figures and the country must discuss this question.

Before coming to the detail of the Bill and to t question on which we shall vote later, I wish to place t Bill in the context of that national debate. Twenty ye ago, when introducing his Bill, my right hon. Friend t Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (M Steel) said that it was his intention to eliminate back-stre abortions. He said that it was not the intention of t promoters of the Bill to leave a wider door open f abortion on request. Yet who can doubt, almost 3 milli abortions later — 600 abortions are undertaken eve working day, some even on the grounds of the gender a child, simply because it is a little girl—that we ha anything other than abortion on demand in most parts Britain?

In a census of 746 gynaecologists, undertaken Gallup and published two days ago, over 400—86 p cent.—stated that, from their experience, abortion demand is now available in the NHS hospitals in whi they work.

Miss Marjorie Mowlam (Redcar): The hon. Gentlema said that to his knowledge, terminations were taking pla in cases where the gender of the child was in question. Th is quite clearly illegal and cannot be supported. If the ho Gentleman knows of such cases, he should present the to the Director of Public Prosecutions for prosecutio Will he give us that assurance?

Mr. Alton: The example highlighted by BBC Radio has already been presented by the right hon. Member fo Castle Point (Sir B. Braine) in a letter to the Attorney General. In the view of many hon. Members, this ough to be challenged as being illegal under the terms of th 1967 Act. The fact that BBC Radio 4 is prepared t substantiate those claims and has provided chapter an verse shows that the matter ought to be a cause fo concern.

In 1967, abortion was presented almost as a panacea o as a universal remedy. In 1967, we were told that abortio would reduce illegitimacy. Today, it stands at 15 per cen and is rising. In 1967, we were told that there would be les child abuse because every child would be wanted However, scarcely a day passed in 1987 when we did no hear of a case of a child being physically or sexuall abused. In 1967, we were told that abortion would give woman new rights. By 1987, many women and men ha been emotionally and psychologically scarred and th demand for post-abortion counselling has been growing We have learnt much in 20 years, and even more since th passage of the 1929 Act.

It was only in 1969—two years after the passage o my right hon. Friend's Bill — that the science o foetoscopy really took off. In 1967, let alone in 1929 medics could not take an electrocardiogram of the baby which shows its heartbeat and reaction to painful stimul as its heartbeat increases. Twenty years ago, it would have been impossible accurately to date the exact time o gestational development or the characteristics of the developing child. Clearly, ultrasound scanning, chorionic villus sampling and amniocentesis have changed all that. Since 1967 we have revolutionised our awareness of the humanity of the developing child. Since then, we have learned a lot also about the consequences of abortion, both for the mother and child, and for the medics as well. I am amazed that those who counsel in favour of abortion, especially so late in pregnancy, would really warn a woman of the potential physical and psychological consequences. Abortion was recently described by an opponent of my Bill as being

"as safe as having an injection of penicillin".

We must challenge the assumption that abortion is either prudent or desirable.

Not only are there the physical effects of invasive surgery on perfectly healthy women but there are the psychological consequences of post-abortion trauma. In 1976 the Department of Health and Social Security started to fund the Manchester unit of the Royal College of General Practitioners which is studying the psychiatric morbidity experienced by women after an abortion. The report will be published shortly. But today The Independent shows that of those surveyed 79 per cent. admitted that, if they knew that a child had quickened in the womb, they would experience a great sense of guilt if they were to carry out an abortion after that time. That is how people tick. A late abortion—when a woman has felt her child quicken, when its humanity can be in no doubt—is inevitably the most traumatic abortion of all.

Kathleen McDonnell, in her book "Not an Easy Choice —A Feminist Re-examines Abortion"—I do not believe that abortion is ever an easy choice — quotes approvingly a young abortion councillor who says:

"Yes, this is killing, there is no way around it. But I am willing to accept that."

McDonnell says:

"there is no escaping the fact that we have, with full consciousness, terminated life. This is most emphatically not the same as blaming ourselves or burdening ourselves with an unnecessary load of guilt."

But it is simple casuistry to say, "Yes, it is killing, but, no, I will not feel any sense of guilt."

Mr. Jimmy Hood (Clydesdale): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Alton: I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman, who has been trying to intervene.

Mr. Hood: Does the hon. Gentleman remember that I wrote to him on 15 October in response to a circular which was sent to hon. Members and asked him about a particular point? I ask the hon. Gentleman the same question now: does he believe in abortion at 18 weeks? It is important for that question to be answered. Some of the people who have been canvassing and lobbying hon. Members look at the present proposals as a step to follow the abolition of abortion in all circumstances. The hon. Gentleman should tell the House whether he believes in abortion at 18 weeks.

Mr. Alton: The hon. Gentleman is perfectly entitled to ask that question. I have never made any secret about my views. In 1981, when I attempted to reduce the upper time limit, I made exactly the same point that, for me, abortion, whether late or early, whether legal or illegal, is the taking of life. That is not the Bill before the House at the moment. This is a legitimate review of public policy. That is what is contained in the Bill.

Given the psychological and physical consequences to which a woman may be subject, having had an abortion, why do counsellors advise her to have an abortion, especially so late in a pregnancy? One reason is revealed in a figure which has been provided to me by the Department of Health and Social Security. The Department confirms that 32 individuals are directors or trustees of a company or a charity providing abortion counselling and are simultaneously involved in private clinics undertaking abortions. About £12 million is estimated to have passed hands in this business last year. According to the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists survey into late abortions, in one year alone 60 per cent. of the late abortions undertaken in private clinics were performed by just 11 practitioners. They and the clinics in which they work netted £2 million in this business.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman (Lancaster): I point out the sad case of one of my constituents. She says:

"I have had two abortions. The private clinic that I attended on both occasions made it relatively easy for me to obtain an abortion. The plausible reasons that I gave for seeking the terminations were readily accepted.

I received no counselling but I now realise that this is due to the fact that private clinics run a profitable industry in human weakness.

In all probability both babies would have been born perfectly healthy and even though I considered, at that time, I could not bring them up myself, I was not reminded of the fact that there are only too many childless couples anxious to adopt.

However, private clinics are not in the business of giving support and pointing out the available options.

Sadly, I only considered my own situation at the time."

Mr. Alton: I am grateful to the hon. Lady for that important intervention. Some 88 per cent. of all late abortions take place not in the National Health Service but in private clinics. Half of the late abortions are on women from overseas, who are then duly despatched on an aeroplane back to the countries from which they came, without any care or compassion shown for them. How do we know what physical or psychological condition a woman will be in when she returns to her country? That is why there is a case to be answered. We must show compassion for the woman and the child. If there are consequences in a late abortion for a woman, there are consequences for the child as well. Every country and every age will be judged by the simple test: how did they treat their people?

By 18 weeks, a foetus is not just a clump of tissues, not just a blob of jelly. The child has sentience and can feel pain. If a light is shone at its mother's womb, the child will react and turn away. The child has a complete skeleton and reflexes. It pumps 50 pints of blood a day. A report "Human Procreation — Ethical Aspects of the New Techniques", published by the Council for Science and Society — certainly not a body supporting my view — states that pain is experienced

"after the foetus has developed a nervous system, six weeks after pregnancy being the earliest."

In November, Dr. Peter McCullagh, an eminent immunologist, stated that research on foetal nervous systems showed that pain could be felt at eight or nine weeks, and perhaps earlier. He said that babies could be in agony during abortions.

What, under a late abortion, do we allow to happen to a child? Two principal methods are used in a late abortion. Of the 12 per cent. of late abortions undertaken in the NHS, the method known as prostaglandins is the most commonly used. By this method, labour is induced by drugs. The labour will be more painful than in a birth and can last for 20 hours or more. There is a chance that when prostaglandins is used the child will be born alive. To avoid this a child is usually poisoned before the abortion. Because this is a long-drawn-out business, the method of late abortion used in private clinics is primarily dilatation and evacuation. By this method, the cervix is dilated and the baby's body removed piece by piece. To facilitate its extraction from the womb, the skull is crushed, the spine snapped and the body removed piece by piece. An attendant nurse then has the job of reassembling the body to ensure that nothing has been left behind that might cause infection. Throughout this procedure no anaesthetic is used on the child.

[Mr. Alton]

Mrs. Alice Mahon (Halifax): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Alton: In a moment.

A nurse involved in these late abortions wrote to me in these terms:

"Although the doctor commences the infusion, it's the nurses who have the job of looking after the patient—and some of these are so advanced it's like a normal delivery. Sometimes the foetus lives for a few minutes though the harsh contractions caused by the drugs have usually battered it to death. I don't know which is worse, those done in theatre, where you see the uterine contents being sucked into a bottle, or seeing the bruised bodies of these always perfectly formed foetuses in a receiver on the wall."

This is a corrupting and degrading business for the medical staff who become the destroyer instead of defender of life.

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow East): The hon. Gentleman started on a premise that we all share: no one is in favour of abortion. However, does he agree that the photographic material sent out by the anti-abortion lobby is deplorable in that it is difficult for laymen to handle as they are beset with the horrors of life and death in all medical aspects and not just in birth?

Mr. Alton: No. It is time that people saw the reality. It is also an extraordinary paradox.

Mrs. Mahon: Does the hon. Gentleman share my concern about what happened before the 1967 Act, when the foetus was stabbed by a knitting needle or a screwdriver? I had direct experience of that, as I was a nurse in the wards which received the victims of back-street abortionists and women who had had self-induced abortions. It was horrific. At least now abortions take place in clean, clinically controlled environments. There was more suffering, pain and anguish for women then than there is now.

Mr. Alton: I agree with the hon. Lady that a return to the back streets would not be progress. If it were possible to have introduced a Abortion (Utopia) Bill, I would have introduced it. No one would wish for a return to the back streets, but the nature of the operation that I described can be undertaken only by a doctor and a nurse if it is undertaken so late in pregnancy.

In other countries in western Europe that have a rational time limit such as that I have suggested, there is no problem with back-street abortions. In confirmation of that, my right hon. Friend the Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) said:

"it true . . . that the bulk of the illegal abortions, the back-street abortions, which go on today occur not at the stage where the foetus is fairly advanced . . . but at an early stage."—[Official Report, 13 July 1967; Vol. 750, c. 1347.]

It is a paradox that we spend some £13 million a year on abortions in Britain, when doctors and nurses should be using their skills to care for and cradle life, not to extinguish it and snuff it out. Care and kill can never be used as synonyms.

The nurse's observation that aborted babies ar is invariably true. Of the 8,276 late abortions un last year, 92 per cent. were on perfectly healthy The Bill, by imposing an upper time limit, sets ou that. Hard cases are used to try to rubbish the hard cases make bad law. However, those hard c be brought up during the debate and should be e in detail.

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): Will t Gentleman give way?

Mr. Alton: No. I have given way already.

Some hon. Members do not share my vie disability. I have already said something about answer to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. About 8 per cent. of late abortions occur amniocentesis or another test that shows that a c have a disability. As Professor Ron Taylor, a supp the Bill and the professor of obstetrics and gynaec London university stated in last week's Sunday T

"With new techniques such as chorionic villus and ultrasound, discovery of such abnormalities a diagnosed are found much earlier than 18 weeks."

It is true that not all conditions diagno amniocentesis will be discovered by CVS—and not yet available everywhere. I recognise that so Members will wish to include an exclusion clause post-18-week abortion on the ground of disabili is a perfectly proper issue for the Committee to c Although I personally do not support aborti eugenic grounds, I have made it clear that even if exemption were placed in the Bill it would sti enormous worth.

For six years before coming to the House I work children with special needs. It would have been man or woman who would have told them that the have been better dead. At the outset, when I ann my intention to introduce the Bill, a young woma Ellen Wilkie contacted me. She was born with m dystrophy. The doctors had told her parents t would not live beyond her teens. Ellen is now 29, a classics degree and writes poetry and plays. She her letter, more eloquently than I could say:

"No one can say what a disabled person will be of. Who are we to play God?"

Disability should not be a disqualification for life

Interestingly, Wednesday's Gallup surv gynaecologists revealed several significant things. all gynaecologists questioned sought a later limit fo handicaps, such as anencephaly or Potter's sy where the baby cannot survive. My Bill contains a exemption for such circumstances. However, two or 68 per cent., believed that an upper limit of 1 was right in the case of minor handicaps such as h club foot, or impaired hearing or sight. Almost hal per cent., said that there should be no abortions f minor handicaps. The president of the Royal Co Obstetricians and Gynaecologists called for an upp of 24 weeks to allow late abortion for handicap, b suggestion had the support of 31 per cent., or le one-third, of practising gynaecologists in Britian.

There are radical alternatives to utility, ba uninhibited, unqualified, unconditional love, and up by practical support, care and resources. That f bedrock in authentic human values. Abortion defeatism — albeit a defeatism that is often born of desperation and fear. The answer can never be to kill one of the two patients who confront the doctor.

Let me turn to some of the other cases which have been cited by those who oppose the Bill. Contrary to what has been said in newspaper articles and speeches that oppose the Bill, after 18 weeks, abortions are not often performed on young girls. Only 4·7 per cent. of late abortions are performed on girls under 16. Late abortions are not often performed on women with many previous children who cannot face the prospect of another baby. Only 0·8 per cent. of abortions after 18 weeks are on women with more than four children. Late abortions are not often performed on middle-aged women who may have mistaken pregnancy for the menopause. Only 2 per cent. of late abortions are performed on women over 41. Late abortions are not often performed in cases of pregnancy arising out of rape or when pregnancy threatens the life of the mother. During five years, only 13 late abortions, out of 40,000, were performed for one of those two reasons. The Bill specifically allows for a termination of pregnancy when the mother's life is at risk.

We are told that 20 per cent. of late abortions result from delays in the NHS. No doubt the Minister will want to say something about that. However, given that 88 per cent. of late abortions are not even performed in the NHS, that seems a curious claim. The 1984 report of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists stated that 95 per cent. of women presenting for late abortions were operated on within 14 days of first seeking advice.

Opponents of the Bill claim that women will be forced into the back streets. The dilatation and evacuation operation that I mentioned earlier clearly could not be performed by a back-street abortionist. In other EC countries, where time limits are much lower than in the United Kingdom—the average time limit in the EEC is about 14 weeks—that argument has been shown to be scare mongering of the worst kind. Let me re-emphasise that 88 per cent. of late abortions, or 7,270 out of 8,276, were performed under the Act, which allows for social abortions.

Men must, of course, approach the debate with humility and sensitivity. We rarely have to suffer the practical day-to-day experience of an unwanted child. We rarely hear about unmarried fathers, only about unmarried mothers. We do not hear about men having illegitimate children, only women, and how often men smugly talk about fallen women. We never hear about fallen men.

Women are frequently pressurised into abortions by men. Men too often leave a woman in the lurch, having used their sexuality without responsibility. Those who maintain that abortion is purely a woman's issue do women no service; it allows men to evade their responsibilities, and without changes in men's attitudes women will not be truly liberated. Men and women are involved in abortion, and all that is required to come to this debate is humanity.

I believe that I have made out a case for this Bill being allowed a Committee stage. These arguments must then be sifted through and honed.

Speaking on "Woman's Hour", Dame Josephine Barnes, not a supporter of my Bill, but a leading gynaecologist, said:

"We have far too many late abortions in this country. It is deplorable."

Many would share that view.

I have attempted to bring forward a modest Bill, which deals with only 4·8 per cent. of all abortions, but undoubtedly those which carry the gravest consequences for the mother, for the child and for the medic alike. In framing this one-clause Bill, I have demonstrated a willingness to be reasonable. I have made it clear that I will not be intransigent in trying to steer through a much-needed and long overdue reform. It is in that spirit that I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Before I call the first of the Back Benchers to contribute, I remind the House that a great many hon. Members wish to take part in the debate. Well over 30 Members have indicated their wish by letter and there may well be others. I make a special plea for contributions to be brief so that others may be called.

10.10 am

Mr. Andrew MacKay (Berkshire, East): I believe that the Bill is phoney. It does not stand up to close examination. It is perfectly acceptable intellectually and morally to be opposed to abortion, to believe that it should be illegal and to take the view, which I do not share, that it is murder. I have a very close working relationship with the members of the Pro-Life group in my constituency. I understand and respect their views, but I do not go along with them, and they are aware of that.

I cannot understand how the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) can have just plucked out of the air the time of 18 weeks. If he believes that abortion is murder, surely it is murder at 16 weeks, 14 weeks or 12 weeks. What is worse is that the limit of 18 weeks will do grave damage to those parents who have conceived a grossly disabled child in the past, wish to have further children, and know that there is a one in four chance that that child might also be grossly disabled.

The House will be aware that tests can only just be carried out at 18 weeks. Those tests take many weeks before conclusion can be drawn and then, if need be, a traumatic and difficult decision must be made by the parents to arrange an abortion. Under the Bill, many decent, reasonable, caring people will find that they are unable to have an abortion. I am privileged to have in my constituency the headquarters of the epidermolysis bullosa support group, known as DEBRA, under the inspirational directorship of Mrs. Mary Freeman. Some hon. Members came to the DEBRA rally in the Grand Committee Room on Tuesday. Whatever one's view of the Bill, one would have been deeply moved by the people one met there. They were not zealots or fundamentalists; they were Christian, caring people who had experienced the trauma of having a grossly disabled child and did not want to repeat that tragedy. Not unreasonably, they wished to have further children, which their gynaecologist told them had about a three in four chance of being disabled. They would be denied the opportunity to have an abortion if the Bill is passed.

Mr. David Ashby (Leicestershire, North-West): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. MacKay: I will not give way, because Mr. Speaker has indicated that many hon. Members wish to speak. I will give way to my hon. Friend later if he will let me pursue my point.

All hon. Members must have had constituents come to their advice bureaux or surgeries with disabled children.

[Mr. MacKay]

They, like me, will have noted how much those parents have aged. Somebody who looks 65 tells one that he or she is only 40. They perhaps bring with them other normal children, and those normal children are not being properly cared for because, quite rightly and naturally, the parents have to devote every waking hour to that grossly disabled child. The parents fear what will happen to the child if they die early, in their 50s. This becomes a trauma for them, a nightmare, which they get out of perspective, but I can understand that.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: A lady came to my advice bureau with a seriously handicapped child and I saw the look of love on that mother's face. She said that she would not have done without that child; all she wanted was the support services.

Mr. MacKay: My hon. Friend makes a perfectly valid point.

Mr. Ashby: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. MacKay: No, I will not give way; I want to answer the point.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Lancaster (Dame E. Kellett-Bowman) points out, many people have disabled children and they love them and treat them well. They are given excellent services by the local authority and the state.

Like the hon. Member for Mossley Hill, I am not in favour of abortion. All I am in favour of, as a Conservative, is freedom of choice for people to be able to decide. It is a traumatic decision for the parents to have an abortion—not just for the mother, but for the father as well. It does not help if politicians interfere and tell those parents whether they should go ahead with that abortion. It is up to the parents to decide whether they wish to have a grossly disabled child. I could never dream of advising them one way or the other. My wife and I are not sufficiently capable as parents to have a disabled child. To be totally honest, I could not cope with it. I have terrific admiration, as does my hon. Friend the Member for Lancaster, for those people who are able to cope—but the decision must be theirs, not ours.

Another element of the Bill worries me. If passed, the Bill would be the worst piece of class legislation that the House has put on the statute book for many a long day. My affluent, middle-class, and, I hope, by and large intelligent, constituents would have no difficulty in arranging an abortion, either privately or elsewhere. Most of those abortions, except in the case of the disabled, would be well before the 18-week limit, so they could take a very relaxed view.

All hon. Members have had come to their surgeries 15 or 16-year-old girls with a low IQ. They are not aware of what contraception is; they are pregnant, lost and confused. Often the girl does not realise for several months that she is pregnant. She is scared, frightened to speak to her parents and frightened to go to her doctor, so it is many weeks before she faces the crisis. That will be the little girl who will suffer from the Bill, not my affluent constituents. We will then go back to the bad old days, briefly mentioned by the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon), of back-street abortions.

It is only 21 years since the Abortion Act was introduced, but I am sure that everybody can recall the horror of back-street abortions. We are all reali to know that abortions will still take place, wh or illegal, so it is important that they are done clinics where there is good hygiene, good services and a sensitive attitude. A return to abortions will mean a return to deaths and traum people who will suffer are those whom the Ho most want to protect. The vulnerable, the intelligent and the inadequate will be driven to street abortionists, who will be laughing all the bank. That would be a bad example to set.

Like me, many of my hon. Friends would be the limit to be reduced to 24 weeks. Medical advanced immeasurably during the past 20 ye today it is perfectly possible for a child to be weeks. I also believe that abortions on g disability need not be performed after 24 week for disability can be carried out earlier. What sh of us who hold that view do? I suggest that they support the Bill, as my right hon. Friend Minister suggested at the Dispatch Box yester tell the House why. In the past few days, some Friends have said to me, "I am totally against I accept all the arguments on disability. Howeve like the limit to be reduced to 24 weeks. Cannot the Bill in Committee?" My hon. Friend the M Dorset, West (Sir J. Spicer) raised that point e

I will tell the House what will happen if hon. who advocate a limit of 24 weeks vote for the It will get a substantial majority on Second which will mean—I do not object to this—tha Member for Mossley Hill will have a considera the constitution of the Standing Committee. I I would do the same in his position—that he the Committee with anti-abortionists who wou see abortion made illegal.

Mr. Alton: Will the hon. Gentleman give wa

Mr. MacKay: Just one moment. Of course, I way to the hon. Gentleman, because I should lik from him on this point.

An amendment tabled in Committee sugg weeks will be resisted by the anti-abortionists, result that it cannot be referred back to the H Report. My hon. Friends will then be left in th position of having to vote against the Bill Reading, as my hon. Friend the Member for Birm Edgbaston (Dame J. Knight) says. To leave it un Reading is to leave it very late, and some constituents would be very confused if we voted fo on Second Reading and against is on Third Read would be most unfortunate.

Finally — [HON. MEMBERS: "Give way."] prepared to give way, but the hon. Member for Hill not longer seems to wish to intervene.

Mr. Alton: I think that the hon. Gentleman ha dealt with the point. I had intended to say th Members will have opportunities at various stag Bill in this House and in another place, what Committee decides. I have already made it clear th no intention of being intransigent if I can get measure on to the statute book. Surely th Gentleman would accept that, if I do not keep m he and other hon. Members will have the chance against the Bill on Report and Third Reading.

Mr. MacKay: I am prepared to accept that the hon. Gentleman will not be intransigent, but not that those whom he places on the Committee will be at all reasonable. I have been in the House far too long to fall for that one.

In fairness, the hon. Member for Mossley Hill has made it clear that he resists the idea of medical exemptions. An amendment to allow such exemptions would appeal to many of my hon. Friends. Again, let me issue a warning. It would be very difficult to insert a suitable clause specifying the medical conditions that would lead to exemptions. The medical authorities tell us that there could be more than 2,000. That would be a nightmare, and it would be quite unacceptable. Therefore, I share the view of the hon. Member for Mossley Hill on that point, although for very different reasons.

Finally, I urge hon. Members to reject this most unfortunate Bill.

10.24 am

Mr. David Steel (Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale): As I was the promoter of the Abortion Act that went through the House in 1967 and as this Bill seeks to amend that Act, it is only right that I should speak on it, albeit briefly.

I appreciate the manner in which my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) introduced his Bill. He is not only my hon. Friend but a friend of mine, which is not always exactly the same thing in this place. Having said that, I cannot support the Bill, and I wish to tell the House why.

In the past few weeks, we have all been bombarded with postcards carrying enlarged photographs — me more than most, perhaps. One that I received from a constituent said:

"Mr. Steel, how do you think the human race managed to keep a balance for nearly 20 centuries without abortion?"

It is one of the great myths peddled by the supporters of this Bill that abortion came into being with the 1967 Act. The truth is that it did not. The House was motivated to change the law in 1967—mine was the seventh attempt in 15 years to use private Members' legislation to secure reform—by the appalling record of illegal abortions in Britain. No one knows the precise figures for illegal abortions, but the medical authorities vary in their estimates from 40,000 to 200,000 a year. They fell into two categories. Some people could get safe and comfortable abortions—the law for the rich—because if one had money and the intelligence to find one's way through all the medical specialists, one could get a quasi-legal abortion in a hospital. However, people who were not rich and intelligent went through the various back-street methods.

In the 1960s the House was faced with the knowledge that between 30 and 50 women died each year as a result of criminal abortion. That was only the tip of the iceberg. Many more were maimed or injured for life as a result of operations carried out in the back streets. The idea that abortion started with the 1967 Act is one of the myths that we must explode.

The other myth is that Britain has become the abortion capital of the world and that we have a high abortion rate. I am not in favour of a high abortion rate, but the House should be aware of the facts. According to the figures for 1984—the latest that I have—our abortion rate is 12·2 per thousand women of child-bearing age. That compares with 15·2 per thousand in France, 18·4 per thousand in Denmark, 19·1 per thousand in Italy and 27·4 per thousand in the United States. That is not taking into account those countries that unfortunately use abortion as a method of population control. In Romania, the rate is 90·9 per thousand and in the Soviet Union it is 181 per thousand. We need to keep a sense of perspective and recognise that, deplorable though the increase in abortions may be, our rate is by no means the highest in the world, as the opponents claim.

I have never come across anyone who is pro-abortion. Most of us who support the present legislation have always operated on the basis that abortion is the lesser of two evils in some circumstances. I hope that the Church of England will reprint its detailed and objective report, "Abortion — an Athical Discussion" published in 1965, which traces the ethics of abortion over the centuries. It said:

"This discussion will proceed . . . on the supposition that there may be cases in which, granted this general right of the foetus to live and develop, this right may be offset by other conflicting rights; and that the proper function of the criminal law is, in a restricted area, to regulate the adjustment of those rights when they cannot be, or are unlikely to be, adjusted by other means."

Mr. Cyril Smith (Rochdale): Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Steel: In a moment. It was on that ethical foundation that the Abortion Act 1967 was framed.

Mr. Smith: As my right hon. Friend chooses to quote the attitude expressed by the Church of England in 1965, will he tell us what is the attitude of the Synod of the Church of England to the Bill?

Mr. Steel: I was about to come to that point, because at that time most of the churches supported the reform of the law. Since then, various churches have monitored the operation of the Act and have expressed their views, which are all different. My church, the Church of Scotland, made it clear in a letter sent this week to all Scottish Members that it is a matter for individual Christian consciences. The letter says:

"You will no doubt be aware from debates at the General Assembly that there is division of opinion within the Church of Scotland on the issue of abortion as clearly there is throughout the country. In all of this, the church should urge that those engaged in political decisions should recognise that freedom should be given to all to act according to their conscience."

I think that that approach has been broadly adopted by the Church of England. Different committees in the churches—and hon. Members can speak for their own church—have produced different recommendations to the House.

It is our task to lay down the boundary of the criminal law. It is not our task to say in what precise circumstances any individual should or should not have an abortion. The House decided in 1967, despite the fact that some hon. Members argued then, as some hon. Members will argue today, that we should legislate for abortion at the request of the woman, that that was not to be the basis of the 1967 Act; nor is it. We did not legislate for abortion on demand.

My hon. Friend the Member for Mossley Hill complains that people are running profit-making clinics and using those clinics for making money mainly from patients imported from overseas. That was not intended in the spirit of the 1967 legislation. The answer to that complaint lies in the capacity of the Ministers in charge of the Health Departments to make regulations under the

[Mr. Steel]

Act and to say to such clinics that their licence will be withdrawn. There is no need to change the law in order to achieve the objective.

I now turn to the question of late abortions. I have read again the speeches made in 1967. I said at the time that if we were to have abortion at all, it was desirable that it should be done as early as possible. I very much regret that we still have a high rate of late abortions. They happen for two reasons. One is that administrative snarl-ups in the National Health Service very often delay the abortion operation. That is a matter to be argued on another day. The other reason is that, sadly, many women present very late for consideration of termination of pregnancy. That is especially so in the case of those who fear or have been tested for foetal abnormality — covered by a specific clause in the 1967 Act.

Ms. Clare Short (Birmingham, Ladywood): It is broadly agreed that a late abortion is a post-24 week abortion. The numbers of such abortions have come down massively, and last year there were only 29. Two thirds of those were because of severe foetal abnormality and the others concerned young girls and menopausal women. The adjustment is taking place and late abortion is being reduced, but I agree that we should do more about that.

Mr. Steel: The hon. Lady is talking about late abortion in a very precise sense after 24 weeks. I am talking about late abortions generally. In passing the 1967 Act I think that the whole House intended, and still wishes, that abortion should take place as early as possible.

The case of the handicapped is extremely emotive. I hope that the House will recognise that charities such as Mencap, which spends its whole existence caring for the handicapped, is among those organisations that oppose the provisions of my hon. Friend's Bill and support the present legislation. It is not true to suggest that those who believe that this is a proper provision in the law do not care for the disabled in our midst, who deserve the full consideration that we all give them.

We have had many letters from medical bodies urging us not to support the Bill. More impressive than those is a short letter that I received from a constituent who said:

"Having had a late termination (about 19-20 weeks) because it was discovered my baby had severe abnormalities I know what I am talking about. It was a disturbing event for me but not as bad as giving birth after 9 months to a baby the doctors said would not have lived anyway. Parents must have the choice to make their own decision in cases like this.

I know I personally could not have coped with a full term baby being born like this. I have had a healthy daughter since this tragic event but I am sure I would never have had the courage to become pregnant again if I knew that I would have to go 9 months and not be offered a late termination had the baby had the same abnormalities."

That letter is the answer to those who say that it is uncaring or unheeding to consider the termination of pregnancy in such circumstances. Nobody is forced to require this if that person does not believe that it is right. It is simply that the criminal law allows it to happen if the doctors, the mother, the father, think that these are the right circumstances.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett (Pembroke): Will the right hon. Gentleman tell us his view on the 92 per cent. of late abortions that are carried out on healthy children?

Mr. Steel: I am coming to the ques limits, if that is what the hon. Gentleman
My hon. Friend the Member for Mossl and I have seen it in much of the liter support of his Bill, that other European much more restricted cut-off point in thei we have. My hon. Friend is misinforme because that is not so. The laws of most neighbours are different from ours becau in their legislation two degrees of abort abortion on request of the mother up to stage.

I have a list which illustrates that.
abortion on request of the mother up to 18
that it is for serious medical or social reaso abortion is on request up to 12 weeks, but be for social or medical reasons. In Norwa up to 12 weeks and after that it is on the d France allows abortion on request up t allows it up to 24 weeks on medical grou allowed for various reasons that are establ first three months, and after that it is woman's health or for foetal abnormality

Therefore, one sees that other approached their law in a different way points mentioned by the promoters of the off points at all. They are the dividin abortion on demand and other categories come later. Because we have not approac that way, we do not have a cut-off point to make comparisons with the cut-off
legislation.

The committee of inquiry, under Mrs into the working of abortion recommen should be a restriction of abortion to 24 w been endorsed by the Royal College of Ob Gynaecologists. In 1967 we did not estab limit but simply took the existing law,
(Preservation) Act 1929 as the basis for th
There is no cut-off limit in the 1967 Act
England and Wales is established as in 19 in Scotland. I think that it is fairly comm medical science has moved on, and that it foetuses born as early as 24 weeks to survi
I support, as do the Prime Minister and th Opposition — although that may not be that commends it to the House—the 24-w

My hon. Friend's Bill seeks to do s different from that. It does not seek t 18-week limit. That is because, every time set down, the actual medical practice allows safety. In medical practice, the present 28-26-week limit. If the House establishes a sta limit, in medical practice it would be a 22-w Bill does not seek to establish an 18-week l talks about the beginning of the 18th we 17-week limit and in medical practice will n
15 weeks.

I do not have the slightest doubt that, i to pass into legislation, it would make a m to the operation of the abortion law and thousands of women of the opportunity medical practitioner and consider the case f of pregnancy. As I have said, I do not thin us to tell women in particular circumsta

doctors, that they should or should not have an abortion. The Bill would cause deprivation and for that reason it should be opposed.

I agree with the point, perhaps not made very judiciously, by the hon. Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay) that the promoter of the Bill is entitled to choose the members of his Committee. There is no doubt that the Bill would not be substantially altered in Committee. But it will have to come back to us and we could alter it on Report. I have a bigger objection than that to voting for the Bill. The Second Reading should be a vote on the principle of the Bill. The principle of the Bill is not about tinkering with the upper medical limit as recommended by Mrs. Justice Lane or the royal college. It is a fundamental change to the Abortion Act 1967, and that is why I oppose it.

Finally, we are meeting at a time when, whether we are for or against the Bill, we are all concerned that, if at all possible, there should be a lower level of abortions. It is tragic that this year the family planning services, funded by the National Health Service, are facing cuts. I am told that this very day the Central Birmingham district health authority is negotiating with the Brook Advisory Centre for further cuts for the next three years, which will result in a 40 per cent. reduction in that centre's activities in the city of Birmingham. If we want, as I do, fewer unwanted abortions, let us have few unwanted pregnancies.

10.40 am

Sir Bernard Braine (Castle Point): Whatever view any of us take about this great issue, we are all profoundly grateful to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) for opening the debate with a speech that was a model of lucidity and compassion.

It is a sad commentary on the way in which we conduct our affairs in this place that on every occasion since 1975 when a similar Bill has secured a Second Reading and has done so on the basis of principle, all have foundered because of procedural devices at one stage or another and because of lack of time. That is sad, because we know that there was and is now a substantial majority in the country in favour of abortion reform.

For over 20 years, I have been concerned at the way in which a civilised country such as ours has permitted, and indeed encouraged, the deliberate destruction every year of 150,000 unborn babies, most of whom, if born, would have been perfectly normal, healthy children. That was the point on which my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) sought to gain a response from the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel), but the right hon. Gentleman misunderstood it. That point remains unanswered, but perhaps I shall be able to develop it a little later.

Abortion presents a dreadful dilemma for all of us, whatever view we take of the Bill. In cases where the mother's life is in danger or where there are indications of grave and permanent damage to the child if born, the majority accept that termination is justified. However, such tragic circumstances account for only a minute proportion of the total number of abortions carried out under the 1967 Act. Of the 2·6 million unborn babies destroyed up to the end of 1986, only 123 had to be sacrificed to save the mother's life. The overwhelming majority were authorised on social grounds—and many of us know precisely what that means: abortion on demand.

The Bill will not change that situation greatly. The Member for Mossley Hill is not proposing something will tear up the 1967 Act or change the position in material way. However, I readily concede that it change the climate and affect our attitudes to abo generally in important ways.

It follows then that the overwhelming proportio late abortions are performed on babies which if b would have been normal healthy children. There is one word for that in my book, and that is murder.

I agree that there is no magic about 18 weeks. The stages of human life are part of a continuum as, ind are our own lives after birth. Well before 18 weeks, foetus is recognisably human. The hon. Member Mossley Hill touched on that, and it should be basic to understanding of what the Bill is about.

An article in the British Medical Journal of 26 Jan 1980 put the facts very clearly. I read the article at the and have kept it. It states:

"Nine weeks after conception, the baby is well en formed to bend his fingers round an object in the palm o hand, in response to a touch on the sole of his foot he will his toes or bend his hips and knees to move away from touching object. At 12 weeks he can close his fingers thumb and he will open his mouth in response to pres applied at the base of the thumb. At first when his h touch his mouth the foetus turns his head away thoug mouth opens. Later the foetus may turn his head toward hands and even put a finger into his open mouth and such

Ms. Joan Ruddock (Lewisham, Deptford): Will right hon. Gentleman give way?

Sir Bernard Braine: No, I shall not give way. I mea discourtesy to the hon. Lady, but a great many Members wish to speak and I shall obey the injunctio the Chair. I would rather not give way because there be plenty of opportunity for hon. Members to speak, only if we restrain ourselves on interventions.

The facts are that at 12 to 14 weeks the auditory sy of the foetus is complete. At 18 weeks it can certa recognise its mother's voice and reacts to light as we to sound. It has learnt to put its hands before its eye shield them from moving light or over its ears to pro them against loud noise.

Yet, although the miracle of human life has develo to that point at 18 weeks, the human foetus has no ri at that stage. Our abortion law, unlike those of o civilised countries, permits thousands of perfectly no healthy children of that gestation to be destroyed, not I consider gestational age to be of great importance w considering the moral implications of abortion, or eve viability.

There is precious little sense on this subject where existing law is concerned. As has been said, procurin abortion at 28 weeks has been recognised since 1929 a crime of "child destruction". However, we now know at 23 or 24 weeks babies born prematurely are capabl surviving, and do so survive. The only difference betw babies born at 24 weeks, or for that matter after 28 we and those born at 18 weeks, is that the latter are ama Almost everything else is the same.

Therefore, the question that the Bill's opponents m face is surely, "Why should it not also be a crime to des an unborn baby at the gestational age of 18 weeks?" T question must be answered, because late abortions, outlawing of which is the purpose of the Bill, cle involve the destruction of sentient human beings, who only react to outside stimuli and can feel pain, but who have none of the protection that they would have only a few weeks later. Where is the logic and the morality of that? The question must be answered by those who oppose the Bill.

[Sir Bernard Braine]

Mrs. Audrey Wise (Preston) rose——

Miss Mowlam rose——

Sir Bernard Braine: It is a lottery—[Interruption.] No, as I said a little earlier, I must set an example. I am not going to give way.

Mrs. Wise rose——

Sir Bernard Braine: I would love to debate this endlessly because I feel deeply about it, but if I give way I shall be setting a bad example and will deprive those hon. Members who in some cases have a great deal of experience of the opportunity to express their view.

It is a lottery as to whether or not, because of the late stage of its development, the baby of 18 weeks or more will be aborted in the most cruel way with its limbs torn from its body and its head crushed, as many doctors and nurses have testified. That revolting procedure — the House must face up to what late abortion really means — is described in detail by Dr. Margaret White, a general practitioner, magistrate and very distinguished member of the General Medical Council, in her book entitled "Two Million Silent Killings". She explains that with late abortions, the baby is already of a size and its bones have hardened to such an extent that:

> "With the pliers the baby is torn limb from limb and pulled out in pieces. The skull is crushed, as it is much too large and too firm to be pulled out intact. It is the unpleasant duty of the nurse to assemble the broken parts of the body, to be sure that no pieces are left behind in the womb."

At that stage, too, the mother is not unaffected. Some of the most poignant letters I have received over the years have been from women pressurised into abortions. Long afterwards, they suffer both physical and emotional damage. Only last week I received a letter from one of my constituents, whom I do not know. She had previously had an abortion and then had another, this time at 19 weeks. She wrote:

> "I did not do it lightly—nevertheless, I made the choice —the wrong one. It was so easy to get an abortion. If I had known the true facts of what happens to the baby being aborted, I would definitely never have had it done. Also if the Abortion Bill limited it to 18 weeks then my child would be alive today. It has left a scar forever."

May I now deal with what is probably the most emotive argument about the Bill and one that is often misrepresented. The hon. Member for Mossley Hill has made it clear that the Bill will not affect termination of pregnancies where severe disability incompatible with sustaining life has been diagnosed, and I am glad that he has done that. Indeed, the Bill will protect those babies whose disability is compatible with life and is treatable. We have to be careful to distinguish between the two.

Some of the most gifted, delightful and lovable people in our society were born handicapped and might have been deprived of the right to live if their abnormality had been detected before birth as it can be nowadays. In our hearts all of us know that to be true. Who among us would not have been moved by the story in The Times on 20 January about the award of the Whitbread Book of the Year prize to a young spastic boy who can neith well? He cannot move himself, and attached to his forehead. He used his given for him by his mother, to handicapped and against abortion.

Mr. Wigley rose——

Sir Bernard Braine: This young ma one of the most prestigious literary priz offer. He said——

Mr. Wigley rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Order. The right hon. Member for C Braine) has said that he is not prepare

Sir Bernard Braine: He said:

> "Tonight is the happiest night of my l would have missed if the doctors had not September day long ago. Can freedom handicapped man? Can yessing be so diffic give a baby a chance at life, man treads up silences him before he can draw one bre fresh air?"

Those of us who support the Bill m I believe that I am sensitive—to the vi want to be sure that it will not bar the w in those cases where it can be established is likely to be so severe that the child, incapable of sustaining life in any meani medical technology—some of us have closely in recent years — comes to certainly not stood still since the Abortio 21 years ago.

Many of the disabilities that oppo regularly cite as requiring the test of a now be detected much earlier, indeed as of 10th week of pregnancy, by a variety may have to find—I am ready to join formula that will safeguard the position whom tests have begun before the 18th w some reason are not complete before th matter to which we must address ourselv That is the message I have received from hon. and hon. Friends.

I know that we are being told by the Obstetricians and Gynaecologists, the Association and other learned bodie opposed to the Bill. However, before we f in considering the weight of their opinio for the House to realise that it is not share of gynaecologists. A recent survey gynaecologists, accounting for 40 per c involved in that specialty in Britain, revea supported the recommendation of the R the BMA that the upper limit for aborti weeks, but a substantial majority, nearl 64 per cent. — would like to see the abortion reduced from 28 weeks to 20 w exceptions made when the mother's life is severe foetal abnormality.

There is much more I should like to s many others who wish to speak. Let me again that the Bill does not undermi principles of the 1967 Act. As one who ha of the debates in 1966 and 1967, I must ec by the right hon. Member for Tweedd

Lauderdale that it was never his intention, nor was it the intention of Parliament at the time, to legislate for what we have today, which is virtually abortion on demand.

It is right to consider what should be done about babies likely to be born with severe handicaps, but in our compassion for all who are likely to suffer from some handicap, we should not allow ourselves to forget that the overwhelming majority of babies being aborted at present at 18 weeks or later would, if born and not destroyed because they are momentarily inconvenient, be perfectly normal, healthy children. Those children, too, cry out for our compassion. For that reason alone, the Bill deserves the support of the House.

10.57 pm

Dr. Lewis Moonie (Kirkcaldy): I am not going to quote reams of statistics today. I am aware that the time is limited. Moreover, I am a statistician as a result of part of my medical training and I know that statistics can be manipulated by people who are not experts to say whatever they like, and can be manipulated even more readily by those who are experts. Therefore, it is specious to quote reams of data at each other today.

I should like to go back to the start of my medical career, when I was a student in 1968. That is when I first experienced the workings of the Abortion Act 1967. The first girl I saw was 15 years old. She did not really know what it was all about and she did not understand what happened. She just knew that she wanted to go back to a normal life and that she did not want to bear a child, and she did not. The other woman was in her early 40s with a large number of children. She could not face the reality of bearing another child and she, too, was relieved of that burden. That is what the 1967 Act gave women in this country. It gave them an element of choice.

Having started clinical work in 1968, I have no direct experience of illegal abortions. Illegal abortions in this country effectively ended with the passing of the 1967 Act. I have heard plenty of reports from older doctors and nurses about what went on before, and I do not want to see a return to that.

I believe that the Bill concerns certain basic principles. First, is abortion a moral or an ethical thing to do? If so, who should decide whether an abortion should be carried out? Thirdly, what constraints should society place on that decision—I believe that the sponsor of the Bill would like us to believe that that is the major concern of his Bill.

I believe that abortion is both moral—that is, right for the individual woman to decide upon—and ethical: it is a correct procedure for a doctor to perform at a woman's request. At present, the decision to carry out an abortion is given to the medical profession alone to make, at the request of the woman. I believe that a change in that practice is long overdue. The constraints relate to the reason for the abortion and the age of the foetus at the time the abortion is carried out. Surely those two issues are the nub of the argument today.

We all agree that there should be an upper limit beyond which an abortion, the destruction of a foetus, cannot and should not take place. At present, the law places that limit at 28 weeks and medical practice effectively places it at 26 weeks. The Bill would reduce that limit to 18 weeks, or, as has been clearly illustrated, effectively closer to 16 weeks. I believe that that would be wrong, and my belief is supported by the vast majority of my profession, and, I believe, by society.

I could quote reams of examples about this m conversations I have had with women, women treated or whom I have referred for an abortion du medical career. I could quote letters that I have r from my colleagues in branches of our profes including gynaecologists—pointing out the dama will be done not only to women who are at risk to a handicapped foetus — I accept that they minority — but to many young women if the passed. By young, I do not mean girls under 16. Fo girls under the age of 21 — single, possibly intelligence and in desperate social circumstance possibility of having a child is a serious pros handicapped or not. For many women who have borne children, a further burden may be more th are prepared to bear and more than society should them to bear.

Women have complex reasons for delaying the d that they take to seek an abortion. I believe that should reflect that and should give them the cha come forward at a later stage, post 18 weeks. I do any case for depriving them of their right to unde abortion if they so choose. I believe that their supersede those of the foetus at the developments that we are discussing.

I do not believe that we should be in the busi bringing more and more unwanted children in society. I believe that, ultimately, a woman must h last say on whether she wants to bear a handicappe It is a specious argument to look at handicapped c who exist now and say that it would be wrong to kil Of course it would be wrong, but it is right and pro the woman and her husband to be able to make the "I will not bear a handicapped child." We are in of taking away that right. We are not taking away th of an already born handicapped child to live. children are entitled to all the compassion, underst and help that society can give. So often, society do offer that help because we are not prepared to p money into that care.

I believe that it is high time that we looked workings of the 1967 Act. For what it is worth, m is that women should have open access to abortio if we must use the pejorative term, to "aborti demand". I call it "abortion on request" and it sho carried out up to an agreed stage of about 12 w believe that, on the present grounds, women sho entitled to have an abortion up to roughly 24 wee

The system also needs overhauling. It is a syste lets girls down and does not give them the armame need to make the decisions that would stop a pre in the first place. We need to look at the availabi facilities for abortion, to ensure that women do no to experience the delays that we know occur in many Above all, we need to look at our attitude towards and women's rights.

It is time for a formal review of the system, no ad hoc measure brought before the House in the f a private Member's Bill. We need something alo lines of the Warnock commission report on which have an opportunity to vote later in the session. Tha correct, reasonable and civilised way in which to about a change in the law on abortion, and I belie that is long overdue.

The Bill is not the way to make a reasoned cha the 1967 Act. Frankly, I do not trust the Bill supporters to accept any amendment. They are not in the business of providing compromises, they are in the business of stopping abortion at 18 weeks. I do not trust them and I hope that others who have listened to this debate will likewise vote against the Bill to defeat it today.

[Dr. Lewis Moonie]

11.5 am

Dame Jill Knight (Birmingham, Edgbaston): The hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie) made it clear that he completely agrees with abortion on demand at every stage and the the foetus has no rights — [HON. MEMBERS: "Abortion on request."] — well, if the House prefers, "Abortion on request". I see no difference between the two. The hon. Gentleman is entitled to his opinion and I am entitled to mine. The hon. Gentleman is not entitled to assume that anything in particular will happen in Committee. He cannot predict that now. There will be people on the Committee who are anxious about the principle of late abortion. However, the sponsor of the Bill has said that he is not intransigent and that he will listen to all the arguments. Obviously the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) wants his Bill to get through, even if there are amendments at a later stage.

If the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy is so deep in the abortion business, he must know, when he tells the House that he does not want a return to illegal abortions, that such abortions do not happen after 18 weeks because it is too dangerous to carry them out.

Mrs. Mahon: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Dame Jill Knight: I will not give way, because there are so many people who wish to speak.

Almost all the flak against the Bill has been to do with handicapped children.

Mr. Allan Rogers (Rhondda): The hon. Lady should start telling the truth.

Dame Jill Knight: I strongly resent being told that I am not speaking the truth. [Interruption.]

Mr. Rogers: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I said the hon. Lady was not speaking the truth because she deliberately distorted what was said by my hon. Friend the Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie).

Madam Deputy Speaker: In this House we are all responsible for what we say. The hon. Lady is interpreting the speech of the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy as she believes that she heard it.

Dame Jill Knight: Almost all the flak against the Bill has been to do with handicapped children. No one who has not had to cope with a physically handicapped son or daughter can possibly understand the burden that that imposes. I have no doubt that that care often takes a terrible toll on a family. However, the overwhelming number of babies aborted after 18 weeks, about which we are concerned today, are not handicapped. They are perfectly normal children whose only crime is that their mothers do not want them.

Today we are in danger of concentrating on the 7·8 per cent. of handicapped children aborted after 18 weeks and ignoring the 92·2 per cent. of perfectly normal children who are so aborted. The postcards that many supporters of the Bill have sent out have already been mentioned and have been described as an emotional argument. My goodness, there are emotional argu
because all the opposition to the Bill and advanced about handicapped chi the major feature of the opposition

It should be understood that m about perfectly normal children.

Mr. Wigley: Will the hon. Lady

Dame Jill Knight: For the be Members, I should make it clear that to allow them to make their speeche

Should we continue to sacrifice normal children for that 7·8 per cent abortion if the child is likely to be se perhaps the figure of 7·8 per cent. sh per cent., and that is a conservative

What about that 5 per cent.? Sho a club foot, deafness, blindness or a mean that the child should be abort reason to get rid of a child?

New techniques are being introdu allow a pregnant woman to know is becoming earlier all the time — v handicapped. A CVS test is carried weeks; ultrasound scanning is comin quite some time, has been giving information about the unborn c amniocentesis. We shall shortly be a there is a blemished child in the womb give in the Bill. If not, and if there is may not know until it is too late, I a point will be considered most careful

We must ask whether we think child——

Ms. Harriet Harman (Peckham):
accept that the opponents of the Bil
foetuses with severe abnormalities sh to continue to term? We belie abnormalities are discovered it shou right to decide whether to continue that she should not be forced, on pain to continue the pregnancy.

Dame Jill Knight: The hon. Lady because that point is covered by it. I considered and incorporated by the Mossley Hill.

If we send out from the House handicapped people have no right to serious matter, and that is what peop talked to handicapped people out [Interruption.] Clearly, that is the House sticks to the idea that a handica destroyed, many handicapped people concerned.

If we think that it is right for the Ho terrible message, perhaps we should su believe that because God, fate or anyt a child so much, and that we in the Ho it the right to live, we should support

All help, support and counsell assistance should be given to pare handicapped child. I do not believe th given at the moment. Some doctors helpful to the parents of handicapped

nts on both sides,
as been centred on
ren. That has been the Bill.
ly we are talking

e way?

it of Opposition
intend to be brief,

e 92 per cent. of
The Bill allows for usly abnormal. So ld be reduced to 5
imate.
d any handicap—
other handicap—
? Is it a sufficient

d all the time that in early stage—it ether the child is ut at eight to 10
n stream and, for remely important
d; and there is to know whether fore the time limit
oof that a woman
ure that that vital in Committee.
it a handicapped

ill the hon. Lady lo not think that ld not be allowed that if severe be the mother's e pregnancy, and
the criminal law,

ould read the Bill,
as been carefully
on. Member for he message that ve, that is a very will think. I have e the House—

plication. If the ed person can be l have cause to be e to send out that ort the Bill. If we g else has denied

e should not deny
e Bill.
g and practical coping with a sufficient help is ve been less than ildren; one could give many examples of that. We should do our best to help and support women and their husbands with that burden. It is true that blemished children often give great happiness to their parents; they often achieve a very special success; my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine) gave such an example.

With regard to the 92 per cent. of perfectly normal children whom the Bill seeks to protect, no one dreamed, when the Abortion Act 1967 was debated in the House, of the huge numbers of children who would be destroyed under its provisions. The figures that the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) gave were extremely suspect, because many of the countries that he purported to give figures from have no way of collecting such statistics.

During the debate in 1966, it was never said that there were as many as 200,000 illegally aborted children in Britain. We considered that point very carefully at that time, but it was virtually impossible to discover how many illegal abortions there were. We could say only that a certain proportion of illegal abortions finished in hospital with remedial treatment. On that basis, the figure was about 10,000 or 20,000. Currently, there are about 170,000 abortions a year. That figure shames me, and it should shame those who introduced that legislation. Children can be saved today who could not have been saved at that time. The caravan has moved on. The law should be reconsidered and changed. The public are undoubtedly concerned about abortions.

Those who support the Bill are not all zealots. We are not all—perish the thought—Roman Catholics. We are concerned, and we care deeply. We believe that contraception, not abortion, is the answer. We care about the children who are presently dying; we care about the women who often suffer after abortion; we care about the implications of a society that thinks that handicapped people should be destroyed — [Interruption.] I am worried about the opinion that a handicapped person has a right to live only as long as its mother wants it. The hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) cannot deny that that is what she is putting forward. A handicapped child has the right to live and that right should not be dependent solely upon whether its mother wants it. [AN HON. MEMBER: "What about Mencap?"] Figures can be bandied about, but the arguments given by all the organisations are balanced for and against.

The argument often used against the Bill is that a woman has the right to choose. We have never been so well informed about contraception as we are today, so woman has the right to choose not to become pregnant. Once she has become pregnant she does not have an automatic right to destroy the child in her womb, the child has rights too. The child has rights in law. There have been cases in which people have sued on behalf of the unborn child and won.

Choice should not be given only to one person. There is no one to speak for the child but us. We have a heavy responsibility in that regard. Because the child's voice cannot be heard by all of us, some of us must speak for him or her. That is what I am doing today and that is why I shall support the Bill.

11.19 am

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): I have some sympathy with some of the arguments advanced by the hon. Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Dame J. Knight), yet as a woman she may have put another import on the Bill. I welcome the opportunity of spea especially of replying to the hon. Member for East (Mr. MacKay) who first spoke against th He spoke about not trusting those on the Commi Bill were passed today, and he made tremendou the question of choice. Representing peopl Province who have voted in different ways for ch he represents the Northern Ireland Office which listen to the choice of the voters, he had fair gall i that point.

Some of us are aware that some people wou see the 1967 Act extended to Northern Irelan Committee it would not be beyond the capabiliti Members to seek to insert a clause to th Therefore, I take this opportunity to repeat tha large, the bulk of people in Northern Ireland, ir of their religious outlook or political convictions desire to see the 1967 Act extended to Northern Today we are debating the Alton Bill. The r Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderd Steel), the Leader of the Liberal party—I had to make sure that I did not make a mistake, beca change so quickly—pointed out that we were the principle of the Bill. He imported into the motive which is not on the face of the Bill, thus from the principle of the Bill. For that reaso basically arguing against himself. I understoo agreed with a reduction in the upper age abortions. That is the principle of the Bill, and it.

I welcomed several of the quiet arguments a Bill which have put on the record issues which faced. However, we are debating in a moral clim must be understood. We have moved into a mor where it is tempting to call evil good. A decade example, teenagers used a lovely word when enjoying themselves. They said, "That's fab unfortunately, the manipulators of opinion are change a word of approval into an acronym Alton's Bill.

Many people who may have an open mind on are nevertheless convinced that we should ha counselling which gives people a choice. I re constituency where, thanks to the fine work o movement, carers have provided a hostel whe women are given a choice and the back-up to r choice calmly, rather than being drawn into the of what I call this disposable generation.

When we speak of choice we must also reme choice for life of those who have the potential is ludicrous to spend millions of pounds, correc judgment, on helping doctors in perinatal case youngsters a chance of life and at the same time a climate of opinion which has allowed nearly human beings with potential to be denied such

For those reasons, I support the principle of th I leave it to the Committee to work out the contention on which people believe that there movement.

11.25 am

Mr. Peter Thurnham (Bolton, North-East): have liked to start by congratulating the hon. M Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on his goo in being chosen third in the ballot, but I am sor has proposed this Bill, which is so strongly op

[Mr. Peter Thurnham]

hon. Members and many people outside the House who are so vulnerable in society. The hon. Gentleman is widely respected for the sincerity of his views and he is on record as saying that he is opposed to all abortions and to discrimination against the disabled. But his Bill does not meet either of those objectives.

The Bill will fail, because the hon. Gentleman has failed to strike a balance. This is a difficult issue, on which we must balance our feelings of compassion against our judgment. He has failed by taking the figure of 18 weeks. As has been pointed out, this is not an 18-week, but a 17-week Bill, which in practice and in medical terms will mean 15 weeks. There does not seem to be any reason for choosing 18 weeks. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman had a coloured photograph which made him decide on 18 weeks. Medical opinion is that the foetus is fully formed at 10 weeks, so the argument about the formation of the foetus would apply equally well at 10 weeks.

The hon. Gentleman said that in his judgment 18 weeks was about right, but he fails to understand that modern medical diagnosis has its greatest capability at that stage. Ultrasound scanning equipment—the United Kingdom is a leading country in the use of this equipment—is at its most effective at 18 to 20 weeks.

Mr. Alton: The hon. Gentleman is well aware that the new developments of chorionic villus sampling, combined with ultrasound scanning and amniocentesis, mean that, increasingly, the thresholds are being pushed back. Although I have already conceded that there is an argument on the crucial question of whether or not a person has the right to decide to terminate where there is a detected disability, will the hon. Gentleman also say a word about the 92 per cent. of late abortions that occur after 18 weeks and which involve perfectly healthy children?

Mr. Thurnham: The hon. Gentleman will know that there are many reasons for late abortions. The Bill does not deal with the 95 per cent. of abortions that occur before 18 weeks, so it fails to meet the hon. Gentleman's principal objective, which arises from the fact that he is wholly against abortion. [Interruption.]

There are many reasons for the 5 per cent. of abortions that occur after 18 weeks, but a principal reason is disability. Professor Stuart Campbell of King's college hospital has said that his practice would be destroyed by the application of a Bill such as this. The hon. Gentleman says that he does not want to discriminate against disability, yet the Bill discriminates against many disabled people because they are in danger of giving birth to children who will carry a genetic disorder and babies whom they do not want to bring into this world, and they will be denied that choice.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My hon. Friend cannot have it both ways. The people bringing in the Bill do so because they want to tackle a particular social abuse of late abortions, and we have clearly kept to that. Then we are accused of not spreading the Bill wider, when we are trying to obtain maximum support in the House for the issue. It is not true that disability is the main reason. Ninety-two per cent. of all abortions are on healthy children on social grounds, which is the issue that my hon. Friend has not addressed.

Mr. Thurnham: The hon. Member for Mossley Hill said that he thought 18 weeks was about right. Yet that is highly discriminatory against disability. He said that he is against discrimination on the grounds of disability. He said in his briefing note that homes can be found for handicapped children. It is a monstrous lie to suggest that families are queuing up to take handicapped children. Hundreds of severely handicapped children are in residential homes up and down the country, and families cannot be found for them. The hon. Gentleman must be aware that the Catholic St. Margaret's Adoption Society has compromised its own beliefs in this area and come out with an extraordinary reported statement:

> "Because of the extreme difficulty in placing severely handicapped children with families, we are taking the unusual stance of allowing divorcees to adopt only severely handicapped children that no one else wants if they promise never to marry again."

If that is not discrimination, I do not know what is.

The Bill is opposed by many organisations, including Mencap and ASBAH. We were told about a Gallup poll of gynaecologists, but it was a dishonest poll. It did not refer to spina bifida, which is one of the most serious disabilities that can be detected principally by ultrasound scanning after 18 weeks. The Bill lacks compassion. Why should mothers be forced to carry a child with spina bifida, when 70 per cent. of such children die in agony before five, and have to be sedated because of their pain? Must mothers be forced to go on with such pregnancies? Mothers who opt for termination in such cases do so out of love and for the sake of having a future healthy pregnancy. They would never risk another pregnancy again unless they had this choice.

Why does the hon. Gentleman want to make such a private decision into a public criminal act? He seems ignorant of the fact that modern medical practice has made it possible not only to ensure survival for some of the children who can be born at 24 weeks, but to pick up many more of these disorders, of which there are more than 2,000 or 3,000 of a structural kind, and 3,000 genetic and chromosomal. Many families who have the misfortune to have a severely handicapped child find that they cannot cope. It is a mirage to suggest that there are queues of people who want to take such children.

My wife and I chose to adopt a handicapped child who had been shunted from pillar to post for six years. It was only by chance that we saw him advertised in a newspaper. We chose, of our own free will, to take the child. Other hon. Members could choose to adopt a handicapped child, too. Interestingly, the latest figures show that there were 648 abortions after 18 weeks on the grounds of foetal handicap—648 abnormal foetuses that would otherwise have been born if the hon. Gentleman had had his way. That would allow one handicapped child for each hon. Member, excluding Madam Deputy Speaker and myself. If hon. Members would not find it convenient to adopt a handicapped child, why are they imposing that on other people?

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): Can I explain to the hon. Gentleman something that has not been made clear to the House? These matters will be dealt with in Committee. If, by some freak of circumstance, they are not, despite what has been said by the hon. Gentleman, Mr. Speaker can, at his discretion, allow on Report an amendment to secure precisely the same objective in the same language as could be effected in Committee. So, at the end of the day, the House will take a decision by majority vote on these matters.

Mr. Thurnham: That is the single point in the Bill to which I take the greatest exception. The hon. Member for Mossley Hill, could have put that clause in his Bill if he had believed it. He has said that he believes that 18 weeks is about right. I point out that the burden of having a handicapped child——

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Thurnham: I have already given way several times.

The private financial burden of caring for a severely handicapped child has been estimated by the courts as £500,000. If one takes into account the cost to the state of the statutory provision, the cost could well be another £500,000. The school fees for the school to which, as the hon. Member for Mossley Hill well knows, my child goes, are £15,000 a year—twice those for a school such as Eton. Why should the House consider forcing people to accept such a burden if they do not want it.

The hon. Gentleman seems to regard suffering as a virtue. We have heard various speakers say that there is some great virtue in bringing up a handicapped child. No one should wish a child to be handicapped because, in some strange way, they can gain from that.

We all want fewer abortions, but not at this price. The way to fewer abortions is through education and understanding, not through criminal sanctions on private decisions. The country in Europe with the lowest rate of abortions is Holland, where the laws are most liberal. That is the example the hon. Gentleman should study if he wants fewer abortions. Hon. Members who are unsure how to vote, but in favour of the change to 24 weeks that has been recommended by various bodies, should reject this 17-week Bill as far too extreme, in favour of a private Member's Bill that is now in the House of Lords. It changes the existing law from 28 to 24 weeks. Hon Members should tell their constituents that they are rejecting this extreme 17-week Bill in favour of Lord Houghton's Bill in the House of Lords, which is currently in Committee. I remind my hon. Friends that the Conservative Women's Group came out against this Bill.

Even a 24-week Bill needs careful consideration. Of the 29 abortions carried out after 24 weeks, two were in Bolton. One was for a mother who had previously refused diagnosis and screening, and was found to be carrying a baby with one head and two bodies. The hon. Member for Mossley Hill would force that to go through——

Mr. Alton rose——

Mr. Thurnham: I shall not give way.

Hon. Members: Give way.

Mr. Alton: I trust that the hon. Gentleman will withdraw that remark. My Bill makes it absolutely clear that, if a child is incapable of sustaining life, as in the example he just gave, it will be excluded by the terms of the Bill.

Mr. Thurnham: The hon. Gentleman's Bill uses the words,

"life . . . independently sustained".

What does he say about the baby featured on the front page of a newspaper recently which was born with two heads and is living? It is showing it is capable of independent life. Would he force a mother to go through with such a pregnancy because the baby is capable of life?

Mr. Alton: In those circumstances, of course, it would not be the intention of my Bill to force someone to carry a child. If the hon. Gentleman is being sincere in his argument, he will ensure that it is put in Committee. He will now say something, too, about the 92 per cent. of late abortions carried out on perfectly healthy children.

Mr. Thurnham: I cannot accept that from the hon. Gentleman. He had plenty of time, when thinking about the Bill, to put into it the words that should be there. He has used wording that suggests that if the baby is capable of life the pregnancy should go on.

This monstrous Bill has been described by the royal colleges as inhumane. It hits at the most vulnerable people in society. If hon. Members want to vote for change, they should reject the Bill in favour of the 24-week Bill that is on its way through the House.

11.39 am

Mr. Cyril Smith (Rochdale): I compliment my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on winning a prize in the annual raffle which allowed him to promote a private Member's Bill. I compliment him also on his courage in selecting this subject for a Bill and sympathise with him in the considerable personal abuse, and physical abuse to his home, to which he has been subjected as a consequence of promoting the Bill.

Those who oppose the Bill talk about the right to choose. Parliament has a right to choose, too. I hope that Parliament will be given that right by allowing the Bill to have a Second Reading and then discussing amendments that should be made to it during its passage through the House. There was a rumour that many petitions would be presented this morning, and I am glad that it did not happen.

During the 16 years that I have been a Member of the House, I have supported every attempt to amend the Abortion Act 1967, and it is interesting to note that all of them have been defeated on procedure, not on a straight vote. That is why I say that Parliament has a right to choose. I hope that this time the opponents of the Bill will allow it to be voted on at all its stages so that we may know the will of Parliament.

On "Question Time" last night, in which I appeared, and again this morning, we have heard people say that the Bill is the thin edge of the wedge and that if it is accepted we will attempt to introduce another. Perhaps that is because we have rumbled a few people and have decided that we are as entitled to use procedure as are those hon. Members who have tried to block legislation on the matter. It will be for Parliament to decide whether it wishes to pass another Bill. That is democracy. That is what the law is about.

On the argument about the right to choose, what about the rights of the unborn child? Since it cannot exercise those rights for itself, is it not the job of the elected Parliament to exercise them on its behalf? It is the job of Parliament to protect the rights of the unborn child, and it is the right of Parliament to legislate on the matter.

I have heard all the arguments against the Bill. Some have already been exercised this morning and more will be exercised as the day proceeds. Some are perfectly valid arguments, but some are absolute rubbish, including the suggestion that if the Bill became law we would return to back-street abortions. Before 1967, back-street abortions were usually carried out earlier in the pregnancy, not after 18 weeks. As nearly 50 per cent. of abortions that take place after 18 weeks are carried out on women who are shipped to Britain by air and sea because they cannot obtain abortions in their own countries, Britain has become the country of back-street abortions for the rest of Europe. In 1986, of the 8,276 abortions after 18 weeks, 3,688 were carried out on women who came to Britain from abroad.

[Mr. Cyril Smith]

The opponents of the Bill tell us that many late abortions are carried out on girls aged under 16 who were scared or did not recognise their pregnancy. That is absolute rubbish. The fact is that, in 1986, only 4·7 per cent. of abortions on residents from 18 weeks onwards were on girls aged under 16.

One thing is certain: 88 per cent. of abortions after 18 weeks are carried out in private clinics for private profit. It is staggering to hear what Labour Members say about the Bill. All these people who are supposed to be ardent Socialists want to propagate a system that allows abortion for private profit—in private clinics not on the NHS—with millions of pounds changing hands. That is the system which these marvellous Socialists, on the Front Bench as well as the Back Benches, want to propagate. What sort of Socialists are they? They talk rubbish.

We are told that 18 weeks was picked out of the air. By 18 weeks, a foetus is fully formed, with all major organs, except its lungs, functioning.

What of the handicapped child? I confess that that is the most difficult area to defend, but first let me deal with a fact which the hon. Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) refused to acknowledge. In 1986, of 8,276 abortions after 18 weeks, only 7·8 per cent. were performed because the child was likely to be born handicapped. Despite all their pious speeches in defence of the handicapped, hon. Members ignore the 92 per cent. who were denied life because they were aborted after 18 weeks. They refuse to face that fact.

It must be wrong to discriminate against an individual at any stage of life simply because he or she does not meet the standards of physical or mental perfection set by others. We who support the Bill are accused of a lack of compassion. Is it compassionate to take the life of a handicapped child? I repeat that 92 per cent. of abortions after 18 weeks are carried out not because the child was likely to be born handicapped. Of the remaining 7·8 per cent. of abortions some would continue to be allowed under the Bill. Most abnormalities can be detected in fewer than 18 weeks—indeed, in 10 weeks—with the results being made available after a maximum of two weeks. Indeed, I put it to the Minister that a death certificate should be issued after an abortion that is carried out after 18 weeks stating the precise cause of death.

I support the Bill because I believe in human life. As the right hon. Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine) said, abortion after 18 weeks is murder in the womb.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) said that he was not sure about the view of the Church of England. He quoted the Church of England when introducing his Bill. Yesterday, I and other hon. Members received a letter saying that the General Synod of the Church of England —I hope that I have the correct figures—voted by 24 to two in favour of the Bill. If it was right for my right hon. Friend to quote the Church of England in 1965, it is right for me to quote it in 1988. Again, 66 per cent. of gynaecologists were in favour. Some hon. Members may shout, "It was phoney. How many were done?" We can all quote those who are in favour. Opponents of the Bill quote the BMA. I do not want to embarrass my right hon. Friend —that has never been part of my function—but, in 1970, he said:

"they"—

that is, doctors—

"cannot dictate to Parliament what should be the provisions of an Abortion Act."—[Official Report, 13 February 1970; Vol. 795, c. 1693.]

Of course, that was when they were agin him. Now that they are for him—at least, he thinks that they are for him—he is in favour of quoting the BMA and doctors. But the gynaecologists' opinion poll — it was a representative sample—showed that well over 60 per cent. were in favour of today's Bill.

A child is entitled to have life. A child is entitled to be given the right to breathe, the right to love and the right to live. I am not a Roman Catholic, but I claim to be a Christian. This is a matter of human and Christian concern. That is why I hope that the Bill will be given a Second Reading and why I commend it to the House.

11.50 am

Sir Charles Morrison (Devizes): The hon. Member for Rochdale (Mr. Smith) seemed to imply that abortion was available on demand. If that is so, the existing law is being broken, and action can be taken. Like other hon. Members, I dislike abortion. I am naturally prejudiced against it. Nevertheless, I shall vote against the Bill.

What matters is not so much what I think or whether I am for or against abortion, but in what medical and social circumstances should abortion be allowed. If the law does not appear to be reasonable, there is bound to be a reversion to back-street abortionists, with all the health dangers that that implies. On the one hand, the law should discourage abortion, but, on the other hand, it should accept medical realities and be merciful towards social realities. In short, the law must represent a balance, and the Abortion Act 1967 succeeded in doing that.

On the basis of what information I as a layman have been able to gather since the matter came up for discussion again, I agree with the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie). In a perfect world, there is much to be said for freedom of choice up to 12 weeks, but thereafter abortion should be allowed up to 24 weeks but only for medical reasons. The trouble is that we do not live in a perfect world.

If every young girl were intelligent, decisive, understanding, aware and rich and could effectively communicate with her parents, if every woman over 40 who became pregnant without wishing to do so realised immediately what happened, if every woman at times of stress could be rational, if the National Health Service were perfect, and if doctors were infallible in judgment and opinion, the restrictions to 12 and 24 weeks might be acceptable. But that is not the world in which we live. We live in a world in which some women of all ages are frightened, unwise, indecisive, uncertain, anguished, full of second thoughts, and impoverished, and in which the National Health Service and, occasionally, doctors are not perfect.

A 12-week limit on freedom of choice would be too restrictive and would be certain to lead to more illegal abortions. A 24-week limit for medical reasons could rule out a small number of the most necessary abortions.

We have been reminded by the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) that, in any case, the 1967 Act operates in conjunction with the Infant Life (Preservation) Act 1929. That Act is the source of the 28-week limit and presumes that a foetus of 28 weeks is capable of being born alive. However, if it can be shown that a foetus of a lower age—27 weeks or even less—is similarly capable and is aborted, an offence would have been committed, because the life of a child capable of being born alive would have been destroyed.

The 1929 Act appears to me to be very strong. I have been reminded by the Library that it draws a firm distinction between

"capable of being born alive"

and

"capable of surviving".

It may be the case that, apart from healthy babies, some handicapped babies are

"capable of being born alive", but are not capable of surviving for more than a brief period. None the less, if they were

"capable of being born alive",

an offence could be committed if such a foetus were aborted.

The 1929 Act is very strong. It should be a reassurance to those who are worried about apparently late abortions. Furthermore, it should not be forgotten that, under the 1967 Act, the Minister for Health can make regulations. Indeed, the current regulations no longer license private clinics to carry out abortions over 24 weeks, and those carrying out abortions over 20 weeks must be specially approved.

A doctor must, therefore, act with the greatest care in respect of any late abortions—probably those over 20 weeks—for fear of transgressing the law. In addition, if it is judged necessary, it is always possible for the DHSS to introduce still more stringent regulations.

Thus, it seems to me far better to leave well alone. The grounds for abortion set out in the 1967 Act are, in my judgment, much more precise than the grounds in this Bill. The flexibility of the 1967 Act, coupled with the 1929 Act, provides a balance between the interests of the mother and those of the unborn child. I shall, therefore, vote against the Bill.

11.57 am

Ms. Clare Short (Birmingham, Ladywood): This is a most unsatisfactory Bill and a most unsatisfactory debate because the Bill is fundamentally and deeply dishonest. It is put forward by hon. Members who are anti-abortionists and want to remove all rights to abortion in this country, but they do not have the honesty to put forward that position. They know that it is not supported in the House or in public opinion, so they pretend that it is a Bill to prevent late abortion. It is not a Bill to prevent late abortion. The overwhelming bulk of people opposed to the Bill want to do everything possible to prevent late abortion when it is preventable.

Mr. A. J. Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed): Will the hon. Lady give way?

Ms. Short: I shall give way in a moment.

There are all sorts of things that we could do. These matters are currently being considered in the House of Lords, and I appeal to anyone who thinks that he wants to consider the 24 weeks option not to support this muddle and to wait for that other more rational Bill to come to the House when it has been thoroughly examined in another place.

Mr. Beith: I fail to understand the logic of the hon. Lady's argument. Was not the 1967 Bill, and is not the 1967 Act, supported by people who believe that abortion should be more readily available than the Act states?

Ms. Short: I have no idea. I was not a Member of the House when that Bill was put forward and I have never met anyone who says that there should be an extension beyond 28 weeks. I do not understand the hon. Gentleman's position.

Many people believe, in deep conscience, that abortion is always wrong. I respect that position. Within the existing law, people who hold that view can exercise their conscience. No one is required to have an abortion if she thinks it is wrong. We are not talking about that position. We are talking about people who claim the right to impose their conscience on other people whose conscience says otherwise. There are people who say in conscience that there should be no abortion but who introduce a Bill that says that abortion can be allowed up to 18 weeks. Where are the morality, conscience and ethics of that? It is a fudge and a muddle, and it is leading to a debate that is bringing the House into disrepute

At least some of the truth is coming out in the debate. Hordes of Members of Parliament who are not here yet will come in later to vote for or against the Bill and determine what will happen. The overwhelming bulk of them do not support the Bill but say that they support the 24-weeks proposal. The hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) has adopted a deeply duplicitous position. He had the right to draft the Bill. He could have proposed a 24-week rule. He could have proposed an exception for foetal abnormality. But he has deliberately put in a provision that says that abortion would be allowed up to 28 weeks only if the child would be born dead. The hon. Gentleman has the cheek—because, as he tells us, he taught disabled children for one year—to say to women and parents who have borne, cared for and loved disabled children who died in deep pain after some years that they should not have the right to make the choice next time. How dare the hon. Gentleman and others say that.

May I say to this House of Commons — this overwhelmingly male House of Commons — that it should have more humility when approaching this issue. When I was 10 I thought that I was against abortion. I came from a large, happy, Catholic family, and that was the teaching. It all seemed simple. Then I started to grow up. I am a woman, and my body changed. Some of my friends became pregnant because men sometimes misused them and walked away. Every man in this House who has ever used a woman's body and walked away and did not know the consequence has no right to vote on the Bill. Women's bodies carry the consequences of such behaviour. If men in the House were honest, most would have to walk away.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I am grateful to the hon. Lady because at least she is putting the extreme case on the other side. I ask two questions. First, does she deny the right of men to have moral views on this subject? This is a matter of morality. Secondly, does she recognise the great concern in society in general at the way in which freely available abortion has changed the nature of society? We are entitled to a view on that change.

Ms. Short: Everyone in the world is entitled to a view on every question, but some questions should be approached with more humility than others. I am personally deeply impressed by the arguments of people who have borne and cared for disabled children. I have not had that experience, but I approach with humility the experience of others. I suggest that men should approach this question with humility because the women bear the consequences.

There is all this talk of care and love for disabled children. As has been said, residential homes all over the country are full of disabled children for whom no one cares. The divorce rate of couples who bear disabled children is high — and who is left to care for those children? The women.

Let us be clear about the existing law. There has been a lot of pretence and falsity about it. The law provides that it is an offence to abort a foetus capable of being born alive. As medical technology has changed and it has become possible to preserve the life of babies born very early, naturally the law and practice have changed. The number of post-24-week abortions has diminished massively as it has become possible to preserve the life of 24-week babies.

I wonder whether hon. Members really know about 24-week-old babies. Only 15 per cent. of them survive, and a third of them are brain-damaged. Those babies are on the very brink of life. The units that do such lovely work and care for those precious babies attempt to preserve their lives. The babies are kept in plastic boxes with tubes in their bodies. There is much evidence now that if they do survive they are emotionally hurt and damaged because they are not nurtured and cuddled in the way that babies need. They are on the brink of life, and medical practice already takes account of their survival rate.

Two thirds of post-24-week abortions are for severe foetal abnormalities. The Bill does not provide for that, but we are told that it will be adjusted in Committee. We are told about the other hard cases. Many involve very young girls who have been sexually abused in their families. They do not know that they are pregnant, or do not reveal it until late, and so have abortions after 24 weeks. We are told about menopausal women who have brought up their families and loved them and do not realise that they are pregnant — they think that their periods have stopped because of the menopause. Such women would be forced by hon. Members who claim to know better about their lives, their bodies and their families to bear those children. It is a disgrace. Let me say to hon. Members who believe in a 24-week limit that we already have that limit with exceptions. That is the practice now. I should like to see some changes, as there is no doubt that late abortions take place unnecessarily.

I should like to say something about private clinics. In my region, which is one of the worst in the country, many doctors and nurses in the National Health Service refuse to perform abortions to which women are entitled legally, so women go to charitable clinics to get their legal ri No one makes any profit whatsoever, and the work is with care, in the interests of the lives of those women. cheap, snide remarks about people performing abor for profit are not true. The issue is too important for cheapskate lies to be thrown about the House.

As for foreign women, many come from Nort Ireland, where the law is different, and from th counties of Ireland.

Mr. Seamus Mallon (Newry and Armagh): Is the Lady implying that the constitutional arrangement Northern Ireland have changed? Is Northern Ireland to be regarded as part of the United Kingdom?

Ms. Short: The hon. Member knows my view on I thought that he shared my view that Northern Ire should not be part of the United Kingdom. I look for to the day when there is a united Ireland. I know Northern Ireland is not always treated as part of United Kingdom. The law is different in all sort respects. The law on obortion in Northern Irelan different from that in the rest of the United Kingd Therefore, Northern Ireland women come to Britain t their rights under the existing law.

Mr. Mallon: Will the Lady give way?

Ms. Short: No. The hon. Gentleman should know this is a serious argument and not a cheap debate.

Women travel to Britain for abortions, from Irel Northern Ireland and from other parts of Europe w the law is different from ours. There is nothing wron immoral about those women. If the law in their coun is not right and they come to Britain and go to a cl charitably-organised clinic for an abortion, ther nothing wrong with that. We are extending a freedo those women to which they are entitled. Let us not pre that there is something disreputable in that.

I am puzzled that all the polling evidence shows tha overwhelming majority of hon. Members support existing law, yet the overwhelming bulk of Tory Mem seem to support the Bill, which restricts the righ abortion. I have thought about that carefully and I wo why it is. The hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ben is wrong.

Mr. Irvine Patnick (Sheffield, Hallam): The hon. L is strangling her own argument.

Ms. Short: I am making the point I wish to mak the hon. Gentleman can make his.

I am perplexed by this. The underlying reason is the new Right in America goes around bombing abor clinics, photographing women who go there for aborti and sending the photographs to their neighbours. Tha the kind of crude behaviour that comes from the Right. The growing new Right in Britain is saying women should stay at home and bear children and care elderly and disabled people. They are not in favou public expenditure; they want to push women back i a traditional role and deprive them of the freedom control their lives—[Interruption.] Hon. Members laugh. They always laugh and sneer when we talk ab the status of women and their freedom. The behaviou hon. Members is absolutely consistent.

I appeal to anyone who is in favour of preventing abortions not to vote for the Bill. If the sponsor of the wanted a 24-week limit with exceptions and wanted prevent late abortions beyond that limit, he would have brought in a different Bill. There is much that we can do. We could have, as many other countries have, self-referral up to 12 weeks. Many women have abortions post-12 weeks because of delays in the National Health Service. The Health Service should be required to plan for the number of woman who will come for abortions so that the current delays will be reduced. Such things could be done to prevent late abortions. We have a 24-week limit, with exceptions for very hard cases.

A Bill is to come from the House of Lords which will enable us to have that position. If today's Bill is voted for, we will have an 18-week limit, which really means 16 weeks, with no exception for foetal abnormality unless the child would die. We are told that concessions may be made in Committee, but if the Bill is passed with a large majority the Committee will be dominated by anti-abortionists and the concessions will not be made. The hysterical public campaign will go on and people who think they may switch their votes will be under enormous pressure. This is not a rational way to decide such an important question.

I beg the House to vote the Bill down and to look at the much more considered Bill which will come from the House of Lords.

12.12 pm

Mr. Edward Heath (Old Bexley and Sidcup): I would like to make one simple but important point. This matter is sensitive and controversial. The Abortion Act 1967 was of great importance, and the leader of the Liberal party, the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) deserves full credit for what he did then. The Act removed many social ills which we all hated and has given us 20 years of comparative stability in dealing with the problems and arguments that go on.

Hon. Members can set an example on this matter by moving ahead with consensus. It is apparant that the debate on the Bill is not producing that. It has been said that the various alternatives could be fully discussed in Committee. We all know what happens with the composition of private Member's Bills Committees—without any disrespect to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton)—and we know the difficulties of taking up on Report matters which have been fully debated in Committee, but that is part of our constitutional proceedings. If the Bill goes through Second Reading to Committee, it will be extremely difficult to debate any other position in the House.

We have a great opportunity to look at the problem from the point of view of moving ahead with consensus. The hon. Gentleman has not disguised the fact that, because of his religious beliefs, he is entirely opposed to abortion. The position of the Synod of the Church of England has been mentioned. I am a member of the Church of England and I understand that position, but I cannot help noting that there is much picking and choosing as to which view of the Synod of the Church of England one accepts on a particular subject.

However, allowing for that, I am aware of the religious beliefs that are expressed and held most strongly. Crusades do not always lead to the most desirable results, as we know from history. Above all, they lead to considerable intolerance. It is essential that we in this House should be tolerant of those outside whose ethical and religious views do not coincide with our own, and on this subject, there are a considerable number of our fellow citizens whose views do not coincide with our own.

The 1967 Act was based on a combination of provisions from the Infant Life (Preservation) Act 1929 and new provisions. The way ahead on the basis of consensus is now very clear. The 1929 Act could be amended to give a limit of 24 weeks, which would in fact mean 22 weeks. Such a proposal would gain the support of the whole medical profession, as cited in opinion polls and on television. According to all my inquiries, the medical profession accepts that a limit of 24 weeks—in practice 22 weeks—would deal with the advances in medicine over the past 20 years and at the same time with the practical arrangements available for dealing with these problems. If the House had been able to give a lead with a Bill containing that proposal, that Bill would have gained overall agreement and we could then have moved forward to another period.

The particular problems mentioned, such as that of private clinics, need to be dealt with in some other way. They are controversial in themselves and are not affected by the Bill. The problem of private clinics can be dealt with separately, through the Health Service or, if the House so wishes, by legislation. My greatest concern is that, after 20 years of stability, we should now take advantage of the advances in medicine and the practical arrangements that can be made—which in some cases may be lacking—to take a further step forward. I wish that that had been the purpose of the Bill. As it is not, I shall oppose the Bill, although I shall strongly support any Bill from another place that reduces the limit to 24 weeks—in effect 22 weeks. That would gain the overall acceptance of the medical profession, of whose advice the House should take great note.

12.17 pm

The Minister for Health (Mr. Tony Newton): As has been very clear, this is an issue on which there are deeply held and totally conflicting views; it is correspondingly difficult for any Minister to speak in a debate such as this. In his opening speech, the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton), fairly acknowledged the difficulties of the subject. He also stated clearly, and I thought rightly, that the Bill does not itself set out to challenge the principle of legal abortion. He rightly made it clear that he thinks that abortion should not be legal, but he recognises that it is; indeed, a large part of his case rested on the fact that he did not propose to reverse the basic position. The hon. Gentleman presented the Bill as one that attempts not to return to the pre-1967 position but to modify the working of the law to make it more acceptable to the substantial body of opinion—whatever its exact size, none of us can dispute that it is substantial—that is affronted by the scale of abortion in recent years, and particularly by abortion at a relatively late stage in pregnancy. He argued that the gain from achieving a change in the balance would outweigh the contrary arguments adduced in the debate.

I would say to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) that the hon. Gentleman is at least entitled to seek the judgment of the House on the proposal that he has put before it, rather than on what is in his mind but which he has not brought before the House.

I think that the House already knows that which I must state clearly, that the Government have no collective view on the merits of the proposal by the hon. Member for Mossley Hill. The considerations involved are clearly both moral and practical. Some hon. Members will see the moral considerations as overriding, while others will see as paramount the practical considerations. I think it is fair to say that most hon. Members who have spoken will not see the matter in such a clear-cut way, but will want to strike a balance between the two conflicting sets of considerations. At the end of the day, each hon. Member will have to decide for himself or herself what the balance should be and how we should vote on the Bill.

[Mr. Tony Newton]

In such a debate, my role as Minister for Health is not to speak for the Government in the ordinary sense, but to set before the House such advice as I can give from the advice available to me, which I think might help hon. Members to make a decision. I must necessarily concentrate on the practical issues, because being Minister for Health gives me no special status to advise others on matters of conscience or morality.

First, I shall comment on the legal position. It has been clearly recognised in the debate that the Bill represents a clear change in principle from the abortion legislation introduced by the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale and passed in 1967. That is because the Abortion Act 1967 contains no upper limit for the gestational age at which an abortion may be performed. It must be accepted as a matter of law that to introduce such a limit is to introduce a distinct and new concept compared with the present position.

As hon. Members have said, the Infant Life (Preservation) Act 1929 applies in England and Wales and protects any foetus capable of being born alive. It also contains a rebuttable presumption, and the fact that it is rebuttable is significant. It is that a foetus of 28 weeks gestation is capable of being born alive. As the House knows, in the light of our capacity to keep very young infants alive, the Government have given their support, and similar support has just been echoed by my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath), for a measure currently under discussion in another place. That measure seeks to reduce the gestational age at which this presumption is made from 28 weeks to 24 weeks. However, it is a proposition of a different kind from the one that is now before the House, because the Bill before the House would make illegal all abortions after the 17th completed week of pregnancy, except in cases where it was necessary to save the life of the mother or if the life of the child could not be sustained.

I shall make the point a little clearer. Under the Infant Life (Preservation) Act—this is why I emphasised the word "rebuttable"—it is open to a doctor who has performed an abortion outside the limits thought to be provided by the Infant Life (Preservation) Act to prove that the child was not capable of being born alive. The onus of proof at that point is shifted; the House ought to bear that significant point in mind.

I know that many hon. Members wish to speak and I shall try to keep my speech brief. I had intended to spend a few moments advising the House as clearly as I can on the views about the current capacity of a foetus to be born alive. I shall say only that I am advised that the 22nd gestational week is considered by doctors to be the earliest time at which there is the slighest possibility of being born alive, because before then the lungs mature enough to function, even if ventilated.

The House will be aware that the Royal C Obstetricians and Gynaecologists, as well as th Paediatric Association, the Royal College of Practitioners, the Royal College of Midwives British Medical Association, produced a report i foetal viability and clinical practice. That recommended that the age at which a foetus is c viable should be reduced from 28 weeks to 2 Earlier this year, that recommendation was conf that same group of organisations when they look at their 1985 report.

Alongside the support that I have already Government have extended to the proposition in of a Bill—not a Government Bill—introduce other place, the Department has taken a nu significant steps effectively to implement the recom tion about 24 weeks. We have done that in two w —this has already been referred to, but I should clear—we have made it a condition of appr private sector nursing homes that no abortions ar out after 24 weeks. The position is less clear in t but the Department has arranged for the repo drawn to the attention of the fellows and membe Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologi

As has been said on several occasions, the nu abortions after 24 weeks is now very small. On figures for 1986, there were 29 at the 25th week o Hon. Members will have their own views about a number as small as even 29 is to be dismissed in mind that we are talking about individuals have their own views and circumstances, includ large number of cases the fact that by then they w that their baby is likely to be born handicapped. I think all hon. Members will accept that on thos and with the continuing likelihood of a further d the number of abortions occurring so late, the effect of introducing a 24-week limit into the Abo would be small, according to our current experi

Mr. Steel: Can the Minister tell us how many 29 abortions were carried out under section 2 of — in other words, that were related to abnormalities—and how many were carried ou the main section?

Mr. Newton: I do not have the breakdown of with me. However, I understand from a point mad that the figure is about 70 per cent. I think tha right, but if it is wrong, I shall ask that some me passed to me so that I can correct that later.

Mr. Alton: Before the Minister leaves that po is, of course, right—does he therefore recogn inserting a 24-week rule will not make any diff people are concerned about abortions on eugenic g What does the Minister have to say about lat abortions, 92 per cent. of which after 18 we performed on perfectly healthy children?

Mr. Newton: I shall come to that point in a m

I have already made it clear that it is importan understand that the practical effect on reduc number of abortions of a time limit of 24 weeks w small. Nevertheless, there are some who wo establishing the principle of a limit as a significant gain. Hon. Members must judge those issues for themselves. I shall not try to give them a steer, as a Minister, on how they decide to vote.

There has been a good deal of reference to the statistics involved. I shall set them out as clearly as I can, although I fear that they do not add much to what has already been said. If such a Bill had been in force in 1986, about 8,000 of the 172,000 abortions that were performed in that year in England and Wales would not have taken place.

The hon. Member for Mossley Hill pointed to the fact that many abortions at 18 weeks and over are performed on foreign women. The exact statistic is that, out of the 8,276 abortions in England and Wales at 18 weeks and over in 1986, 3,638 were to non-residents. For this purpose, non-residents include women from Scotland, Northern Ireland, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man, as well as women from foreign countries. Abortions performed on women resident in foreign countries amounted to 3,461, which was 42 per cent. of the total. The vast majority of those women came from France, Spain and the Irish Republic.

That reflects—in one case it would be more accurate to say that it reflected—the difficulties that women have in obtaining abortions in those countries. In Eire, abortion is illegal. In France, abortion is available on demand up to 10 weeks gestation, but is severely restricted after that. However, in Spain a law legalising abortion in certain circumstances was passed in 1985. The numbers of women coming to this country from Spain are now dropping rapidly.

Sir Bernard Braine: With regard to foreign women, can my right hon. Friend defend a practice whereby we are effectively breaking the law of other countries? Perhaps more importantly, from the point of view of those women, what guarantee is there that a quick abortion at a London clinic will be followed up by the aftercare that is absolutely essential, psychologically and medically, for women who have had an abortion?

Mr. Newton: As a matter of common sense, all of us would accept that it is less than desirable for women to be crossing international boundaries in order to receive medical treatment of that sort. Undoubtedly, many hon. Members on both sides of the House will take the view that it is wrong for women to come to this country for abortions when they cannot obtain them in their own country, and that view will be held partly for the reasons adumbrated by my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine). That is something about which I must leave hon. Members to make up their own minds.

Others will take a somewhat different view of foreign women coming to this country. For women to contemplate visiting another country and experiencing an unfamiliar health system in order to have an operation of this sort is an indication of the great pressure that develops for a woman who has an unwanted pregnancy. Therefore, to some extent it suggests that, if the limits are made too restrictive, the same consequences may follow for some women in our country, whether in terms of seeking to go abroad or returning to back-street abortions.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: We should also look at that bearing in mind that there are clear financial links. There is a business contract involving foreign women coming to this country. Is it not the case, as shown by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists, that 60 per cent. of late abortions carried out in private clinics were performed by 11 doctors?

Mr. Newton: I have inquired about that, and I am told that the Department is not aware of any evidence to that precise effect. The Department monitors carefully, on the basis of unannounced visits apart from announced visits, the operation of private sector clinics. If we find evidence of abuse, we act to deal with it.

That cross-boundary international flow raises the question what will happen when women with an unwanted pregnancy find themselves denied an abortion in their locality. That has to be considered by hon. Members.

I am not in a position to do what the House might like me to do, which is to make any sort of estimate as to what the possible effects would be in relation, for example, to illegal abortions if the Bill is passed in its present form. One of the happiest facts—I accept that there are unhappy facts too—of what has happened since 1967 is that the number of deaths from criminal abortions has dropped to nil in recent years. It is equally the case—I want to recognise this clearly—that because the Bill would not affect the vast majority of abortions that take place in this country, and because there would undoubtedly be added difficulties in undertaking illegal late abortions, it is unlikely that the passing of this Bill would lead to the sort of back-street abortions that we saw in the early 1960s and before.

Against the background of the number of women who go to great lengths in order to obtain an abortion, it would be rash to say that there would be no risk of some degree of return to abortions outside the law. That is something the House will have to bear in mind.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Will the Minister accept that the delay in provision in some parts of the country might be responsible for the demand for late abortions in some areas?

Mr. Newton: It is very difficult for me to assess the various factors that may be involved. I am not in a position to confirm the proposition that the hon. Gentleman has put to me.

The hon. Member for Ladywood has mentioned that one of the difficulties is the variable availability of NHS abortions around the country, for reasons that I, at any rate, would frankly not wish to disturb. Whatever else we may disagree about, we surely agree it would be wrong to compel consultants and nurses, who have a conscientious objection to the performance of abortions, to undertake them.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan (Cardiff, West): Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Newton: I am happy to give way, but I am anxious about the pressure on time.

Mr. Morgan: The Minister has said that consultants should be free not to carry out abortions or late abortions if they find that repugnant. However, he is missing the point that those consultants may also appoint staff within their areas who agree with their views and that that may have a major impact on the availability of early or late abortions on the NHS in such areas.

Mr. Newton: I readily recognise that that is a matter on which there are a number of insoluble problems and many dilemmas. I stick to my fundamental proposition, that I would not wish to be a Minister for Health who is in the business of seeking to compel clinicians to undertake procedures of which they conscientiously disapprove.

[Mr. Newton]

Some reference has been made to particular cases that have been highlighted by the BMA concerning the possible implications for young girls who do not recognise or who attempt to conceal their pregnancies, and menopausal women who fail to recognise that they are pregnant until it is too late. To help the House to judge those points, and in recognition that they need to be balanced against other views, I can inform the House that, out of a total of 8,276 abortions at 18 weeks and over, 2,865, or over one third, are to women under the age of 20. A further small proportion, about 3 per cent., or 253 abortions at 18 weeks and over, are to women aged 40 and over. Again, hon. Members must make their own judgment about the significance of those figures.

There is one other category that has not been referred to in the House and for which I cannot give any statistics or evaluate in general terms, but which should be mentioned—the possibility of women whose infection with the AIDS virus is not recognised until a late stage of pregnancy. Clearly, under present circumstances, that problem will grow. I emphasise that it is for hon. Members to weigh all of these factors against many other considerations.

The last major point upon which I feel I ought to seek to offer some information and guidance to the House relates to the many references that have been made to handicap and, in particular, the tests and the timing of the tests that can presently or prospectively be available to discover handicap and allow choice to be made.

Mr. Toby Jessel (Twickenham): When my right hon. Friend gave us some figures just now, I thought that he would refer to the approximately 4,800 abortions per year at over 18 weeks that are carried out on women from England. He has not said what proportion of those abortions are carried out by the NHS for which he is responsible. The Minister and his colleagues have made us well aware of the immense pressures due to the increased demand on the NHS and thus the demand on its operating facilities. In view of that, how can it be argued that someone who is waiting for an operation—there are many people, some in pain, waiting for operations of all sorts on the NHS—should have a lower priority than the late abortion of a healthy baby?

Mr. Newton: I note my hon. Friend's views. However, given the views implied by his question, I do not think that I would want, in return, to express an opinion about the particular needs of particular people without knowing rather more about the circumstances in which they find themselves and what has led them to request a particular form of medical attention.

It is important to say something about the handicap issue and the question of tests. Obviously, completely new tests may eventually become available that may alter the position, but, as I am advised, the position on the main tests currently available is as follows. The first test, serum alphafetoprotein, is usually done at 16 weeks. It is a test on the mother's blood to identify women who are more likely than average to have a foetus with an open neural tube defect, particularly a proportion of spina bifida cases. The test usually shows up as abnormal in Amniocentesis is normally done at 16 week assist in confirming the presence of a foe neural tube defect, or to give cells that can determine whether there is a genetic or abnormality if there is reason to suspect th present.

That cell culture takes two to three week as it sometimes does, the test may need t Abortion stemming from the findings is s much before 20 weeks, and in latter tests it be as late as 24 weeks.

Untra sound scanning is mostly carried weeks. The later it is done, the more ac assessing foetal abnormality. Its main uses determining the gestational age, which ma in interpreting other tests for foetal abn multiple pregnancy and to see abnormal structure.

The test that has perhaps been referred debate, and in which there is most interest is chorionic villus biopsy, which is normally the earlier stage of between 8 and 12 week is a relatively new procedure and can b alternative to later examination of cells in obtained by amniocentesis at between 16 an is used for the detection of genetic or abnormalities if there is reason to suspect be present. I am told that it is not an alte procedures of alphafetoprotein testing scanning.

The House must bear in mind that, as villus biopsy is not universally available, and and accuracy are still being studied. Clinical far shows that, in general, results are accu a small percentage of chromosome abnorm be confirmed later by amniocentesis. The problem regarding safety, in that misc amniocentesis is between 1 and 2 per cent., chorionic villus biopsy it appears to be twi Sometimes, there is the further problem following this procedure.

Mr. Wigley: Interpreting what the Min said, will he confirm that at present—other developed in the future—it is essential to to mothers who may be passing genetic d defects may lead to severe disability. Does th have a view of the implications of the Bill i given the Minister's responsibility in regard

Mr. Newton: I hope that the hon. Gentlem me to proceed with a carefully noted piece. the points that he has raised.

If the indications of accuracy and safety by research, and no other hazards of the ch biopsy emerge in the study, obstetricians ma to want to offer a choice of chorionic vill amniocentesis when women whose previous shows the need for genetic or chromosome st early enough in pregnancy. Women would b told that, although there are occasionally p accuracy and a somewhat higher misc chorionic villus biopsy can provide a good whether the foetus has chromosomol or malities that are otherwise detectab amniocentesis.

It can do so early in pregnancy, thus making possible the option of a safer and less unpleasant termination before 12 weeks for some groups of women. There are indications that a majority of women would choose chorionic villus biopsy, but that a substantial number would opt for amniocentesis at 16 weeks.

Mr. Barry Sheerman (Huddersfield): The figures that the Minister has given are interesting. My wife and I lost our first baby because it suffered from hydrocephalus spina bifida after a full-term pregnancy. For the next four healthy children that we had, we were under a great deal of strain. For the first two there were no tests, but for the last two they were available, and we had the option, which we would have taken if we had had a severely disabled child. What worries me profoundly about the Bill is that parents such as myself and my wife will not have that choice.

Mr. Newton: I am sure that all hon. Members will wish both to extend their sympathy to the hon. Gentleman for his experience — it has been interesting to hear about that experience—and to take it into account in deciding what their view should be.

In considering these tests, there are one or two further points that I must make. First, in dating a pregnancy, the margin of error either way is commonly as much as 10 days. Secondly, if a foetal abnormality is detected by one diagnostic method, a further method may have to be used to confirm the diagnosis, and that can mean some delay, especially if the woman has to be referred to a different hospital. Thirdly, delays in systems can sometimes occur for a variety of reasons, whether staff absences, equipment failure, because the woman is ill, because a relative, perhaps a child, is ill, or because of something as mundane as transport difficulties.

All those matters must be borne in mind, but they lead to the conclusion that, as the Bill stands, with the provision that only a child likely to be born dead or with physical abnormalities so serious that its life cannot be independently sustained, would be excluded from its working, there is likely to be some increase in the numbers of severely handicapped children born, whose mothers might otherwise have decided to have an abortion,

Mr. Alton: Is the Minister saying that, if the 8 per cent. that fall into the category that he has described were to be excluded by an exemption clause in Committee, he would accept the ovewhelming burden of evidence that the 92 per cent. who would be perfectly healthy children, should not be aborted?

Mr. Newton: I hope that I have made it clear that I am seeking to put factors before the House which hon. Members should bear in mind and that I do not attempt to press my judgments upon them. I am sure that it is right for me to stick to that position. In view of the reference to the fact that more than 90 per cent. of abortions at 18 weeks and over are for reasons other than foetal abnormality, which is undoubtedly correct, it is also fair for me to put before the House——

Mr. Thurnham: Is my right hon. Friend aware that Professor Stuart Campbell said on Tuesday that he would stake his professional reputation on the fact that there are far more class 4 terminations than are recorded, because of administrative failures in the system?

Mr. Newton: I note with interest what my hon. Fr said, but that is not a matter on which I shall attemp make a judgment.

The House should also note that the proportio abortions done on grounds of foetal abnormality incre considerably with gestational age. At 18 weeks, proportion is 6 per cent.; that rises to 21 per cent. weeks and to more than 70 per cent. above 24 week least that is something which the whole House will to bear in mind.

I have probably said as much as I can usefully helpfully say to the House as Minister for Healt emphasise again that, neither in that capacity, nor i capacity as a member of a collective Government, advising the House and hon. Members in any way how they should vote on this Bill. The House is per entitled to know, and perhaps it is right for me to say, in my capacity — I emphasise this strongly — a independent Member of Parliament with his own pe personal views, I would be more than ready to suppor introduction of a clear legal time limit for abortions. I do not find myself conscientiously able to support passage of the Bill in the precise form in which it has presented to the House today.

12.49 pm

Ms. Jo Richardson (Barking): I am sure that most hon. and hon. Members who were in the House in 1970s will remember that this is by no means the attempt to restrict the Abortion Act 1967. I well recal if it were yesterday, the first attempt, in March because it was almost a year after I had entered the Ho that was the James White Bill. It was followed somew later by the Bill sponsored by the hon. Member for Mi Keynes (Mr. Benyon), and then later by John Corrie's All those Bills were fought off by the strength of pu opinion and by the common sense and sense of justi I use the words advisedly—of the House of Commo

Now, in 1988, it is 20 years since the 1967 Act, du which back-street abortions, as the Minister said, completely disappeared and a new generaton of yo women and men has grown up with a law that has allo women — often with difficulty even under the pre Act and often with unnecessary delays — to obta termination safely and legally.

Let me dispel two myths that have been referred to and in the press during the past few weeks. The first is that the present Act gives women the right to choos does not. Two doctors must agree, and the need to ob an abortion must comply with one of the provisions i Act. Abortion is not another method of contracep That is another thing that is widely said, and quite unt Anyone who believes that can have no idea of the ag of mind that all women undergo before making momentous decision to have an abortion.

The second myth is that women opt for an abortio trivial grounds, such as that it would restrict their so activities or affect their figures. They are much m serious people than their critics give them credit Certainly an unintended pregnancy, often as a resul contraceptive failure, will give many women much to t about. The hon. Member for Birmingham, Edgba (Dame J. Knight) referred to the choice that women h of being able to take contraceptive pills or contraceptive devices. I am sure I do not have to rem her that there is such a thing as contraceptive failure, and that quite a number of women have had to resort to an abortion in the end because of it.

[Ms. Jo Richardson]

Dame Jill Knight: I said that contraception has never been so widely disseminated, that there has never been so much education about it, and that it has never been so good.

Ms. Richardson: I can recall a number of studies done in the past two or three years which have put much fear into the minds of women about the effectiveness of the contraceptive devices they are using — of the pill, for example. What about the cuts in family planning services that are being made? I was in Stevenage about 10 days ago and visited its family planning clinic, which is faced with a 50 per cent. cut in resources over the next 12 months. That will mean an increase in the number of women who may become pregnant as a result of not having proper treatment.

Whatever the reason for an unintended pregnancy, it affects the mental and physical health of a woman in terms of her children or other family responsibilities, adding further strains to an already over-strained household income. Damp, overcrowded housing conditions or homelessness may well be factors that must also be considered. Social research has proved many times that those factors have a direct impact on mental and physical health.

The British system of support for pregnant women is not all that good. Indeed, it is about the worst in western Europe. We have cut the maternity grant for all but the most needy and deprived — those on supplementary benefit — and even that is insufficient to provide the required diet for a pregnant woman. Girls aged under 16 are not given even that meagre benefit.

One of my constituents is a simple parent with a violent husband. She has three children, the oldest of whom is aged 14½. They live in a freezing, hard-to-let house. The house is so cold that they live effectively in one room. Last December, the 14-year-old daughter gave birth to a premature baby. The baby is ailing. The local hospital cannot keep it in, although its health demands that it returns to hospital frequently. That baby has been born and is physically perfect, although it is weak. Some people have tremendous stresses and strains on their lives. They might have forgiven that 14-year-old girl, and her mother, for having an abortion in those circumstances. I certainly would, and I hope that hon. Members who do not always agree with me would. That baby is loved, and I hope that it will survive.

I do not like the suggestion that those of us who opposed the Bill do not care about disabled people. Our record of care and concern for disabled people is as good as that of anyone else. I hope that no one will run away with the idea that there is any difference.

Many hon. Members have mentioned amendments that might be tabled to the Bill in Committee. It is said that a limit of 24 weeks might be acceptable. The hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) has hinted that amendments might be accepted in Committee. But he drafted his Bill with remarkable precision. Had he been thinking about extending the time limit, he would not have tried to define the limit almost to the d to consider the words of the Bill. It is but a 17-week Bill. It says:

"A woman's pregnancy may be termi with section 1 of the Abortion Act 1967 beginning of the 18th week of gestation.
That is the seventh day of the 17th we how anyone could be so precise ab gestation. If the hon. Gentleman now limit may be acceptable, or that he co should have introduced an entirely introduced none at all.

Mr. Alton: I fully understand the ho this may not be the exact moment to have said that that will be a legitimat Committee. But every other country fixes an exact date for an upper time li there, why can we not do it?

Ms. Richardson: I shall tackle the po
hon. Gentleman is dismayed. He realise be the exact time. That point wo Committee, we may talk about 22 or 24 will not. Perhaps some hon. Member forward 12 or 14 weeks. There is no gu pass the Bill stating 17 weeks precisely, and come out with the Bill that we wa offer.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: We have Re

Ms. Richardson: We have Report st have not been properly discussed. Nor will not accept the repeat of a mat properly discussed in Committee.

Let me consider the remainder of th in which it is worded. Clause 1(2) allow to the end of 28 weeks. Thank goodn
However, it is restrictive in the extreme.
to save the life of a mother. It allows is likely to be born dead or with abnorm serious that life cannot be independentl briefing that he circulated to all hon. M Gentleman listed 11 types of handica demonstrate how his exemption claus group. I am informed by Professor Mothercare professor of paediatric ge university, that over 2,000 different con detected during pregnancy. Who w conditions will be exempted?

Hon. Members who attended Pr presentation in the House a few week shaken by the examples of severe multiple handicap that the professor a outside the exemption as it is phrased in say, 16 or 20 hon. Members sit in Com
We are not doctors. We have some doc but they are not necessarily specialists. H people, decide between different kinds names of which we probably cannot ev alone understand? I would much rather to informed medical opinion. That is w left.

The hon. Gentleman has done o
Practically everyone in the country no amniocentesis test is, that it cannot ta
16th week and that results are not availa

Perhaps, as a result of the debate that has gone on in the country, many more women will want to have an amniocentesis test because they have now heard of it, particularly if they are in any doubt about their pregnancies. We have the amniocentesis test, and the ultrasound screening to which the Minister referred, but it does not provide certain results until the 18th to 20th week, or even later.

There are known cases in which abnormalities or lack of development appear to be indicated by early ultrasound screening. If the pregnancy is continued with careful screening and back-up, further tests can reveal and have revealed that such abnormality has disappeared. If the Bill is passed with a much earlier upper time limit, it is entirely possible that, because they are cautious and worried, doctors will unnecessarily abort and that women will unnecessarily lose children whom they want. That is another reason why 18 weeks is a ridiculous time to put into the Bill.

I am sorry that those hon. Members who take a restrictive view of abortion were not present on Tuesday last in the Grand Committee Room to hear the moving and humbling testimony of mothers who have had abortions because they decided not to continue with their pregnancies after foetal abnormalities were detected. Some hon. Members were there. We heard from mothers who have since had or are going to have perfect babies. They said that if, because of the law, they had been forced to carry on with their earlier pregnancies and were now, against their will, trying to cope with handicapped children, they would never have risked having another child. They still grieve over the loss of their first baby, but they are all glad that the back-up of screening and our present humane and compassionate laws gave them the opportunity to make their individual choice and to go on with confidence to have more children. Who will sit in judgment on the first such woman to seek an illegal abortion, if the Bill is passed?

Nothing has been said this morning about mental handicap. It is specifically excluded from the Bill, because the hon. Member for Mossley Hill has excluded the reference to mental health which is in the original Act. There are approximately 160,000 severely mentally handicapped people in this country and almost 1 million mildly mentally handicapped people in England and Wales. As a society, we try to support their desire to live an ordinary life within the community, and that is right. That includes allowing them and helping them to develop relationships with the opposite sex and, for some, at some stage, marriage. Sadly, it also means being at risk or being exploited by others in the community.

The diagnosis of pregnancy in mentally handicapped women is often very delayed because of their unawareness of their condition and because they fail to seek medical advice. A child born to a mentally handicapped mother runs a high risk of being mentally handicapped and of having other congenital defects of varying severity. Pregnancy, delivery and fostering or adoption can have devastating effects on a mentally handicapped woman and her partner and, more commonly, on her aging parents who have devoted all their young lives to the care of their child. Any reduction in the upper time limit for therapeutic abortion would have a traumatic effect on this small but important group of people.

I wish to refer briefly to another group of p received a letter, dated 4 January, from Dr. Linda senior lecturer in paediatric cardiology at Guy's
She says that, since 1980, her unit has specialise
"detection of congenital heart disease in early foetal present technology, the optimum time for foeta examination is about 18-20 weeks gestation. Ma disease can be accurately detected from this time on 25% of children born with heart defects will die in 10 years of their life, often after a restricted chequered with repeated hospital investigation a heart surgery."
Those children would certainly be excluded u exclusion clause of the Bill because they would alive and, in other respects, able to exist independe they would die before they were 10 years old.

Dr. Allan goes on to say:

"Faced with the prospect of a very poor l prognosis for their child, the majority of pare termination of pregnancy—32 of a possible grou parents made this choice in 1987."

Mr. Alton rose——

Ms. Richardson: I shall not give way to t
Gentleman, but I should have liked him to deal w involving mental handicap and heart disease wh not be covered by the clause. Much has been sai chorionic villus sampling; the Minister has said t are going on at present. It will be quite a long tim these will be universally available, however.

We have talked about amending the Bill in Co
I hope very much that we shall not get to that st that we shall defeat the Bill today. We must keep r that 18 weeks is on offer—not 20, 22 or 24
Several permutations have been offered around, b not want to go down that road.

All informed opinion is against the Bill. I have organisations, as I am sure do others, that have a to the House to vote against it. There are lists colleges and organisations for the handicapped.
somewhat sharp practice for those hon. Membe of whom is not listening—who referred to the gynaecologists to talk about 62 per cent. of gynaec being in favour of a much lower time limit. Let us b there are more than 3,000 gynaecologists, only 40 of whom replied. That is a small sample of i opinion.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Will the hon. Lady give

Ms. Richardson: I am sorry, but I shall not gi
The hon. Gentleman has time to make his own s

In 1975, 9 per cent. of abortions in Tower Hamle performed at 17 weeks and above. In 1977
Huntingford opened a day-care abortion service
1981, 1·8 per cent. of abortions were carried ou weeks and above. With proper day care, the numbe abortions can be reduced, and that is the way to 1981, when I proposed a ten-minute Bill to place on all health authorities to make such provision a equally to all women, the hon. Member for Mos voted against it. He consistently said through argument before this debate that he favoured better and more evenly spread provision of N
Health Service facilities. The hon. Gentleman against my legislation, and so did every other spo this Bill who was in the House at that time.

Mr. Alton: The hon. Lady is absolutely right vote against it. I am not in favour of earlier abo am in favour of better care, better love and better resources—many of the things about which the hon. Lady has talked. That does not mean to say that we should favour abortion. The most repugnant part of abortion is late abortions, and that is all that my Bill specifically deals with.

[Mr. Alton]

Ms. Richardson: It is not any kind of answer to imply that one's concern for better and more even provision of NHS facilities is connected with the Bill and with abortion facilities and now to say that one is just concerned for general resourcing across the board.

We were all pleased that the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel), the original sponsor of the 1967 legislation, was able to spare time to speak today. The good, courageous pioneers—there are many in the Strangers Gallery listening, including the Abortion Law Reform Association—who campaigned for the 1967 legislation within the framework of the Infant Life (Preservation) Act 1929 and sought to help women and protect them against the dangers and exploitation of back-street and self-inflicted abortion. I remind hon. Members of the practices that claimed 95 women's lives in the one year alone that preceded the 1967 Act.

The Minister has said that he doubts very much whether, if the Bill is passed, there will be a wholesale return to back-street abortions. There may not be a wholesale return to the back streets—I hope that we will never find out—but there will probably be a return of some sort. I would not wish to see a return to those days.

Mr. Tim Devlin (Stockton, South): Will the hon. Lady give way?

Ms. Richardson: No.

I remember those days. I am of the generation when knitting needles, coat hangers, turpentine and iodine were used, resulting in a number of deaths.

Mrs. Mahon: I nursed one of those statistics. I spent the longest night of my life looking after a young woman who died at the age of 23. That is what a return to those days would mean.

Ms. Richardson: I am grateful to my hon. Friend, who I know has personal experience of such matters.

As the Minister said, there has not been one death from abortion in the past three years. Today, hon. Members will be searching their hearts. I beg them to think very carefully before voting for such a draconian and ill-thought-out Bill, which will do nothing to help deprived women and families, and everything to confuse the law and criminalise women. I hope that the Bill will be defeated.

If another Bill comes from the other place, we shall have to consider it and come to a decision. In the meantime, I prefer to keep the existing Abortion Act with the flexibility of a 28-week upper time limit, so that we do not criminalise women who are in pain, terror and worry, and so that we do not criminalise doctors. I ask

Several Hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. It will be evident to the House that many hon. Members on both sides of the House still wish to speak, and that varying views are held on both sides of t appeal to any hon. Member who is be extremely brief, in the interests o who wish to speak.

1.16 pm

Miss Ann Widdecombe (Maidsto I am motivated by the fact that it e the 1967 Act lamentably failed to ac where life starts, and the rights of o life of another.

We all accept that if someone is and then, through illness or a maj grossly handicapped, that person st and is classified as a separate huma rights. We all accept that if a child something goes wrong at birth, such child is a human being with fully e and has the right to live, no matter

We do not allow a woman t continue a pregnancy when she is pregnant. We already say that restriction of one individual's right another's right to live. I support th whether we have that right, and, if n should be the correct limit. The Bill various hon. Members who oppo maintain strongly that the 1967 Ac 1967 Act said that what is in the wo a woman has a right of abortion circumstances. It also said that pe perhaps we should protect it, so circumstances in which a woman can they ever so loose. It fudged the is when life is life and must be fully and as hon. Members would respect eac been widely accepted that babies although it would be conceded by n it is a massive struggle and only a they survive.

I find it deeply objectionable pejorative word such as obscene— that permits two babies to leave the 24 weeks; one is cherished while its li all the medical resources in the cou saving it and its parents desperately the other is wilfully destroyed, b mother's womb unnaturally at the impossible to accept as a mark of a

Ms. Diane Abbott (Hackney, Newington): Will the hon. Member

Miss Widdecombe: With respect for Hackney, North and Stoke New we have had four speeches in a row Benches on her side of the argument to have a little say. That is said wi know that she feels very strongly ab

I find it unacceptable that we sh completely separate attitudes toward age. It is even reflected in our langua a woman who lost a baby prematurel foetus; she says she has lost her baby that we will wilfully destroy a 24-w

House. I strongly led from now on to ther hon. Members

: I support the Bill.
avours to do what
ve. It tries to define individual over the n perfectly healthy accident, becomes has the right to live being with full civil damaged because oxygen failure, that blished civil rights,

w handicapped.
choose whether to ore than 28 weeks
re must be some determination over Bill because it asks why not, and what been described by it as muddled. I vas a muddle. The
is not life because nder certain loose
aps it is life, and e shall define the ave an abortion, be
. We must decide
solutely respected, other's lives. It has rvive at 24 weeks,
hon. Friends, that nority survive, but

I will not use a
at we have a law mother's womb at is fought over, and y are poured into nt it to live, while g taken from its ne age. I find that vilised society.

lorth and Stoke
e way?

the hon. Member gton (Ms. Abbott),
om the Opposition
nd I would like us respect, because I t this subject.
ld have those two child of the same
I have never heard
ay that she lost her et when we decide
-old baby, we call it a foetus. That is a dual standard. I am concerned that the Abortion Act 1967 legislated for that standard, and I want to see a revision.

Where do we draw the line? Is it at the presently recorded lowest survival rate of 24 weeks for permanent survival and 23 weeks for temporary survival, or at the point where we think medical science will move in the foreseeable future, or do we recognise as life the time when a child is fully formed, is sentient and can feel pain and react to stimuli? We have all reached different decisions of conscience. The Bill is a valid attempt to set down a line, and I support the line that the Bill has set down.

I recognise fully that other hon. Members have different opinions. For the sake of the 92 per cent. of healthy children who are aborted over the age of 18 weeks, I would not stick doctrinally to a position where the exceptions were so narrow that the Bill would be lost through that. I would rather compromise, even if it goes against what I personally believe, in order to save that 92 per cent. I am sorry that my hon. Friend the Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay) is not here to hear me say this, because his major concern was that he did not trust the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) to put together a Committee that would be capable of absorbing that compromise. As an anti-abortionist, I will face that compromise if by doing so I can save unborn life, and many of my hon. Friends would take that view.

The same goes for the line we draw. To be perfectly honest, I would draw the line below the one that the hon. Member for Mossley Hill has drawn, but if in order to save a certain proportion of unborn life I must accept a slightly higher line, I will, with reluctance but straightforwardly, accept that line. All that I ask is that this important Bill, which fills a gap that the 1967 Act left unaddressed and attempts to define the rights of individuals who cannot speak for themselves, should have a chance to be fully examined and to return to the House for final approval or disapproval. I would say to my hon. Friend the Member for Berkshire, East: let us not shut the door this morning. This matter is too important. We must keep the door open because what finally emerges will be a wise, humane, just and civilised Bill; and the present legislation fulfils none of those criteria.

1.25 pm

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): The hon. Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) set out graphically the nature of the compromise that we are required to support if we wish to reduce to some extent the number of abortions that take place annually.

This Bill is not an ideal Bill and was never advocated as such. The hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton)—my hon. Friend for the purposes of this debate—came top of the ballot. If every hon. Member had the right to introduce a private Member's Bill, we should not be faced with the dilemma that confronts my hon. Friend the Member for Mossley Hill. He believes in a principle. He won the place in the ballot; it was not me or any other hon. Member.

My hon. Friend had to say to the organisations outside the House, "If you wish me to place this matter before Parliament, you will have to accept that, in framing the Bill that I propose, I shall not be able to compromise on one matter." That matter was the question of handicap. My hon. Friend was imprisoned in that position because of his experience of teaching handicapped children for six years. My hon. Friends may find that difficult to s they must understand that if one cannot secu route to abortion reform, one has no option b offers from hon. Members who are prepared t private Member's slot for reform that objectives.

Before I speak to the Bill in detail, I shoul something about the Labour party and what h in the past few weeks. We have been told that party has exerted pressure on its members. I w it absolutely clear that that is not the case. I ad to those outside the House who have misrepe debate and this argument in a most grotesqu I say that the letter from the general secretary Whitty, was a fair and reasonable letter set Labour party's policy. He was absolutely right letter, and he said, as the great majority of me party would say, that it is for hon. Members t themselves.

Then we were told that the Labour Chief W out a letter over Christmas issuing instructions true; it never happened. I received the letter, w out that two important private Members' Bill debated at the beginning of January and ex hope that there would be a substantial att those debates. I say again to those misrepresented these matters outside the Hou is the truth, and I say it as a supporter of the that that information will be taken back to gr the country.

Let me deal with the so-called demand for Whip. I have not heard a demand for a thre has never been part of the argument that t a three-line Whip. But I understand why circumstances, there should be a three-line W Labour party takes a position, it is entitled— has not done so to date—to demand a thre on such matters. Hon. Members who want t their conscience have the right to decide wha to do if they find that a three-line Whip has be upon them. That is their right, and my right me to decide whether to vote aye or no. If something, I shall apply what is for me an tradition of the House and cast my vote acco

One of the fiercest opponents of the Bi Friend the Member for Preston (Mrs. W against a three-line Whip, on a very important 1978 — the Finance Bill. She expressed according to her conscience and judgment a penalised for so doing. If the party thinks t matters voting should be whipped, I do not tak to that. I say to people outside the House an in the Strangers' Gallery that this is a matt conscience but that even a three-line Whip al follow one's conscience.

No one will ever drive me into a Lobby in a measure with which I do not agree. Some ho who support the Bill, but particularly some o oppose it, are quick to flex their muscles wh about matters in which they think conscience i

I joined the Labour party for a specific re mid 1960s I built my Socialism on my percep and on the importance that I gave to life issues hanging and was in favour of unilater disarmament. That was one of the things that into the Labour party. I supported life issues fi days in the party, and that was one of the crucial building blocks on which I built my Socialism. For many of us, that is an immutable position. As long as we remain in the political process and are able to advocate these matters we shall cast our votes in favour of reform of the law on an issue of this nature. That is because we believe in a principle. However, that does not detract from our right to recognise that some hon. Members, such as the hon. Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe), feel equally fiercely about such issues. She has the right to put a compromise before the House, knowing that it will be heard throughout the House for what it is.

[Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours]

I have outlined my building blocks, but they are also the building blocks for people throughout the Labour movement. Many people in the movement believe in the life tradition and support my position. In the last few weeks they have written to me and said that, although the party has taken a decision that they cannot accept, they are still Socialists. In formulating their case those people have drawn on exactly the same strands in their philosophy as those strands in my philosophy that hold me together politically. They are faced with the same conflicts.

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Campbell-Savours: No. My hon. Friend has just arrived in the Chamber. If he had been here throughout the debate, I would have given way to him.

As I have said, those people are confronted by conflicts. On the one hand, we believe in a principle while, on the other, we know that thousands of women simply cannot find the courage to face the social difficulties that arise and have to proceed with an unwanted pregnancy. I strongly blame the Government for that. My hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) said at a dinner the other night that she sat through a Bill or some meeting at which reference was made to an amendment moved in a Committee dealing with social security reform. She said that Conservatives had refused to accept the responsibility for funding families in which children were in their earliest years.

That is the contradiction for us in the Labour party who believe in the life tradition. We want reform of the law, but the other side of the argument is that many women come to us asking how we can possibly want reform of the law when the very framework and nature of the society that is developing under the Government does not provide the essential support services to ensure at least some help for families who find themselves in this position. That is the conflict that confronts us. In the letters that I have received in the last few weeks, people, especially Labour people, have repeatedly spoken specifically about these matters.

I have heard references to the photograph which was circulated in the newspaper advertisements that we placed in the national press and which was portrayed on hundreds of thousands of postcards that were sent throughout the United Kingdom. I suggest that my hon. Friends who oppose the Bill were distressed by the photograph because it was so graphic in its detail. It was a beautiful photograph of an 18-week foetus. It was clear, precise in colour and produced by the Swedish photographer Nielsson.

The campaign concentrated on that photograph because we wanted to draw the attention of the British people and, indeed, of hon. Members to the fact that we are not talking in grey abstract terms; we are talking about a child who is fully formed in the womb. There was no other way in which we could express, in any detail, what the debate was about. That is why the photograph was used and why the lobby decided that that was the way in which the campaign should be presented. [Interruption.] If there were any words to which my hon. Friends might have taken exception, I do not know what they were. However, during the campaign all sides may have used words that we may later regret. Indeed, one such phrase was "foreign woman." I used it. I regretted that from day one because it denoted disrespect, but I have heard it used again in our arguments today. However, I agree that some language should have been modified or not used in the way in which it was.

My hon. Friend the Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) referred to a Bill that she brought before the House in 1981. I agonised long and hard over that Bill. I am convinced now that in principle she is right. If we are to bring in legislation that will draw women into earlier abortions, we must set up the arrangements to facilitate that. Every time that a young woman is stopped from having an abortion in a clinic in, say, Birmingham, we cannot see that as a gain for the life movement. It is not a gain—it is cheating around the rules. We must ensure that, in the event that we set in place legislation—I hope that the Bill goes through——

Ms. Abbott: Unamended.

Ms. Short: Unamended—go on say it.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Yes, I hope that the Bill goes through unamended. But I know that it cannot go through in that form. I believe that the Bill will go through in the way in which the hon. Member for Mossley Hill has suggested if amendments are successful.

In the event that the Bill is accepted, I believe that it should be followed rapidly by legislation, or whatever is necessary, so that throughout the United Kingdom abortion is made available within the law as it exists at the time. Equally, there should be proper counselling services whereby woman are given the opportunity of advice so that they are able to make a balanced judgment. It seems utterly wrong that in one part of the country a woman is able to secure a service, which is her right in law, but that in another area she can be obstructed by the medical profession. That seems totally wrong. Part and parcel of the debate on the Bill must be about that provision.

1.38 pm

Mr. Terry Dicks (Hayes and Harlington): I shall make my position on this issue clear straight away. I am in favour of the Bill because I see it as a first step to no abortions whatsoever. I say that to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short), who is now leaving the Chamber, and who asked us to be honest. I am being honest about this, because there is no point in behaving in any other way.

In saying that, I am aware of the implications for ladies who have been raped, and the implications relating to incest and for the handicapped children who might be born as a result. Nobody has felt more strongly about the impact of rape on ladies than I have, and nobody takes a stronger view about child abuse in the home.

We have heard a great deal today about women's rights, but nothing about women's obligations. The minute a lady takes part in a sexual act, other than by force, she loses the right to control what happens to her body, because at the time of conception there is the beginning of another life inside her. That second life has rights that have to be recognised.

I shall now deal with disabled and handicapped children who may not be born. For children to enjoy life, they do not have to have the speed of an athlete, the body of a bodybuilder or the agility of a gymnast. The book entitled "The Dam-Burst of Dreams" about Christopher Nolan shows that. That young lad has no physical co-ordination and no normal body movement, but he can perceive life through his words and thoughts clearer than many of us sitting in the House now. He, if anybody, represents the right to life no matter what the handicap. He has the right to life, irrespective of what his mother may have thought.

Mr. Wigley rose——

Mr. Dicks: I will not give way.

Fortunately for Christopher Nolan, he has a mother who wanted him and who has been a great help to him. He has made a major contribution to our lives in this country and elsewhere. There are many examples of handicapped children who have grown up to make contributions to our society.

I am being quick because there are others who want to speak, but I should say that this debate has caused me a great deal of heart-searching. Fifty years ago, a mother of 40 had a child who was born a spastic. That child was me, the Member of Parliament for Hayes and Harlington. I am concerned because I believe that, if the technology that is available now had been available 50 years ago, a doctor may well have said to my mother, "You are 40 years old and you are carrying a disabled child. There is brain damage. Please have it aborted." Opposition Members may wish that had happened; I do not know. I am saying that my right to life came about because the technology was not available to help a doctor advise my mother about whether to allow me to live.

I am a spastic. Of course I am nowhere near as bad as Christopher Nolan, but I have to cope with the stresses and strains of minor disability. However, there was loving care from my mother in my home. By the age of nine, she had taught me how to do up my shoelaces because I could not use my hands properly. She told me that I could take part in sport and lead a normal life. She told me that, if she had her way, which she did, I would make some sort of success of my life. I suppose that having arrived here as a spastic with cerebral palsy is a measure of success.

I have dealt mainly with handicap because people have said that mothers should have the right to decide whether to have a handicapped child. We are talking about a life inside a woman. The doctors advising that women could be wrong. That child could be born, survive and understand what is going on. Christopher Nolan represents the reason why we should not have any abortions at all. However, I understand and am concerned about incest and rape and the implication of a child being born as a result. I do not know the answer, but I do know that life is important from the minute that conception takes place. Of course ladies have rights and we must consider them, but they also have obligations and responsibilities that they have to face up to.

The hon. Member for Barking (Ms Richardson) raised the issue of the mentally handicapped having children. Perhaps in this enlightened society we should be thinking about telling such people that they should not have children and helping them to enjoy a full life. We cannot say that they have the right to have children and then say that they can have an abortion. That is inconsistent.

By its very nature, abortion is wrong. Abortion at any time is wrong. I support the Alton Bill, if I can call it that, because he is making a move in the right direction. Please let us not use handicapped or potentially handicapped children inside a woman's womb as a reason for taking a particular point of view. They have a right to life. In many ways, they lead a more fulfilled life than we do. I am convinced that that applies to Christopher Nolan, in his own way.

Mr. Wigley: rose——

Mr. Dicks: I beg people to support the Alton Bill, perhaps as a first stage.

1.44 pm

Ms. Mildred Gordon (Bow and Poplar): Sadly, in the twisted society in which we live, it is often impossible for a woman to say, "yes to life", to the life of the embryo growing within her, without damaging her own life and the life of her existing family.

The whole question of abortion is closely linked to other campaigns that women have been fighting for many years. Indeed, it has already been said that not only did we have to campaign for legal abortion, but we have had to campaign continually against repeated attacks on our abortion rights. The Bill represents the thin edge of the wedge; if it is passed, it will lead to further attacks on women's right to legal abortion.

If we were to win those other campaigns for which we are fighting, we would have a more civilised society, there would be few abortions, and late terminations would all but disappear. To achieve that end, we need improved sex education. We need contraceptives of all kinds, freely available and free. We need better housing and employment and training opportunities. We need safer childbirth — our record is not among the best in the advanced world. We must do away with some of the more recent "conveyor belt practices" connected with childbirth in hospitals, which have a traumatic effect on the baby during birth. We want nursery provision for young children. We want money for medical research into foetal abnormalities to discover them at an earlier stage. We need money for disabled people and money to provide facilities for them. We need money from the Government, as of right, for women who are carers of children, the disabled, the sick and the old.

If we win those campaigns, women will be able to have their children and we shall have a civilised society in which the rearing of children will be the joy that it should be. Nowadays, all too often the birth of an unwanted child leads to child abuse, and that is something we should not forget.

Last week, I sent the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) a copy of a letter that I had received. I received many sad letters, but I was especially struck by this one, perhaps because it came from an old man. Perhaps it was naive of me to send a copy of that letter to the hon. Member for Mossley Hill, or perhaps it was a reflex action after 40 years of teaching, to try to make people face up to the consequences of their activities.

[Ms. Mildred Gordon]

That old man told me that he had for many years been looking after his handicapped son of 35, who is mentally disabled. The father was bitter and told how his wife had died in her fifties; he put that down to the strain of looking after their handicapped child. He was sad, he was tired, he was despairing, and above all he was haunted by the fear of what would happen to his handicapped son when he died. I have met many people with handicapped children who are haunted by that fear. It is another factor that has not been considered in this debate.

But the central issue, the most important question to consider, is whether women should have control over their bodies—the right to decide what happens within their bodies—or whether they should be controlled by others. Earlier in the debate, a Conservative Member raised the question of class. Money gives one a lot of rights. Those women, who have a lot of money and education, have the right to get round the restrictions of any kind of Bill. If this Bill is passed, such women will be able to find abortionists and will find a way to have their damaged foetuses aborted even at a late stage. However, poorer women would lose their rights. I am concerned for the rights of poorer women not only to have abortions, but to have children. Those two things are connected.

Some years ago, I was in a women's hospital for a check-up. I was shocked to see the number of women there for sterilisation operations. An unduly large proportion of them were black or Asian women. I went all round the ward asking the women why they were having this operation, and most of them had been advised by their doctor to have it as a form of contraception. It is because of my experiences as a young woman, long before 1967, that I am in favour of abortion on request in an adequate Health Sevice. It would solve almost all the problems of late terminations.

I do not know whether some hon. Members understand that no woman approaches abortion lightly. For the first few days after a woman has had a baby, her body trembles when she hears the baby cry. That is nature's way of tying the mother to the baby. This bonding starts from conception, so it is physically impossible for any woman to approach abortion lightly. They approach it after giving serious consideration to the factors involved.

We have all heard about the pre-1967 period and the gin, hot baths, quinine pills, knitting needles and soap suds. We know that the best doctors—those who were caring and kind—were often criminalised and struck off the register.

However hon. Members may not appreciate the constant shadow that was cast over the lives of women, both married and unmarried, by the fear of unwanted pregnancy. Every month, my generation and my mother's generation worried about becoming pregnant, especially if their period was late. They felt caged, trapped and frightened. They wondered what to do and where they would find someone who would give them an abortion if they could not cope with, or afford to have, another child.

The Bill will lead to the criminalisation of women and doctors once again. Hon. Members who are wavering about how to vote should think about their wives, girlfriends, daughters and granddaughters. They should vote for their choice to have control over their bodies; they should vote against this Bill.

1.52 pm

Rev. Ian Paisley (Antrim, North): One fact has emer from the debate about which there has been controversy—92 per cent. of all late abortions are healthy babies. There is common ground on that fact, it has been accepted and confirmed by the Minister.

People have rightly raised their convictions ab womenfolk, handicapped children and other matt They are entitled to do so, but surely we are entitled speak for voiceless, defenceless, inarticulate heal babies. The House must concern itself with that matt

The hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (M Alton) has made his personal convictions clear. The h Member for Rochdale (Mr. Smith) said that he was nc Roman Catholic. I need not tell the House my relig [Laughter.] We all have personal convictions.

The hon. Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecom made it clear that our prime interest is healthy babies w should not be aborted. A strong voice should be raised the House for those who cannot speak for themselves

For more than 40 years, I have been a pastoral minis in a working-class district of east Belfast, and I know anguish. I speak as one who has had the experience sitting with young women faced with this problem. I h tried to counsel them and tell them that everything will be over when they have an abortion. I have in my ha a poem which one of them sent to me, and it is the sadd communication that I have ever received. A you unmarried women who became pregnant decided that abortion was the best way out for her and two mon later she wrote:

"There is no more happiness any more
Those days belong now behind a closed door
Darkness and despair now take its place
I hate being a member of the human race"

That young woman's heart was completely broken.

Therefore, there is another side to having abortio there is an aftermath and a harvest. I emphasis that th who adopt the same position as I do feel deeply a understand with compassion the heart-rending decisio that are being made by those people, but there is a mo excellent way.

The purpose of abortion must be questioned. Is it the convenience of others or for the good of the child? Th is the prime question that must be asked. It is simply n enough to say in reply that children are unwanted, should be destroyed. No one has the right to adopt th attitude. The gruesome act of abortion as it has be delineated here today has been repudiated, and it has be said that those facts should not be brought into the deba But we are talking about a child—a real person—who being destroyed. That a child should be destroyed with the mother's womb in that way is something about whi we must righteously protest.

Those who are ardent campaigners for women's rig indict anti-abortionists as taking from women the right exercise control over their fertility, but that is anoth matter from control over life itself, and that must emphasised. Easy-going tolerance has contributed mu to the current vague estimation of the value of life. It do not occur to many that what they call tolerance is in reali a sheer lack of conviction.

It is not particularly significant if a person with no gre convictions says that he or she is tolerant. Tolerance is virtue only if a person believes in something strongly, y respects the rights of another to disagree. True Christi tolerance does not play footsie with the truth. A good law will not make good people—and we all know that—but evil law not only legalises evil but prevents the development of good and tears down the nation's morality.

The old saying that one cannot make men love by law is true. But Christian realism is not content with that, because it knows that love in social terms is expressed in justice for all, and that "all" includes the unborn child. The Bill calls for an immediate and definite response. The three avenues along which we make our decisions are intellect, conscience and emotion. I contend that in each of those three areas, support for the Bill is the most responsible line that we can take for our society.

1.59 pm

Mr. Seamus Mallon (Newry and Armagh): I want to pay tribute to the promoter of the Bill, the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton), for the time and effort that he has spent on it and for the amount of abuse that he has had to take because of it. We all know that he exercised a self-denying ordinance by refusing himself the right to be Liberal Chief Whip during these exciting times of trial. For that also he should be praised.

I have two points to make, one of them in response to the question asked by the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short), who implied that those of us who oppose abortion are somehow being hypocritical by supporting the Bill. That is a valid and understandable criticism, which must be answered. Anyone who believes, as I do, that abortion is wrong must surely take every opportunity to reduce its incidence, even if the step taken will save only one, four, ten or a hundred lives. The decision to compromise with one's own conscience will thus have been rewarded in the most practical way possible.

One thing that has been clear throughout the debate and that will always be clear in such debates is that the issue is not to do with the peripheral matters that have been raised, or with the emotions and anger that have been shown. The subject of our discussion has been variously called a child, a baby, a foetus, a person and a thing. Perhaps if we settled for a proper name, a proper terminology, that might help many of us to make up our minds. I suggest that we substitute the term human being. If we do, there remains one fundamental question to ask and answer as we vote today. What precept of morality, legality or civics can justify the death of 7,000 human beings in this country under a piece of legislation that was sanctioned on the Floor of the House? That is the only serious question for the legislator. We shall answer it today. I repeat it because it is stark, harsh and real, and we shall choose our answer to it when we choose which Lobby to enter. How can we justify in political, legal or civil terms the taking away of life from 7,000 people if we accept the name human being?

2.3 pm

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): I have listened with great interest to all the arguments deployed in the debate. One aspect that has been neglected is the consideration of whether we should dignify the Bill that the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) has brought before the House by making it law. The hon. Gentleman seeks to introduce the heavy hand of regulation into human behaviour. Human conduct is largely defined by habit and arises spontaneously to be tested and refined in our courts of law. Whenever this issue has been tested in a court of law, the court has come down on the side of the woman. It has not accepted the precedence of an unborn child over the mother. In the latest case in which this was tested, when a young man brought a case against his girl friend who was some 20 weeks pregnant, the court ruled in favour of the young woman, so we are not a society that has no organisation or laws apart from those decided in this House.

The campaign that has been conducted by the hon. Member for Mossley Hill is largely based on emotion and on some very unpleasant, aesthetically revolting suggestions which have been made by hon. Members on both sides of the House. If those conditions apply to abortions, I am sure that we all deplore them, but they are no reason for denying a woman the right to have a termination if, after consulting her family, her doctors and, where appropriate, her religious advisers, she decides to have an abortion. It ill behoves the House to remove that right from her.

I appeal to my fellow Conservative Members, who are prevaricating on an issue of personal rights. The Conservative party takes great pride in having reduced the role of the state in people's lives during the past decade. We are rolling back the state, yet the Bill would push us back decades into the darker realms of human conduct to the time when the most common cause of female mortality was badly conducted abortions.

British women are solidly against the Bill——

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman (Lancaster): Rubbish.

Mrs. Gorman: All the polls and surveys that have been sent to us show that the majority of the population is against the Bill——

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: They do not.

Mrs. Gorman: If hon. Members can mention the biased poll conducted by gynaecologists, we can also mention the show of hands on a television programme yesterday, which showed that 90 per cent. of a balanced audience was in favour of a woman's right to choose. It should be noted that every responsible medical society opposes the Bill, including the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists, the Royal College of Midwives, the Royal College of General Practitioners, the British Medical Association, the British Paediatric Association and the Clinical Genetics Society. They are not back-street abortionists making money out of foreign women, with whose plight I sympathise; they are some of the most responsible bodies in the land and they oppose the Bill.

Many other people oppose the Bill. With some of my colleagues—far too few—I attended a moving meeting conducted by parents of handicapped children who have had to live with the problem. I shall not repeat the arguments about physically and mentally handicapped children. Suffice it to say that some of those parents consider it a mercy that children born with appalling difficulties, who live their lives in pain and sorrow and who die young, are now capable of not being born. That is not just my view; it is the view of the parents who attended that meeting.

Many times, the hon. Member for Mossley Hill has trotted out examples of handicapped people who have lived and who are pleased to have lived. I am sure that we all take pleasure in that. But we heard from a young woman with a genetic disorder whose blood must be changed several times a month, who has a pump under her skin to keep her going, who develops extremely painful lumps in her stomach and who is constantly in pain. She told us that she would rather not be alive. For every case that the hon. Gentleman raised, there is another case. I agree that it is only part of the argument, but it is an extremely potent and important point.

[Mrs. Gorman]

It is a matter of civil rights. It is a matter of a woman's right to decide her own future and her own fertility. This Chamber should not lightly take that right from her. Those who consider that abortion is wrong should test their prejudices in a court of law. Abortion matters should be decided in a court of law, not in the House, where our prejudices and religious attitudes are being used in a variety of ways in an attempt to influence the Bill.

The hon. Member for Mossley Hill poses as a caring progressive. His Bill will bring misery and suffering to thousands of families. Those who really care, those who work with the situation, those who have lived with the situation, and even those who were born in the situation oppose him. I beg the House to oppose the Bill.

2.10 pm

Mrs. Audrey Wise (Preston): I waited for the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) to deal with the detail of his Bill. In particular, I waited for him to define what he meant when he said that a woman's pregnancy may be terminated up to the beginning of the 18th week of gestation. I waited for him to tell us what the 18th week of gestation is and how he would go about proving it. There is no legal definition of pregnancy. As a legal matter, the 18th week of gestation does not exist. How would the hon. Gentleman define it? The hon. Gentleman may ask how we define 28 weeks. In practice, we do not; it is not necessary.

The present state of the law is not that abortion is legal up to 28 weeks. Section 1(1) of the Infant Life (Preservation) Act 1929 states:

"any person who, with intent to destroy the life of a child capable of being born alive, by any wilful act causes a child to die before it has an existence independent of its mother, shall be guilty of felony".

The term is:

"a child capable of being born alive".

The law in such cases is applied case by case. A doctor who performs an abortion after 24 weeks must be ready to justify in the courts that the child was not capable of being born alive. This Bill would not allow a case-by-case analysis. It is a general assertion that there is a particular day on which an abortion will become criminal. The hon. Gentleman does not tell us which day.

Which day represents the 18th week of gestation? Supporters of the Bill do not know. Doctors do not know. The woman concerned does not really know. In any case, the woman is in the best position to say, and she is the one to be criminalised, so she cannot be expected to be co-operative.

At the moment, the law is flexible. It puts a medical matter in the proper position to be argued medically, even if it has to be done in the courts. The Bill destroys that. If hon. Members pass the Bill, we will criminalise thousands of women and their doctors and be car the capacity to prove what was being asserted. That be irresponsible.

We have been told a great deal about the possib amending the Bill in Committee. I listened carefully hon. Member for Mossley Hill, and I shall tel Members what he is offering. He said that it wo "proper to examine" how to "rationalise the law". "examine", not "agree with you". He said that if it result in a "useful measure", he would not be intran but he also made clear that his view of a useful m is not likely to be that of the House or of the outside.

In the past, when we have sought to use the proc of the House to examine in detail proposals for ch the abortion laws, we have been accused of proc abuse. I have served on Committees of the House have dealt with abortion. I have been guilty procedural abuse, but of trying to examine the natu detail of the Bill. I do not believe that the House w a Second Reading to the Bill, but, if it does, and w to consider the matter in detail, we shall be abuse

My hon. Friend the Member for Workingto Campbell-Savours) says that the matter will be cons in Committee and that it is a matter of compromi give and take. The quality of his intervention in this can be judged by his comment earlier today that, fr beginning, he regretted the introduction of the sub foreign women. I have a letter from my hon. Friend 17 October 1987, which states:

"The reasons we have chosen 18 weeks are as foll

The concluding sentence of his first paragraph stat

"Over half of these abortions are on foreign wom

He did not regret the matter sufficiently.

The offers to amend the Bill, being made so gene in the House today, arise for only one reason sponsors have calculated that they cannot win with t as it stands at present, so they are trying to make us that the Bill, which was not published until 18 Dec 1987, will suddenly, by 22 January 1988, be subj wholesale change.

Ms. Short: This issue is crucial to many hon. Me The hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. said that if it were amended and still useful, he continue to support it. He did not say that he support any amendment to allow abortion for abnormalities.

Mrs. Wise: The hon. Member for Mossley Hill said that he is against abortion per se, whether ea late. That is why he voted against the attempt of m Friend the Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) years ago to make better provision for early abortio are being offered merely procedural gambles. I procedural ploy to persuade us to give way becau supporters cannot push through the Bill they have ac presented to the House.

This is a most important matter. We are dealing the lives and happiness of many people and we shou subject them to a mere procedural gamble in the H It is also very difficult to get matters which have considered in Committee back on to the Floor House. We do so by all sorts of ploys, such as s changing the words. How can we change the word weeks"? They do not lend themselves to that sort of

The supporters of the Bill say that they are pro-life. I want to protest on behalf of everybody who will vote against the Bill. We are pro-life, but we do not neglect the fact that people also have a right to happiness. Unlike the sponsors of the Bill, on Tuesday, in the Grand Committee Room, we listened to the parents of handicapped children. They said that they had their abortions out of love and described watching their children die. The hon. Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Dame J. Knight) says that those women have a choice—to remain childless. That will happen if the Bill is passed. We say that women should have the choice of termination of pregnancy and then to go on to bear a healthy child if possible.

I am not ducking the issue of those terminations that are not the result of foetal handicap. Women can be driven to desperation for reasons other than foetal handicap. In addition to the list of those who have said that the legislation is wrong, the Faculty of Community Medicine tells us—if hon. Members have read the brief—what happens to babies who are unwanted.

The remarkable consensus on this issue stretches from every woman Labour Member right across to the Conservative Women's National Committee. That consensus arises not because we have suddenly all become the same sort of people, but because as women we share some life experiences. Hon. Members must be careful in riding against this broad, strong view of women who, day after day, act out of love.

2.21 pm

Mrs. Elizabeth Peacock (Batley and Spen): We have had a debate lasting more than four hours which at times has been heated and emotional, as is right when we discuss such a subject. Some 23 right hon. and hon. Members have spoken. I trust that, because of the limited time left to me, the House will forgive my not referring directly to every contribution.

Not all the Bill's supporters are religious zealots, as has been suggested by the media. In fact, I have not been able to spot one. My hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) suggested that we are all religious zealots. Many who supported the Bill would not support the abolition of abortion, so may we please have that on the record. We are told that we are all anti-abortionists. That is not true. There is much support for the Bill in the House and throughout the country by people who would not wish to see the return of back-street abortions. The hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) is, as he said, a Liberal and a Catholic, yet we have seen during today's debate and previously that the Bill attracts support, and opposition, on both sides of the House and among people of all religious and Christian backgrounds.

In 1966 the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) said:

"We want to stamp out the back-street abortions, but it is not the intention of the promoters of the Bill to leave a wide open door for abortion on request."

I wonder whether that is still the case today. Later, the right hon. Gentleman said:

"there is a clear statement in the Bill that nothing in the Bill affects the protection afforded by the law to the viable foetus." — [Official Report, 22 July 1966; Vol. 732, c. 1075-77.]

Can we honestly say that that is the fact today? Perhaps not.

Britain's current limit of 28 weeks is the single reason, as we have heard repeatedly, why so many women from foreign countries come here for abortions. Some 43 per cent. of those seeking abortion in recent years have come from other countries. In short, we are becoming the foetal dustbin of Europe. The House should not let that continue.

It has been mentioned that this week the Irish writer Christopher Nolan was awarded a literary prize. That is a grand example of how disability can mask a great talent. Hon. Members realise that that young man lacked oxygen during birth, causing his disabilities. We are not suggesting that he was a disabled foetus. However, we can learn a lot from what Christopher Nolan has to say — [Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This has been a very quiet and serious debate. I hope that it will end in that way.

Mrs. Peacock: Perhaps the House will give me a moment to refer to a very short passage from Christopher Nolan's book in which he talks about his own life and says that the future for babies like him never looked more promising, but now society frowned upon giving spastic babies a right to life. Now they have threatened to abort babies like him, to detect in advance their handicapped state, to burrow through the womb and label them for death, to batter their mothers with fear for their coming, and yet the spastic baby would ever be the soul which would never kill, maim or hate brotherhood. Why, then, did society fear the crippled child? That is a timely lesson to us all.

I know that time is not on my side and I cannot say many of the things I would have wished to say. The House is now undecided about whether it should be allowed to legislate on issues that affect women, but that has been happening for centuries. There has always been a male-dominated House of Commons legislating for women. Why should that change today? Now, in 1988, there are more women in the House than ever before, so why should we change the rules? Of course, we should like there to be more women in the House, but at present we must put up with the number that is already here.

All too often, abortion is billed as a battle between the rights of the mother and those of her unborn child. The Bill is designed to provide a choice for mother and child. That is why I support it.

We make many claims to be a civilised society. How can such a society allow the dismemberment of human beings without anaesthetic for removal from the womb, followed by the careful rebuilding of the dead child in some hospital sluice room to check that nothing has been left inside the mother? The living unborn deserve better than obscene and macabre games.

It is important that the Bill should be debated more fully in Committee. We have heard many reasons why it should not reach Committee. I ask hon. Members who support the Bill to vote for it today to ensure that it reaches Committee so that many of the objections, worries and concerns that have been expressed today can be examined in much more detail and voted on by the House at a later stage. I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr. Cyril Smith rose in his place and claimed to move, That the question be now put.

Question put, That the question be now put—

Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I wish to be quite clear that the House appreciates the Question that I put. The closure has been moved, and I put the Question on the closure. I will put the Question again.

Question, That the Question be now put, put and agreed to.

Question put accordingly, That the Bill be now read a Second Time:—

The House divided: Ayes 296, Noes 251.

Division No. 150] [2.28 pm

AYES

Aitken, Jonathan
Alison, Rt Hon Michael
Allason, Rupert
Alton, David
Amess, David
Amos, Alan
Arnold, Jacques (Gravesham)
Arnold, Tom (Hazel Grove)
Ashby, David
Aspinwall, Jack
Atkinson, David
Baker, Nicholas (Dorset N)
Baldry, Tony
Batiste, Spencer
Battle, John
Beggs, Roy
Beith, A. J.
Bell, Stuart
Bendall, Vivian
Bennett, Nicholas (Pembroke)
Benyon, W.
Bevan, David Gilroy
Bigge-Davison, Sir John
Blackburn, Dr John G.
Blaker, Rt Hon Sir Peter
Boscawen, Hon Robert
Boswell, Tim
Bowden, A (Brighton K'pto'n)
Bowden, Gerald (Dulwich)
Bowis, John
Boyson, Rt Hon Dr Sir Rhodes
Braine, Rt Hon Sir Bernard
Brandon-Bravo, Martin
Bray, Dr Jeremy
Brazier, Julian
Bright, Graham
Brown, Michael (Brigg & Cl'ts)
Budgen, Nicholas
Burns, Simon
Burt, Alistair
Butcher, John
Butler, Chris
Butterfill, John
Campbell, Ron (Blyth Valley)
Campbell-Savours, D. N.
Canavan, Dennis
Carlile, Alex (Mont'g)
Carlisle, Kenneth (Lincoln)
Carrington, Matthew
Cash, William
Chalker, Rt Hon Mrs Lynda
Channon, Rt Hon Paul
Chapman, Sydney
Chope, Christopher
Clark, Hon Alan (Plym'th S'n)
Clark, Dr Michael (Rochford)
Clark, Sir W. (Croydon S)
Clarke, Tom (Monklands W)
Conway, Derek
Cook, Frank (Stockton N)
Coombs, Simon (Swindon)
Cope, John
Crowther, Stan
Cummings, J.
Cunliffe, Lawrence
Curry, David
Davis, David (Boothferry)
Day, Stephen
Devlin, Tim
Dickens, Geoffrey
Dicks, Terry
Dixon, Don
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord James
Dover, Den
Dunn, Bob
Durant, Tony
Eggar, Tim
Emery, Sir Peter
Evennett, David
Ewing, Mrs Margaret (Moray)
Fallon, Michael
Favell, Tony
Fearn, Ronald
Fenner, Dame Peggy
Field, Frank (Birkenhead)
Finsberg, Sir Geoffrey
Fookes, Miss Janet
Forman, Nigel
Forsyth, Michael (Stirling)
Forsythe, Clifford (Antrim S)
Fox, Sir Marcus
Franks, Cecil
Freeman, Roger
French, Douglas
Gale, Roger
Garel-Jones, Tristan
Glyn, Dr Alan
Goodhart, Sir Philip
Gow, Ian
Grant, Sir Anthony (CambsSW)
Greenway, Harry (Ealing N)
Greenway, John (Rydale)
Gregory, Conal
Griffiths, Peter (Portsmouth N)
Grocott, Bruce
Hamilton, Hon A. (Epsom)
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hanley, Jeremy
Hannam, John
Hardy, Peter
Hargreaves, A. (B'ham H'll Gr')
Hargreaves, Ken (Hyndburn)
Hawkins, Christopher
Hayes, Jerry
Hayhoe, Rt Hon Sir Barney
Hayward, Robert
Heddle, John
Hicks, Mrs Maureen (Wolv' NE)
Hill, James
Hind, Kenneth
Holt, Richard
Hordern, Sir Peter
Howard, Michael
Howell, Rt Hon David (G'dford)
Hughes, Robert G. (Harrow W)
Hughes, Sean (Knowsley S)
Hughes, Simon (Southwark)
Hume, John
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunter, Andrew
Hurd, Rt Hon Douglas
Irvine, Michael
Irving, Charles
Janman, Timothy
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert B (Herts W)
Kellett-Bowman, Mrs Elaine
Kennedy, Charles
Key, Robert
Kilfedder, James
King, Roger (B'ham N'thfield)
Kirkhope, Timothy
Knapman, Roger
Knight, Greg (Derby North)
Knight, Dame Jill (Edgbaston)
Lambie, David
Lamond, James
Lamont, Rt Hon Norman
Lang, Ian
Latham, Michael
Lawrence, Ivan
Lawson, Rt Hon Nigel
Leigh, Edward (Gainsbor'gh)
Lennox-Boyd, Hon Mark
Lester, Jim (Broxtowe)
Lightbown, David
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lofthouse, Geoffrey
Lord, Michael
Luce, Rt Hon Richard
Lyell, Sir Nicholas
McAvoy, Tom
McCrea, Rev William
McCrindle, Robert
McCusker, Harold
Macdonald, Calum
McFall, John
Macfarlane, Sir Neil
McGrady, E. K.
MacGregor, John
Maclean, David
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNamara, Kevin
Maginnis, Ken
Major, Rt Hon John
Malins, Humfrey
Mallon, Seamus
Mans, Keith
Marlow, Tony
Marshall, John (Hendon S)
Martin, Michael (Springburn)
Mates, Michael
Maude, Hon Francis
Mawhinney, Dr Brian
Mayhew, Rt Hon Sir Patrick
Mellor, David
Millan, Rt Hon Bruce
Miller, Hal
Moate, Roger
Molyneaux, Rt Hon James
Monro, Sir Hector
Montgomery, Sir Fergus
Moore, Rt Hon John
Morris, Rt Hon A (W'shawe)
Morris, M (N'hampton S)
Morrison, Hon P (Chester)
Moss, Malcolm
Moynihan, Hon C.
Neubert, Michael
Nicholls, Patrick
Nicholson, David (Taunton)
Oakes, Rt Hon Gordon
O'Brien, William
Page, Richard
Paice, James
Paisley, Rev Ian
Parkinson, Rt Hon Cecil
Parry, Robert
Patten, Chris (Bath)
Patten, John (Oxford W)
Pattie, Rt Hon Sir Geoffrey
Pawsey, James
Peacock, Mrs Elizab
Pendry, Tom
Porter, Barry (Wirra
Porter, David (Wave
Portillo, Michael
Powell, William (Co
Price, Sir David
Raison, Rt Hon Tim
Redwood, John
Reid, John
Renton, Tim
Rhys Williams, Sir
Roberts, Wyn (Conw
Robertson, George
Robinson, Peter (Be
Roe, Mrs Marion
Ross, William (Lond
Rossi, Sir Hugh
Rost, Peter
Rowe, Andrew
Rowlands, Ted
Rumbold, Mrs Angel
Sainsbury, Hon Tim
Salmond, Alex
Sayeed, Jonathan
Shaw, David (Dover)
Shelton, William (Str
Shepherd, Colin (He Shepherd, Richard (
Shersby, Michael
Sims, Roger
Skeet, Sir Trevor
Smith, Cyril (Rochda
Smith, Sir Dudley (W
Smith, Rt Hon J. (Mo Smyth, Rev Martin (
Soames, Hon Nichol
Speed, Keith
Speller, Tony
Spicer, Michael (S W
Stanbrook, Ivor
Stanley, Rt Hon John
Steen, Anthony
Stern, Michael
Stevens, Lewis
Stewart, Allan (East
Stewart, Andrew (Sh
Stewart, Ian (Hertford
Stokes, John
Sumberg, David
Summerson, Hugo
Taylor, John M (Solih
Taylor, Teddy (S'end
Tebbit, Rt Hon Norma
Temple-Morris, Peter
Thompson, D. (Calde
Thompson, Jack (Wa
Thompson, Patrick (N
Thorne, Neil
Thornton, Malcolm
Townsend, Cyril D. (
Tracey, Richard
Trippier, David
Twinn, Dr Ian
Vaughan, Sir Gerard
Waddington, Rt Hon D
Wakeham, Rt Hon Jo
Waldegrave, Hon Will
Walden, George
Walker, A. Cecil (Bel
Walker, Rt Hon P. (W
Waller, Gary
Walters, Dennis
Ward, John
Wardle, C. (Bexhill)
Watts, John
Welsh, Andrew (Angu
Whitney, Ray
Wilkinson, John

Wilshire, David
Wood, Timothy
Worthington, Anthony
Yeo, Tim

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Toby Jessel and Miss Ann Widdecombe.

NOES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Adams, Allen (Paisley N)
Adley, Robert
Alexander, Richard
Allen, Graham
Anderson, Donald
Arbuthnot, James
Archer, Rt Hon Peter
Armstrong, Ms Hilary
Ashley, Rt Hon Jack
Ashton, Joe
Banks, Tony (Newham NW)
Barnes, Harry (Derbyshire NE)
Barnes, Mrs Rosie (Greenwich)
Barron, Kevin
Beckett, Margaret
Benn, Rt Hon Tony
Bennett, A. F. (D'nt'n & R'dish)
Bermingham, Gerald
Bidwell, Sydney
Blair, Tony
Blunkett, David
Boateng, Paul
Bottomley, Mrs Virginia
Boyes, Roland
Bradley, Keith
Brown, Gordon (D'mline E)
Brown, Nicholas (Newcastle E)
Brown, Ron (Edinburgh Leith)
Browne, John (Winchester)
Bruce, Malcolm (Gordon)
Buchan, Norman
Buchanan-Smith, Rt Hon Alick
Buck, Sir Antony
Buckley, George
Caborn, Richard
Callaghan, Jim
Campbell, Menzies (Fife NE)
Carlisle, John, (Luton N)
Cartwright, John
Clark, Dr David (S Shields)
Clay, Bob
Clelland, David
Clwyd, Mrs Ann
Cohen, Harry
Coleman, Donald
Colvin, Michael
Cook, Robin (Livingston)
Corbett, Robin
Corbyn, Jeremy
Couchman, James
Cousins, Jim
Cox, Tom
Cran, James
Cryer, Bob
Cunningham, Dr John
Darling, Alastair
Davies, Rt Hon Denzil (Llanelli)
Davies, Q. (Staml'd & Spald'g)
Davies, Ron (Caerphilly)
Davis, Terry (B'ham Hodge H'l)
Dobson, Frank
Doran, Frank
Dunnachie, James
Dunwoody, Hon Mrs Gwyneth
Dykes, Hugh
Eadie, Alexander
Eastham, Ken
Evans, David (Welwyn Hatf'd)
Evans, John (St Helens N)
Ewing, Harry (Falkirk E)
Fairbairn, Nicholas
Fatchett, Derek
Faulds, Andrew
Fields, Terry (L'pool B G'n)
Fisher, Mark
Flannery, Martin
Flynn, Paul
Foot, Rt Hon Michael
Forth, Eric
Foster, Derek
Foulkes, George
Fraser, John
Fyfe, Mrs Maria
Galbraith, Samuel
Gardiner, George
Garrett, John (Norwich South)
Garrett, Ted (Wallsend)
George, Bruce
Gilbert, Rt Hon Dr John
Gill, Christopher
Gilmour, Rt Hon Sir Ian
Godman, Dr Norman A.
Golding, Mrs Llin
Goodson-Wickes, Dr Charles
Gordon, Ms Mildred
Gorman, Mrs Teresa
Gould, Bryan
Grant, Bernie (Tottenham)
Griffiths, Nigel (Edinburgh S)
Griffiths, Win (Bridgend)
Ground, Patrick
Harman, Ms Harriet
Haselhurst, Alan
Haynes, Frank
Healey, Rt Hon Denis
Heath, Rt Hon Edward
Heffer, Eric S.
Hicks, Robert (Cornwall SE)
Higgins, Rt Hon Terence L.
Hinchliffe, David
Holland, Stuart
Hood, James
Howarth, Alan (Strat'd-on-A)
Howarth, George (Knowsley N)
Howells, Geraint
Hoyle, Doug
Hughes, John (Coventry NE)
Hughes, Robert (Aberdeen N)
Hughes, Roy (Newport E)
Hunt, John (Ravensbourne)
Illsley, Eric
Ingram, Adam
Jack, Michael
Janner, Greville
John, Brynmor
Johnston, Sir Russell
Jones, Martyn (Clwyd S W)
Kinnock, Rt Hon Neil
Kirkwood, Archy
Knowles, Michael
Knox, David
Leadbitter, Ted
Leighton, Ron
Lestor, Miss Joan (Eccles)
Lewis, Terry
Litherland, Robert
Livingstone, Ken
Livsey, Richard
Lloyd, Tony (Stretford)
Loyden, Eddie
McAllion, John
McCartney, Ian
McKelvey, William
McLeish, Henry
Maclennan, Robert
McTaggart, Bob
McWilliam, John
Madden, Max
Madel, David
Mahon, Mrs Alice
Maples, John
Marek, Dr John
Mariand, Paul
Marshall, Jim (Leicester S)
Martin, David (Portsmouth S)
Martlew, Eric
Maxton, John
Meacher, Michael
Meale, Alan
Michael, Alun
Michie, Bill (Sheffield Heeley)
Michie, Mrs Ray (Arg'l & Bute)
Miscampbell, Norman
Mitchell, Andrew (Gedling)
Mitchell, Austin (G't Grimsby)
Mitchell, David (Hants NW)
Moonie, Dr Lewis
Morgan, Rhodri
Morley, Elliott
Morris, Rt Hon J (Aberavon)
Morrison, Sir Charles (Devizes)
Mowlam, Marjorie
Mullin, Chris
Needham, Richard
Nellist, Dave
Nelson, Anthony
Nicholson, Miss E. (Devon W)
O'Neill, Martin
Orme, Rt Hon Stanley
Owen, Rt Hon Dr David
Patchett, Terry
Patnick, Irvine
Pike, Peter
Powell, Ray (Ogmore)
Prescott, John
Primarolo, Ms Dawn
Quin, Ms Joyce
Radice, Giles
Raffan, Keith
Randall, Stuart
Rathbone, Tim
Redmond, Martin
Rees, Rt Hon Merlyn
Rhodes James, Robert
Richardson, Ms Jo
Riddick, Graham
Robinson, Geoffrey
Rogers, Allan
Rooker, Jeff
Ross, Ernie (Dundee W)
Ruddock, Ms Joan
Ryder, Richard
Sackville, Hon Tom
Scott, Nicholas
Sedgemore, Brian
Shaw, Sir Giles (Pudsey)
Sheerman, Barry
Sheldon, Rt Hon Robert
Shephard, Mrs G. (Norfolk SW)
Shore, Rt Hon Peter
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, Andrew (Oxford E)
Smith, C. (Isl'ton & F'bury)
Smith, Tim (Beaconsfield)
Snape, Peter
Soley, Clive
Spearing, Nigel
Spicer, Sir Jim (Dorset W)
Squire, Robin
Steel, Rt Hon David
Steinberg, Gerald
Stott, Roger
Stradling Thomas, Sir John
Strang, Gavin
Straw, Jack
Taylor, Mrs Ann (Dewsbury)
Taylor, Matthew (Truro)
Thomas, Dafydd Elis
Thurnham, Peter
Tredinnick, David
Trotter, Neville
Turner, Dennis
Vaz, Keith
Wall, Pat
Walley, Ms Joan
Wardell, Gareth (Gower)
Wareing, Robert N.
Warren, Kenneth
Wells, Bowen
Welsh, Michael (Doncaster N)
Wheeler, John
Wiggin, Jerry
Wigley, Dafydd
Williams, Rt Hon A. J.
Williams, Alan W. (Carm'then)
Wilson, Brian
Winnick, David
Wise, Mrs Audrey
Wolfson, Mark
Young, David (Bolton SE)

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Andrew MacKay and
Ms. Clare Short.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Bill read a Second time, and committed to a Standing Committee pursuant to Standing Order No. 61 (Committal of Bills).

Private Members' Bills

UNBORN CHILDREN (PROTECTION) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 5 February.

PLANNING PERMISSION (DEMOLITION OF HOUSES) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 4 March.

MISUSE OF DRUGS BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 13 May.

ABORTION (FINANCIAL BENEFIT) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Second reading what day? No day named.

REGISTRATION OF COMMERCIAL LOBBYING INTERESTS BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Second Reading what day? No day named.

COMMUNITY HEALTH COUNCILS TO INFORMATION) BILL

Bill read a Second time.

Bill committed to a Standing Committe Standing Order No. 61 (Committal of Bills DATA PROTECTION ACT 1984 (AM BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 26 F

CONCESSIONARY TELEVISION L FOR STATE RETIREMENT PENSIO

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 26 F

SLAUGHTER OF DEER BIL

Order read for resuming adjourned deba Reading [11 December].

Question again proposed, That the Bill b Second time.

Hon. Members: Object.

Debate to be resumed on Friday 5 Februa

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE (IM PROVISION OF SERVICES) B

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 26 Fe

Parliamentary Sovereignty

▶ Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Lennox-Boyd.]

2.45 pm

Mr. Teddy Taylor (Southend, East): I apologise to my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for keeping her here at the end of a busy week. However, I welcome the opportunity to draw the House's attention to what I regard as a serious matter—the erosion of parliamentary sovereignty, stemming from recent actions of the institutions of the European Economic Community. Much of it has gone largely unnoticed, but the time has come to look at what has been lost and at what is at risk and to consider whether there is any action that we can take to curb the process, if that is in the national interest.

Much of the recent loss of sovereignty has obliged the Government to take steps against their will and judgment. Quite frankly, some have made the Government look silly and break pledges that they have given to Parliament. Our sovereign Parliament seems to be on the road to achieving county council status.

I shall give a few examples. In December 1984 the Prime Minister came to this House of Commons, about six months after agreeing to a massive increase in the Common Market's cash—an increase of about 25 per cent. in real terms—to announce that agreement had been reached on strict budgetary controls which would ensure that the Common Market's agricultural spending would not increase by more than the increase in the own resources base. That was not just a statement of intent. In the Prime Minister's own words, it was an agreement that was binding on the Council—the supreme authority of the Common Market. My right hon. Friend further explained that although the VAT base had been increased from 1 per cent. to 1·4 per cent., that was the legal limit of expenditure and could be increased to a maximum of 1·6 per cent. only by unanimous agreement in 1988.

While expressing doubts about the advisability of handing over more cash, the House welcomed the clear and unambiguous assurance from the Prime Minister. Nobody doubted her sincerity. However, since then those binding controls have proved to be a sick joke. Spending has rocketed well beyond the ceiling of 1·4 per cent. In fact, it has gone beyond the 1·6 per cent. ceiling which had never been agreed to by anybody.

That has been done by a series of devices operated by the Commission. For example, there has been the introduction of the metric year of 10 months, which was achieved by requiring payment into the Common Market a month early and paying out bills a month late. It has been achieved also by transferring the responsibility for costs, such as that of butter dumping, from the Common Market to member states, although the Court of Auditors has stated that the device was wholly contrary to Common Market law.

Parliament's representatives have lost — it seems completely — their power to control expenditure to a non-elected body, the Common Market Commission, which is simply a group of European civil servants.

Mr. David Curry (Skipton and Ripon): Does my hon. Friend appreciate that all the measures that he has enumerated were agreed to by the Council of Ministers on a proposal by the Commission? Certainly, the Commission is the Executive in carrying out those measures, but Commission did not invent or implement without authority of the Council of Ministers, which is respon to this House.

Mr. Taylor: I respect my hon. Friend's knowledg European matters, but I should point out that a Com Market body, the Court of Auditors, has said that transfer of responsibility for butter dumping was unlaw That clear statement was put in a report to the Counc Ministers. However, it was never discussed by the Co of Ministers which, therefore, did not come to conclusion on it. In effect, something that has condemned as illegal was done without any authority f anybody. My hon. Friend the Member for Skipton Ripon (Mr. Curry) is shaking his head. I wonder whe he would deny the fact that the Court of Auditors has that it was unlawful and deny the fact that it was considered or decided upon by the Council of Minis I suggest that he should check that. I think that he m get an unpleasant surprise. If British civil servants acted in that way, they would no doubt be behind bar now.

We see the same loss of sovereignty over the iniqui common agricultural policy. When we consider the pre debates about the financing of the Health Service whether £1 billion might be provided to solve its probl it is sickening to realise that the EEC is currently spen over £11 billion per year solely on dumping, destro and storing food surpluses, with the Soviet Union Eastern Europe being the main beneficiaries. spending is now wholly beyond the control of democratic body. It has breached wildly the solemn binding undertakings of the European Council. British intervention boards are forced to pay out mas subsidies to enable the Soviets to obtain butter at pound and beef at 11p a pound. Our Prime Mini protests, rightly, about that direct subsidy of the So war machine, but it seems there is nothing that Government or Parliament can do about it.

Previously we considered that we had the ultim power to use the veto on increases in own resources limited fall-back power. However, the devices of Commission have made that worthless.

The one power that Parliament fought to secure that is still regarded as the base of sovereignty is the r to determine our own taxes. It is true that in the Si European Act we agreed to work towards harmonisa of indirect taxation in so far as it was necessary to se the internal market. However, the Prime Minister pointed out that that section in the Act requires unanim In short, we can veto any change we do not like.

During the election the Prime Minister rightly st that we would resist any plan to levy VAT on essent such as food, children's clothing and fuel, including and electricity. Sadly, the European Court of Justice at very moment is considering a complaint from Commission which could force the Chancellor of Exchequer to impose VAT on gas, electricity, water sewerage provided to large and small businesses in Bri and to impose VAT on the construction of factories, sh and offices. At our current rate of 15 per cent., that al would add £350 million to industrial costs apart from w could be raised by VAT on gas, electricity and water.

The Commission has neatly side-stepped the Counci Ministers and the veto in the Single European Act. If lost that case, which seems almost inevitable after the initial opinion of the Advocate General, our Government and Parliament will, for the first time in their long history, be obliged to levy taxes on the instructions of a non-elected body—the European Court of Justice.

[Mr. Taylor]

Mr. Curry: I am sure that my hon. Friend is aware that the court cases to which he referred flow from the 1977 sixth VAT directive signed by the British Government of the day. If the Government of the day signed that international treaty, they are obliged to observe the consequences that flow from it. Those consequences have not been imposed by a body acting other than under the authority given by the international directive to which the Government of the day agreed.

Mr. Taylor: My hon. Friend is very informed about European issues. However, I think that he will find that he is wrong about Parliament having agreed to the measures that have now been taken. In fact, he is saying that our Prime Minister is an ignoramus and does not know what she is doing. My hon. Friend is aware that during the election campaign the Prime Minister made a specific pledge about not allowing VAT on electricity. My hon. Friend is saying that the Prime Minister was hoodwinking the people because she knew that there was a court case taking place that would oblige Britain, against its wishes, to levy VAT on electricity.

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow, East): When the Government came into power in 1979 they nearly doubled VAT from 8 per cent. to 15 per cent. Did my hon. Friend support that?

Mr. Taylor: Indeed, I did. It was a measure taken by the British Parliament on levying our taxes. At that time I favoured a transfer from direct to indirect taxation. There is nothing strange about that. We were deciding. If I and other hon. Members had voted against that, it would not have happened. The crucial issue is that in this case we will not decide. The decision is made by the European Court of Justice and the result will have to be implemented by the British Parliament and Government, whether we like it or not. After 1992 I fear that, if tax harmonisation has not been agreed, the Commission could use the powers of the Single European Act to take the United Kingdom and other countries to court for not levying VAT on essentials. Time will tell.

Sovereignty has also slipped away on issues that affect the people more directly. Today I saw on the tapes—no doubt my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon also noted it—that the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has made an appeal to the food industry to label its foods correctly and informatively so that consumers know what they are buying. Ever since 1972 we have had a British law on origin marking under which goods covered by the Trade Descriptions Act 1972 have been required to display a mark stating where they were made. The law, which is the basis on which goods are marked "Made in France . . . Japan . . . Germany . . . Italy" and so on, was unanimously agreed by Parliament as a means of giving more information to the consumer. It has helped me and millions of consumers in our purchasing choices.

Some time ago the Commission sent the Government a letter stating that it considered the law to be contrary to the treaty of Rome because it enabled Bri to commit the crime of discriminating produced in other parts of the EEC. The legal advisers said that we could not win Consumer Protection Act 1987 was passe an order to be made in 1988 that will repea The Government made it clear that they make that change and that it was against throw away a consumer safeguard. Howe forced to do so simply because of a lett elected body.

The other day the Parliamentary Und State for Corporate and Consumer Affa there would be a ban on the use of ce furniture because they were a threat to That statement received acclaim from all the Minister then announced that the ba implemented permanently without the a Common Market Commission. So n sovereignty of a free Parliament. No doubt the Member for Skipton and Ripon will and say that we agreed to this.

Mr. Curry: When the Minister said that, instance, incorrect. Community author required to implement the measures. Commission made that clear five days after

Mr. Taylor: I am afraid that my hon. completely wrong. I have a copy of the press statement, and that said that there prevent us making an interim emergency make it permanent would require the per European Commission. Once again my h taken up time in my Adjournment debate a time, my hon. Friend has said something Given his long experience of Common Mar knows that it is untrue, and I am surprised in mind that he is my European Member

In case my right hon. Friend should see such losses of sovereignty were agreed by would ask her to tell me when regulation requires us to seek prior approval for the fo ban, was discussed, debated or approved I believe that she will find that this ma reaching power was never debated. That is I have received from our excellent Library explained that it was one of a whole pil considered by the Select Committee Legislation and for which it could no discussion in the House because there were vital EEC measures to debate.

Once again we are faced with a power t doing something that we believe is in the int children's lives, and that power was not House.

Mr. Dykes: NATO decides our sp deployments collectively without this consulted in detail. Does my hon. Friend o as well?

Mr. Taylor: My hon. Friend the Memb East (Mr. Dykes) knows that, once again, mislead us. Yesterday, for example, we had on a frigate, a common frigate. Britain mad clear that if it did not like the way things w had the power not to accept that frigate. There is no compulsory power under NATO rules, and the new frigate is a perfect example of that. My hon. Friend, in common with my hon. Friend for Skipton and Ripon, should look at the facts.

The huge losses in our power to decide cannot be justified, but it could be argued that there was a case for surrender if there were compensating benefits. Where are they? Before we joined the Common Market, Britain had always enjoyed a favourable balance of trade in manufactures with that group of European countries. Indeed, that had been the case every year since the time of Napoleon. Ever since we joined the Common Market we have had a deficit, and last year it was £11,000 million. In a nutshell, for every £2 of goods we sent to the Common Market we imported £3 of goods and the net effect was the loss of a million jobs. The basic reason for that is our loss of competitiveness. We have lost our traditional advantage of access to cheap food that a previous Conservative Prime Minister, Sir Robert Peel, fought so hard to achieve.

According to the Common Market's consumer unit, the average British family spends an extra £13 a week on food as a direct result of the CAP. That figure is increasing as the gap between Common Market and world food prices grows.

We have heard much about rebates and refunds, but our contributions are at an all-time high. When the Government completed their first full year in office, our net contribution was £117 million. This year, after all refunds and rebates, the estimate in the public expenditure White Paper that has just been published is £1,400 million, and that all-time record may be an underestimate.

As Conservative Members walked into the Chamber they may have been handed a letter from a Minister giving details of the public expenditure White Paper. There are pages and pages about increases in public spending since 1979—up to 73 per cent. for employment and training—but, sadly, not a word about EEC contributions, in which the increase has been infinitely greater.

Looking to the future, we see a further erosion of sovereignty with the Single European Act, which will provide for laws to be imposed on the United Kingdom by majority vote. Yesterday, we discussed a tightening of the law on firearms. I found that rather sad and funny, as the Common Market is currently considering a directive, which will be decided by a majority vote, that will require Britain to allow Europeans to carry and possess any weapons they choose, as long as they have a certificate from their own countries, whether they be the Republic of Ireland, Greece or Sicily.

What worries me most is the Government's policy, particularly the Foreign Office's policy, of looking at Europe through rose-coloured spectacles. It produces figures to show a massive rise in exports without mentioning that most of it stems from the increase in the size of the Community and ignoring the fact that our share in the Original Six's market for manufactured goods has scarcely changed since we joined the Community; it was 6 per cent., but it is now 7 per cent.

Mr. John Marshall (Hendon, South): Does my hon. Friend agree that there has been a dramatic increase in the percentage of British exports to Germany, for example, which is not because of the size of the European Community but because of the opportunities offered by that market?

Mr. Taylor: I have given my hon. Friend the fi that were given by my right hon. and noble Friend Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. Sadly, our of the market for manufactured goods of the origina including Germany, was 6 per cent. when we joine EEC, but it is now 7 per cent. As my hon. Frie interested in our trade figures with Germany, our d with it is greater than any other country and is more twice our deficit with Japan. When some of my Friends bray their Common Market slogans, I wish would consider some of the facts.

When the Government talk about contributions, refer only to our huge rebates. They do not accept after rebates, according to the Chancellor's statement contributions are at an all-time high.

When we mention the waste, scandals and frauds o CAP, the Government say that reform is round the co In reality, pledges of reform, which never happens simply an excuse to give more money to the Com Market to waste. When stuck for an argument, they that the Common Market has brought peace to Eu without mentioning the fact that defence is the jo NATO or that the one sector in which the EEC ha authority is defence.

There is a rising tide of concern in the United King about the activities of the EEC, its bungling, w bureaucracy and transfer of power from elected to elected bodies. We can do something about it. The tim do so is 10 February, when the European Council wil for another gigantic cash injection. Will we stand firm demand reform instead? Or will we simply pour in the by means of the so-called fourth resource in exchang a package of worthless promises and silly ideas such a so-called set-aside, which has been tried in America disastrous effect and at a huge cost?

On 10 February we shall know whether Government are facing reality or whether we shall si hear more slogans, hopes and tragedies.

3.4 pm

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonw Office (Mrs. Lynda Chalker): The issues raised by my Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor important. But we have seen in his speech that underl his arguments is another issue which is the issue dominated our discussions before we joined Community. It is the question of sovereignty and extent to which our national freedom of action is curt or enhanced by membership of the Community. We jo the Community and are a part of it for several reaso

Our initial instinct in the 1950s was to stay out share and admire the goals of the Community and to it well, but to believe that we could achieve the same on our own. We were a world power. We looked not to Europe, but across the Atlantic to the United States across the world to the Commonwealth.

We changed that early 1950s view for several reasons. We saw the economic and political success o Six while our standard of living relative to theirs drop and our world role changed. We saw the importance o Community as a vehicle for promoting peace democracy in Europe. I agree with my hon. Friend NATO has responsibility for the defence of Europe, to get on with other nations is part of the peace pro

We saw the United States looking to the Pacific, as as to Europe, in pursuit of her interests, and that w

[Mrs. Lynda Chalker]

Europe the United States' interests, lay in a relationship with the whole of Europe, not just with Britain in particular. We saw, too, the power of the Community to negotiate collectively trade agreements which none of the members could have achieved on their own. We also saw the extent to which the Community was establishing patterns of political, trade, and economic behaviour to which we inevitably had to conform, but in the determination of which we would play no part so long as we remained outside the EC. Those are the reasons why we joined and why we shall continue as a most active member of the EC as it develops further.

Now we can see new technology and less regulation of trade opening up new opportunities for British firms, so helping to bring greater prosperity. But they also make the world even more interdependent. For such a complex world to work peacefully, not everything can still be done at a national level. For individual nations to prosper, we must agree certain rules and standards in common. That is why we joined the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. For individual citizens to prosper, the goods they buy must be made and distributed in the most economic way, and the companies which employ them must work on the most economic scale.

We must be able to work at the supranational level if we are to promote our national interests within Europe and defend them outside, and we need democratic institutions within which to do so. That is what the Community is for.

Mr. Roger Knapman (Stroud): Why is there such a large trading deficit with EEC countries and a trading surplus with the rest of the world? Is there any particular figure at which my right hon. Friend would start to be worried about the trading pattern with EEC countries? If not £11 billion, would it be £15 billion, £20 billion or £30 billion?

Mrs. Chalker: I was just coming to that point. We have not been able to take up the full opportunities of trading in Europe; that is one area that we have been opening up through our great proposals for the 1992 single European market. Naturally, we do not want a trade deficit with the EC. This morning, I returned from Dusseldorf where I was talking to business men. They are pleading for more opportunities for British interests and companies to be active in Germany, particularly in the financial sector—

Mr. Teddy Taylor: What about buses?

Mrs. Chalker —and British buses. Indeed, I have tried to help my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East to get British buses going across Germany, and I shall continue to do so.

What marks the Community apart from every other international organisation to which we belong is the significance of everything that is agreed within the Community for our national economic life. Where measures are proposed which affect our national life, the British Government and Members of Parliament should always scrutinise them vigorously. When we disagree, we say so loudly and we lobby effectively against those measures—and shall continue to do so. We must also examine where the overall balance of advantage lies.

My hon. Friend mentioned the recent example of a ban introduced by the Government on polyurethane foam. He mentioned the requirement of Commis directive that requires us to notify the new measures that constitute a techni is one that is useful to us. It prevents indulging in disguised protectionism, deal of work to be done on that score. designed to prevent genuine safety me ban that the Government have annou have already been introduced in so states.

The EC treaty provides for the possi imports on grounds of public security, has acknowledged. Under the Com legislation, the Commission has the ab member states to the existence of a da on the basis of evidence produced by as ourselves. That means that if evidenc for example, France of the existenc material, there is a good prospect of being taken in the United Kingdom or before further avoidable tragedy occur

I understand my hon. Friend's anxie mentioned frequently before. As my Member for Warwickshire, North (M clear to the House, the United Kingdo directive EC 83/189 to notify the Comm measures that might constitute a technic The purpose of that directive, as I s member states from indulging in disgui which is why I said it was useful. I Commission wants that law to be a p legislation in the best sense of the word

Mr. Teddy Taylor: I genuinely appre of my right hon. Friend's reply. Howe consider it significant and worrying that which may be good or bad, was never this House?

Mrs. Chalker: I understand my complaint, but other things go through passing through special Committees, w much like to have debated, but we do to debate every issue. If we have another problem, as we do here, we should perh

As regards budgetary discipline, I ag Friend that spending must be under c not beyond control. I have spent all t about measures to bring it under control hon. Friend that the budgetary discipli that are now in place have not worke wanted. That is why we are insisting o control before there can be any increas resources.

Mr. Ron Leighton (Newham, North-E

Mrs. Chalker: I have little time, and my hon. Friend's points.

There can be no increase unle Governments and national Parliament decisive role of the House in this issue, as safeguarded.

My hon. Friend's concern about the often been expressed before. I am well Council adopted last October the temporary switch from the normal syste member states for expected FEOGA expenditure to reimbursements of up to two months, but that is helpful in improving budgetary control. We support a switch to reimbursement as a permanent feature of Community finance. It makes much more sense to reimburse member states for what they have spent than to pay them advances for what they think they will be likely to spend. I hope that my hon. Friend will re-examine that issue.

The butter stock disposal grieves us all, but the important thing is to ensure that the food mountains, once disposed of, are not allowed to grow again. We shall work on that as well.

I shall respond to my hon. Friend's other points in a letter, because it is important to set down clearly what is going on.

Community action is opening many opportunities in air services, financial trading services and capital liberalisation, and we want them to continue. They are massive opportunities for Britain.

I applaud my hon. Friend's tireless serv Community legislation. All of it matters far too be allowed to go through on the nod. I app campaign for financial and agricultural reforms, am convinced that we shall win. I applaud his v but I must remind him that the sovereignty of Pa is, above all, the power to act in the best interes nation.

That power would be constrained if we w members of the Community in today's world. O to act is strengthened by our ability to take a common with other like-minded democracies, in w may be unheroic, mundane or even boring, but the less essential for the secure future of Britain. Friend has some things just a little out of propo

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at fifteen minutes pa o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 11 January 1988

PRIME MINISTER

USSR

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister if, at her meeting with Secretary Gorbachev on 8 December 1987, she discussed Soviet incursions into the United Kingdom air defence region; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The subject of Soviet air activity in the United Kingdom air defence region was not raised during my discussions with General Secretary Gorbachev on 7 December.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Prime Minister on how many further occasions since her reply of 21 October, Official Report, column 734, members of her staff have been guests of British Nuclear Fuels plc; and if she will list them by title and date.

The Prime Minister: My chief press secretary attended a British Nuclear Fuels plc dinner for the media in November. A member of the policy unit also attended a British Nuclear Fuels plc dinner in that month.

No. 10 Downing Street

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Prime Minister if domestic rates are payable in respect of any part of No. 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister: Occupations by the Crown are exempt from rating, but contributions in lieu of rates are made by the Treasury (rating of Government property department) on the basis of values determined by the Treasury Valuer. It is normal practice for a single rateable value to be determined for each large complex.

D Notice Committee

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's response to the communications from Mr. Michael Ramsden and the future of the D Notice Committee.

The Prime Minister: At the meeting of the Defence Press and Broadcasting Committee on 21 December 1987 the media members called for a statement clarifying the Government's attitude to the D notice system. The Government are considering their response.

Windscale Fire

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her reply of 21 October 1987 to the hon. Member for Copeland, all documents, reports and surveys connected with the 1957 Windscale fire have now been published under the 30-year rule; if she will arrange for copies to be placed in the Library; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: In accordance with normal practice it would not be appropriate for the Public Records Office to copy such a large volume of documents for retention in the House of Commons Library. Government Departments and the Atomic Energy Authority have fulfilled their responsibilities in accordance with the requirements of the Public Records Act, and papers on the Windscale fire have been available for scrutiny in the Public Records Office in Kew since 2 January. All papers due for release in 1988 have been released except for a limited number of papers withheld under the terms of the Act.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia and Sudan

37. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many irrigation projects the Overseas Development Administration is currently funding or supporting with technical aid in Ethiopia and in the Sudan.

Mr. Chris Patten: In Sudan we are financing an irrigation rehabilitation project in the northern region at a cost of £10·8 million over three years, and also helping to rehabilitate the light railway in the Gezira irrigation scheme. We are not currently financing directly any irrigation projects in Ethiopia, although under the joint funding scheme we are helping the Catholic Fund for Overseas Development with small projects in Tigray.

India

38. Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of his recent visit, he has any plans to alter the size or composition of the British aid programme to India.

Mr. Chris Patten: I was most impressed with the quality of the projects I visited in India. The overall size of the programme, which is rightly by far our largest, will continue to be determined by what we can afford and by the proposals put to us by the Government of India.

The balance between our aid to infrastructure, including energy, and to natural resources, health, education and water is about right. I hope to be able over the next few months to announce further projects in the fields of education, urban development and rural water supplies.

Oxfam (Aid White Paper)

39. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what response he has made to the proposals of the Oxfam white paper on aid, published in October, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government's aid policy is set out in its response (Cm 225), also published in October, to the report of the Foreign Affairs Committee "Bilateral Aid: Country Programmes".

Ethiopia

40. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information

he has as to the value of current food aid programmes to Ethiopia, expressed as a percentage of gross national product of (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: According to the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisations, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics pledged 2,500 tonnes of rice to Ethiopia in 1987; the cost is not known. The United Kingdom allocated 54,500 tonnes in wheat equivalent of cereals food aid in 1987 at a cost of £9·4 million. I have just pledged a further 40,000 tonnes of food aid. Comparisons in terms of GNP are not possible, since economic statistics are not prepared for the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the same basis as those for OECD and IMF members.

41. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much long-term development aid has been provided to Ethiopia by Her Majesty's Government since 1984.

Mr. Chris Patten: Her Majesty's Government have no present plans to provide long-term financial assistance to Ethiopia from the bilateral aid programme. We will however, continue to respond for humanitarian reasons to emergency needs. In addition, we maintain a programme of technical co-operation and have provided funds for rehabilitation following the 1984-85 famine; expenditure on these activities taken together came to about £2·5 million in 1986.

Under the third Lome Convention, the European Community has allocated about £160 million as Ethiopia's national programme. Britain contributes one sixth of this.

42. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the position relating to famine in Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: I returned yesterday from a visit to Ethiopia. I believe that our own response to the emergency has been generous, but a sustained effort by the Ethiopian Government, by donors and by voluntary organisations will continue to be needed this year. In the course of my visit, I therefore announced the allocation of an additional 40,000 tonnes of food aid which we will deliver after the end of March. This will be channelled through international and voluntary agencies.

With this allocation, our contribution to the food aid needs of the Ethiopian people totals 94,500 tonnes, and the overall cost of our assistance, including our share of European Community relief programmes, totals some £35 million since the beginning of last year.

We shall continue to monitor the situation closely, and will consider if there is more that we should do.

Syria

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the current European Economic Community negotiations with Syria regarding the establishment and funding of water and agricultural projects in Syria, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: We do not oppose implementation of projects for which EC aid funds were approved before October 1986.

Budget (Underspend)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Fo and Commonwealth Affairs, how much is the pro underspend on the overseas development budge 1987-88; and how this is disaggregated to the develo and the emergency funds.

Mr. Chris Patten: On the basis of current plans, w fully spend the overseas aid Vote for 1987-88, includes provision for both development and emer aid.

Aid and Trade Provision

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Fo and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the O Report the amount of money paid out, in each of the five years, under the provisions of the aid and provision and the projects in the United Kingdom received this financial assistance.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member t answer I gave the hon. Member for Oxford, East Smith) on 7 July 1987 at columns 73-76.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of Stat Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what undertal were given by Her Majesty's Government on contribu to the co-financing of structural adjustment progra for sub-Saharan Africa at the meeting of the World in Paris in December.

Mr. Chris Patten: The meeting identified substa aid resources available from western donor countrie co-ordinated support for structural adjust programmes in poor sub-Saharan African countries debt problems. Her Majesty's Government indicated they expect to commit about £250 million of progra aid over the next three years to the target countries.

Total pledges at the World Bank meeting amount $6·4 billion. In addition, the World Bank expect commit $6·2 billion to the special programme of assist from the eighth replenishment of the Internati Development Association.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

31. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Attorney-Ge if he will make a statement on the process of decis making in the Crown Prosecution Service.

The Attorney-General: Papers submitted to the Cr Prosecution Service are subjected to independent re either by lawyers or in a limited range of cases by tra executive officers of the service as soon as possible receipt. Prosecution decisions are taken in accordance the code for Crown prosecutors.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Attorney-General (1) w are the total legal costs so far incurred by Her Maje Government as a result of all litigation relating to P Wright's book "Spycatcher"; and if he will mak statement;

(2) if he will itemise all other costs, in addition to legal costs, so far incurred by Her Majesty's Government as a result of all litigation relating to Peter Wright's book, "Spycatcher"; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The total amount of costs expended to date by the Government is about £500,000 in legal fees and £78,000 in travelling and subsistence for officials.

London Rent Assessment Panel

Mr. Battle: To ask the Attorney-General, if he will list the current appointees to the London rent assessment panel, giving their professional qualifications in each case.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's current appointees to the London rent assessment committee are:

LAWYERS

President

T. H. M. Whipham—Barrister.

Vice President

Mrs. S. Lloyd—Barrister.

T. G. Ashmore—Barrister.
D. Bluston—Solicitor.
Mrs. J. Charles—Barrister.
Mrs. R. A. Corkhill—Solicitor.
Lady Z. Y. Davies—Barrister.
Mrs. S. E. Denman—Barrister.
C. J. Ettinger—Solicitor.
Prof. J. T. Farrand—Solicitor.
D. P. Flynn—Solicitor.
Lady Fox—Barrister.
B. Greenby—Solicitor.
Mrs. A. C. M. Harman
—Barrister 1945.
—Solicitor 1971.
Mrs. C. Henderson—Barrister.
Mrs. H. Kelly—Barrister.
Mrs. C. A. Lewis—Barrister.
Lady S. Mars-Jones—Barrister.
Mrs. D. E. McKenzie—Barrister.
D. E. Moore—Barrister.
Lady Phillips—Barrister.
Mrs. K. F. G. Pulay—Barrister.
Mrs. C. Ray—Barrister.
Lady P. E. Rossi—Barrister.
Mrs. M. Simon—Solicitor.
B. Sinclair—Barrister.
Mrs. S. E. Turner—Barrister.
Mrs. L. E. Vickers—Solicitor.
F. D. Ward—Solicitor.
Mrs. M. E. Wigoder Halberstam—Barrister.
J. D. Witty—Solicitor.

VALUERS & SURVEYORS

Vice President

W. G. M. Williams.

J. N. Aves.
D. E. F. Baldock.
N. I. Behr.
P. J. Bexson.
C. J. Bradley.
R. N. Burtsal.
M. Clark.
E. J. Hosking.
E. C. J. McDaniel.
Mrs. J. McGrandle.
M. I. Prevett.
P. F. Prior.
W. D. C. Simonds.
D. R. Stevens.
G. A. Turnball.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General what was the cost of the trial of the 14 prison officers at Winson Green prison who were found not guilty of assaulting the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

The Attorney-General: The cost of this trial amounted, in respect of fees paid to both prosecution and defence lawyers, and witnesses' expenses, to £75,469.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General if he will estimate the cost of the recent appeal hearing of the case against the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings, following the decision to refer the case to Court of Appeal under section 17 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968.

The Attorney-General: As judgment has not yet been given in this case, no lawyers' bills have been presented or determined, no fees have therefore yet been paid, and therefore no satisfactory estimate of the cost can be made at present.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General if he will estimate (a) the cost to the public purse of the original trial of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings at Lancaster Crown court, (b) the cost of their appeal the following year and (c) the cost of each stage of the civil action brought by the convicted men against the West Midlands police.

The Attorney-General: The cost of the original trial at the Crown court at Lancaster in 1975 amounted, in respect of fees paid to both prosecution and defence lawyers, and witnesses' expenses, to £237,683. The cost of the appeal in 1976 in respect of fees paid to defence lawyers was £5,327. The cost of the civil action cannot be ascertained without disproportionate expense.

"Inside Intelligence"

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the Government's recent use of an injunction to stop newspaper publication of material from Anthony Cavendish's book, "Inside Intelligence".

The Attorney-General: Injunctions were granted by the High Court on 1 and 2 January against two newspapers to restrain the publication of material in breach of the lifelong duty of confidence owed to the Crown by present and former members of the security and intelligence services.

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Attorney-General if, in view of the proposal continuously to update the poll tax register he will make use of it for jury service purposes.

The Attorney-General: No. there is no intention of making use of the proposed community charges register for the purposes of summoning jurors. The register of electors, which is updated annually, will continue to be used, in accordance with section 3 of the Juries Act 1974.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Television Licences

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate the possibility of amending the rules on television licence refunds, in order to enable people who are forced to leave their homes for extensive periods through unforeseen circumstances, such as hospitalisation, storm damage, property renovation, and so on, to claim full refunds.

Mr. Renton: Refunds are already available when two licences are held of which one was obtained in error; when an unexpired monochrome licence is surrendered for a colour licence; and when a licence is surrendered within 28 days of its issue (or due date of issue in cases of renewal). There are no plans to extend these arrangements.

Electoral Registers (Sale)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the number of local authorities which sell their electoral registers to commercial companies.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report those areas of his departmental responsibility which extend to Scotland.

Mr. Hurd: My Department's responsibilities extend to Scotland in the following areas: animal experiments, broadcasting, data protection, immigration and nationality, passports, race relations and sex discrimination. In addition, my Department shares responsibility with the Department of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland in a number of areas including betting and gaming, drugs and poisons, extradition, air attack warning and monitoring, terrorism and security policy.

Immigration (DNA Tests)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of decisions made by the immigration services in which results of DNA tests have been provided; and if he will indicate the proportion where the claimed family relationship has been proved.

Mr. Renton: This information is not available.

Traffic Violations (TV Cameras)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there are any plans to introduce in the Metropolitan police area the use of remote-controlled television cameras to record traffic law violations by motorists at traffic lights, and for use as evidence in prosecutions, in the light of the experiment conducted in Nottingham.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Within the limits set by law, the extent to which technology is used to enforce the law is a matter for individual chief officers of police. The scope for improving road traffic law enforcement through the further use of technology, supported as necessary by legislative change, is being considered by the road traffic law review, being conducted by Dr. Peter North of Jesus college, Oxford. His report is expected so Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has that he is awaiting the report of the review before decisions on the use of technology such as that re by the hon. Member.

Prisoners (Drugs)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for t Department what were (a) the categories and numbers of individual doses of drugs adminis inmates at: (i) Her Majesty's prison, Cardiff and Majesty's prison, Swansea in the latest available

Mr. John Patten: The table provides the info requested in respect of Her Majesty's prison, Ca

Number of doses of medicine administered to inmates (yea March 1987)

Medicines available without prescription in the community
Prescription only medicines
(a) Psychotropic drugs (ie antidepressants, sedatives and tranquillisers)
(b) Hypnotic drugs
(c) Drugs acting on the central nervous system other than those shown in (a) and (b)
(d) Other drugs and medicines

The larger part of the medical services at Her M prison Swansea is provided by one doctor. It is established policy not to publish information ab prescribing practice of individual doctors.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for th Department what is the total cost of drugs admi to prisoners within Her Majesty's penal establishm the latest available year.

Mr. John Patten: Information in the form requ not available. In the financial year 1986-87 the procuring medicines and other pharmaceutica (including dressings and small items of equipment) for use in prison service establishm England and Wales was £1·9 million.

War Crimes

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State Home Department when he will now be ma statement on what the Government intend to do re those living in the United Kingdom who are all have been involved in Nazi war crimes against hu

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend hopes t an announcement in due course.

Amusement Arcades and Gaming Machine

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State Home Department when he expects to publish the of his research unit on amusement arcades and machine addiction; and what response he will be to its findings.

Mr. John Patten: We shall publish the report as we have fully considered the findings, which we a doing. We shall then be able to take a view on what steps might be appropriate.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give the most recent juvenile crime figures for (a) England and Wales, (b) inner London, (c) outer London, (d) Birmingham, (e) Greater Manchester, (f) Sheffield, (g) Liverpool, (h) Leeds and (i) Bradford; and if he will give them as a total for each area, as percentage of total crimes committed in each area and the number of such crimes committed per head of population in each area;

(2) if he will give the most recent figures for violent and non-violent crimes committed by juveniles for (a) England and Wales, (b) inner London and (c) outer London.

Mr. John Patten: The readily available information is given in the following tables:

Table 1
Persons aged 10 and under 17 found guilty at all courts or cautioned for indictable offences in selected police force areas

England and Wales	Numbers and percentages
Police force area	Number of offenders aged 10-16 found guilty or cautioned	Known offenders aged 10-16 as a percentage of all known offenders	Known offenders aged 10-16 per 100 population
Greater Manchester	10,918	31	4·3
Merseyside	4,426	26	3·1
Metropolitan Police	14,187	17	2·3
South Yorkshire	4,791	29	3·9
West Yorkshire	10,885	33	4·2
West Yorkshire	8,475	32	4·2
England and Wales	141,514	27	3·0

Table 2
Persons aged 10 and under 17 found guilty at all courts or cautioned for indictable offences by type of offence

England and Wales 1986	Number of persons
Police force area	All indictable offences	Offences of violence[1]	Other indictable offences
Metropolitan Police	14,187	1,340	12,847
England and Wales	141,514	12,253	129,261

[1] Comprises violence against the person, sexual offences and robbery.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost of detaining (a) on remand and (b) in prison the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. John Patten: It is not possible to distinguish the costs of keeping particular individuals in custody. The table shows the average weekly net operating cost of keeping a person in a dispersal prison — the type of establishment in which these prisoners have mainly been accommodated since their conviction—for 1976-77 and subsequent financial years. Comparable information on costs for earlier years is not available.

Average weekly net operating cost per inmate in dispersal prisons

	£ per week
1976-77	163
1977-78	187
1978-79	232
1979-80	304
1980-81	369
1981-82	412
1982-83	433
1983-84	[1]478
1984-85	482
1985-86	469
1986-87	467

[1] From 1983-84 onwards the figures have been compiled on a slightly different basis.
Source: Annual reports on the work of the Prison Department

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost of the various police investigations into the Birmingham pub bombings of 21 November 1974.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that no separate record of the cost of the public investigations into the Birmingham pub bombings was kept at the time of the investigations, and that it is not now possible to make an estimate of the cost.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost of the inquiry by the Devon and Cornwall police into allegations made by former PC Tom Clarke regarding the treatment in custody of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Devon and Cornwall that his present estimate of the total cost is £444,000.

Charities

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on the recommendations of the report entitled "Efficiency Scrutiny of the Supervision of Charities"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend expects to be in a position to announce the Government's response to this report shortly.

Nationality

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications have been (a) accepted and (b) rejected for registration under the Nationality Act by month since January 1987.

Mr. Renton: The information is given in the table.

Applications for Registration as a British Citizen

	Granted	R
1987
January	3,316
February	4,835
March	5,313
April	2,529
May	3,361
June	4,089
July	4,030
August	3,278
September	3,605
October	3,642

	Granted	Refused
November	3,933	226
	41,931	2,696

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what income has been received, by month, since January 1987, for fees in respect of the Nationality Act 1982.

Mr. Renton: Fees received, net of refunds to unsuccessful applicants, were as follows:

1987	£
January	246,808
February	508,720
March	487,892
April	463,818
May	629,708
June	755,910
July	741,626
August	705,009
September	878,314
October	945,525
November	1,551,943
December	1,405,056
TOTAL	9,320,329

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provisions he is making for late applications for registration under the Nationality Act, due to Christmas post delays.

Mr. Renton: There is no discretion to extend beyond 31 December 1987 the deadline for receipt of registration applications under section 8 of the 1981 Act. There is discretion to extend the deadline for applications under section 7

"in the special circumstances of any particular case".

Reasons for delay will have to be considered in each case. But in general, for example, my right hon. Friend would expect to be able to exercise discretion in respect of any application under section 7 which was postmarked on or before 31 December 1987, irrespective of when it arrived.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice or assistance he is giving those people wishing to register for British citizenship under the Nationality Act 1981, who are either patients in psychiatric hospitals or otherwise disadvantaged, and unable to afford the registration fees, in order that they should not be denied the right of application through lack of money.

Mr. Renton: Section 42(1) of the British Nationality Act precludes registration as a British citizen if the prescribed fee has not been paid. The Government believe that those who wish to become British citizens should pay the cost of processing their applications. Concessions to one group would mean increased costs for others.

Ian Cutler

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis in respect of the letter he received from soliciters acting for Ian Cutler; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what complaints have been received in case of Mr. Ian Cutler by the Police Authority; and when he expects them to rep

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Allegations made by M being investigated under the procedures set o of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 19 hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no procedures and it would not be right for him in the case. The investigation is being super Police Complaints Authority, but it cannot investigating officer's report will be c understand that the authority has received n about the case. We have, however, passe information copies of correspondence with right hon. and hon. Members who have expre over Mr. Cutler's allegations.

Nottinghamshire Police

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State f Department what decision he has take Nottinghamshire police authority's request f police manpower.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The police authority been informed that my right hon. Friend will consideration to the application in due cou comes to decide on the allocation of addit officer posts for the financial year 1988-89.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State f Department what is the current population prison; how many prisoners there are (a) on (b) long-term; and what information he ha many children have been taken into care as a r

Mr. John Patten: According to the r centrally, the population of Holloway pr November 1987 was about 470. Of these, 240 40 were convicted unsentenced and about 70 sentences of over three years.

Information on dependent children is n centrally and could be provided only at dispr costs.

Pakistan (Drug Traffic)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State f Department how much aid has been given to eliminate drug trafficking.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United King supports the efforts of the Government of combat drug production and trafficking. Dur five years we have pledged a total of £3·4 mi United Nations fund for drug abuse control in their rural development scheme in the Dir di North West Frontier province. In the same per spent about £0·2 million on equipment for enforcement agencies in Pakistan and hav technical assistance in the form of training f officers.

Domestic Fires

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of St Home Department what information he has causes of flashover in domestic fires which have caused accidents; what representation he has received from fire authorities about this phenomenon; what steps he is taking to combat it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Flashover is a technical term used to describe a very rapid combustion of materials which can occur in domestic and other fires when temperatures reach around 1000°C.

The Home Office has received no particular representations from fire authorities about the phenomenon which is well known. However, it is clearly important to adopt all the usual fire prevention and protection measures to prevent a fire occurring or, if one does break out, to escape from it at the earliest possible stage and call the fire brigade.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many domestic fires in each of the last five years have involved upholstered furniture containing polyurethane foam; how many deaths and injuries have resulted in each of those years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The table shows figures for fires in dwellings, and casualties in those fires, which were attended by local authority fire brigades in the kingdom and where the item mainly responsible development of the fire was upholstered furniture covers (including cushions, but excluding bedd

Fires, and casualties in fires, where material mainly res development of fire was upholstered furniture or

	1982	1983	1984	1
Fires	4,179	4,030	4,552	4,
Deaths	182	166	213
Non-fatal casualties	1,399	1,335	1,527	1,

Fire and Police Boards

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of St Home Department if he will list the original expenditure levels underlying precept limits original and final precept limits set, for each fire joint board in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Hurd: The information is set out in the ta asked the authorities to let me know by 1 whether they accept the proposed maximum p 1988-89 notified to them in December.

	1986-87				1987-88[1]			1988-89
	EL (£ million)		Maximum precept (p in £)		EL (£ million)		Maximum precept (p in £)	EL (£ million)
	Original	Final	Original	Final	Original	Final		Original	Final
Police
Greater Manchester	80.375	83·687	16·52	16·52	89·121	92·686	17·87	94·052	95·221
Merseyside	56·685	59·808	25·62	25·62	62·047	64·529	23·29	66·916	68·906
Northumbria	41·952	43·431	13·01	13·01	45·542	47·364	14·20	49·926	49·926
South Yorkshire	34·961	35·412	17·12	17·12	36·726	38·195	16·79	40·691	40·691
West Midlands	76·829	80·831	12·67	12·70	81·402	84·658	12·32	92·254	93·423
West Yorkshire	60·616	63·269	20·81	20·81	66·117	68·762	19·47	72·479	72·479
Fire and Civil Defence Authority
Greater Manchester	37·886	40·139	9·09	9·52	43·312	44·395	9·75	46·799	46·799
Merseyside	26·775	26·884	6·42	7·19	29·284	30·016	6·80	31·617	31·617
South Yorkshire	19·702	20·059	10·84	10·84	20·681	21·198	10·27	22·314	22·514
Tyne and Wear	19·291	19·292	10·98	10·98	20·989	21·514	10·54	22·649	22·649
West Midlands	35·682	36·374	6·17	6·56	39·523	40·511	6·73	42·696	42·696
West Yorkshire	29·032	32·388	11·20	11·20	33·788	34·633	11·59	36·489	37·558
London	140·942	147·383	7·50	7·70	156·348	160·257	8·07	166·775	166·775

[1] The Local Government Finance Act 1987 set the precepts for 1987-88 by formula uprating the orignal police EL's by 4 per cent. fire and civil defence ELs by 2·5 per cent.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the budgeted and estimated outturn, where available, of total expenditure of each fire and police joint board in 1986-87 and 1988-89.

Mr. Hurd: The information is as follows:

	1986-87 estimated outturn (£ million)
Police Authorities
Greater Manchester	81.086
Merseyside	57·053
Northumbria	43·057
South Yorkshire	33·401
West Midlands	77·136
West Yorkshire	58·059

	estim
Fire and Civil Defence Authorities
Greater Manchester
Merseyside
South Yorkshire
Tyne and Wear
West Midlands
West Yorkshire
London

The figures are given in expenditure le Authorities will need to set their budgets for 198 light of the maximum precept limits which hav finalised.

Electoral Register

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals to update continuously the electoral register in the same manner as planned for the poll tax register.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The Representation of the People Act 1983 requires local registration officers to compile the electoral register annually after "house to house or other sufficient enquiry".

They are encouraged to ensure the best practicable coverage of those entitled to vote. There are no plans to alter the statutory arrangements.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were held on remand in the Somerset and Avon police authority area on 30 April and 30 September in each year since 1983; and how many of these prisoners had been waiting for trial for (a) more than nine months and (b) between six and nine months.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 17 December 1987]: Populations of the two establishments are given in the table. Information for all the dates on the time spent in custody by the untried population of the establishments could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, it is estimated that on 30 June 1987, 19 untried prisoners had been initially remanded into custody between six and nine months earlier and five untried prisoners more than nine months earlier. On 30 June 1983 the figures were six and nine respectively. These periods include any intervening time spent on bail.

Untried and convicted unsentenced populations Pucklechurch remand centre on 30 April and 30

	Un
1983
30 April
30 September
1984
30 April
30 September
1985
30 April
30 September
1986
30 April
30 September
1987
30 April
30 September

Stolen Guns

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secreta Home Department how many guns poli force, were reported stolen in each of t and in each case what was their categor

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 9 The available information relates to bur in which a firearm was reported stol weapon, and is published for England whole, 1976-86, in table 3.12 of "C England and Wales 1986" (Cm 233) co in the Library. Information is not colle the number of weapons reported stolen i A breakdown of the 1986 figures by po given in the table. Such a breakdown could be provided only at disproportion Notifiable offences of burglary and theft recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been stolen, by po principal weapon.

England and Wales 1986

Number of offences[1]

Police force area	Total	Air Weapon	Shotgun	Pistol	Rifle	Starting
Avon and Somerset	84	37	30	1	4
Bedfordshire	40	18	11	5	2
Cambridgeshire	43	14	22	1	5
Cheshire	53	9	13	8	10
Cleveland	2	1	1	—	—
Cumbria	11	8	2	—	—
Derbyshire	38	15	17	2	1
Devon and Cornwall	82	35	25	8	3
Dorset	13	4	5	4	—
Durham	44	19	18	—	3
Essex	91	29	34	7	8
Gloucestershire	14	4	8	2	—
Greater Manchester	23	12	4	5	—
Hampshire	104	37	37	10	5
Hertfordshire	15	7	6	1	—
Humberside	87	52	17	1	4
Kent	126	45	50	10	3
Lancashire	107	50	30	5	1
Leicestershire	46	24	14	1	—
Lincolnshire	24	6	13	1	3
London, City	2	—	1	—	—
Merseyside	104	70	13	9	1
Metropolitan	157	62	48	16	2
Norfolk	76	32	34	2	2
Northamptonshire	57	27	19	3	4
Northumbria	135	63	27	3	3
North Yorkshire	56	20	27	—	6
Nottinghamshire	32	19	8	1	—

Bristol prison and
September, 1983-87
Number of prisoners

ed	Convicted unsentenced
77	66
83	57
10	26
90	53
51	32
46	54
02	42
59	51
60	45
39	55

of State for the force by police
last five years;

ecember 1987]:
aries and thefts
, by principal nd Wales as a ninal Statistics
es of which are ed centrally on these incidents.
ce force area is r earlier years
e cost.

e force area and

n	Other
4	8
–	4
–	1
6	7
–	—
–
–	3
5	6
–	—
2	2
1	12
–	—
–	2
1	14
–	14
3	10
4	14
4	17
2	5
–	1
–	1
3	8
3	21
4	2
1	3
7	32
2	1
–	4

Police force area	Total	Air Weapon	Shotgun	Pistol	Rifle	Starting g
South Yorkshire	99	69	12	7	1
Staffordshire	28	10	11	3	—
Suffolk	67	28	16	3	2
Surrey	53	18	21	7	2
Sussex	44	19	19	2	1
Thames Valley	123	38	56	8	5
Warwickshire	35	19	11	—	1
West Mercia	74	25	23	5	11
West Midlands	149	70	31	15	3
West Yorkshire	117	58	24	17	7
Wiltshire	12	3	7	1	1
Dyfed Powys	21	6	12	1	1
Gwent	15	8	5	1	—
North Wales	23	9	13	1	—
South Wales	29	18	9	—	—
Total	2,555	1,117	804	177	105	1

[1] More than one firearm may have been stolen in each offence.

EMPLOYMENT

Restart

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to count imprisonment as unemployment for the purpose of restart interviews.

Mr. Lee: On release from prison ex-offenders are offered an in-depth interview at a jobcentre without having to wait six months for a restart interview. The interview provides an opportunity to discuss ways back into employment comparable to that offered by a restart interview. Periods of imprisonment count towards the unemployment requirement of current Manpower Services Commission programmes designed to help long-term unemployed people, for example, the community programme and the new job training scheme.

Clothing Industry (Morpeth-Ashington)

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what has been the total level of employment in the clothing industry in the Morpeth-Ashington employment area from 1975 to date;

(2) what was the proportion of women's employment in the clothing industry as part of the total employment figure in the Morpeth-Ashington employment area from 1975 to date;

(3) what proportion of total employment has been taken up by the clothing industry in the Morpeth-Ashington employment areas from 1975 to date.

Mr. Lee: Information for the clothing industry in Morpeth and Ashington cannot be given without indirectly disclosing information relating to individual firms which was collected in confidence.

New Workers Scheme

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether employers who take YTS graduates on under the terms of the new workers scheme before it is terminated at the end of January will receive the full year's subsidy for each employee under this scheme from the time of employment.

Mr. Lee: Payment of new workers sch respect of applications approved for jobs and including 31 January 1988 is not scheme's closure.

Civil Service and NHS (Train

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary
Employment what are the numbers of tra engaged in YTS placements in (a) the Ci
(b) the National Health Service.

Mr. Cope: Estimates made by the Man
Commission and the Office of the Minist Service show that there are currently more trainees in Civil Service placements. This both industrial and non-industrial YTS pl

The recent report by Price Waterhouse
National Health Service identified 32 schemes with over 700 young people trainin

Clothing Industry (Blyth and Cra

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secret Employment (1) what has been the employment in the clothing industry in Cramlinton employment area since 1975;

(2) what has been the proportion employment in the clothing industry as p employment figure in the Blyth an employment area since 1975;

(3) what proportion of total employ taken up by the clothing industry in Cramlinton employment area since 1975.

Mr. Lee: Information for the clothing in and Cramlinton cannot be given with disclosing information relating to individu was collected in confidence.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary
Employment by how much unemploymen
the Warrington travel-to-work area since N

Mr. Lee: The following information is On 12 November 1987 the number o claimants in the Warrington travel-to-w
7,779, a fall of 2,113 since November 1986

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a similar breakdown of cases of voluntary unemployment for the four quarters ended 30 June 1986 to that given in his answer of 26 November 1987, Official Report, columns 263-64.

Mr. Lee: Details of adjudication disqualifying claims for unemployme section 20(1) of the Social Security Act quarters ended 30 September 1985, 31 D March 1986 and 30 June 1986 are show numbers in brackets represent decision varied on review in each quarter.

	Quarter ending
	30 September 1985		31 December 1985		31 March 1986
Section 20(1)(a)	107,718	(1,358)	101,778	(1,507)	94,817	(1,260)
Section 20(1)(b)	342	(19)	370	(8)	417	(16)
Section 20(1)(c)	198	(15)	263	(8)	304	(5)
Section 20(1)(d)	39	(1)	38	(—)	12	(3)
Section 20(1)(e)	1,293	(47)	1,547	(83)	1,862	(61)
Total	109,590	(1,440)	103,996	(1,606)	97,412	(1,345)

Average Earnings

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the cash increase in average earnings since 1980, with the 1980 sum expressed as 100.

Mr. Lee: The average earnings index for the whole economy at October 1987 relative to January 1980 = 100 was 203·8, seasonally adjusted, representing an increase of 103·8 per cent.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those areas where unemployment rose in December 1987; and if he will list employment statistics separately for Sussex, Hampshire and the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment figures for 10 December 1987 are not yet available. They will be released on Thursday 14 January. The latest available employee estimates for counties and smaller areas are from the September 1984 census of employment and are as follows:

Employees in employment[1] : September 1984

County[2]	Figures
East Sussex	228,100
West Sussex	249,900
Hampshire	567,800
Isle of Wight	41,300

[1] The figures exclude the self-employed and members of Her Majesty's forces.
[2] The counties are defined in terms of ward boundaries as at 1984.

Unfair Dismissal

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases of unfair dismissal were brought, and how many proven, in the area of the Derbyshire, North-East constituency in 1986 and 1987 at the latest available count.

Mr. Nicholls: Industrial tribunals statistics are kept on a regional and not a constituency basis. During the two years ended 31 March 1987, the area of the constituency of Derbyshire, North-East came under the Sheffield region of the industrial tribunals. The relevant statistics for the region are as follows:

	12 mont end 31 March 19
Number of complaints of unfair dismissal which proceeded to a hearing	3
Number of complaints of unfair dismissal which were upheld	1

Tourism

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secret Employment how much tourists spent in England in the years 1984-85 and 1985-

Mr. Lee: I understand from the Engli that it estimates spending by tourists in tourist board area was: £205 million in 1 in 1985; and £210 million in 1986.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secret Employment what measures he is takin tourist industry in the north-east of Engla make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I read with interest the annu of the North East Tourism Co-ordinati was published in December. I have arran be placed in the library. Indeed I met t group in late November and discu initiatives and plans. The group, which Department's regional director, has revie of the industry in the region and has points for the further development o examining these points to see wh Government can give to the developme industry in the north-east. Considerable e being made by the British Tourist Auth and the Northumbria tourist boards to pr east as a tourist destination.

Employees (Subsidised Me

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretar Employment (1) what is the estima employees in the private sector who r meals at works canteens and staff restau

(2) what is the estimated number of employees in the public sector who are eligible for or obtain meals through subsidised canteens or smaller outlets at their place of work.

Mr. Lee: I regret the information requested is not available.

Industrial Language Training Service

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to complete his review of the management and funding of the industrial language training service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her in the Official Report of 18 December 1987, at column 831.

YTS

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many YTS places have so far been made available on Merseyside; what percentage of unemployed young people in the area have been offered a place on the YTS; and what percentage of those offered a place have accepted it.

Mr. Cope: As at November 1987, 23,536 YTS places were available on Merseyside.

Places are offered by the local authority careers service and by employers, and the percentage of young people in the area that have been offered and accepted a place is not available to the Department.

However, since 1 April 1987, some 13,000 young people on Merseyside have left school and accepted a place on YTS.

Training Schemes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he intends to designate the community programme and job training scheme as approved training schemes for the purposes of the Social Security Act 1975.

Mr. Cope: The community programme provides employment rather than training and is therefore already covered by section 20 of the Social Security Act 1975. We have no present plans to change the position of the job training scheme.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Street Works

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals there are for amending legislation which precludes the Department of Environment (Northern Ireland) from funding any street works relating to rear entries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: No such proposals are being considered. Any legislative change may have the undesirable effect of diverting scarce financial resources from essential maintenance and improvement of the existing public road system.

ENERGY

Private Coal Operators

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secreta Energy what grants have been made ava opencast coal operators and the opera licensed coal mines.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No specific Gover available. Where applicable, operators m be eligible for regional selective ass Operators may also be eligible to apply British Coal Enterprise for new job-creati

Departmental Responsibilit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of S if he will list in the Official Report tho departmental responsibility which extend

Mr. Parkinson: I am responsible for t economic development, supply and use o in Great Britain generally. My right ho Friend the Secretary of State for Scotlan for the Scottish electricity boards. My learned Friend and I consult each other energy matters affecting Scotland.

Sellafield

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of Sta he will give an indication of how far radioa have been reduced at Sellafield over recen

Mr. Michael Spicer: Liquid discharges were reduced by 93 per cent. for alpha emi cent. for beta emitters between 1978 and of BNFL's massive investment in wast plant. The level of discharges will be furthe the current investment programme is co early 1990s.

Sizewell B

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secret Energy what progress has been made in imp of the recommendations made in Sir F report on the Sizewell B inquiry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. answer given to the hon. Member for M Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 7 December 198

With regard to recommendation 7(a published the pre-construction safety December. A copy has been placed in the House.

With regard to recommendation 13, Friend, the Secretary of State for Energy ga on plutonium production in an answer o 1987 pursuant to the answer given to my Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick)

Hinkley Point

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secret Energy what consideration he has given to t of the recommendations in Sir Frank Lay the Sizewell B inquiry for the Cent Generating Board's application to build water reactor at Hinkley Point in Somers

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend will issue, in advance of the public inquiry into the CEGB's application, a statement of the matters which appear to him relevant to his consideration of the application. He will take all relevant factors into account in preparing that statement.

British Coal (Opencast Executive)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many employees are employed in the Opencast Executive operations in the north-east area of British Coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation, and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

WALES

A55 (Conwy)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the design traffic flow for the improvement on the A55 at Conwy; and what are the total estimated costs.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The design traffic flows through Conwy tunnel based on the 1981 forecast for the 16-hour two-way August peak flows in the design year 2003 were:

High growth 36,590 vehicles/day
Low growth 29,730 vehicles/day

The total estimated cost for the improvement of the A55 at Conwy is £160 million.

Operations

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to achieve his publicly stated objective of a maximum 12-month waiting period for operations in the National Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Following a seminar with the Department last month to discuss their plans for tackling waiting times, health authorities have been asked to submit estimates of when those lists which do not currently meet the waiting times targets will do so. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman when the information is available.

NHS (Staff)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to reduce the number of administrators in the National Health Service in Wales below that pertaining in 1979.

Mr. Grist: The determination of appropriate staffing levels in any particular discipline is an operational matter for individual district health authorities.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the nature Conservancy Council was formally notified under Standing Order No. 19 of Private Bill Standing Orders that clause 52 of the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill seeks to stop it carrying out its duties under sections 28(5) and 29(3) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I understand that South Glamorgan county council—which is the promoter of the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill—has satisfied the Examiner that all Standing Orders have been complied with.

Rates

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the total of grant-related expenditure, by service and in total, at rate support grant settlement and at estimated outturn in each year from 1981-82 to 1988-89, by class.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Welsh rate support grant formulae do not form a basis for calculating a national allocation of grant-related expenditure for any particular service. Totals of grant-related expenditure for each class of local authority are as follows:

Total grant related expenditure

	Rate support grant settlement £ million	Outturn £ million
Districts
1981-82	188·5	193·7
1982-83	208·6	200·7
1983-84	224·3	215·8
1984-85	215·1	219·4
1985-86	233·2	231·6
1986-87	[1]223·7	[2]247·1
1987-88	250·8	[2]251·1
1988-89	267·0	n/a
Counties
1981-82	897·0	898·9
1982-83	973·9	969·0
1983-84	1,025·4	1,024·3
1984-85	1,064·9	1,064·7
1985-86	1,116·4	1,111·9
1986-87	[1]1,055·1	[2]1,178·3
1987-88	1,270·1	[2]1,300·3
1988-89	1,402·7	n/a

[1] For the 1986-87 rate support grant settlement only, total grant related expenditure was set at a level equal to 90 per cent. of total expenditure provision to effect certain changes in the distribution of block grant without affecting the amount of grant available. In all other reports, total grant related expenditure is equal to total expenditure provision and comparable figures for the 1987-88 rate support grant settlement are £248·5 million and £1,172·4 million for districts and counties respectively.
[2] Estimates.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, on a ranked and class basis, the percentage change in the grant-related expenditure of each local authority between 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is as follows:

Percentage change in Grant Related Expenditure between 1987-88 and 1988-89[1]

	Per cent.
Local Authority Counties
Dyfed	8·8
Gwynedd	8·7
Mid Glamorgan	8·6
South Glamorgan	8·5
Powys	7·3
Gwent	7·2
West Glamorgan	7·1
Clwyd	6·6

	Per cent.
Districts
Rhuddlan	14·1
Taff-Ely	11·1
Colwyn	10·6
Rhondda	9·4
Cynon Valley	9·2
Ceredigion	8·9
Brecknock	8·1
Montgomeryshire	8·0
Torfaen	7·7
Dwyfor	7·6
Monmouth	7·6
Meirionnydd	7·4
Vale of Glamorgan	7·4
Aberconwy	7·3
Llanelli	7·2
Blaenau Gwent	7·0
Rhymney Valley	7·0
Radnor	6·9
Merthyr Tydfil	6·9
Arfon	6·9
Lliw Valley	6·8
Cardiff	6·8
Islwyn	6·7
Ynys Mon-Isle of Anglesey	6·5
Glyndwr	6·3
Neath	6·2
Preseli Pembrokeshire	6·2
Ogwr	6·0
Alyn and Deeside	5·2
Dinefwr	4·9
Carmarthen	4·1
Wrexham Maelor	3·4
South Pembrokeshire	3·4
Swansea	3·1
Newport	1·9
Port Talbot	1·3
Delyn	0·2

[1] Data are from the Welsh Rate Support Grant Report 1988-89 and the Supplementary Report 1987-88.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the aggregate Exchequer grant, rate support grant, block grant, domestic rate relief grant, relevant expenditure, total expenditure and current expenditure at rate support grant settlement, budget and estimated outturn in each year from 1981-1982 to 1988-1989.

Mr. Peter Walker : The information requested is as follows:

£ million

	1981-82 Settlement	1981-82 Budget	1981-82 Outturn	1982-83 Settlement	1982-83 Budget	1982-83 Outturn
Aggregate Exchequer Grant	871·0	881·0	873·1	943·0	933·2	926·6
Aggregate Amount of Rate Support Grants	744·6	753·2	745·3	814·7	804·4	797·8
Block Grant	696·7	705·4	697·5	790·0	779·7	773·1
Domestic Rate Relief	47·8	47·8	47·8	24·7	24·7	24·7
Relevant Expenditure	1,187·0	1,246·7	1,233·4	1,300·8	1,318·9	1,327·5
Total Expenditure (for Block Grant purposes)	1,070·5	1,133·1	1,117·1	1,182·5	1,208·9	1,207·2
Current Expenditure (R&G purposes)	1,031·8	1,085·2	1,078·6	1,126·0	1,163·1	1,154·5

£ million

	1983-84 Settlement	1983-84 Budget	1983-84 Outturn	1984-85 Settlement	1984-85 Budget	1984-85 Outturn
Aggregate Exchequer Grant	975·00	962·4	962·9	996·0	983·0	992·5
Aggregate Amount of Rate Support Grants	827·5	814·9	812·0	824·3	811·3	815·4
Block Grant	802·5	789·9	787·0	799·0	786·0	790·1
Domestic Rate Relief	25·0	25·0	25·0	25·3	25·3	25·3
Relevant Expenditure	1,385·2	1,401·3	1,406·2	1,440·0	1,453·1	1,468·8
Total Expenditure (for Block Grant purposes)	1,249·7	1,272·2	1,267·3	1,280·0	1,299·7	1,304·0
Current Expenditure (R&G purposes)	1,205·0	1,231·0	1,233·5	1,253·0	1,274·2	1,288·2

£ million

	1985-86 settlement	1985-86 Budget	1985-86 outturn	1986-87 settlement	1986-87 budget	1986-87 revised estimate
Aggregate exchequer grant	1,014·2	1,013·0	1,022·7	1,067·0	1,073·6	1,081·3
Aggregate amount of rate support grants	836·7	831·2	837·0	875·8	877·1	882·1
Block grant	811·2	805·7	811·5	850·0	851·3	856·3
Domestic rate relief	25·5	25·5	25·5	25·8	25·8	25·8
Relevant expenditure	1,514·21	1,521·8	1,529·6	1,597·1	1,634·6	1,640·6
Total expenditure (for Block Grant purposes)	1,349·6	1,363·7	1,352·8	1,420·9	1,453·3	1,466·3
Current expenditure (RSG purposes)	1,309·0	1,323·0	1,336·4	1,368·1	1,427·7	1,437·8

£ million

	1987-88 settlement	1987-88 budget	1988-89 settlement
Aggregate exchequer grant	1,157·0	1,165·1	1,256·0
Aggregate amount of rate support grants	927·9	937·1	1,014·8
Block grant	901·7	910·9	987·8
Domestic rate relief	26·2	26·2	27·0
Relevant expenditure	1,734·0	1,781·1	1,894·0
Total expenditure (for Block Grant purposes)	1,520·9	1,574·6	1,669·7
Current expenditure (RSG purposes)	1,496·5	1,558·1	1,640·0

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each local authority, on a ranked and class basis, the total population used in calculating each authority's expected grant entitlement for 1988-89; and if he will show the comparable figures for 1987-88, giving the percentage change between the two years.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is as follows:

Total population used in calculation of expected Grant Entitlement[1]

	1987-88	1988-89	Per cent. change
Local Authority Counties:
Dyfed	335,900	339,000	0·9
Powys	111,400	112,400	0·9
Gwynedd	233,600	234,600	0·4
Clwyd	397,900	399,600	0·4
Gwent	440,200	441,800	0·4
South Glamorgan	394,800	395,700	0·2
Mid Glamorgan	533,900	534,500	0·1
West Glamorgan	364,100	363,400	−0·2
Districts:
Ceredigion	81,800	83,700	3·1
Montgomeryshire	48,900	50,000	2·2
Colwyn	50,500	51,600	2·2
South Penbrokeshire	39,000	39,800	2·1
Rhuddlan	54,300	55,200	1·7
Monmouth	76,700	77,800	1·4
Meirionydd	31,400	31,800	1·3
Glyndwr	40,200	40,700	1·2
Ogwr	132,900	134,400	1·1
Radnor	21,500	21,700	0·9
Torfaen	90,200	90,900	0·8
Aberconwy	52,200	52,600	0·8
Lliw Valley	60,400	60,800	0·7
Ynys Mon-Isle of Anglesey	69,700	70,100	0·6
Preseli Pembrokeshire	70,300	70,600	0·4
Taff Ely	94,400	94,800	0·4
Dwyfor	26,300	26,400	0·4
Carmarthen	53,600	53,800	0·4
Dinefwr	37,100	37,200	0·3
Newport	129,500	129,800	0·2
Cardiff	278,900	279,500	0·2
Vale of Glamorgan	115,900	116,100	0·2
Rhymney Valley	104,000	104,100	0·1
Wrexham Maelor	114,600	114,700	0·1
Islwyn	65,700	65,700	0·0
Merthyr Tydfil	58,500	58,500	0·0
Neath	65,200	65,100	−0·2
Swansea	187,400	187,000	−0·2
Delyn	65,400	65,200	−0·3
Llanelli	74,100	73,800	−0·4
Arfon	54,000	53,700	−0·6
Blaenau Gwent	78,100	77,600	−0·8
Brecknock	41,000	40,700	−0·7
Cynon Valley	65,400	64,900	−0·8
Alyn and Deeside	72,900	72,200	−1·0
Port Talbot	51,100	50,600	−1·0
Rhondda	78,700	77,800	−1·1

[1] In Wales, population is used in the calculation of Grant Related Expenditure, but is not used directly in the calculation of grant entitlement.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, on a ranked basis, the percentage change in the grant-related expenditure of each non-metropolitan county and each non-metropolitan district between (a) 1981-82 and 1988-89 and (b) 1985-86 and 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Percentage change in grant related expenditure between 1981-82 and 1988-89[1]

	per cent.
Local authority counties
West Glamorgan	60·5
South Glamorgan	59·9
Dyfed	59·1
Powys	56·2
Gwynedd	55·2
Clwyd	54·4
Mid Glamorgan	53·8
Gwent	51·7
Districts
Rhuddlan	61·0
Rhondda	60·5
Blaenau Gwent	57·3
South Pembrokeshire	57·1
Dwyfor	56·9
Islwyn	54·4
Meirionnydd	54·0
Swansea	48·8
Merthyr Tydfil	47·5
Cynon Valley	45·7
Delyn	43·2
Carmarthen	41·7
Colwyn	41·6
Ceredigion	40·8
Ogwr	40·2
Brecknock	39·6
Arfon	39·0
Ynys Môn–Isle of Anglesey	38·8
Preseli Pembrokeshire	38·2
Aberconwy	37·7
Montgomeryshire	36·2
Lliw Valley	35·9
Monmouth	33·8
Vale of Glamorgan	33·1
Dinefwr	33·0
Taff-Ely	32·5
Rhymney Valley	32·5
Neath	32·2
Radnor	31·3
Wrexham Maelor	30·1
Newport	29·8
Alyn and Deeside	29·3
Torfaen	28·3
Port Talbot	27·6

	per cent.
Llanelli	27·6
Cardiff	24·8
Glyndwr	23·6

[1] Data are from the Welsh Rate Support Grant Report 1988-89 Supplementary (No. 3) Report 1981-82.

(b) Percentage Change in Grant Related Expenditure between 1985-86 and 1988-89[1]

	Per cent.
Local Authority Counties:
Dyfed	29·0
Mid Glamorgan	28·2
Gwynedd	26·6
Powys	26·0
South Glamorgan	26·0
West Glamorgan	25·1
Clwyd	24·5
Gwent	23·0
Districts:
Rhuddlan	34·8
Colwyn	22·3
Vale of Glamorgan	21·9
Brecknock	21·0
Torfaen	20·2
Dwyfor	20·1
Blaenau Gwent	18·9
Ynys Mon-Isle of Anglesey	17·8
Cynon Valley	17·8
Islwyn	17·7
Aberconwy	17·7
Ogwr	17·6
South Pembrokeshire	17·4
Neath	17·2
Ceredigion	17·1
Rhondda	16·7
Monmouth	16·1
Taff Ely	16·0
Rhymney Valley	16·0
Lliw Valley	15·9
Alyn and Deeside	15·1
Preseli Pembrokeshire	15·0
Merthyr Tydfil	14·6
Dinefwr	14·6
Montgomeryshire	13·9
Arfon	13·7
Llanelli	13·3
Cardiff	12·5
Swansea	12·3
Newport	11·6
Glyndwr	11·4
Wrexham Maelor	11·3
Radnor	11·2
Meirionnydd	9·6
Carmarthen	9·1
Delyn	7·6
Port Talbot	7·4

[1] Data are from the Welsh Rate Support Grant Report 1988-89 and the Supplementary (No. 2) Report 1985-86.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the rate poundage implied for each authority at taxpayer level by the rate support grant for 1988-89, assuming that each authority meets his Department's spending assumption, with no additions to or withdrawals from funds or balances, and assuming 1987-88 penny rate products; and if he will list, on a class and ranked basis, each authority's 1987-88 rate poundage, showing the difference between the 1987-88 poundage and the implied one for 1988-89 and showing the resulting percentage change.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is as follows:

Local Authority	1987-88 Rate poundage (pence)	Notional poundage 1988-89 (pence)	Change in poundage (per cent.)
Islwyn	230·50	249·54	8·26
Torfaen	237·28	256·68	8·18
Wrexham Maelor	234·99	253·96	8·07
Newport	230·54	247·38	7·31
Port Talbot	264·34	282·50	6·87
Monmouth	230·10	245·87	6·85
Delyn	233·20	249·16	6·84
Glyndwr	229·46	244·74	6·66
Lliw Valley	262·38	279·42	6·49
Neath	253·94	270·38	6·47
Blaenau Gwent	238·28	253·58	6·42
Alyn and Deeside	228·47	243·04	6·38
Swansea	269·54	285·55	5·94
Radnor	213·75	223·17	4·41
Montgomeryshire	210·73	218·90	3·88
Colwyn	246.09	255·44	3·80
Brecknock	225·51	234·06	3·79
Meirionnydd	219·15	224·06	2·24
Ynys Mon	223·02	227·97	2·22
Dinefwr	234·86	239·50	1·98
Aberconwy	228·66	233·16	1·97
Cardiff	210·65	214·68	1·91
Rhuddlan	233·68	237·69	1·72
Dwyfor	228·31	232·20	1·71
Arfon	223·80	226·39	1·16
Merthyr Tydfil	259·45	260·24	·30
Llanelli	255·98	256·61	·25
Vale of Glamorgan	217·92	217·72	−·09
Rhymney Valley	257·13	256·40	−·28
Carmarthen	238.99	236.93	−·86
Ogwr	259·43	254·10	−2·06
Taff Ely	258·70	253·34	−2·07
Preseli	234·65	229·66	−2·13
South Pembroke	238·17	232·86	−2·23
Rhondda	263·49	257·02	−2·46
Ceredigion	235·65	227·61	−3·41
Cynon Valley	252·44	242·36	−3·99

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes were made to the method of calculating grant-related expenditure in each rate support grant settlement from 1981-82 to 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Walker: Full details of the methodology used in calculating grant related expenditure are set out in each Welsh rate support grant report laid before the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Information Technology Staff

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the professional information technology staff in his Department, including programmers, systems analysts and managers, are based in London and the south-east.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Ninety-eight per cent. of staff using ADP functional skills on a full-time basis are based in London and the south-east.

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the trainees for professional information technology posts within his Department are (a) female and (b) more than 30 years of age.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Just under 60 per cent. of trainees for the ADP functional specialism, current and those joining shortly, are women and about 10 per cent. are over 30 years of age.

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the professional information technology staff in his Department, including programmers, systems analysts and managers, are (a) female and (b) more than 30 years of age.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Thirty-one per cent. of staff using ADP functional specialism skills on a full-time basis are women. The figure for staff over 30 years of age is not readily available.

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many professional level information technology staff are employed by his Department, including programmers, systems analysts and managers; and how many trainees there are for such posts.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The complement for posts in the administrative class requiring the knowledge and skills of the ADP functional specialism, excluding staff engaged on data processing duties, is 237. In addition, a number of staff in other professional grades exercise these skills as part of their duties. Currently there are four trainees in post and 13 more are to join shortly.

Moulin Winter Wheat

Sir John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, in the light of the widespread failure of Moulin winter wheat crops in the current year, to what extent public money will be used for compensation payments to growers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Unless legal liability is established, the Government have no intention of making public money available to compensate growers who may have suffered losses attributable to the performance of Moulin.

Dairy Quotas

Mr. Hume: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement regarding the hardship among large numbers of dairy farmers in Northern Ireland resulting from the imposition of dairy quotas; and if he will establish an exceptional hardship provision under paragraph 16, schedule 8 to the Dairy Produce Quota Regulations 1986; and if he will make appropriate arrangements for its administration.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As elsewhere in the United Kingdom, the dairy sector in Northern Ireland has successfully come to terms with the difficulties arising from the introduction of milk quotas. I have no plans at present to make a new exceptional hardship provision under regulation 16 of the Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations 1986.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much grain is held in intervention in the county of Durham.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No intervention grai currently stored in the county of Durham.

Pigmeat

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agricul Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensur continuing prohibition of the importation of unc pigmeat from Europe; and if he will make a stateme

Mr. Donald Thompson: In accordance with Euro Community law, imports of fresh pigmeat Community countries will continue to be prohibited u the meat is derived from pigs reared in officially s fever free parts of the Community.

Agricultural Practice

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agricul Fisheries and Food to what extent he has investig changes in agricultural practices caused by the floo and mudslide in Sussex in October; in what parti places; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 18 Dece 1987]: Severe surface water run-off and soil erosion experienced on 7 October this year and subsequentl six areas of farmland in an area of the South Downs Brighton during the exceptionally heavy rainfall du the first part of that month. Local advisers in Department's Agricultural Development and Adv Service have visited the sites affected and have prov advice at the request of the principal landowner conce on measures to avoid recurrence of the problem.

ADAS is able to provide advice when requested range of measures that can be taken in response to types of problems, including changes in cultivation or management practices. The specific measures re mended will depend on the individual circumstances o particular farm or location.

Alternative Land Use

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agricul Fisheries and Food whether farmers, opting to set land for woodlands under his proposed extensifica scheme, are expected to claim the relevant rate of gran their management under that scheme or from the prop farm woodland grant scheme.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 18 December 19 The consultation document issued on 9 Dece suggested a possible link between the extensifica scheme and the farm woodland scheme whereby a fa prepared to accept the requirements of both sch might receive payments for the first five years under extensification scheme and payments under the woodland scheme thereafter. But I shall wish to con the relationship between the two schemes further in light of all views expressed.

Milk

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list reductions in (a) milk production and (b) milk quot each European Community country in each year 1984 as a percentage of (i) national production and European Community production, together with the for each category for all years since 1984.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 17 December 1987]: The information requested is contained in the following tables. There was no change in milk quotas between 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Data on milk production were obtained from Eurostat, and represent quantities within the Eurostat definition of "deliveries to dairies". This differs from the definition of "wholesale deliveries" for quota purposes, and hence the Eurostat milk production figures are not directly comparable with quota. Levels of quota were taken from the appropriate EC regulations, including allocations of quota from the Community reserve.

Change in production between 1983-84 and 1984-85 as percentage of:

	(i) National production 1983-84	(ii) EC (10) production 1983-84
Belgium	−5·4	−0·17
Denmark	−6·6	−0·33
France	−2·4	−0·60
Germany	−7·6	−1·85
Greece	−3·9	−0·02
Ireland	+3·0	+0·16
Italy	−0·05	−0·004
Luxembourg	+3·3	+0·01
Netherlands	−5·4	−0·66
United Kingdom	−7·3	−1·18
EC10	—	−4·6

Change in production between 1984-85 and 1985-86 as percentage of:

	(i) National production 1984-85	(ii) EC (10) production 1984-85
Belgium	+5·4	+0·17
Denmark	−0·7	−0·03
France	+0·5	0·14
Germany	+0·7	+0·18
Greece	+8·8	+0·04
Ireland	−0·2	−0·01
Italy	+0·9	+0·07
Luxembourg	+0·2	+0·003
Netherlands	+0·2	0·03
United Kingdom	+0·36	+0·06
EC10	—	+0·63

Change in Production between 1985-86 and 1986-87 as percentage of:

	(i) National production 1985-86	(ii) EC (10) production 1985-86
Belgium	+1·1	+0·04
Denmark	−0·5	−0·02
France	−0·05	−0·13
Germany	+1·1	+0·26
Greece	+1·5	+0·01
Ireland	−0·9	−0·05
Italy	n/a	n/a
Luxembourg	+1·4	+0·004
Netherlands	−0·7	−0·09
United Kingdom	+0·5	+0·08
EC10	n/a	n/a

Change in Quota between 1984-85 and 1985-86 as percentage of:

	(i) National production 1984-85	(ii) EC (10) production 1984-85
Belgium	−0·06	−0·002
Denmark	−1·01	−0·05
France	−0·35	−0·09
Germany	−0·27	−0·06
Greece	−1·22	−0·005
Ireland	No change	No change
Italy	No change	No change
Luxembourg	−1·02	−0·003
Netherlands	−0·59	−0·07
United Kingdom	−1·01	−0·16
EC10	—	0·45

Note: Quota was reduced in all member states except Ireland and Italy by 1 per cent. from 1984-85 levels. However, transfers of quota between wholesale and direct sale partially offset this reduction. There were no reductions in milk quota between 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Change in quota between 1986-87 and 1987-88 as percentage of:

	(i) National production 1986-87	(ii) EC (10) production 1986-87
Belgium	−5·8	n/a
Denmark	−6·0	n/a
France	−6·0	n/a
Germany	−5·9	n/a
Greece	−7·1	n/a
Ireland	−5·7	n/a
Italy	n/a	n/a
Luxembourg	−5·5	n/a
Netherlands	−5·9	n/a
United Kingdom	−5·9	n/a
EC10	n/a	n/a

Farm Incomes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his projection of farm incomes over the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 18 December 1987]: Future farm incomes will be influenced by many unpredictable factors, including individual farmers' management decisions. Consequently, reliable estimates cannot be made. The Government's determination that proper budgetary discipline should be applied to the CAP offers the best prospect for ensuring its continuance as a viable support policy and is thus in the interests of farmers, as well as taxpayers and consumers.

EC (Food Exports)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 15 December, Official Report, column 478, what was the total amount, expressed in pounds sterling, expended by the EEC in exporting food to the Soviet Union in the period January-May in export rebates and what was the comparable total in respect of the exports in the calendar year 1986.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 18 December 1987]: Information on the cost of refunds paid on exports to the Soviet Union is not available. No breakdown by country of destination is provided by the Commission.

CIVIL SERVICE

Quangos

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many quangos in net terms have been either abolished or created since (a) 1984 and (b) 1985.

Mr. Luce: Up to 1 April 1987, there was a net decrease in the number of non-departmental public bodies ("quangos") of (a) 38 since 1 April 1984, and (b) 11 since 1 April 1985.

THE ARTS

Northern Arts

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the level of grant made to Northern Arts for the years 1982-83, 1983-84, 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Luce: The information is as follows:

	£
1982-83	1,733,236
1983-84	1,819,020
1985-86	2,086,802
1986-87	3,543,845

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list each of the functions of the Museums and Galleries Commission; and what proportion each accounts for in the dual budget from his Department.

Mr. Luce: The objects and powers of the Museums and Galleries Commission are set out in its royal charter. The commission's principal functions are:

1. Advising Government and others on museum matters, including security, acceptances in lieu of tax, and the operation of the Government indemnity scheme.
2. The administration of grants to the English Area Museum Councils, the Museums Documentation Association and non-national museums.
3. The promotion and co-ordination of museum-related conservation services and of travelling exhibitions.

It is for the commission to decide the distribution of its resources, including the grant-in-aid, between its various functions, subject to any guidelines or specific requirements which I may indicate as to the application of the grant-in-aid. The commission publishes a statement of expenditure in its annual report. A table analysing provision for the previous and current years is also included in the annual Supply Estimates.

Departmental Expenditure

Mrs. Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will publish in the Official Report the total amount spent by the Office of Arts and Libraries, directly and indirectly, on funding (a) orchestral music, (b) non-orchestral music and (c) all music excluding opera for every year from 1979-80 to 1987-88.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 16 November 1987]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Orchestral music	Non-orchestral music (including opera)
	£	£
1979-80	[1]4,625,033	[1]15,025,013
1980-81	[1]5,327,411	[1]16,702,851
1981-82	[1]6,117,281	[1]18,827,504
1982-83	7,091,157	22,064,401
1983-84	7,290,855	24,173,188
1984-85	7,542,318	25,130,648
1985-86	7,584,718	26,282,454
1986-87	10,290,459	28,920,837
1987-88	[2]	[2]

[1] Two regional arts authorities were unable to break music budgets these years. The totals above do not include the music budgets of these two regional arts authorities.
[2] Firm figures for 1987-88 are not yet available.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much of the Office of Arts and Libraries expenditure, directly and indirectly, on music, excluding opera, has been set aside for the replacement of Greater London council and metropolitan county council grants; in every year since the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils were abolished; which institutions have benefited; and by how much.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 16 November 198 available information is as follows:

1986-87
London Philharmonic Orchestra
London Symphony Orchestra
Philharmonia Orchestra
Royal Philharmonic Orchestra
Halle Concerts Society
Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Society (including the Philharmonic Hall)
Northern Sinfonia
Northern Sinfonia Lunchtime Concerts
City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra
Newcastle City Symphony Concerts Series
Sunderland Empire Lunchtime Concerts
Jazz Central, Birmingham
Asian Music Academy and Resources Centre
Atum Community Music
Black Music Archive
Black Music Association UK Ltd.
Camden Jazz Week
Comhaltas Ceoltoiri Eirann
Cultural Co-operative
Dadakrama
East London African Arts
Endymion Ensemble
Firehouse Population Music Centre
Foundation for African Arts
Dishari Shilipi Gosthi
Grand Union
Lewisham Academy of Music
Linking Music
Live Music Now
London Brotherhood of Steel
Mela Multi-Cultural Festival
National Interest Band
Over Music Group
Pyramid Arts Development Co. Ltd.
Rayman Chinese Orchestra
Sugumugu Sundae
Tower Hamlet Youth Music Workshop
Triangle Music Workshop
Safrica
West London Women's Music Project
Wilf Walker Entertainments Ltd.

1986-87	£
Woolwich Simba Project	8,000
Young Musicians Symphony Orchestra	16,450
Youth and Music	19,400
Zion Music Workshop	32,240
Total	3,165,758

Full outturn figures for 1987-88 are not yet available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. E. Bernasko

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will be in a position to reply to the letter of 4 November 1987, from the hon. Member for Croydon, North-West on the subject of Mr. E. Bernasko of Silverleigh road, Thornton Heath.

Mr. Eggar: A reply was sent to my hon. Friend on 15 December 1987.

African National Congress

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 15 December Official Report, column 443, why the high commission at Dar-es-Salaam did not accept the invitation to the African National Congress conference.

Mrs. Chalker: We have contacts from time to time with the African National Congress. But it is not our policy to attend all its functions. In the case of the Arusha conference, we were invited to attend only the opening session.

Peace Initiatives

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent initiatives Her Majesty's Government have taken to promote peace through non-military initiatives since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: Since 1979 Her Majesty's Government have worked consistently to further the cause of world peace by keeping NATO's defences strong; observing and promoting respect for international law; playing our full part in international fora such as the United Nations and the Commonwealth.

Embassy and Consular Services

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report the overall cost of maintaining Her Majesty's embassy and consular services in (a) Italy, (b) Japan, (c) Saudi Arabia, (d) Singapore, (e) Burkina Faso, (f) Canada and (g) New Zealand.

Mr. Eggar: In the financial year 1986-87, the cost excluding FCO support services in the United Kingdom, of Her Majesty's embassies and consular offices in the named countries was as follows:

	£ millions
(a) Italy	6·919
(b) Japan	10·110
(c) Saudi Arabia	3·765
(d) Singapore	2·0
(e) Burkina Faso—(see below)
(f) Canada	3·8
(g) New Zealand	1·4

The United Kingdom has no direct representation Burkina Faso, relations with that country bei maintained through Her Majesty's embassy in Abidj Ivory Coast.

Istanbul (Immigration Service)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State f Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give t figures for the number of staff working on entry clearan at his Department's Istanbul post for each of the ye 1978 to 1987.

Mr. Eggar: The number of staff working on en clearance at Istanbul was 5·5 each year from 1978 to 19 six in 1986 and seven in 1987.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State f Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give t average time taken to process visa applications at Department's Istanbul post; and if he will give the numb of visa applications currently awaiting a decision.

Mr. Eggar: Applications by foreign visa nationa except Iranians, are normally processed within maximum of three days of receipt. There are 1,0 applications by non-resident Iranians awaiting a perso interview and subsequent decision.

Pakistan

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Forei and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings Her Majest Government's representatives in Pakistan have had w representatives of the Pakistan People's Party and ot opposition parties in the last year.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's ambassador to Pakistan met most of the main opposition leaders. In additi members of staff at the embassy in Islamabad and consulate-general in Karachi have contacts at all lev with a wide range of opposition politicians.

Mr. Sidney Clarke

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Fore and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts with Government of Thailand have been made in respect of Sidney Clarke, a British prisoner; whether a King's parc has been applied for; and if he is satisfied with the medi attention Mr. Clarke is receiving.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's embassy in Bangkok h been in contact with the appropriate Thai authorities connection with both Mr. Clarke's royal parc application and medical attention for him.

Our consular staff visit Mr. Clarke regularly, officials in Britain maintain close touch with his fami

Mr. Clarke's application for a King's pardon submitted in June 1986. The embassy has established t it has reached the royal household.

There is a prison doctor available. Where necessary Thai prison authorities arrange for prisoners to rec treatment in outside hospitals. Mr. Clarke has declined consult the prison doctor. He recently agreed, however, to see a local British doctor if the embassy can obtain the necessary permission from the Thai prison authorities. The embassy has applied for this.

Yemen

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make representations to the President Praesidium of the Supreme People's Council of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen to seek clemency for the 35 people that have been sentenced to death in connection with the attempted coup.

Mr. Mellor: On behalf of the Twelve, the EC Presidency representative in Aden made a demarche on humanitarian grounds to the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen authorities on behalf of the five people in detention whose death sentences were ratified. However, we now understand that those five were executed soon after that ratification.

Hong Kong

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the maintenance of prosperity and stability in Hong Kong in the light of recent developments connected with the Hong Kong stock exchange.

Mr. Eggar: We believe that the prompt action taken by the Hong Kong Government in November to initiate a thorough review of the management and operation of the Hong Kong stock exchange and, more recently, the resolutions passed by the stock exchange enabling certain members of its committee to distance themselves from the management of the exchange while investigations into allegations of corruption in the operation are in progress, will have reinforce confidence in Hong Kong as a leading This will contribute to the maintenance and stability of the territory.

Imperial College, Londo

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of S and Commonwealth Affairs if he will remuneration received by the renew assessment group at Imperial college, Lon undertaken for the Falkland Islands connection with the issue of fishing licenc Falkland Islands conservation zone.

Mr. Eggar: The fees paid to the rene assessment group at Imperial college an Falkland Islands Government's scientific 1987-88 is £265,000. The terms of the contr RRAG provides scientific advice to the F Government are commercially confidenti

French Ambassador

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of S and Commonwealth Affairs when he last with the French ambassador; if middle eas discussed; and when he next intends ambassador.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and encounters the French ambassador regula no recent discussion of the middle east w no plans for a meeting specifically wi ambassador in the near future.

West Bank (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit to the West Bank by the Minister of State, the hon. and learned Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor).

Mr. Mellor: During my visit to Israel and the occupied territories I had useful and constructive discussions with a wide range of Israelis and Palestinians. I took every opportunity to register our concern at abuses of human rights and violations of international law in the occupied territories and to reiterate our view that an international conference offers the best way forward to a peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the recent statement of the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on his official visit to the West Bank represen Majesty's Government policy; and if he will n statement.

Mr. Mellor: Yes.

Visa Control

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for F and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the tot of administering visa control in the five countries became subject to such visa control in October 1986 is the estimated cost of administering such visa over the coming year; how many entry control were in post on 1 October 1986 and 1 October 198 many entry control officers will be in post on 1 O 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to the reply, 8 December c. 116]: Following are the figures requested concern present and future costs of administering visa con the five countries, which became subject to visa con October 1986:

Estimated costs of administering visa countrol in the new visa regime countries

Country	Year to end September 1987		Year to end September 1988
	Ongoing operating costs	Start up costs	Ongoing operating costs	Start up costs
Bangladesh	2,336	70	2,639	nil
Ghana	309	nil	417	nil
Nigeria	3,840	2,000	5,829	710
India	3,330	286	4,297	5
Pakistan	3,778	287	4,193	140
Total	13,593	2,643	17,375	855

Cruise Missiles

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the statement by the Minister of State, the hon. and learned Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) Official Report, 10 December, column 630, he will set out the uses to which the nuclear material arising from withdrawn cruise missile warheads, to which he makes reference, may be put; and if any provisions have been made to transfer ownership to civil uses.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have been asked to reply.

The warheads for ground-launched cruise missiles currently based in the United Kingdom as well as the missiles themselves, are wholly the property of the United States Government. The warheads will, therefore, be returned to the United States, and the use of the nuclear material they contain is entirely a matter for the United States Government.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Examination Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of St Education and Science (1) if he will list the num children sitting (a) CSE exams, (b) O-level exams a A-level exams in each local education authority in E as a percentage of the total number in the relevan groups in each authority for the latest available ye

(2) if he will list by each local educational autho England the total number of children achieving (a grades 2 to 5, (b) O-level grades A to C and CSE 1 and (c) A-level grades A to E as a percentage of th number of pupils in the relevant year group i authority, for the latest available year.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested for main schools, expressed as percentages of school leav given in the table.

School leavers 1985-86
Maintained schools only

	Total leavers (000's)	[1]Percentages Attempting CSE	Attempting O level	A level	Achieving [2]Lower grades	Achieving [3]Higher grades	A lev
London boroughs
Barking	2·12	79·4	50·6	10·0	78·7	41·3

	Total leavers (000's)	[1]Percentages
		CSE	Attempting O level	A level	[2]Lower grades	Achievi [3]Hi gr
Barnet	3·54	71·6	80·2	37·1	79·2
Bexley	3·50	68·5	67·6	19·8	78·1
Brent	2·82	76·0	58·8	15·9	76·3
Bromley	3·68	73·1	74·4	22·0	81·7
Croydon	4·26	80·6	65·9	14·1	82·2
Ealing	3·19	86·3	68·7	12·6	84·1
Enfield	3·13	76·5	59·3	21·6	81·9
Haringey	1·96	79·6	69·1	17·0	80·1
Harrow	2·16	79·4	79·1	33·4	83·1
Havering	3·79	81·4	69·3	17·8	82·2
Hillingdon	3·08	87·3	65·5	16·1	88·4
Hounslow	2·91	79·2	58·5	15·8	80·5
Kingston-upon-Thames	1·52	60·6	73·6	25·0	74·3
Merton	2·22	74·7	64·8	15·6	79·2
Newham	2·94	72·5	48·7	12·3	70·5
Redbridge	3·10	71·8	68·2	22·6	78·7
Richmond-upon-Thames	1·39	84·2	81·1	—	82·7
Sutton	2·03	71·7	61·8	18·8	82·8
Waltham Forest	2·55	81·5	54·9	10·2	78·7
ILEA	23·50	75·4	51·0	12·9	74·8
West Midlands
Birmingham	16·71	80·6	66·0	12·3	79·5
Coventry	5·01	88·2	76·5	14·6	85·8
Dudley	5·03	85·7	76·5	10·2	83·9
Sandwell	4·13	83·8	65·1	8·0	82·2
Solihull	3·44	92·7	80·1	18·9	88·5
Walsall	4·97	79·1	62·2	14·7	77·2
Wolverhampton	4·44	80·1	61·7	10·6	80·6
Merseyside
Knowsley	2·56	76·1	58·0	6·0	72·5
Liverpool	7·13	72·2	67·2	12·3	70·3
St. Helens	3·54	84·2	71·2	13·1	79·4
Sefton	4·39	82·9	83·8	19·8	84·2
Wirral	5·17	86·6	78·2	15·6	82·3
Greater Manchester
Bolton	4·26	86·6	82·1	16·7	82·9
Bury	2·58	81·6	83·6	20·7	81·1
Manchester	7·50	71·0	64·7	14·1	71·3
Oldham	2·95	85·7	73·5	8·8	81·2
Rochdale	3·27	85·2	80·4	13·8	82·1
Salford	3·62	85·8	79·1	15·4	79·7
Stockport	3·81	82·3	86·5	18·6	79·0
Tameside	3·87	84·1	82·0	13·0	83·7
Trafford	3·00	80·7	88·1	17·6	81·3
Wigan	5·63	88·8	82·6	16·1	80·6
South Yorkshire
Barnsley	3·46	85·8	77·7	8·1	82·7
Doncaster	4·38	89·7	79·7	13·9	84·6
Rotherham	4·51	84·8	70·6	13·0	81·4
Sheffield	8·84	88·2	78·6	12·5	83·5
West Yorkshire
Bradford	7·24	78·8	72·1	12·9	73·1
Calderdale	2·76	81·7	78·6	15·5	79·7
Kirklees	6·29	87·9	83·6	18·7	82·4
Leeds	10·40	85·9	81·3	14·7	81·4
Wakefield	5·66	86·0	70·7	8·2	81·3
Tyne and Wear
Gateshead	2·89	82·0	60·8	12·7	80·5
Newcastle-upon-Tyne	3·60	77·8	52·9	13·7	77·4
North Tyneside	2·83	82·6	69·6	12·3	84·9
South Tyneside	2·33	86·1	55·0	15·0	88·3
Sunderland	5·11	89·5	75·4	9·5	90·5
Counties
Avon	12·08	86·7	62·6	15·7	86·8
Bedfordshire	7·41	90·6	70·9	18·2	88·0
Berkshire	9·64	80·6	60·6	21·2	83·6
Buckinghamshire	8·45	72·8	65·7	23·2	82·8

er les	A level passes
·4	31·7
·7	17·3
·4	14·3
·5	19·6
·9	13·1
·9	10·5
·2	18·1
·2	13·5
·5	31·2
·7	15·2
·1	13·2
·1	13·1
·3	22·0
·6	13·6
·2	8·8
·2	20·2
·8	—
·0	18·3
·2	8·8
·6	10·6
·7	10·1
·8	11·5
·0	9·0
·8	6·4
·2	17·4
·7	13·1
·5	7·7
·4	6·0
·1	9·8
·0	11·9
·2	16·8
·6	13·0
·0	15·7
·7	20·3
·2	12·2
·1	7·7
·8	10·8
·7	15·1
·9	14·5
·8	11·3
·5	16·6
·1	14·1
·8	7·5
·5	12·0
·2	12·6
·4	10·5
·0	10·6
·0	13·0
·4	15·1
·0	13·3
·8	6·4
·9	9·9
·8	10·8
·6	10·1
·7	11·4
·2	7·5
·2	14·1
·5	16·1
·6	19·4
·6	21·6

	Total leavers (000's)	[1] Percentages: Attempting CSE	Attempting O level	A level	Achieving [2] Lower grades	Achieving [3] Higher grades	A le
Cambridgeshire	7·87	86·2	70·0	11·4	87·5	51·8
Cheshire	14·67	85·1	82·2	17·7	83·6	54·7
Cleveland	9·89	84·8	69·2	16·6	83·1	51·3
Cornwall	6·65	85·2	60·5	16·2	85·2	56·8
Cumbria	7·36	84·2	69·6	15·4	84·3	54·2
Derbyshire	14·48	86·0	59·9	12·6	86·6	51·5
Devon	12·38	84·7	59·7	11·9	85·2	54·4
Dorset	8·09	82·7	63·0	14·7	86·5	61·0
Durham	8·73	85·4	61·8	10·7	85·1	50·4
East Sussex	7·50	80·2	68·2	19·4	85·5	54·0
Essex	22·35	84·1	72·7	15·8	84·8	56·2
Gloucestershire	7·67	82·2	61·6	18·7	87·4	56·1
Hampshire	21·43	87·6	61·7	14·5	88·4	57·4
Hereford and Worcester	8·88	84·9	76·6	21·0	86·1	55·1
Hertfordshire	14·28	83·6	74·3	20·1	84·1	60·4
Humberside	13·73	85·2	68·3	13·5	83·9	46·5
Isle of Wight	1·65	84·8	50·1	14·4	88·4	48·9
Kent	21·34	74·0	62·2	18·5	83·5	52·7
Lancashire	21·28	84·1	78·5	10·8	81·6	55·2
Leicestershire	12·02	83·4	60·6	17·7	83·2	44·8
Lincolnshire	8·01	80·4	64·2	16·4	85·5	52·3
Norfolk	10·44	81·9	62·6	11·8	79·6	49·2
North Yorkshire	9·83	84·3	82·8	21·3	82·9	58·6
Northamptonshire	8·69	86·6	64·6	16·3	87·9	52·5
Northumberland	4·11	81·1	73·2	20·8	81·9	58·3
Nottinghamshire	15·50	86·7	56·4	12·8	86·0	40·8
Oxfordshire	7·57	87·9	59·8	16·8	89·8	55·2
Shropshire	6·29	88·6	73·9	16·2	86·3	57·4
Somerset	6·12	86·1	57·1	9·8	89·0	51·9
Staffordshire	16·33	82·8	71·6	13·7	82·1	52·0
Suffolk	8·96	87·0	71·0	16·5	86·0	50·9
Surrey	12·80	78·4	74·6	24·5	84·5	62·1
Warwickshire	7·12	83·3	75·2	17·7	84·9	55·4
West Sussex	8·77	86·4	64·6	21·7	87·4	61·0
Wiltshire	6·57	87·3	58·8	12·2	86·8	51·0
Total England	673·55	82·8	68·3	15·5	83·1	52·0

Source: School leavers sample survey. Data subject to sampling error.
[1] Excludes examination attainments at tertiary colleges or other FE establishments.
[2] O level grades D, E, CSE grades 2-5.
[3] O level grades A-C, CSE grade 1.

History Curriculum

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whose advice he has sought from outside his Department for the preparation of the history curriculum as a foundation subject; and whom he intends to consult on the curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The arrangements for consulting on proposals for attainment targets and programmes of study in relation to any national curriculum foundation subject are set out in clauses 11 and 12 of the Education Reform Bill now before the House. My right hon. Friend has not yet established working groups to prepare such proposals for foundation subjects other than mathematics or science.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he specially requested the document in the history curriculum prepared and submitted to him on 2 February by the English Historical Association; and what assessment he has made of the support enjoyed by the document as a basis for the history curriculum amongst historians and teachers of history in Britain.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Historical Association sent a copy of the first version of its "Proposals for a Core Curriculum in History" on its own initiative. In responding document, my right hon. Friend said that the p were interesting, that working towards a curriculum would involve a great deal of consulta debate, and that the subject associations would important contribution to make to the proc consultation procedures now provided for Education Reform Bill will enable support Government's own eventual proposals for histo assessed.

Education Reform

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of Education and Science if he will make it his poli the differential formula for converting students time equivalents contained in schedule 7 to the E Reform Bill as a significant factor in the determi funding for further education.

Mr. Jackson: The determination of funding fo education is a matter for local education authori Government take account of a projection of equivalent student numbers in drawing up their spending on non-advanced further education authorities collectively. They also convert actua numbers to full-time equivalents in the assessment of grant-related expenditure (GRE) which is one determinant of the distribution of block grant. In both these contexts the Government currently use the same multipliers as are listed in column 3 of the table shown in paragraph 2 of the schedule. But the schedule serves to provide a method of converting part-time enrolments to full-time equivalents for the purposes of clauses 82, 83, 90, 100 and 102 of the Bill. The Government are not committed to the continued use of the same multipliers in expenditure projections or GREs.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the reasons for the differential formula for converting students into full-time equivalents contained in schedule 7 to the Education Reform Bill.

Mr. Jackson: The formula provides a method for calculating the full-time equivalent enrolment number of an institution — a concept used in the Bill to decide whether an institution will enter the sector to be funded by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council, or whether the local education authority will be required to delegate to an institution which it will continue to maintain responsibility for managing the institution's budget.

Full-time equivalent weightings are used because students on different levels of course and modes of attendance require different amounts of teaching time and expenditure. The weightings shown in schedule 7 are consistent with the relative teaching hours for different modes of attendance revealed by the Department's annual monitoring survey; and they were developed in consultation with the National Advisory Body and the local education authorities.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received concerning the Education Reform Bill as it affects Scottish universities.

Mr. Jackson: We have received many representations about the university provisions in the Education Reform Bill, which apply equally to universities in England, Scotland and Wales.

Education Expenditure

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much each education authority in England spends per pupil per year on (a) textbooks, (b) materials and supplies, (c) computers, (d) video recorders, (e) video cameras, (f) television sets and (g) paper and reprographics.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information in the form requested is not available. However, the figures in the following table show the overall expenditure on text and library books and education equipment, stationery and materials per primary and secondary pupil by each education authority in England for 1985-86.

Expenditure (£) on books and equipment per pupil primary and secondary schools—England—1985-86

	£
Barking	35·42
Barnet	37·79
Bexley
Brent
Bromley
Croydon
Ealing
Enfield
Haringey
Harrow
Havering
Hillingdon
Hounslow
Kingston-upon-Thames
Merton
Newham
Redbridge
Richmond-upon-Thames
Sutton
Waltham Forest
ILEA
Birmingham
Coventry
Dudley
Sandwell
Solihull
Walsall
Wolverhampton
Knowsley
Liverpool
St. Helens
Sefton
Wirral
Bolton
Bury
Manchester
Oldham
Rochdale
Salford
Stockport
Tameside
Trafford
Wigan
Barnsley
Doncaster
Rotherham
Sheffield
Bradford
Calderdale
Kirklees
Leeds
Wakefield
Gateshead
Newcastle-Upon-Tyne
North Tyneside
South Tyneside
Sunderland
Isles of Scilly
Avon
Bedfordshire
Berkshire
Buckinghamshire
Cambridgeshire
Cheshire
Cleveland
Cornwall
Cumbria
Derbyshire
Devon
Dorset
Durham
East Sussex
Essex
Gloucestershire
Hampshire
Hereford and Worcester
Hertfordshire
Humberside
Isle of Wight

£
35·42
46·28
46·02
39·21
41·87
41·43
48·55
41·91
44·42
35·02
32·14
59·39
n/a n/a 41·96
33·68
35·57
43·20
69·38
22·98
40·29
32·49
31·76
36·62
n/a 36·46
25·34
22·32
23·94
28·46
39·71
38·01
39·66
31·77
35·19
29·57
32·36
38·26
35·60
32·75
29·70
30·65
27·95
22·27
36·67
31·99
28·20
31·12
12·03
27·76
39·67
34·77
40·91
36·57
29·75
39·00
34·00
42·32
35·60
37·54
35·03
33·57
33·93
25·76
36·39
41·70
19·54
34·58
25·83
36·16
32·96
29·77
28·62
38·09
35·63
32·80
37·62

	£
Kent	31·98
Lancashire	31·83
Leicestershire	35·10
Lincolnshire	33·60
Norfolk	33·70
North Yorkshire	35·62
Northamptonshire	32·01
Northumberland	33·83
Nottinghamshire	36·22
Oxfordshire	40·05
Shropshire	26·62
Somerset	37·79
Staffordshire	39·09
Suffolk	35·73
Surrey	28·12
Warwickshire	33·68
West Sussex	37·04
Wiltshire	31·34
England	34·54

Notes:

1. Returns of expenditure for 1985-86 have not been received from Merton or Newham, and information for Walsall is not available in this form.
2. The figures are based on expenditure returns made by local authorities to the Department of the Environment and pupil number returns made to the Department of Education and Science.

Careers Education

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on careers education for 11 to 14-year-olds.

Mrs. Rumbold: The foundations of careers education must be laid from primary age onwards. Pupils need to develop over time an understanding of the world of work, its challenges and satisfactions, and the choices and decisions that lie ahead of them in their school careers and beyond.

The Government's thinking on careers education was set out more fully in "Working Together for a Better Future", copies of which are in the Library.

The publication of this document in April 1987 marked the launch by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science, for Employment and for Wales of their joint initiative on careers education and guidance, which affirms the key place of careers education in the school curriculum. Our commitment to careers education is reflected also in the eligibility of in-service teacher training under this heading for LEA training grants as a national priority.

Adult Education

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next intends meeting representatives of the teaching profession in further education to discuss the Government's proposals for adult education institutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no plans for such a meeting but is always ready to consider comments or representations from any of the teacher organisations.

Science Teachers

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the current level of recuitment of teachers of science subjects.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am glad to report that recruits to initial teacher training scien England and Wales in 1987 is above target and within that physics courses, where the need, have recruited to 99 per cent of their n

This is most encouraging and a firm indic positive measures taken by the Governme teacher supply are taking effect. We will co under close review the numbers of recruits subjects.

Scottish Universities

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary Education and Science what representa received opposing the proposed reductions central Government finance to be made universities in Scotland; and if he will mak

Mr. Jackson: We have received many r about the funding of the eight universities in application of the University Grants standard criteria has resulted in three of t increases in basic grant for 1987-88 abo Britain average.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State and Science if he will publish in the Offic 1988-89 capital allocations to each loc authority, indicating in each case the bid the allocation as a percentage of the bid in

Mr. Dunn: The allocation in respect expenditure for an individual authority does my right hon. Friend's view of what th capital spending on education should be. A use spending power from capital receip flexibilities in the capital control system to s allocations.

The information sought is given in the t

Local Education Authority	1988-89
	Allocation (£000's)	LEA's Plans (£000's)
Barking	1,639	10,457
Barnet	2,000	11,192
Bexley	1,234	1,758
Brent	2,532	6,758
Bromley	403	6,098
Croydon	1,595	7,149
Ealing	1,174	9,053
Enfield	1,318	9,504
Haringey	2,330	11,042
Harrow	1,643	3,862
Havering	692	1,962
Hillingdon	918	6,307
Hounslow	1,242	4,860
Kingston-upon-Thames	1,695	11,731
Merton	1,023	6,965
Newham	3,061	6,316
Redbridge	3,719	5,418
Richmond-upon-Thames	277	2,210
Sutton	627	6,063
Waltham Forest	5,498	7,120
Inner London	17,767	54,545

Local Education Authority	1988-89
	Allocation (£000's)	LEA's Plans (£000's)	Allocation as percentage of plans
Birmingham	4,407	11,472	38
Coventry	6,155	17,980	34
Dudley	1,555	7,773	20
Sandwell	767	3,710	21
Solihull	700	4,890	14
Walsall	907	2,210	41
Wolverhampton	1,849	7,823	24
Knowsley	1,136	4,815	24
Liverpool	2,323	7,692	30
St. Helens	1,211	5,685	21
Sefton	1,450	2,778	52
Wirral	2,330	6,391	36
Bolton	1,212	3,866	31
Bury	467	1,282	36
Manchester	9,269	34,860	27
Oldham	2,822	5,793	49
Rochdale	1,440	5,654	25
Salford	3,430	5,740	60
Stockport	2,878	3,891	74
Tameside	716	2,781	26
Trafford	471	2,637	18
Wigan	3,508	5,308	66
Barnsley	342	1,198	29
Doncaster	421	644	65
Rotherham	699	2,184	32
Sheffield	7,189	17,815	40
Bradford	10,457	33,604	31
Calderdale	3,619	5,486	66
Kirklees	1,486	9,078	16
Leeds	4,626	14,280	32
Wakefield	3,573	6,397	56
Gateshead	1,933	5,420	36
Newcastle upon Tyne	3,917	12,946	30
North Tyneside	2,129	4,587	46
South Tyneside	2,527	5,939	43
Sunderland	4,583	10,951	42
Isles of Scilly	39	405	10
Avon	4,277	10,993	39
Bedfordshire	1,630	5,660	29
Berkshire	5,567	12,603	44
Buckinghamshire	6,152	9,013	68
Cambridgeshire	4,314	13,719	31
Cheshire	4,829	10,812	45
Cleveland	3,673	7,104	52
Cornwall	6,413	9,744	66
Cumbria	4,858	6,530	74
Derbyshire	10,777	15,025	72
Devon	6,262	10,732	58
Dorset	4,052	8,459	48
Durham	1,415	5,451	26
East Sussex	9,815	25,962	38
Essex	20,317	37,264	55
Gloucestershire	5,302	9,864	54
Hampshire	16,550	38,619	43
Hereford and Worcester	2,892	9,032	32
Hertfordshire	5,525	18,887	29
Humberside	7,077	13,333	53
Isle of Wight	1,663	4,377	38
Kent	7,134	15,217	47
Lancashire	12,809	25,419	50
Leicestershire	7,419	15,643	47
Lincolnshire	3,897	8,891	44
Norfolk	4,021	7,938	51
North Yorkshire	3,937	7,297	54
Northamptonshire	3,190	8,571	37
Northumberland	955	3,554	27
Nottinghamshire	2,461	4,709	52
Oxfordshire	4,673	18,701	25
Salop	4,465	8,474	53
Somerset	2,764	6,501	43
Staffordshire	7,469	15,494	48
Suffolk	7,014	9,448	74
Surrey	4,859	15,468	31
Warwickshire	1,375	4,069	34
West Sussex	3,053	10,851	28
Wiltshire	3,215	6,867	47

Schools

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will indicate for each local education authority (a) the number of schools built prior to 1914, (b) what percentage of schools in each area this represents, and (c) what percentage of school places are provided in such schools in each area.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not held centrally.

Truancy

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the most recent figures for schooldays lost through truancy for (a) England and Wales, (b) inner London, (c) outer London, (d) Birmingham, (e) Greater Manchester, (f) Sheffield, (g) Liverpool, (h) Leeds and (i) Bradford; and if he will give them as a total and per head of school population.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not available centrally. Under the Education Acts, the responsibility for taking action on truancy rests with local education authorities. It is they who should ensure that attendance levels in their schools are monitored and that action is taken to keep them under control.

Higher Education

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the most recent figures for the number of young people going on into higher education for (a) England and Wales, (b) the Inner London education authority, (c) Croydon, (d) Kingston upon Thames, (e) Brent and (f) Sheffield; and if he will give each as a total and as a percentage of the total year group for each area.

Mr. Jackson: Information is not available in the form requested. The numbers of new full-value awards to students in the academic year 1984-85, including the rates per thousand of the age group, are as follows. Full-value awards are, in general, made to students on higher education courses.

New full-value awards to students in the academic year 1984-85

Local education authority	At universities		At public sector establishments		All new awards
	Number	[1]per 1000	Number	[1]per 1000	Number	[1]per 1000
England and Wales	64,573	79	106,262	130	170,835	208
Inner London	2,779	65	6,992	164	9,771	229
Croydon	512	104	457	93	969	197
Kingston upon Thames	245	122	281	140	526	262
Brent	374	92	1,173	290	1,547	382
Sheffield	585	53	1,179	107	1,764	160

[1]Per 1000 of the average of the 18 and 19 year old population in each local authority.

Teachers (Assaults)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the most recent figures for assaults on teaching staff committed by pupils for (a) England and Wales, (b) inner London and (c) outer London.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not available centrally. It is for local education authorities and governing bodies, as employers, to decide whether to collect information on assaults on teaching staff and to take appropriate action in response to such incidents.

National Curriculum

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects the national curriculum to be in operation in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is too early to set out a timetable. Decisions on the pace of the introduction of the national curriculum must take account of the advice contained in the report of the task group on assessment and testing, of the recommendations of the working groups for the foundation subjects and of the views of the curriculum councils and of those consulted as part of the statutory process. However, we intend, as a first step, to ask primary schools to ensure from September 1989 that pupils spend a reasonable time studying in the area of each foundation subject; and we expect the rest of the arrangements required by the national curriculum to be introduced incrementally, subject by subject, stage by stage, over a period of years, beginning in September 1989 with the introduction of attainment targets and programmes of study for maths and science for at least the first key stage of five to seven.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish figures indicating the number of teachers required to teach the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has already said that the national curriculum will be introduced broadly within the existing level of resources. On overall teacher numbers, we are already planning for the pupil-to-teacher ratio to fall further from its present lowest ever level of 17·3:1 to reach a level of 17:1 by 1989. It is too early to come to precise estimates of numbers of teachers required for each foundation subject. More teaching time will be needed for some subjects, and less for others. Some redirection of teaching effort and measures to boost teacher numbers in particular subjects may be required, but not necessarily an increase in teacher numbers overall.

Maintained Schools

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the funding for maintained schools for each county in England; and what is the allowance made in each case for (a) the provision of new schools to meet basic need and (b) the replacement of schools that have outlived their useful lives.

Mr. Dunn: I have assumed that my hon. Friend's question refers to capital funding and would refer him to the answer which my right hon. Friend gave my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) on 18 December 1987 at column 765. Allocations in respect of prescribed expenditure are not grants—they represent limits on the capital spending which local authorities may undertake. Authorities may supplement their allocations by using spending power from receipts and other flexibility under the capital control system. Since the allocations are unhypothecated, authorities may use them as they wish. Information on the funding which individual local authorities devote to specific categories of capital expenditure is not, therefore, available centrally.

Capital works at aided and special agreement schools are directly assisted by grant aid from my Department. It is not possible, however, to identify the specific sums devoted to the categories of work mentioned in the question because individual projects often meet a mixture of needs.

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many maintained schools have been replaced after reaching the end of their useful life in Dorset since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not available centrally.

Adult Literacy

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has undertaken, or has had made available to him, any information or research on the effects of price increases for books and periodicals on the level of adult literacy.

Mr. Dunn: I am not aware of any such information.

Inner London Education Authority

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the original and final expenditure levels underlying the precept limit of the Inner London education authority, showing its original and final precept limit and budgeted expenditure in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Original expenditure level £ million	Final expenditure level £ million	Proposed precept limit p	Final precept limit p	Final budget estimate £ million
1986-87	902	915	76·5	77·25	[3]971
1987-88	915	[1]—	[1]—	79·73	[3]1,025
1988-89	955	[2]970	80·56	[4]—	[4]—

[1] Not applicable in 1987-88. The precept limit for that year was determined by the formula in the Local Government Finance Act 19
[2] Expenditure level subject to a requirement under section 3*(b)* of the Rates Act concerning the use of £15 million.
[3] Total budget to be financed from balances, reserves and precept, as published in ILEA's capital and revenue estimates 1986-87 and 1987
[4] Not yet determined.

Council for Educational Technology

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to rationalise the operations of the Council for Educational Technology and the Microelectronics Education Support Unit.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I wrote to the chairman of both bodies on 7 January 1988 proposing that they be amalgamated to form a new National Council for Educational Technology from 1 April 1988. Copies of my letters have been placed in the Library.

Sickle Cell Anaemia

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research and at what cost is currently being undertaken into sickle cell anaemia; and if he will indicate the total cost of this.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council is the main Government agency for the direct support of biomedical research. In the financial year 1986-87 the council spent £341,000 on projects concentrating directly on sickle cell anaemia and a further £702,000 on projects which may have some relevance to this disease. The council is always willing to consider soundly-based scientific proposals in competition with other applications.

Research into sickle cell anaemia is also carried out in universities and medical schools using funds for teaching and research allocated on advice from the University Grants Committee. In addition, the medical charities may be funding relevant research. The Government are not in a position to influence directly the scale and nature of these research activities.

Teacher-Pupil Ratios

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the average teacher-to-pupil ratio in (a) nursery schools and classes and (b) primary schools in (i) England, (ii) Wales, (iii) Northern Ireland and (iv) by each local authority.

Mr. Dunn [holding answer 14 December 1987]: The average pupil-teacher ratio in nursery schools and classes and in primary schools in England, Wales and Northern Ireland in January 1987 was as follows:

	Nursery schools and classes	[1]Primary schools
England	23·4	21·9

[1] Includes nursery classes.

	[2]Nursery schools	[1]Primary schools
Wales	21·0	22·1
Northern Ireland	23·1	23·4

[1] Includes nursery classes.
[2] Information for nursery classes is not available.

Information for each local education authority England, Wales and Northern Ireland is as follows.

In England, some nursery classes are staffed solely nursery assistants. As such assistants are not taken i account when calculating pupil-teacher ratios (PTRs), ratios for some authorities will be relatively high.

Pupil-teacher ratios January 1987

	[1][3]Nursery schools and classes	[2]Prim sch
England
Barking	22·7	2
Barnet	21·4	2
Bexley	17·6	2
Brent	18·8	1
Bromley	20·3	2
Croydon	25·2	2
Ealing	19·4	1
Enfield	27·6	2
Haringey	17·0	1
Harrow	25·6	2
Havering	28·4	2
Hillingdon	25·2	2
Hounslow	23·7	1
Kingston upon Thames	22·9	2
Merton	24·6	2
Newham	21·9	2
Redbridge	21·0	2
Richmond upon Thames	21·7	2
Sutton	24·4	2
Waltham Forest	17·9	2
Inner London	20·4	1
Birmingham	24·4	2
Coventry	27·6	2
Dudley	36·4	2
Sandwell	25·5	2
Solihull	24·0	2
Walsall	80·2	2
Wolverhampton	24·6	2
Knowsley	25·5	2
Liverpool	24·7	2
St. Helens	23·8	2
Sefton	23·5	2
Wirral	21·6	2
Bolton	27·2	2
Bury	25·4	2
Manchester	23·6	2
Oldham	27·4	2
Rochdale	20·7	2
Salford	24·9	2
Stockport	23·6	2
Tameside	21·8	2
Trafford	25·6	2
Wigan	25·9	2
Barnsley	26·0	2

	[1,3] Nursery schools and classes	[2] Primary schools
Doncaster	27·3	21·5
Rotherham	26·9	21·2
Sheffield	22·1	19·8
Bradford	19·6	20·1
Calderdale	22·9	21·9
Kirklees	23·5	21·2
Leeds	28·9	20·4
Wakefield	26·2	21·2
Gateshead	25·7	19·3
Newcastle-upon-Tyne	20·6	19·6
North Tyneside	22·9	18·5
South Tyneside	21·5	20·5
Sunderland	21·1	21·8
Isles of Scilly[4]	0·0	12·8
Avon	22·0	24·1
Bedfordshire	24·1	22·0
Berkshire	20·3	23·6
Buckinghamshire	28·3	24·4
Cambridgeshire	22·0	23·2
Cheshire	21·4	23·2
Cleveland	26·4	22·1
Cornwall	23·4	23·2
Cumbria	19·9	21·2
Derbyshire	22·7	21·3
Devon	26·4	22·6
Dorset	24·0	22·9
Durham	19·9	22·1
East Sussex	20·2	22·4
Essex	22·7	23·1
Gloucestershire[4]	0·0	22·4
Hampshire	22·3	22·3
Hereford and Worcester	26·5	24·1
Hertfordshire	20·7	21·8
Humberside	24·1	21·4
Isle of Wight	24·3	23·5
Kent	21·1	24·0
Lancashire	20·8	23·6
Leicestershire	26·9	22·9
Lincolnshire	21·9	24·0
Norfolk	24·1	22·4
North Yorkshire	21·6	21·9
Northamptonshire	19·1	22·7
Northumberland	24·4	23·1
Nottinghamshire	27·4	20·7
Oxfordshire	25·5	23·0
Shropshire	21·8	21·3
Somerset	22·3	22·9
Staffordshire	39·8	22·9
Suffolk	23·5	22·5
Surrey	20·1	21·3
Warwickshire	23·0	21·7
West Sussex	25·1	22·8
Wiltshire	22·9	22·8
Wales
Clwyd	18·6	24·1
Dyfed	22·4	20·6
Gwent	22·8	21·9
Gwynedd[5]	0·0	20·4
Mid Glamorgan	20·4	23·3
Powys[5]	0·0	19·3
South Glamorgan	19·5	22·9
West Glamorgan	23·4	21·2
Northern Ireland
Belfast	23·2	21·9
Western	23·1	23·7
North-Eastern	22·2	23·3
South-Eastern	23·8	23·7
Southern	23·1	24·0

[1] A number of nursery classes in some local education authorities in England are staffed solely by nursery assistants.
[2] Includes nursery classes.
[3] Information for nursery classes is not available.
[4] These authorities have no nursery schools or classes.
[5] These authorities have no nursery schools.

Reception Classes

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average size of reception classes for rising fives for each local authority in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Northern Ireland; and what is the comparable average primary class size.

Mr. Dunn [holding answer 14 December 1987]: The information on reception classes for England and Wales is not collected centrally. The average size of reception classes and comparable primary classes for each local education authority in Northern Ireland in January 1987 is as follows.

Average class size[1] for reception classes and primary classes in Northern Ireland—January 1987

Education and Library Board	Reception classes	[2] Primary classes
Belfast	21·0	26·2
Western	14·0	26·5
North-Eastern	11·4	26·5
South-Eastern	13·5	26·8
Southern	12·5	25·8

[1] Classes as taught.
[2] Excludes nursery and reception classes.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is, by local education authority, the number of children, subject to a statement of special educational need under the Education Act 1981, attending mainstream schools, as a percentage of the total number of children with a statement in each local education authority, for each year from October 1984.

Mr. Dunn [holding answer 11 December 1987]: The number of pupils with statements of special educational need attending maintained, primary, middle and secondary schools as a percentage of all pupils with statements in each local education authority in England in 1985, 1986 and 1987 is as follows.

Pupils with statements in maintained Primary, Middle and Secondary schools as a percentage of pupils with statements in each LEA[1]

	January of each year
	1985	1986	1987
Barking	10·3	15·0	19·5
Barnet	15·0	18·9	21·5
Bexley	20·9	29·1	36·0
Brent	10·1	9·2	9·3
Bromley	26·0	38·2	46·1
Croydon	12·9	21·5	33·8
Ealing	19·4	9·2	11·2
Enfield	6·4	9·2	8·7
Haringey	17·2	21·0	12·3
Harrow	24·1	23·9	30·6
Havering	14·1	13·2	21·3
Hillingdon	9·1	10·4	9·9
Hounslow	0·0	12·7	22·5
Kingston upon Thames	17·5	16·3	18·5
Merton	14·7	7·7	7·3

	January of each year 1985	1986	1987
Newham	9·6	11·8	15·0
Redbridge	6·6	10·3	11·8
Richmond upon Thames	11·0	22·5	28·7
Sutton	9·9	16·6	17·8
Waltham Forest	14·6	12·6	12·7
Inner London	13·8	15·2	16·6
Birmingham	11·2	13·2	16·7
Coventry	7·9	9·6	13·5
Dudley	18·1	16·6	17·7
Sandwell	16·2	13·7	13·0
Solihull	8·7	13·3	18·8
Walsall	12·0	13·2	17·5
Wolverhampton	18·2	29·2	24·6
Knowsley	5·3	10·3	9·3
Liverpool	7·7	4·4	6·7
St. Helens	11·8	12·9	12·9
Sefton	5·2	10·9	18·4
Wirral	16·7	19·1	18·8
Bolton	2·4	6·6	11·2
Bury	18·3	28·4	40·5
Manchester	2·7	1·9	3·5
Oldham	11·5	13·6	13·6
Rochdale	10·8	17·3	19·2
Salford	2·6	3·3	5·1
Stockport	16·0	23·4	27·4
Tameside	27·0	26·2	29·7
Trafford	29·3	35·1	37·0
Wigan	12·3	9·5	8·4
Barnsley	12·3	22·1	30·5
Doncaster	0·2	2·5	5·0
Rotherham	20·3	23·3	21·3
Sheffield	14·5	21·1	26·6
Bradford	8·4	10·5	14·2
Calderdale	6·5	9·6	12·9
Kirklees	16·2	26·6	33·0
Leeds	16·9	23·8	27·7
Wakefield	1·2	2·4	5·1
Gateshead	13·8	18·8	12·8
Newcastle-Upon-Tyne	6·3	10·4	15·3
North Tyneside	9·6	11·9	16·1
South Tyneside	14·5	20·7	20·9
Sunderland	25·9	19·9	20·2
Isles of Scilly	0·0	0·0	0·0
Avon	58·2	56·8	49·7
Bedfordshire	24·2	13·8	11·6
Berkshire	31·1	23·5	18·3
Buckinghamshire	22·8	29·6	31·5
Cambridgeshire	25·3	26·1	29·5
Cheshire	42·7	47·1	49·9
Cleveland	16·6	24·0	23·6
Cornwall	66·3	69·0	74·1
Cumbria	44·6	51·4	59·2
Derbyshire	25·9	35·1	42·8
Devon	18·3	22·9	29·9
Dorset	14·3	20·5	27·1
Durham	14·8	20·4	23·0
East Sussex	7·2	4·8	6·6
Essex	12·6	19·9	27·2
Gloucestershire	10·9	11·8	4·1
Hampshire	10·1	8·0	12·6
Hereford and Worcester	4·8	16·1	18·6
Hertfordshire	20·9	24·2	30·1
Humberside	28·7	30·0	30·7
Isle of Wight	14·8	13·0	16·8
Kent	19·4	17·1	18·7
Lancashire	8·2	8·8	11·3
Leicestershire	26·5	24·3	24·2

	January of each year 1985	1986
Lincolnshire	29·9	28·2
Norfolk	33·2	33·2
North Yorkshire	14·8	17·3
Northamptonshire	21·0	23·3
Northumberland	10·7	18·8
Nottinghamshire	4·8	4·3
Oxfordshire	5·4	1·6
Shropshire	34·6	39·7
Somerset	29·7	34·4
Staffordshire	18·4	18·1
Suffolk	42·3	48·4
Surrey	8·6	12·3
Warwickshire	4·3	6·9
West Sussex	10·3	13·0
Wiltshire	49·3	51·4
England	18·7	20·9

[1] Excludes independent schools and nursery schools. Inclu pupils in hospital special schools.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Educ and Science what is, by local authority, the numb children attending mainstream schools who are subj a statement of special educational need under Education Act 1981 for each year from October 19

Mr. Dunn [holding answer 11 December 1987]: number of pupils with statements of special educat needs attending maintained primary, middle secondary schools in each local education authori England in January 1985, 1986 and 1987 is as follo

Pupils with statements in maintained primary, middle and secondary schools

	January of each year 1985	1986
Barking	32	43
Barnet	75	102
Bexley	94	152
Brent	60	50
Bromley	187	296
Croydon	91	157
Ealing	141	59
Enfield	34	48
Haringey	88	101
Harrow	100	99
Havering	74	65
Hillingdon	53	58
Hounslow	0	84
Kingston upon Thames	54	52
Merton	54	26
Newham	65	81
Redbridge	33	52
Richmond upon Thames	23	50
Sutton	34	64
Waltham Forest	146	129
Inner London	1,195	1,309
Birmingham	416	482
Coventry	86	101
Dudley	143	128
Sandwell	169	139
Solihull	40	59
Walsall	95	103
Wolverhampton	129	237
Knowsley	35	65
Liverpool	171	90
St. Helens	67	74
Sefton	37	82
Wirral	202	237

	January of each year 1985	1986	1987
Bolton	14	41	71
Bury	71	114	175
Manchester	57	38	71
Oldham	94	107	100
Rochdale	69	123	137
Salford	28	34	48
Stockport	156	239	281
Tameside	152	137	174
Trafford	181	226	249
Wigan	110	82	70
Barnsley	51	94	130
Doncaster	2	25	52
Rotherham	156	191	164
Sheffield	248	368	379
Bradford	118	143	190
Calderdale	23	38	53
Kirklees	131	246	331
Leeds	435	630	700
Wakefield	11	20	42
Gateshead	89	125	75
Newcastle-upon-Tyne	68	111	159
North Tyneside	61	75	106
South Tyneside	56	84	84
Sunderland	272	188	178
Isles of Scilly	0	0	0
Avon	3,289	3,071	2,213
Bedfordshire	370	188	151
Berkshire	859	572	399
Buckinghamshire	534	740	775
Cambridgeshire	494	484	517
Cheshire	1,426	1,599	1,733
Cleveland	385	565	540
Cornwall	575	696	869
Cumbria	509	619	773
Derbyshire	693	992	1,342
Devon	507	673	930
Dorset	211	331	481
Durham	201	287	317
East Sussex	139	92	129
Essex	505	827	1,188
Gloucestershire	169	185	58
Hampshire	472	373	607
Hereford and Worcester	76	292	350
Hertfordshire	750	872	993
Humberside	665	677	654
Isle of Wight	54	45	59
Kent	941	816	913
Lancashire	348	369	476
Leicestershire	509	450	419
Lincolnshire	552	502	482
Norfolk	496	491	768
North Yorkshire	242	289	385
Northamptonshire	428	452	477
Northumberland	76	143	176
Nottinghamshire	129	116	124
Oxfordshire	65	19	10
Shropshire	424	534	577
Somerset	373	447	626
Staffordshire	511	487	421
Suffolk	613	770	910
Surrey	285	414	506
Warwickshire	69	114	148
West Sussex	148	194	198
Wiltshire	819	907	997
England	26,787	30,047	33,277

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is, by local education authority, the number of children subject to a statement of special educational need under the Education Act 1981, for each year from October 1984.

Mr. Dunn [holding answer 11 December 1987]: The number of pupils with statements of special educational need attending maintained primary, middle and secondary schools and special schools in each local education authority in England in 1985, 1986 and 1987 is as follows.

Total pupils with statements in each LEA[1]

	January of each year 1985	1986	1987
Barking	311	286	272
Barnet	501	539	531
Bexley	449	522	525
Brent	597	542	492
Bromley	720	774	761
Croydon	704	730	835
Ealing	725	639	597
Enfield	528	521	503
Haringey	512	482	431
Harrow	415	415	396
Havering	524	493	484
Hillingdon	584	556	558
Hounslow	610	661	721
Kingston upon Thames	309	319	324
Merton	367	336	316
Newham	676	686	680
Redbridge	498	507	499
Richmond upon Thames	209	222	237
Sutton	343	385	394
Waltham Forest	997	1,025	893
Inner London	8,645	8,608	8,386
Birmingham	3,716	3,645	3,673
Coventry	1,089	1,057	1,052
Dudley	788	770	694
Sandwell	1,046	1,015	1,022
Solihull	459	445	410
Walsall	791	778	760
Wolverhampton	710	811	736
Knowsley	657	631	654
Liverpool	2,208	2,041	1,974
St. Helens	569	573	557
Sefton	709	749	803
Wirral	1,213	1,244	1,170
Bolton	594	625	632
Bury	387	401	432
Manchester	2,092	2,050	2,024
Oldham	816	787	735
Rochdale	639	713	713
Salford	1,061	1,022	940
Stockport	973	1,022	1,024
Tameside	562	523	585
Trafford	618	643	673
Wigan	892	862	838
Barnsley	416	425	426
Doncaster	946	1,019	1,035
Rotherham	767	820	770
Sheffield	1,707	1,740	1,427
Bradford	1,405	1,357	1,338
Calderdale	353	394	411
Kirklees	811	924	1,003
Leeds	2,571	2,646	2,526
Wakefield	890	835	816
Gateshead	645	666	588
Newcastle-upon-Tyne	1,084	1,065	1,036
North Tyneside	636	632	659
South Tyneside	387	405	402

	January of each year
	1985	1986	1987
Sunderland	1,049	947	882
Isles of Scilly	0	0	0
Avon	5,656	5,406	4,450
Bedfordshire	1,531	1,359	1,298
Berkshire	2,765	2,436	2,186
Buckinghamshire	2,337	2,497	2,459
Cambridgeshire	1,954	1,854	1,753
Cheshire	3,339	3,393	3,476
Cleveland	2,319	2,352	2,287
Cornwall	867	1,009	1,173
Cumbria	1,141	1,204	1,306
Derbyshire	2,675	2,824	3,135
Devon	2,765	2,938	3,107
Dorset	1,471	1,614	1,777
Durham	1,355	1,406	1,381
East Sussex	1,930	1,905	1,964
Essex	4,004	4,164	4,371
Gloucestershire	1,549	1,574	1,409
Hampshire	4,676	4,664	4,836
Hereford and Worcester	1,588	1,813	1,880
Hertfordshire	3,584	3,600	3,294
Humberside	2,314	2,257	2,129
Isle of Wight	365	346	352
Kent	4,857	4,763	4,882
Lancashire	4,241	4,188	4,207
Leicestershire	1,924	1,851	1,734
Lincolnshire	1,848	1,778	1,736
Norfolk	1,495	1,481	1,729
North Yorkshire	1,640	1,666	1,726
Northamptonshire	2,035	1,938	1,856
Northumberland	712	760	774
Nottinghamshire	2,705	2,695	2,597
Oxfordshire	1,213	1,158	1,040
Shropshire	1,224	1,345	1,353
Somerset	1,254	1,298	1,398
Staffordshire	2,783	2,684	2,576
Suffolk	1,448	1,591	1,708
Surrey	3,317	3,362	3,361
Warwickshire	1,608	1,646	1,633
West Sussex	1,430	1,489	1,522
Wiltshire	1,661	1,763	1,852
England	143,060	143,601	141,962

[1] Excludes independent schools and nursery schools. Includes all pupils in hospital special schools.

DEFENCE

Trident

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the number of warheads to be permitted on missiles on the Trident D-5 system, to be purchased from the United States, of agreements concluded on missile warhead ceilings, in the recent Washington summit between the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Only the United States and Soviet Governments are party to the START negotiations. The ceiling of 4,900 warheads, announced in the United States-Soviet joint statement issued following the recent summit talks in Washington, relates therefore only to United States and Soviet strategic ballistic systems. It has no implications for the modernisation of the United Kingdom's strategic deterrent.

RN SSIX Missile

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State f
(1) what is the cost of the RNSSIX missi
associated systems;
(2) if he will outline the purpose of the RNSS

Mr. Sainsbury: It is assumed that these que to the RN SSIXS satellite communications sy system is fitted in most Royal Navy submarines, Invincible class carriers and ashore, to facilitate teleprinter communications between the B
United States navies.
The cost of an installation depends configuration of the equipment fitted, but rang £270,000 and £400,000.

Sea Harrier

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State f
if he will outline the changes that will be ma
Harrier to update it to FRS 2 standard.

Mr. Sainsbury: Blue Vixen target acquis tracking radar will replace the Blue Fox advanced medium range air-to-air missiles will to complement Sidewinder missiles. These imp will allow look-down detection and engag airborne targets in all weather conditions.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State fo
when work will commence on full updating Harrier; and what is the cost of the programm

Mr. Sainsbury: Work on updating the Se started in 1983 at both British Aerospace and Fe incentive contract for the radar developm production was placed with Ferranti in that y similar contract for the aircraft will be concl
British Aerospace shortly.

RFA Argus

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State fo
what penalties have been paid to his Depa
Harland and Wolff for cost overrunning on Argus.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. MOD has a firm pric with Harland and Wolff.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State fo
what is the total cost of RFA Argus.

Mr. Sainsbury: The contract with Harland was placed following a competition. De commercially confidential.

Departmental Staff

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State fo
(1) how many black and Asian personnel are em
the executive branch of the Civil Service Department;
(2) how many black and Asian personnel are in the administrative branch of the Civil Servi Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: The voluntary survey of t origins of non-industrial civil servants is being c in six phases and the first three phases h completed. The MOD respondents to this voluntary survey included 15 black and 29 Asian people employed in the executive officer, higher executive officer, and senior executive officer grades, and 189 black and 157 Asian people employed in the administrative assistant and administrative officer grades.

Tucano

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes are currently being made to the Shorts Tucano aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: Several modifications are being carried out to ensure that the aircraft meets the required specification. This is not unusual in the early stages of delivery.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect delays on the Shorts Tucano aircraft have had on the cost of the project.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department intends to review its decision to order the Shorts Tucano aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why no Shorts Tucano aircraft have been delivered to the RAF.

Mr. Sainsbury: Deliveries cannot be made until the service release trials have progressed far enough to permit release to the RAF.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what British contracts have been awarded in Brazil to offset the purchase of Tucano.

Mr. Sainsbury: Some 90 per cent. of the value of the Tucano airframe order is in work to be carried out in the United Kingdom, mainly by Shorts. The balance does not warrant an offset undertaking.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many flying hours have been recorded for the Tucano aircraft accepted by his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: Three quarters of an hour.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer of 16 November 1987, Official Report, column 454, he can now give a date for the start of release for service trials on the Shorts Tucano.

Mr. Sainsbury: The first Tucano aircraft started its release to service programme on 8 December 1987, and the second aircraft on 14 December 1987.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the value of strategic defence initiative contracts awarded in the United Kingdom to date.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 8 December 1987 at column 438.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom academic institutions are currently involved in strategic defence initiative research.

Mr. Sainsbury: Seventeen.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defe how many United Kingdom companies have b awarded strategic defence initiative contracts to date.

Mr. Sainsbury: Thirty-eight.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defe what recent dicussions he has had with his United Sta counterpart concerning strategic defence initia contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: None recently, but there have b several ministerial and senior official contacts with United States Department of Defence in recent months United Kingdom participation in the United Sta strategic defence initiative research programme.

SDIPO

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defe how many civilian industrial consultants are curre employed in the SDIPO.

Mr. Sainsbury: Four, all of whom have severed th relationship with their respective companies for duration of their secondment.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defe how many civilian industrial consultants have b employed in SDIPO since the office was established.

Mr. Sainsbury: Four.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defe what has been the total cost of running the SDIPO off

Mr. Sainsbury: Since its formation in December 19 approximately £1 million.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defe how many civil servants are currently employed in SDIPO.

Mr. Sainsbury: Twenty-three, including three Uni Kingdom-based civilians and four locally emplo civilians located in the United States.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defe how many United States personnel are currently emplo or attached to the SDIPO.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defe if he will list the companies from which indust consultants to the SDIPO have been provided.

Mr. Sainsbury: British Aerospace plc, Thorn EM Ferranti plc and Hunting Engineering, each of which h provided one consultant on secondment for a period two years.

Faslane and Coulport

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defe (1) what is the latest estimate of the eventual total cost the expansion work at Faslane and Coulport;

(2) what proportion of the cost of expansion work the Clyde submarine base is allocated to the Trid budget;

(3) what has been the total cost of construction wo at Faslane and Coulport from 1962 to 1987; and wha the estimated cost from 1987 to 1995.

Mr. Freeman: The total cost, excluding contingenc and PSA resource costs, of the development at the Cly submarine base, which includes Faslane and Coulport, is estimated at some £660 million; of this, some £350 million is attributable to the Trident programme. About £580 million is expected to be spent between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1995. I regret that it would involve disproportionate effort to identify expenditure back to 1962.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the number of civilian jobs at the bases at Faslane and Coulport currently held by individuals residing in Dumbarton district.

Mr. Sainsbury: Approximately 3,100.

Rating Reform

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people he estimates will pay the community charge as from RNAD Coulport and Faslane.

Mr. Freeman: Around 7,160 service and civilian personnel over the age of 18 are employed or based at Faslane and Coulport. All these personnel, and adult members of their families, will be liable to pay the community charge in respect of their sole or main residence.

Patriot Missile System

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department intends to purchase the Patriot missile system.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are no plans to do so.

Interceptor Aircraft

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many interceptor aircraft are maintained on quick reaction alert at security state Bikini Black.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Details of forces assigned to quick reaction alert duties are classified.

Ground-launched Missile Systems

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Royal Air Force ground-launched missile systems are capable of engaging high targets above 70,000 ft.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Details of the operational capabilities of military equipment are, in general, classified. However, the Bloodhound ground-to-air missile system is capable of engaging targets at high altitude.

Air Defence Region (Interceptions)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions Tornado F3 aircraft have intercepted Soviet military aircraft that have penetrated the United Kingdom's air defence region.

Mr. Ian Stewart: None, as yet.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any Backfire, Blinder or Fencer aircraft have been detected or intercepted in the United Kingdom air defence region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our practice to give details of penetrations into the United Kingdom air defence region by Soviet military aircraft, or of their i Royal Air Force aircraft. However, I would Member to the reply I gave to the hon. M Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) on 14 Dec column 412.

Radar

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of Sta (1) whether any research into over-the-ho currently taking place at RSRE Malvern; make a statement;

(2) what funding is currently being pr Department for over-the-horizon radar res

(3) what assessment he has made of the a the-horizon radar to detect low-flying aircr

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland on 8 December 1987 at column 156. RSR involved with these studies and, by the beg financial year, some £1 million (at 1987-8 been spent by the United Kingdom.

Bloodhound

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of Stat what is the total cost of the Bloodhound mi

Mr. Sainsbury: As my right hon. Friend for Tonbridge and Malling (Mr. Stanley) the of State for the Armed Forces, informed the for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNa April 1987 at column 590, the Bloodhound is expected to remain in service until the Further improvements to the system to maintain its capability against the increasin under consideration, but no decisions have ye Aircraft (Maximum Operating Altit

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State what is the maximum operating altitude of F3, Phantom F4J-FG1-FGR2 and Lightning

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested Member is classified.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State what information he has about the estimate operating altitudes of Bison, Badger, Bea Blinder, Fencer, Foxhound and Foxbat aircr

Mr. Ian Stewart: Bison, Badger, Bear, Back and Fencer aircraft all have estimated maximu altitudes of between 40,000 and 50,000 ft. The Foxhound are capable of operating above 60,

Arms Exports

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State f (1) what is his policy towards the export countries with a record of human rights abuse will make a statement;

(2) what steps will be taken to ensure that equipment on display at the British Army exhibition at Aldershot in June 1988 is s otherwise reaches, countries with records of hu abuses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our policy is not to allow th defence equipment likely to be used for internal or to violate human rights. All exports of defence equipment are subject to strict licensing procedures. In considering applications for licences we look at each on its merits, and the human rights record of the country concerned would be one fact taken into account when deciding whether or not to grant a licence.

Contracts Organisation (Leeds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the undertaking given in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates" on 1 July 1986, that the Leeds branch of the contracts organisation would not be closed, remains his policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add at present to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Sir E. Griffiths) on 11 December 1987 at column 310.

Defence Budget

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the 1987-88 defence budget is devoted to non-military defence spending.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the Supply Estimates 1987-88, class 1, Ministry of Defence, and to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987", for details of defence spending. Non-military defence spending is not a concept that can be readily defined.

Air Defence Ground Environment

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost of the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment to date.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is estimated that expenditure on the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment to the end of the current financial year will be £386 million (at 1987-88 prices) for the command and control system, new radars and communications. In addition, £44 million (at outturn prices) has been spent on associated works services. The contracts for the system are at fixed prices and over half the overall cost is being recovered from NATO.

Trident

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what sterling-dollar exchange rate the purchase of the Trident missile system will be undertaken.

Mr. Sainsbury: The sterling-dollar exchange rates at which the purchase of the Trident missile system will be undertaken will be those applicable at the time the MOD purchases United States dollars for overseas payments.

Earth Tremor (South-West Scotland)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the force and nature of the earth tremor which affected parts of south-west Scotland on 17 November.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The tremor referred to was detected by a NERC British Geological Survey seismograph at 00.09 on 18 November. The tremor was not an earthquake or other seismic event in the ground or underwater, but was almost cer sonic boom in the air. Such events are throughout Britain and are usually caused by However, on this occasion the available data consistent with an aircraft sonic boom and, possible sighting of a fireball at about 00.17 in R the most probable interpretation is that the trer caused by a supersonic meteor in the atmosphere

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor Exchequer if he will estimate (a) on the basis of income levels, allowances and higher rate thresho (b) on the basis of forecast 1988-89 income level 1988-89 allowances and higher rate thresholds, a statutory indexation therefore in the 1988 Budget year cost of (i) abolishing the 60 per cent. rate so top rate is 55 per cent., (ii) abolishing the 55 an cent. rates so that the top rate is 50 per ce abolishing the 50, 55 and 60 per cent. rates so tha rate is 45 per cent., (iv) abolishing the 45, 50, 55 per cent. rates so that the top rate is 40 per cent., abolishing all the higher rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue costs year at 1987-88 and 1988-89 income levels of ab the higher rates of income tax are given in the ta

	Direct revenue costs
Top rate of tax (per cent.)	at 1987-88 levels of income	at forec 1988-89 le of inco
55	190
50	450
45	850	1,
40	1,400	1,
27	3,250	3,

The costs at 1988-89 levels of income assume inc of the current income tax bands and allowances to levels as in table 4.1 of the 1987 Autumn Statem estimates assume that the wife's earnings election where it is beneficial, but no other allowance is m possible changes in taxpayers' behaviour.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor Exchequer how many people owed tax inter penalties as a result of Inland Revenue investigati each year since 1979; and what proportion of th income tax at (a) basic rate only, (b) above basic (c) above 60 per cent. in each year.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 D 1987]: I regret that the information is not availab form requested.

Information is available about the number o Revenue investigations and the yield, but the stati not held in a form that would permit the extractio number of people in arrears or the distribution number as between the different rates of liability

Taxation (Conscientious Objectors)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exch he will make a statement about the Inland Re current policy towards the prosecution of individuals who withhold or divert tax on the grounds of a conscientious objection to paying for military expenditure through their taxes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue has a number of options of civil, not criminal, action where individuals refuse to pay tax. The type of action taken is decided on the basis of the particular circumstances of each case. However, withholding or attempting to divert on the grounds of conscientious objection, of whatever type, is not a factor in deciding whether to take a particular action.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each year since 1980 (a) the number of people who have been prosecuted for withholding or diverting tax on the grounds of a conscientious objection to paying for military expenditure through their taxes and (b) the number of individuals whose prosecution for withholding or diverting tax on the grounds of a conscientious objection to paying for military expenditure through their taxes has resulted in (i) a warrant of execution against goods, (ii) garnishee proceedings, (iii) attachment of earnings orders, (iv) bankruptcy and (v) a prison sentence.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue does not take criminal prosecutions in these circumstances but uses civil actions of distraint or through the courts.

I regret that the detailed information about such actions is not readily available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from trade associations and the Confederation of British Industry regarding the implications of the current case in the European Court of Justice on zero-rating; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Several representations have been received from interested parties including trade associations.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the relative effect of levying value added tax on gas, electricity, water and sewerage on larger firms which are registered for value added tax and on smaller firms which are exempt because of their turnover.

Mr. Lilley: If VAT were levied on these goods and services, large firms which are registered for VAT would be able to recover any tax incurred on purchases relating to their taxable activities through the normal input tax credit mechanism. Firms not registered for VAT would have to bear the tax in the same way as they currently bear the VAT incurred on their taxable purchases.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement setting out information available to him on the nature of the industrial and commercial buildings which the Advocate General argued should be levied for value added tax in his advice to the European Court of Justice of 2 December; and if buildings for local authorities, public bodies and charities were covered by his advice.

Mr. Lilley: The Advocate General's be that, while the zero-rating for the cons and private housing is permissible, that buildings and civil engineering works is

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the C Exchequer if he has now received fro Court of Justice its decision on the prop Commission that the United Kingdom s to levy value added tax on spectacles; an a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The European Court of J delivered its judgment; it is now expected year.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Ch Exchequer (1) what reduction there has b of value added tax under section 20 of Tax Act 1983 to local government bodi privatisation of local authority services, years;

(2) what sum of value added tax Treasury is attributable to privatis government services; and what is the for of the Local Government Bill.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that information is a sufficient level of detail to identif privatisation on refunds of value ad section 20.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the C Exchequer (1) what revenue would be rai the introduction of value added tax at travel fares;

(2) what is his estimate of the add household on transport costs of imposing at 15 per cent. on travel fares;

(3) what is his estimate of the annual of imposing value added tax on travel fa

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 Decem estimated full year net revenue yield imposing value added tax at 15 per cent. £575 million.

The average additional cost per househ costs of imposing value added tax at transport fares is estimated to be about 1987.

Most businesses would be able to re added tax on fares and so would face no traders who choose not to register or those supplies would face any increase in costs. to give an estimate but the figure is tho small.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Ch Exchequer what additional revenue wou 1988-89 by increasing the rate of value ad per cent, (b) 17 per cent, (c) 17·5 per cent, and (e) 19 per cent.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 Decem estimated net additional revenue would b

Rate of value added tax per cent.	£ m
16·0
17·0

Rate of value added tax per cent.	£ million
17·5	2,320
18·0	2,770
19·0	3,655

Britoil

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions his Department had with BP concerning that company's intention to purchase shares in Britoil, prior to 8 December.

Mr. Norman Lamont: None.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions his Department has had with private companies about the Government's policy towards using their special rights preference share in Britoil; and on what dates such discussions took place.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Ministers and officials have frequent contacts with private companies. It is not usual practice to give details of the timing or subject matter of such meetings.

The Government have publicly stated that in present circumstances they intend to use its special share in Britoil to prevent any bidder from gaining control of the Britoil board.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he was first informed of the intention of the Atlantic Richfield Company of Los Angeles to purchase shares in Britoil.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government first learnt of the Atlantic Richfield Company's intention of purchasing shares in Britoil on Friday 11 December when a press release was issued.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he was first informed of BP's intention to purchase shares in Britoil.

Mr. Norman Lamont: BP informed the Government of its intention to purchase shares in Britoil on Tuesday 8 December.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much he now estimates that public expenditure has risen in real terms since 1978-79, including his latest plans for 1988-89.

Mr. Major: On the basis of the plans for 1988-89 published in the Autumn Statement, the real increase in general Government expenditure, excluding privatisation proceeds, between 1978-79 and 1988-89 is expected to be 18·6 per cent., representing an average annual increase of 1·7 per cent.

North-East Region

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the annual figure for Government subventions, grants and expenditures to the economy of the north-east region of England, indicating the absolute figures, the north-east region contribution and the per capita figure for the population of the United Kingdom as a whole; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Apart from expenditure responsibility of the territorial Departments expenditure is planned on a national basis possible to identify separately expenditure particular area.

Management Consultants

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Ex information he has on the number of external consultants employed by Her Majesty's Gove terms of reference and the cost per Department.

Mr. Brooke: Comprehensive informa number of external management consultants Her Majesty's Government, their terms of the cost per Government Department is centrally and could be provided only at dis cost.

Coulport and Faslane

Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of t what has been the amount paid to the local lieu of rates for RNAD Coulport and Faslan (a) 1983-84, (b) 1984-85 and (c) 1986-87.

Mr. Major: The amounts paid were as fo

	1983-84 £	1984-85 £
RNAD Coulport	813,584	902,756
Clyde Submarine Base, Faslane	1,510,294	1,616,149

YTS (Civil Service)

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Chancellor of t how many YTS trainees are engaged in the tr for the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to reply. None.

Privatisation (Special Shares)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chan Exchequer which special shares held by H Government in privatised companies expire (b) 1989 and (c) 1990.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 1987]: The articles of association of th concerned give the definitive statement restrictions attaching to the Government's However, the redemption of such shares is n request of the special shareholder, with exceptions:

(i) Jaguar: the company will redeem th on 31 December 1990;

(ii) Enterprise Oil: the company will rede share on 31 December 1988, unless arise in which the special shareholder elect for a later date;

(iii) Amersham International: the special be redeemed earlier than 31 March

Tax Receipts

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chan Exchequer if he will list (a) the capital gain and (b) the corporation tax receipts, for each of the Inland Revenue districts in Greater London for 1979 and for the last financial year available, in current and in constant prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 December 1987]: I regret that this information is not centrally available.

Government Inco

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask th Exchequer how much income tax, revenue and privatisation proce Government have received in each using 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer Following is the information:

1986-87 prices[1]

	Income tax	VAT receipts	North sea revenues	Privatisati proce
1978-79	36·5	9·4	0·8
1979-80	34·3	13·6	3·9	0
1980-81	34·1	15·4	5·3	0
1981-82	36·7	15·2	8·3	0
1982-83	36·2	16·5	9·3	0
1983-84	35·5	17·4	10·0	1
1984-85	35·5	20·2	13·1	2
1985-86	36·4	19·9	11·7	2
1986-87	38·5	21·4	4·8	4

[1] Revalued at 1986-87 prices using GDP deflator.

COI (Photographic Library)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for the photographic library of the Central Office of Information; and if they involve the destruction of any part of the collection.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 17 December 1987]: From April 1988 the photographic services of the Central Office of Information, including the library function, are to be reorganised. The aim will be to improve the service to Government Departments, who are the main customers of the COI. The existing photographic library will be closed: it is not an archive, but the Public Record Office and other appropriate libraries are being consulted about original material which will be offered to various specialist collections for safe keeping.

Taxation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give estimates for the direct and indirect revenue yield from increases in income tax of 1 per cent., 2 per cent., 3 per cent., 4 per cent., 5 per cent. and 6 per cent., taking into account current economic growth and unemployment figures.

Mr. Lamont [holding answer 16 December 1987]: The direct revenue effect of increasing the basic rate of income tax by 1p in the pound is forecast at £1·25 billion in 1988-89 and £1·60 billion in 1989-90, as published in table 4·5 of the Autumn Statement 1987. Direct effects of further increases in the basic rate of tax are proportionately greater. These estimates make no allowance for possible changes in taxpayers' behaviour.

Estimates of further, second round effects would require simulations on an economic model and would depend on the precise assumptions chosen.

ENVIRONMEN

Bed and Breakfast Accor

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Sec Environment what information he children in the following inclusive a parent or parents in bed and break (a) birth to three years, (b) four to seven years, (d) eight to 11 years, (f) 15 and 16 years; and if he will n

Mrs. Roe: At 30 September 198 households temporarily placed in accommodation by English local a homelessness provisions of the Information on the number of households is not collected by the D

Rating Reform

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secreta Environment what representations he exemption from the community provided for political refugees; and statement.

Mr. Howard: We have received seeking exemptions. We have, representations that the community be used to track down political therefore, decided to take step confidentiality of people at risk, to en for the community charge without names and addresses.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secreta Environment why, pursuant to his ans Official Report, columns 275-76, a co effort is involved in producing the in in respect of the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: Estimates of gainers using a complex computer-based tax is constructed to produce results which are net of rebates since this is the better measure of the impact of our proposals on households. To produce figures which are gross of rebates would require parts of the computer model and the associated data handling routines to be rewritten and tested for consistency.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if information relating to an adult's date of birth will be used in any personal identification system for the purposes of the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: The Local Government Finance Bill provides that each registration officer shall compile and maintain a register of the persons in his area who are subject to the community charge. The Bill does not provide for any personal identification system based on dates of birth. It will be for charging authorities to decide how they wish to identify individual accounts.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) on 2 December, Official Report, column 619, he will state under what specific powers poll tax registration officers will be required to omit from the community charge register the names and addresses of people who are in fear of physical injury.

Mr. Howard: In making regulations under paragraph 14(1)(a) of schedule 1 to the Local Government Finance Bill, my right hon. Friend will provide that the extract of prescribed information taken from the community charge register should exclude the names and, where appropriate, the addresses of people living in danger of physical injury.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make available consultation papers and draft regulations on poll tax rebates in advance of the Committee stage of the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked to reply.

Discussions with the local authority associations on the details of the rebate scheme have already started, and we hope to send the associations draft regulations covering a substantial part of the provisions needed for the community charge rebate scheme before the end of this month.

A precise timetable for the discussion of particular provisions within the Local Government Finance Bill in Committee has not been fixed, but it is unlikely that the rebate provisions will be considered before then.

Urban Development Corporation (Leeds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department will publish a definitive map of the mini urban development corporation proposed for Leeds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: When the order designating the UDC is laid before Parliament, probably in the spring.

Nitrate Pollution

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take to ascertain links between stomach cancers and (a) nitrate pollution in drinking water and (b) nitrite pollution in drinking water.

Mr. Moynihan: The many studies into stomach cancer and nitrate concentrations in water have not established any links in so far as nitrate is converted t body. Furthermore, Government medical advised that nitrate and nitrite concentra water supplies are not a health risk. This confirmed by independent medical experts

Water Industry

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary Environment who will be responsible for t compulsory installation of water meters; will be borne by (a) landlords, (b) tena occupiers and (d) water public limited co

Mr. Moynihan: Paragraph 5 of schedule Utility Transfers and Water Charges Bill undertakers to meet the cost of compulsor meters in existing properties, but the Go agreed in principle to contribute up to 50 cost of the limited number of compulsory now being planned by the water industry.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary Environment what steps will be taken to reg of metered water by landlords to tena safeguards will be imposed; and by whom

Mr. Moynihan: If controls are found t my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State Industry already has power to make reg section 26 of the Consumer Protection Act the resale of water, however it is charge similar to those already proposed for the re electricity. Enforcement would be by tra officers.

Poll Tax Registers

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of Environment if he proposes to keep a nati tax registers for England under the powe under schedule 1 to the Local Governmen

Mr. Howard: No.

Planning Appeals

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary Environment if he will list, for each year s many occasions decisions made by inspec by him to determine planning appeals have or varied by Ministers in his Department.

Mr. Ridley: When inspectors are determine planning appeals their decision my behalf and I have no power to overrul

In the few cases where, in accordance policy, jurisdiction for the appeal is as Secretary of State the inspector makes a rec not the decision. Most such recomm accepted, as the following table shows:

Year	Total number of appeals decided	Appeals recovered Secretary: Number decided after inquiry	N co
1980	13,130	845
1981	14,451	919

Year	Total number of appeals decided	Appeals recovered for decision by Secretary of State: Number decided after inquiry	Appeals recovered for decision by Secretary of State: Number of decisions contrary to inspectors recommendation
1982	12,915	596	20
1983	11,221	370	13
1984	11,643	253	16
1985	14,639	289	23
1986	14,823	383	23
1987[1]	12,614	329	17

[1] January-September.

Local Government Finance Bill

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many copies of the fact sheets relating to the Local Government Finance Bill were made available to right hon. and hon. Members at the time of the Bill's publication;

(2) how many copies of the questions and answers paper published in conjunction with the Local Government Finance Bill were made available to (a) right hon. and hon. Members and (b) to others;

(3) how many copies of the fact sheets relating to the Local Government Finance Bill were made available, and to whom.

Mr. Howard: The fact sheets and question and answer briefing referred to by the hon. Member were produced as part of a press pack for use by the media on introduction of the Local Government Finance Bill. Three hundred copies were sent to national and local media and about 100 copies were made available at the press conference itself. Copies were also provided to the Library of the House.

Other copies of the material have been provided to individuals on request, but no record has been kept of the numbers or to whom they have been sent.

Local Authority Finance

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority, on a ranked and class basis, the total population used in caculating each authority's expected grant entitlement for 1988-89 and 1987-88, giving the percentage change between the two years.

Mr. Ridley: The information is as follows:

Percentage change in population for grant purposes between 1987-88 1st Supplementary Report and 1988-89 settlement

	1987-88 population for grant purposes	1988-89 population for grant purposes	Percentage change	Rank in class
Shire counties
Avon	942,000	946,624	0·5	20
Bedfordshire	516,700	520,959	0·8	15
Berkshire	724,000	734,073	1·4	6
Buckinghamshire	601,600	612,863	1·9	2
Cambridgeshire	621,400	635,205	2·2	1
Cheshire	942,400	946,504	0·4	25
Cleveland	559,900	557,580	−0·4	39
Cornwall	441,900	446,231	1·0	14
Cumbria	484,400	486,603	0·5	24
Derbyshire	912,400	916,834	0·5	22
Devon	988,000	998,988	1·1	11
Dorset	627,700	638,215	1·7	3
Durham	600,900	599,553	−0·2	37
East Sussex	682,400	689,695	1·1	12
Essex	1,504,700	1,512,083	0·5	21
Gloucestershire	511,400	517,105	1·1	10
Hampshire	1,523,900	1,527,666	0·2	29
Hereford and Worcester	650,800	654,504	0·6	19
Hertfordshire	986,100	985,723	−0·0	35
Humberside	850,000	848,504	−0·2	36
Isle of Wight	122,900	124,555	1·3	7
Kent	1,495,200	1,500,927	0·4	27
Lancashire	1,380,300	1,380,727	0·0	34
Leicestershire	872,200	874,953	0·3	28
Lincolnshire	560,300	567,253	1·2	8
Norfolk	719,100	727,817	1·2	9
Northamptonshire	546,100	554,441	1·5	5
Northumberland	300,600	301,020	0·1	31
North Yorkshire	696,600	699,786	0·5	23
Nottinghamshire	1,005,900	1,006,437	0·1	33
Oxfordshire	565,400	574,703	1·6	4
Shropshire	390,300	392,685	0·6	18
Somerset	447,000	448,888	0·4	26
Staffordshire	1,020,400	1,020,991	0·1	32
Suffolk	624,200	628,578	0·7	17

	1987-88 population for grant purposes	1988-89 population for grant purposes	Percentage change	Rank in class
Surrey	1,013,700	1,011,424	−0·2	38
Warwickshire	479,700	480,744	0·2	30
West Sussex	687,700	694,722	1·0	13
Wiltshire	540,800	545,225	0·8	16
Greater London
City of London	5,021	4,847	−3·5	1
Camden	180,400	183,290	1·6	2
Greenwich	216,200	217,841	0·8	3
Hackney	187,500	187,074	−0·2	10
Hammersmith and Fulham	150,900	150,784	−0·1	7
Islington	167,900	167,969	0·0	6
Kensington and Chelsea	137,600	137,430	−0·1	8
Lambeth	243,500	245,000	0·6	4
Lewisham	232,400	231,981	−0·2	9
Southwark	215,900	216,043	0·1	5
Tower Hamlets	147,100	152,761	3·8	1
Wandsworth	258,800	257,144	0·6	11
Westminster	179,100	176,138	−1·7	12
Barking and Dagenham	148,600	148,113	−0·3	16
Barnet	301,200	304,630	1·1	1
Bexley	218,500	220,130	0·7	3
Brent	254,900	255,689	0·3	4
Bromley	297,900	297,024	−0·3	15
Croydon	319,000	319,283	0·1	9
Ealing	292,400	295,528	1·1	2
Enfield	265,000	265,446	0·2	7
Haringey	197,200	196,066	−0·6	19
Harrow	201,700	201,893	0·1	8
Havering	238,500	238,073	−0·2	14
Hillingdon	232,300	231,965	−0·1	12
Hounslow	195,600	194,857	−0·4	17
Kingston-upon-Thames	133,900	133,765	−0·1	11
Merton	164,500	164,794	0·2	6
Newham	208,600	205,196	−1·6	20
Redbridge	228,000	227,920	−0·0	10
Richmond-upon-Thames	161,500	161,969	0·3	5
Sutton	169,600	168,713	−0·5	18
Waltham Forest	216,200	215,834	−0·2	13
ILEA	2,322,321	2,328,302	0·3	1
London Fire & CD Authority	6,767,500	6,775,190	0·1	1
Metropolitan Police	7,237,116	7,242,746	0·1	1
Greater Manchester
Bolton	261,200	261,579	0·1	5
Bury	173,300	172,581	−0·4	24
Manchester	451,100	451,437	0·1	7
Oldham	219,700	220,027	0·1	4
Rochdale	206,100	206,581	0·2	3
Salford	240,000	239,277	−0·3	19
Stockport	291,200	289,886	−0·5	25
Tameside	215,500	215,221	−0·1	14
Trafford	217,800	216,303	−0·7	32
Wigan	306,700	306,590	0·0	10
Merseyside
Knowsley	166,300	163,822	−1·5	35
Liverpool	491,500	483,021	−1·7	36
St. Helens	188,300	187,949	−0·2	15
Sefton	298,400	298,030	−0·1	13
Wirral	336,500	334,799	−0·5	29
South Yorkshire
Barnsley	223,300	222,226	−0·5	27
Doncaster	288,500	289,275	0·3	2
Rotherham	252,700	252,074	−0·2	16
Sheffield	538,700	534,324	−0·8	34

	1987-88 population for grant purposes	1988-89 population for grant purposes	Percentage change	Rank in class
Tyne and Wear
Gateshead	208,100	207,297	−0·4	22
Newcastle upon Tyne	282,200	281,375	−0·3	18
North Tyneside	193,200	192,252	−0·5	28
South Tyneside	157,600	156,857	−0·5	26
Sunderland	298,800	297,705	−0·4	21
West Midlands
Birmingham	1,007,500	1,004,097	−0·3	20
Coventry	312,200	310,375	−0·6	31
Dudley	300,800	300,897	0·0	9
Sandwell	303,300	301,124	−0·7	33
Solihull	201,900	202,154	0·1	6
Walsall	262,900	261,820	−0·4	23
Wolverhampton	253,200	251,852	−0·5	30
West Yorkshire
Bradford	463,500	463,072	−0·1	12
Calderdale	191,700	193,110	0·7	1
Kirklees	376,900	376,634	−0·1	11
Leeds	710,500	710,948	0·1	8
Wakefield	310,200	309,332	−0·3	17

Percentage change for grant purposes between 1987-88 1st supplementary report and 1988-89 settlement

	1987-88 population for grant purposes	1988-89 population for grant purposes	Percentage change	Rank in class
Greater Manchester Police Authority	2,582,600	2,579,482	−0·1	2
Merseyside Police Authority	1,481,000	1,467,621	−0·9	6
South Yorkshire Police Authority	1,303,200	1,297,899	−0·4	5
Northumbria Police Authority	1,440,500	1,436,506	−0·3	3
West Midlands Police Authority	2,641,800	2,632,319	−0·4	4
West Yorkshire Police Authority	2,052,800	2,053,096	0·0	1
Greater Manchester Fire and CD Authority	2,582,600	2,579,482	−0·1	2
Merseyside Fire and CD Authority	1,481,000	1,467,621	−0·9	6
South Yorkshire Fire and CD Authority	1,303,200	1,297,899	−0·4	5
Tyne and Wear Fire and CD Authority	1,139,900	1,135,486	−0·4	4
West Midlands Fire and CD Authority	2,641,800	2,632,319	−0·4	3
West Yorkshire Fire and CD Authority	2,052,800	2,053,096	0·0	1
Greater Manchester Transport Authority	2,582,600	2,579,482	−0·1	2
Merseyside Transport Authority	1,481,000	1,467,621	−0·9	6
South Yorkshire Transport Authority	1,303,200	1,297,899	−0·4	5
Tyne and Wear Transport Authority	1,139,900	1,135,486	−0·4	4
West Midlands Transport Authority	2,641,800	2,632,319	−0·4	3
West Yorkshire Transport Authority	2,052,800	2,053,096	0·0	1

Percentage change in population for grant purposes between 1987-88 1st supplementary report and 1988-89 settlement

	1987-88 population for grant purposes	1988-89 population for grant purposes	percentage change	Rank in class
Avon
Bath	84,300	84,422	0·1	188
Bristol	393,800	391,497	−0·6	265
Kingswood	87,900	88,547	0·7	128
Northavon	124,100	126,153	1·7	43
Wansdyke	78,000	78,206	0·3	171
Woodspring	173,900	177,799	2·2	21
Bedfordshire
North Bedfordshire	133,900	134,868	0·7	129
Luton	166,100	166,339	0·1	189
Mid Bedfordshire	108,100	110,764	2·5	14
South Bedfordshire	108,600	108,988	0·4	161
Berkshire
Bracknell	90,700	93,206	2·8	9
Newbury	130,600	134,072	2·7	10

	1987-88 population for grant purposes	1988-89 population for grant purposes	percentage change	Rank in class
Reading	135,300	134,984	−0·2	235
Slough	98,600	98,484	−0·1	226
Windsor and Maidenhead	133,400	132,444	−0·7	272
Wokingham	135,400	140,883	4·0	4
Buckinghamshire
Aylesbury Vale	139,400	142,504	2·2	22
South Buckinghamshire	61,140	61,143	0·0	211
Chiltern	90,820	90,505	−0·3	246
Milton Keynes	153,200	161,758	5·6	1
Wycombe	157,040	156,953	−0·1	221
Cambridgeshire
Cambridge	98,700	99,782	1·1	90
East Cambridgeshire	56,900	58,382	2·6	12
Fenland	68,900	69,967	1·5	53
Huntingdonshire	137,300	141,661	3·2	6
Peterborough	144,600	148,217	2·5	13
South Cambridgeshire	115,000	117,196	1·9	34
Cheshire
Chester	116,600	116,613	0·0	208
Congleton	83,900	84,666	0·9	112
Crewe and Nantwich	96,300	96,548	0·3	174
Ellesmere Port and Neston	80,200	80,165	0·0	218
Halton	122,900	123,218	0·3	172
Macclesfield	151,500	151,804	0·2	181
Vale Royal	113,500	113,507	0·0	210
Warrington	177,500	179,983	1·4	65
Cleveland
Hartlepool	91,600	90,667	−1·0	288
Langbaurgh	147,700	146,846	−0·6	263
Middlesbrough	144,800	144,280	−0·4	247
Stockton-on-Tees	175,800	175,787	−0·0	213
Cornwall
Caradon	72,500	72,662	0·2	178
Carrick	78,300	78,969	0·9	118
Kerrier	85,800	85,835	0·0	202
North Cornwall	68,700	69,822	1·6	47
Penwith	55,400	56,593	2·2	25
Restormel	81,200	82,350	1·4	62
Cumbria
Allerdale	95,600	95,819	0·2	177
Barrow in Furness	74,100	74,181	0·1	193
Carlisle	101,300	101,434	0·1	192
Copeland	71,200	71,436	0·3	167
Eden	44,800	45,272	1·1	96
South Lakeland	97,400	98,461	1·1	93
Derbyshire
Amber Valley	108,800	109,650	0·8	123
Bolsover	70,750	70,119	−0·9	283
Chesterfield	96,800	96,748	−0·1	220
Derby	215,300	216,203	0·4	156
Erewash	105,000	106,166	1·1	88
High Peak	82,700	83,402	0·8	119
North East Derbyshire	97,050	97,631	0·6	141
South Derbyshire	69,400	70,120	1·0	99
Derbyshire Dales	66,600	66,795	0·3	168
Devon
East Devon	112,200	113,171	0·9	117
Exeter	99,700	99,295	−0·4	252
North Devon	80,400	81,593	1·5	58
Plymouth	253,656	256,044	0·9	107
South Hams	69,444	71,405	2·8	8
Teignbridge	100,600	105,417	4·8	2
Mid Devon	60,700	61,422	1·2	84
Torbay	117,900	117,288	−0·5	256
Torridge	49,500	49,950	0·9	113
West Devon	43,900	43,403	−1·1	289

	1987-88 population for grant purposes	1988-89 population for grant purposes	percentage change	Rank in class
Dorset
Bournemouth	149,700	152,158	1·6	45
Christchurch	41,100	41,129	0·1	198
North Dorset	50,700	51,948	2·5	15
Poole	124,500	126,449	1·6	51
Purbeck	43,300	44,326	2·4	17
West Dorset	81,300	82,283	1·2	82
Weymouth and Portland	60,900	62,135	2·0	29
Wimborne	76,200	77,787	2·1	27
Durham
Chester-le-Street	53,160	53,365	0·4	159
Darlington	99,700	99,163	−0·5	259
Derwentside	86,300	86,088	−0·2	236
Durham	86,260	86,123	−0·2	228
Easington	97,100	96,470	−0·6	269
Sedgefield	89,280	88,564	−0·8	279
Teesdale	24,400	24,766	1·5	56
Wear Valley	64,700	65,014	0·5	148
East Sussex
Brighton	143,100	141,937	−0·8	280
Eastbourne	80,500	80,696	0·2	175
Hastings	80,200	81,079	1·1	91
Hove	89,500	89,803	0·3	166
Lewes	84,400	87,042	3·1	7
Rother	79,900	81,574	2·1	26
Wealden	124,800	127,564	2·2	23
Essex
Basildon	156,300	156,937	0·4	157
Braintree	115,602	115,845	0·2	180
Brentwood	70,997	70,850	−0·2	233
Castle Point	86,100	85,888	−0·2	237
Chelmsford	147,900	149,831	1·3	73
Colchester	143,100	145,116	1·4	63
Epping Forest	114,703	114,098	−0·5	257
Harlow	75,200	74,001	−1·6	293
Maldon	51,000	52,161	2·3	20
Rochford	74,800	74,871	0·1	194
Southend-on-Sea	158,200	159,928	1·1	92
Tendring	121,200	122,806	1·3	71
Thurrock	124,400	124,084	−0·3	238
Uttlesford	65,198	65,667	0·7	130
Gloucestershire
Cheltenham	86,000	86,749	0·9	116
Cotswold	71,600	72,708	1·5	54
Forest of Dean	74,100	75,178	1·5	59
Gloucester	91,100	90,855	−0·3	241
Stroud	104,500	106,668	2·1	28
Tewkesbury	84,100	84,947	1·0	101
Hampshire
Basingstoke and Deane	137,600	137,891	0·2	179
East Hampshire	97,000	97,760	0·8	122
Eastleigh	99,000	99,523	0·5	144
Fareham	94,200	95,705	1·6	49
Gosport	77,800	77,513	−0·4	249
Hart	80,200	81,283	1·4	68
Havant	118,500	118,918	0·4	162
New Forest	155,600	159,000	2·2	24
Portsmouth	187,900	186,884	−0·5	260
Rushmoor	81,400	79,145	−2·8	295
Southampton	202,300	200,501	−0·9	282
Test Valley	98,700	99,335	0·6	137
Winchester	93,700	94,208	0·5	143
Hereford and Worcester
Bromsgrove	89,400	89,215	−0·2	232
Hereford	48,300	48,373	0·2	186
Leominster	38,100	38,105	0·0	207
Malvern Hills	85,697	86,924	1·4	61
Redditch	73,300	74,757	2·0	31
South Herefordshire	48,600	48,679	0·2	184

	1987-88 population for grant purposes	1988-89 population for grant purposes	percentage change	Rank in class
Worcester	77,400	77,839	0·6	142
Wychavon	96,903	97,629	0·7	125
Wyre Forest	93,100	92,983	−0·1	227
Hertfordshire
Broxbourne	81,900	82,401	0·6	140
Dacorum	133,100	132,595	−0·4	250
East Hertfordshire	116,880	118,110	1·1	97
Hertsmere	88,100	88,091	0·0	214
North Hertfordshire	111,400	111,614	0·2	183
St. Albans	128,800	128,747	0·0	217
Stevenage	75,120	74,371	−1·0	287
Three Rivers	80,300	80,287	0·0	215
Watford	76,500	76,186	−0·4	253
Welwyn Hatfield	94,000	93,321	−0·7	273
Humberside
Beverley	108,300	109,708	1·3	75
Boothferry	61,500	61,935	0·7	131
Cleethorpes	68,800	68,585	−0·3	243
Glanford	68,300	69,460	1·7	41
Great Grimsby	90,900	90,415	−0·5	258
Holderness	48,300	48,697	0·8	120
Kingston upon Hull	262,000	258,048	−1·5	292
East Yorkshire	78,300	79,165	1·1	89
Scunthorpe	63,600	62,491	−1·7	294
Isle of Wight
Medina	69,688	70,653	1·4	67
South Wight	53,212	53,902	1·3	76
Kent
Ashford	91,000	92,402	1·5	55
Canterbury	127,350	127,679	0·3	173
Dartford	79,715	79,088	−0·8	275
Dover	102,552	103,871	1·3	77
Gillingham	95,200	95,856	0·7	135
Gravesham	93,525	92,988	−0·6	262
Maidstone	132,431	133,607	0·9	115
Rochester upon Medway	145,600	146,218	0·4	153
Sevenoaks	107,860	107,891	0·0	204
Shepway	88,498	88,671	0·2	182
Swale	110,800	110,853	0·0	201
Thanet	122,500	123,633	0·9	110
Tonbridge and Malling	99,600	99,658	0·1	200
Tunbridge Wells	98,569	98,512	−0·1	222
Lancashire
Blackburn	141,100	139,061	−1·4	290
Blackpool	145,800	145,416	−0·3	240
Burnley	87,452	86,878	−0·7	270
Chorley	94,622	95,621	1·1	95
Fylde	72,800	72,765	0·0	219
Hyndburn	79,397	80,010	0·8	124
Lancaster	128,500	129,953	1·1	87
Pendle	84,818	84,532	−0·3	245
Preston	124,400	125,000	0·5	149
Ribble Valley	53,133	53,211	0·1	187
Rossendale	64,000	64,185	0·3	169
South Ribble	98,078	97,177	−0·9	284
West Lancashire	107,500	106,832	−0·6	267
Wyre	98,700	100,086	1·4	64
Leicestershire
Blaby	80,300	81,493	1·5	57
Charnwood	143,500	144,922	1·0	102
Harborough	63,200	63,944	1·2	85
Hinckley and Bosworth	93,279	94,108	0·9	114
Leicester	282,900	281,076	0·6	268
Melton	42,900	42,868	0·1	223
North West Leicestershire	78,621	78,932	0·4	158
Oadby and Wigston	52,500	52,038	0·9	281
Rutland	35,000	35,572	1·6	46

	1987-88 population for grant purposes	1988-89 population for grant purposes	percentage change	Rank in class
Lincolnshire
Boston	51,900	51,911	0·0	206
East Lindsey	108,700	110,500	1·7	42
Lincoln	78,200	78,966	1·0	103
North Kesteven	81,400	82,887	1·8	37
South Holland	63,700	64,307	1·0	106
South Kesteven	99,900	101,610	1·7	39
West Lindsey	76,500	77,072	0·7	126
Norfolk
Breckland	100,600	101,908	1·3	74
Broadland	99,800	100,752	1·0	105
Great Yarmouth	84,200	85,632	1·7	40
North Norfolk	87,400	90,201	3·2	5
Norwich	122,300	121,620	0·6	261
South Norfolk	98,800	99,423	0·6	139
King's Lynn and West Norfolk	126,000	128,281	1·8	38
Northamptonshire
Corby	50,700	50,701	0·0	212
Daventry	59,800	61,248	2·4	16
East Northamptonshire	62,800	64,234	2·3	19
Kettering	72,000	73,155	1·6	48
Northampton	169,800	172,507	1·6	50
South Northamptonshire	66,700	67,512	1·2	81
Wellingborough	64,300	65,084	1·2	80
Northumberland
Alnwick	29,700	29,834	0·5	151
Berwick-upon-Tweed	26,300	26,494	0·7	127
Blyth Valley	78,000	78,268	0·3	164
Castle Morpeth	50,696	50,711	0·0	203
Tynedale	54,904	55,285	0·7	134
Wansbeck	61,000	60,428	0·9	285
North Yorkshire
Craven	48,200	48,231	0·1	199
Hambleton	76,000	75,707	−0·4	251
Harrogate	144,500	145,226	0·5	147
Richmondshire	48,400	49,043	1·3	69
Ryedale	88,800	89,428	0·7	133
Scarborough	103,300	103,650	0·3	165
Selby	85,200	86,918	2·0	30
York	102,200	101,583	−0·6	266
Nottinghamshire
Ashfield	106,900	106,666	−0·2	234
Bassetlaw	104,200	104,937	0·7	132
Broxtowe	105,600	106,097	0·5	150
Gedling	111,162	110,834	−0·3	242
Mansfield	100,700	100,337	−0·4	248
Newark and Sherwood	102,338	102,869	0·5	145
Nottingham	279,402	277,775	−0·6	264
Rushcliffe	95,958	96,992	1·4	66
Oxfordshire
Cherwell	119,100	121,467	2·0	32
Oxford	115,000	116,186	1·0	100
South Oxfordshire	133,300	133,044	−0·2	231
Vale of White Horse	108,400	110,432	1·9	35
West Oxfordshire	89,600	93,574	4·4	3
Shropshire
Bridgnorth	51,500	51,512	0·0	205
North Shropshire	51,900	53,090	2·3	18
Oswestry	31,600	31,499	−0·3	244
Shrewsbury and Atcham	90,509	91,353	0·9	108
South Shropshire	34,906	35,037	0·4	160
Wrekin	129,885	130,194	0·2	176
Somerset
Mendip	93,400	93,484	0·1	195
Sedgemoor	93,000	94,138	1·2	79
Taunton Deane	90,900	91,283	0·4	155

	1987-88 population for grant purposes	1988-89 population for grant purposes	percentage change	Rank in class
West Somerset	30,600	31,004	1·3	72
South Somerset	139,100	138,979	−0·1	224
Staffordshire
Cannock Chase	85,000	85,134	0·2	185
East Staffordshire	94,000	93,907	−0·1	225
Lichfield	90,600	91,693	1·2	83
Newcastle-under-Lyme	118,400	117,820	−0·5	254
South Staffordshire	103,300	104,911	1·6	52
Stafford	117,800	117,959	0·1	191
Staffordshire Moorlands	95,900	95,978	0·1	197
Stoke-on-Trent	248,700	246,884	−0·7	274
Tamworth	66,700	66,705	0·0	209
Suffolk
Babergh	76,400	77,107	0·9	109
Forest Heath	57,800	55,692	−3·6	296
Ipswich	118,130	118,291	0·1	190
Mid Suffolk	74,400	75,478	1·4	60
St. Edmundsbury	90,300	91,453	1·3	78
Suffolk Coastal	103,970	105,987	1·9	33
Waveney	103,200	104,570	1·3	70
Surrey
Elmbridge	111,400	110,322	−1·0	286
Epsom and Ewell	67,100	67,158	0·1	196
Guildford	125,256	125,038	−0·2	230
Mole Valley	77,100	77,611	0·7	136
Reigate and Banstead	116,600	115,807	−0·7	271
Runnymede	71,400	71,281	−0·2	229
Spelthorne	90,200	88,844	−1·5	291
Surrey Heath	79,325	80,152	1·0	98
Tandridge	76,500	76,117	−0·5	255
Waverley	112,517	112,491	0·0	216
Woking	86,302	86,603	0·3	163
Warwickshire
North Warwickshire	60,200	59,725	−0·8	277
Nuneaton and Bedworth	112,500	113,072	0·5	146
Rugby	85,600	84,919	−0·8	278
Stratford on Avon	104,600	105,735	1·1	94
Warwick	116,800	117,293	0·4	154
West Sussex
Adur	57,800	58,057	0·4	152
Arun	126,600	126,949	0·3	170
Chichester	101,700	104,368	2·6	11
Crawley	84,000	83,779	−0·3	239
Horsham	104,100	105,810	1·6	44
Mid Sussex	118,700	119,850	1·0	104
Worthing	94,800	95,909	1·2	86
Wiltshire
Kennet	67,000	67,431	0·6	138
North Wiltshire	108,500	109,378	0·8	121
Salisbury	102,500	103,436	0·9	111
Thamesdown	159,800	162,792	1·9	36
West Wiltshire	103,000	102,188	−0·8	276
All purpose authority
Isles of Scilly	1,980	1,978	−0·1	1

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the budgeted income and estimated outturn of total expenditure of each local authority subject to rate limitation in each year from 1985-86 to 1987-88.

Mr. Ridley: The information in respect of authoriti selected for rate or precept limitation under section 2 the Rates Act is as follows:

	1985-86 Budget	1985-86 Outturn	1986-87 Budget	1986-87 Outturn
Authorities first selected for 1985-86
Sheffield	218·631	217·538	not selected
Camden	117·609	108·160	147·266	[1]149·699
Greenwich	66·637	[1]66·639	109·231	[1]104·189
Hackney	97·150	[1]94·399	136·503	[1]128·222
Islington	85·723	86·636	106·115	[1]109·421
Lambeth	116·212	112·266	167·777	[1]171·942
Lewisham	90·914	78·401	126·868	[1]112·505
Southwark	108·437	106·942	136·215	[1]133·984
Brent	148·356	140·402	not selected
Haringey	136·048	128·632	167·188	[1]168·067
Basildon	13·662	8·860	16·945	[1]16·198
Thamesdown	14·199	14·022	14·848	14·849
Leicester	24·392	24·116	not selected		not se
Portsmouth	16·511	16·511	not selected		not se
GLC	608·746	605·600	abolished		aboli
ILEA	945·057	886·804	n/a		n/
Merseyside MCC	213·479	203·219	abolished		aboli
South Yorkshire MCC	178·674	176·289	abolished		aboli
Authorities first selected for 1986-87
Liverpool	n/a		287·554	284·024	not
Newcastle upon Tyne	n/a		162·952	164·653
Authorities first selected for 1987-88
Gateshead	n/a		n/a
North Tyneside	n/a		n/a
Tower Hamlets	n/a		n/a
Hounslow	n/a		n/a
Newham	n/a		n/a
Middlesbrough	n/a		n/a
Brighton	n/a		n/a

[1] Denotes revised estimate.

Information on outturn for 1987-88 is not yet available. Information in respect of authorities deemed to have been designated for precept limitation by virtue of section 68 of the Local Government Act 1985 is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Home Secretary, the Secretary of State for Education and Science, and the Secretary of State for Transport.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the original and final expenditure levels underlying rate and prec the original and final rate and precept limi authority subject to rate limitation, in e 1985-86 to 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: The information in respect selected for rate or precept limitation und the Rates Act is as follows:

Table 1: Expenditure levels

	1985-86 Original £ million	1985-86 Redetermined £ million	1986-87 Original £ million	1986-87 Redetermined £ million	1987-88 Original £ million	1987-88 Redetermined £ million	Origin £ millio
Authorities first selected for 1985-96
Sheffield	216·573	—	[1]	[1]	258·915	264·093
Camden	117·429	—	133·669	136·919	136·919	—	136·92
Greenwich	66·584	—	88·629	95·228	95·228	—	95·23
Hackney	82·315	—	119·422	128·572	128·572	—	128·57
Islington	85·564	—	106·113	—	106·113	—
Lambeth	113·558	—	144·068	152·309	152·309	—	152·31
Lewisham	79·301	—	112·062	115·594	115·594	—	115·59
Southwark	108·437	—	134·190	—	134·190	—	134·19
Brent	140·021	—	[1]	[1]	176·690	180·200
Haringey	128·658	—	152·813	—	152·813	—	156·14
Basildon	13·662	—	13·662	—	13·662	—	13·66
Thamesdown	14·199	—	14·199	—	14·199	—	14·20
Leicester	24·392	—	[1]	[1]	[1]	[1]
Portsmouth	16·751	—	[1]	[1]	[1]	[1]
Greater London Council	785·233	—	[2]	[2]	[2]	[2]
ILEA	900·366	—	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]
Merseyside MCC	205·180	—	[2]	[2]	[2]	[2]
South Yorkshire MCC	178·291	—	[2]	[2]	[2]	[2]

	1985-86		1986-87		1987-88		1988-
	Original £ million	Redetermined £ million	Original £ million	Redetermined £ million	Original £ million	Redetermined £ million	Original £ million
Authorities first selected for 1986-87
Liverpool	[3]	[3]	265·070	274·550	[1]	[1]	307·742
Newcastle upon Tyne	[3]	[3]	151·252	154·652	154·652	—	159·305
Authorities first selected for 1987-88
Gateshead	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	95·986	97·906	[1]
North Tyneside	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	93·259	95·124	[1]
Tower Hamlets	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	121·601	124·033	124·033
Hounslow	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	112·220	114·464	[1]
Newham	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	154·353	157·440	[1]
Middlesbrough	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	17·225	17·570	17·570
Brighton	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	14·610	14·902	[1]
Authorities first selected for 1988-89
Manchester	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	316·394
Ealing	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	157·153
Waltham Forest	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	142·028
Kingston-upon-Hull	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	30·942

[1] Not selected.
[2] Abolished.
[3] Not applicable.

Note:
Redetermined figures shown only where applicable. The "redetermined" figures for 1987-88 are those produced by application 2 to the Local Government Finance Act 1987.

Table 2: Rate and precept limits

	1985-86		1986-87		1987-88
	Proposed	Final	Proposed	Final	Final
Authorities first selected for 1985-86
Sheffield	207·07	—	[1]	[1]	259·07
Camden	92·02	—	118·35	—	120·07
Greenwich	96·42	—	124·21	—	120·89
Hackney	114·09	147·18	141·96	—	123·30
Islington	111·21	112·07	93·20	—	78·90
Lambeth	107·57	—	126·11	—	112·42
Lewisham	87·49	99·66	141·86	—	127·12
Southwark	112·69	—	121·16	—	111·31
Brent	196·42	—	[1]	[1]	224·84
Haringey	222·17	268·50	254·59	—	238·37
Basildon	50·33	—	52·75	—	52·84
Thamesdown	57·22	—	54·68	—	55·16
Leicester	16·27	25·22	[1]	[1]	[1]
Portsmouth	26·88	—	[1]	[1]	[1]
GLC	36·52	—	[3]	[3]	[3]
ILEA	74·19	77·25	[3]	[3]	[3]
Merseyside MCC	82·86	—	[3]	[3]	[3]
South Yorkshire MCC	81·32	—	[3]	[3]	[3]
Authorities first selected for 1986-87
Liverpool	[3]	[3]	232·09	—	[1]
Newcastle upon Tyne	[3]	[3]	321·23	—	290·82
Authorities first selected for 1987-88
Gateshead	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	231·46
North Tyneside	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	265·77
Tower Hamlets	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	110·38
Hounslow	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	206·82
Newham	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	232·67
Middlesbrough	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	44·57
Brighton	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	22·50
Authorities first selected for 1988-89
Manchester	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]
Ealing	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]
Waltham Forest	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]
Kingston upon Hull	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]

[1] Not selected.
[2] Abolished.
[3] Not applicable.

Note:
"Final" column only denotes figures which differ from "proposed". For 1987-88 there were no proposed limits; final limits were under the Local Government Finance Act 1987. Final limits for 1988-89 have not yet been determined.

Information in respect of authorities deemed to have been designated for precept limitation by virtue of section 68 of the Local Government Act 1985 is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Home Secretary, the Secretary of State for Education and Science, and the Secretary of State for Transport.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the aggregate Exchequer grant, rate support grant, block grant, domestic rate relief grant, relevant expenditure, total expenditu expenditure at rate support grant settle estimated outturn in each year from 19

Mr. Ridley: The following table li Exchequer grant, relevant expenditure, and current expenditure at RSG settle estimated outturn in each year from 19 where figures are available. Figures are Support Grant Reports (England) an Grant Supplementary Reports (England years except where otherwise shown.

	Aggregate Exchequer Grant	Rate Support Grant	Block Grant	Domestic Rate Relief Grant	Relevant Expenditure	T Expendi
1981-82
Settlement	10,895·0	9,027·0	8,364·0	663	18,423·0
Budget	[1]10,843·0	[1]8,952·0	[1]8,289·0	663	18,673·0
Audited Outturn	[1]10,939·0	[1]9,009·0	[1]8,346·0	663	19,933·0
1982-83
Settlement	11,484·0	9,360·0	8,682·0	678	20,463·0	18,5
Budget	[1]11,119·0	[1]8,982·0	[1]8,304·0	678	[2]21,942·0	[2]19,9
Audited Outturn	[1]11,242·0	[1]9,027·0	[1]8,349·0	678	21,765·0	19,7
1983-84
Settlement	11,782·0	9,416·0	8,730·0	686	22,307·0	20,1
Budget	[1]11,503·0	[1]9,135·0	[1]8,449·0	686	[2]23,070·0	[2]20,9
Estimated Outturn	[1]11,486·0	[1]9,075·0	[1]8,389·0	686	23,082·0	20,8
1984-85
Settlement	11,872·0	9,323·0	8,631·0	692	22,883·0	20,5
Budget	[1]11,497·0	[1]8,868·0	18,176·0	692	3,801·0	21,3
Estimated Outturn	[1]11,902·0	[1]9,104·0	[1]8,412·0	692	23,872·0	21,2
1985-86
Settlement	11,764·0	9,188·0	8,489·0	699	24,161·0	21,8
Budget	[1]11,225·0	[1]8,638·0	[1]7,939·0	699	24,446·0	22,0
Estimated Outturn	[1]11,780·0	[1]9,138·0	[1]8,439·0	699	24,116·0	21,7
1986-87
Settlement[4]	11,764·0	8,988·0	8,280·0	708	25,328·5	22,7
Budget	11,879·0	9,010·0	8,302·0	708	26,658·0	24,0
1987-88
Settlement[4]	12,842·0	9,549·0	8,832·0	717	27,746·0	24,7
Budget	[6]12,697·1	[5]9,466·1	[5]8,749·1	[5]717	[3]28,813·0	[3]25,8
1988-89
Settlement	13,775·0	10,209·0	9,482·0	727	29,846·0	26,5

[1] Figure after holdback.
[2] Figure not available on a consistent basis with later years.
[3] Figure estimated.
[4] Figures exclude additional allowance for teachers' pay.
[5] Figure from revision of estimate of block grant, September 1987, under Section 66(1) of the Local Government Planning a [6] Notional figure derived from [5].

Grant-related Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, on a ranked and class basis, the percentage change in the grant-related expenditure of each local authority between 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: The information is as follows:

Percentage change in grant-related expenditure between 1987-88 1st supplementary report and 1988-89 settlement

	Percentage change	Rank in class
Shire Counties
Avon	8·5	20
Bedfordshire		8
Berkshire		9
Buckinghamshire		9
Cambridgeshire		9
Cheshire		8
Cleveland		7
Cornwall		8
Cumbria		6
Derbyshire		8
Devon		7
Dorset		8

	Percentage change	Rank in class
Durham	7·6	29
East Sussex	9·3	6
Essex	8·1	25
Gloucestershire	8·8	10
Hampshire	8·6	14
Hereford and Worcester	7·0	38
Hertfordshire	7·5	33
Humberside	7·5	32
Isle of Wight	9·9	1
Kent	7·8	27
Lancashire	7·7	28
Leicestershire	9·0	9
Lincolnshire	8·5	18
Norfolk	8·3	23
Northamptonshire	9·2	8
Northumberland	7·4	36
North Yorkshire	8·6	17
Nottinghamshire	8·0	26
Oxfordshire	7·5	34
Shropshire	8·6	16
Somerset	8·4	21
Staffordshire	7·4	35
Suffolk	9·2	7
Surrey	8·6	15
Warwickshire	7·3	37
West Sussex	9·6	3
Wiltshire	8·5	19
Greater London
City of London	8·5	1
Camden	6·5	3
Greenwich	−0·3	11
Hackney	−0·8	12
Hammersmith and Fulham	7·1	1
Islington	2·7	8
Kensington and Chelsea	6·1	4
Lambeth	6·5	2
Lewisham	5·0	5
Southwark	4·6	6
Tower Hamlets	0·7	10
Wandsworth	3·6	7
Westminster	1·9	9
Barking and Dagenham	5·6	19
Barnet	9·1	4
Bexley	8·4	10
Brent	6·4	16
Bromley	8·2	11
Croydon	7·2	13
Ealing	9·1	5
Enfield	8·8	7
Haringey	7·8	12
Harrow	9·7	2
Havering	6·1	18
Hillingdon	8·7	8
Hounslow	7·2	14
Kingston-upon-Thames	11·3	1
Merton	8·6	9
Newham	5·0	20
Redbridge	9·3	3
Richmond-upon-Thames	6·4	17
Sutton	8·9	6
Waltham Forest	7·1	15
ILEA	8·8	1

	Percentage change
London Fire and Civil Defence Authority	4·9
Metropolitan Police	8·2
Greater Manchester
Bolton	6·8
Bury	6·9
Manchester	5·4
Oldham	8·2
Rochdale	8·5
Salford	5·7
Stockport	5·0
Tameside	6·5
Trafford	7·4
Wigan	6·9
Merseyside
Knowsley	8·0
Liverpool	5·1
St. Helens	7·5
Sefton	7·8
Wirral	7·5
South Yorkshire
Barnsley	7·0
Doncaster	7·7
Rotherham	8·9
Sheffield	6·5
Tyne and Wear
Gateshead	6·9
Newcastle upon Tyne	9·0
North Tyneside	8·5
South Tyneside	7·9
Sunderland	8·5
West Midlands
Birmingham	7·9
Coventry	8·7
Dudley	7·3
Sandwell	7·6
Solihull	7·4
Walsall	7·2
Wolverhampton	6·7
West Yorkshire
Bradford	9·4
Calderdale	8·1
Kirklees	8·3
Leeds	8·0
Wakefield	7·4

Percentage change in grant-related expenditure betw supplementary report and 1988-89 settle

	Percentage change
Greater Manchester Police Authority	11·9
Merseyside Police Authority	11·9
South Yorkshire Police Authority	13·8
Northumbria Police Authority	14·4
West Midlands Police Authority	11·9
West Yorkshire Police Authority	13·0
Greater Manchester Fire & CD Authority	2·8
Merseyside Fire & CD Authority	2·0
South Yorkshire Fire & CD Authority	4·8
Tyne and Wear Fire & CD Authority	5·6
West Midlands Fire & CD Authority	3·5
West Yorkshire Fire & CD Authority	3·3

	Percentage change	Rank in class
Greater Manchester Transport Authority	0·8	2
Merseyside Transport Authority	−8·4	6
South Yorkshire Transport Authority	−0·2	3
Tyne and Wear Transport Authority	−0·4	4
West Midlands Transport Authority	3·6	1
West Yorkshire Transport Authority	−2·2	5

Percentage change in grant-related expenditure between 1987/88 1st supplementary report and 1988-89 settlement

	Percentage change	Rank in class
Avon
Bath	5·1	73
Bristol	5·7	58
Kingswood	3·8	140
Northavon	5·9	54
Wansdyke	8·4	8
Woodspring	6·8	27
Bedfordshire
North Bedfordshire	4·6	101
Luton	8·0	9
Mid Bedfordshire	4·6	102
South Bedfordshire	3·3	168
Berkshire
Bracknell	6·3	40
Newbury	3·5	157
Reading	3·4	159
Slough	6·8	28
Windsor and Maidenhead	1·3	262
Wokingham	6·2	44
Buckinghamshire
Aylesbury Vale	4·1	123
South Bucks	3·5	158
Chiltern	1·5	258
Milton Keynes	9·4	3
Wycombe	3·9	130
Cambridgeshire
Cambridge	−0·5	290
East Cambridgeshire	3·3	167
Fenland	3·6	153
Huntingdonshire	6·0	48
Peterborough	6·8	31
South Cambridgeshire	2·4	223
Cheshire
Chester	3·9	129
Congleton	4·7	95
Crewe and Nantwich	3·0	189
Ellesmere Port and Neston	7·8	10
Halton	7·6	17
Macclesfield	1·9	244
Vale Royal	3·2	176
Warrington	4·9	82
Cleveland
Hartlepool	9·4	4
Langbaurgh	−7·2	295
Middlesbrough	14·6	1
Stockton-on-Tees	6·1	46
Cornwall
Caradon	4·0	127
Carrick	4·6	100
Kerrier	4·7	90
North Cornwall
Penwith
Restormel
Cumbria
Allerdale
Barrow in Furness
Carlisle
Copeland
Eden
South Lakeland
Derbyshire
Amber Valley
Bolsover
Chesterfield
Derby
Erewash
High Peak
North East Derbyshire
South Derbyshire
Derbyshire Dales
Devon
East Devon
Exeter
North Devon
Plymouth
South Hams
Teignbridge
Mid Devon
Torbay
Torridge
West Devon
Dorset
Bournemouth
Christchurch
North Dorset
Poole
Purbeck
West Dorset
Weymouth and Portland
Wimborne
Durham
Chester-le-Street
Darlington
Derwentside
Durham
Easington
Sedgefield
Teesdale
Wear Valley
East Sussex
Brighton
Eastbourne
Hastings
Hove
Lewes
Rother
Wealden
Essex
Basildon
Braintree
Brentwood
Castle Point
Chelmsford
Colchester
Epping Forest
Harlow
Maldon
Rochford

...ntage ...ange	Rank in class
3·4	165
7·3	22
6·3	39
1·1	267
3·2	180
4·2	115
5·2	70
3·9	133
2·1	237
2·8	198
2·9	195
5·5	63
3·9	132
0·7	279
3·2	179
1·8	250
1·9	246
-2·5	292
2·0	240
4·7	93
7·4	20
7·7	12
7·6	16
5·6	62
6·9	25
6·9	26
4·5	104
1·0	272
7·5	18
5·5	64
6·0	50
7·1	24
7·4	21
6·0	49
9·9	2
4·4	110
2·8	293
0·7	280
2·6	209
1·7	252
6·6	296
3·5	155
3·4	163
3·1	182
2·7	204
5·2	72
9·1	5
5·7	57
9·8	277
5·8	29
3·0	188
9·0	287
3·3	226
1·7	201
1·0	242
1·1	181
1·1	232
1·4	222
1·4	164
1·1	235
1·8	251

	Percentage change	Rank in class
Southend-on-Sea	6·5	34
Tendring	2·4	219
Thurrock	5·1	75
Uttlesford	1·1	266
Gloucestershire
Cheltenham	5·9	53
Cotswold	0·7	282
Forest of Dean	5·2	68
Gloucester	5·2	69
Stroud	4·6	97
Tewkesbury	5·6	59
Hampshire
Basingstoke and Deane	4·7	89
East Hampshire	4·2	121
Eastleigh	4·4	111
Fareham	4·1	122
Gosport	1·4	260
Hart	4·7	91
Havant	6·4	35
New Forest	3·4	161
Portsmouth	4·8	86
Rushmoor	2·5	213
Southampton	7·5	19
Test Valley	5·1	76
Winchester	3·7	148
Hereford and Worcester
Bromsgrove	2·8	199
Hereford	4·9	81
Leominster	2·7	206
Malvern Hills	4·3	114
Redditch	6·5	33
South Herefordshire	4·6	99
Worcester	5·8	55
Wychavon	2·5	214
Wyre Forest	3·1	185
Hertfordshire
Broxbourne	3·2	174
Dacorum	2·7	203
East Hertfordshire	4·4	109
Hertsmere	1·8	248
North Hertfordshire	2·1	234
St. Albans	2·2	228
Stevenage	4·2	117
Three Rivers	2·2	227
Watford	3·1	186
Welwyn Hatfield	1·7	254
Humberside
Beverley	3·5	156
Boothferry	2·0	241
Cleethorpes	1·7	253
Glanford	8·8	7
Great Grimsby	2·3	225
Holderness	2·5	210
Kingston upon Hull	5·7	56
East Yorkshire	4·4	107
Scunthorpe	5·2	71
Isle of Wight
Medina	4·7	94
South Wight	7·7	14
Kent
Ashford	1·0	270
Canterbury	3·8	141
Dartford	4·4	106
Dover	3·8	137
Gillingham	5·1	77
Gravesham	2·3	224
Maidstone	3·6	150
Rochester upon Medway	4·0	126
Sevenoaks	2·6	208

	Percentage change
Shepway	1·9
Swale	4·3
Thanet	3·9
Tonbridge and Malling	1·4
Tunbridge Wells	3·0
Lancashire
Blackburn	2·0
Blackpool	7·1
Burnley	6·5
Chorley	4·2
Fylde	2·9
Hyndburn	3·1
Lancaster	7·9
Pendle	5·4
Preston	8·9
Ribble Valley	2·5
Rossendale	2·0
South Ribble	2·4
West Lancashire	6·5
Wyre	3·7
Leicestershire
Blaby	1·9
Charnwood	3·5
Harborough	1·4
Hinckley and Bosworth	2·7
Leicester	5·0
Melton	1·9
North West Leicestershire	0·7
Oadby and Wigston	1·5
Rutland	—
Lincolnshire
Boston	2·0
East Lindsey	7·1
Lincoln	3·1
North Kesteven	2·9
South Holland	0·7
South Kesteven	4·0
West Lindsey	4·5
Norfolk
Breckland	2·1
Broadland	3·7
Great Yarmouth	4·1
North Norfolk	5·1
Norwich	6·2
South Norfolk	0·9
King's Lynn and West Norfolk	4·0
Northamptonshire
Corby	6·1
Daventry	3·7
East Northamptonshire	3·9
Kettering	5·4
Northampton	-6·7
South Northamptonshire	2·7
Wellingborough	1·5
Northumberland
Alnwick	1·7
Berwick-upon-Tweed	0·9
Blyth Valley	4·5
Castle Morpeth	0·5
Tynedale	0·5
Wansbeck	4·1
North Yorkshire
Craven	4·2
Hambleton	1·4
Harrogate	3·7
Richmondshire	3·4
Ryedale	3·5
Scarborough	6·5
Selby	4·1

	Percentage change	Rank in class
York	4·5	105
Nottinghamshire
Ashfield	3·1	187
Bassetlaw	3·2	175
Broxtowe	4·7	96
Gedling	3·0	190
Mansfield	−0·9	291
Newark and Sherwood	2·4	221
Nottingham	6·8	30
Rushcliffe	4·2	119
Oxfordshire
Cherwell	4·8	87
Oxford	3·6	152
South Oxfordshire	1·7	256
Vale of White Horse	3·0	192
West Oxfordshire	4·9	80
Shropshire
Bridgnorth	2·2	229
North Shropshire	2·4	216
Oswestry	1·2	265
Shrewsbury and Atcham	3·8	138
South Shropshire	1·0	271
Wrekin	5·6	60
Somerset
Mendip	5·3	67
Sedgemoor	7·7	13
Taunton Deane	4·6	98
West Somerset	4·2	116
South Somerset	4·4	108
Staffordshire
Cannock Chase	3·4	166
East Staffordshire	5·6	61
Lichfield	2·4	215
Newcastle-under-Lyme	1·7	255
South Staffordshire	3·8	139
Stafford	1·6	257
Staffordshire Moorlands	0·9	273
Stoke-on-Trent	6·2	43
Tamworth	6·3	37
Suffolk
Babergh	2·4	218
Forest Heath	0·9	275
Ipswich	3·0	191
Mid Suffolk	−0·0	289
St. Edmundsbury	3·4	160
Suffolk Coastal	3·6	151
Waveney	6·0	51
Surrey
Elmbridge	3·9	135
Epsom and Ewell	2·9	194
Guildford	3·3	170
Mole Valley	2·5	212
Reigate and Banstead	5·0	78
Runnymede	6·1	45
Spelthorne	2·4	217
Surrey Heath	3·3	171
Tandridge	3·1	183
Waverley	2·0	238
Woking	6·0	52
Warwickshire
North Warwickshire	2·2	230
Nuneaton and Bedworth	3·9	136
Rugby	3·2	173
Stratford on Avon	0·1	285
Warwick	3·2	178
West Sussex
Adur	4·9	83
Arun	3·6	154
Chichester	3·7	145
Crawley	4·7	92
Horsham	−0·0	288
Mid Sussex	3·2	177
Worthing	6·2	41
Wiltshire
Kennet	3·4	162
North Wiltshire	2·1	236
Salisbury	2·4	220
Thamesdown	4·2	118
West Wiltshire	2·1	231
All purpose authority
Isles of Scilly	6·7	1

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, on a ranked basis, the percentage change in the grant-related expenditure of each non-metropolitan county and each non-metropolitan district between (a) 1981-82 and 1988-89 and (b) 1985-86 and 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: The information is as follows:

Percentage changes in grant-related expenditure between (a) 1981-82 4th supplementary report and 1988-89 settlement, and (b) 1985-86 3rd supplementary report and 1988-89 settlement

	(a) 1981-82 to 1988-89		(b) 1985-86 to 1988-89
	per cent. change	Rank in class	per cent. change	Rank in class
Shire counties
Avon	49·0	35	22·1	29
Bedfordshire	52·6	26	20·2	36
Berkshire	59·4	9	23·8	16
Buckinghamshire	67·9	1	25·0	9
Cambridgeshire	62·9	3	25·3	6
Cheshire	50·0	31	23·8	15
Cleveland	53·3	22	21·6	32
Cornwall	63·9	2	26·9	1
Cumbria	49·2	32	22·7	25
Derbyshire	54·7	19	23·9	14
Devon	56·7	13	23·2	23
Dorset	60·1	5	25·1	7
Durham	50·4	30	23·5	19
East Sussex	56·9	12	23·1	24

	(a) 1981-82 to 1988-89		(b) 1985-86 to 1988-89
	per cent. change	Rank in class	per cent. change	Rank in class
Essex	53·0	23	23·3	21
Gloucester	54·4	20	25·5	2
Hampshire	50·7	29	21·6	31
Hereford and Worcester	55·2	18	22·3	28
Hertfordshire	42·5	39	19·8	37
Humberside	52·5	27	22·1	30
Isle of Wight	56·0	17	21·2	33
Kent	52·7	25	22·5	27
Lancashire	56·6	15	23·4	20
Leicestershire	59·5	8	24·3	12
Lincolnshire	59·9	6	25·3	5
Norfolk	59·4	10	25·1	8
Northamptonshire	59·7	7	23·6	18
Northumberland	44·3	37	16·7	39
North Yorkshire	53·3	21	24·9	11
Nottinghamshire	48·3	36	21·0	35
Oxfordshire	43·2	38	19·6	38
Shropshire	60·1	4	25·5	3
Somerset	56·7	14	24·0	13
Staffordshire	52·0	28	22·6	26
Suffolk	56·6	16	25·4	4
Surrey	49·0	34	21·1	34
Warwickshire	49·1	33	23·2	22
West Sussex	58·6	11	24·9	10
Wiltshire	52·9	24	23·8	17
Avon
Bath	12·5	215	16·0	29
Bristol	22·9	143	18·0	22
Kingswood	28·2	115	8·5	102
Northavon	23·6	140	6·5	153
Wansdyke	8·2	247	6·6	152
Woodspring	33·0	87	10·7	67
Bedfordshire
North Bedfordshire	38·1	64	14·5	40
Luton	49·6	31	23·3	6
Mid Bedfordshire	41·2	51	12·6	55
South Bedfordshire	13·7	208	8·4	105
Berkshire
Bracknell	90·6	1	14·0	43
Newbury	11·2	226	8·8	93
Reading	42·3	46	14·3	41
Slough	32·5	92	18·8	16
Windsor and Maidenhead	11·9	219	4·3	200
Wokingham	14·3	205	8·3	110
Buckinghamshire
Aylesbury Vale	35·7	76	6·7	147
South Bucks	−2·3	284	−0·1	274
Chiltern	4·0	265	−2·8	292
Milton Keynes	90·1	2	14·2	42
Wycombe	40·8	53	2·8	238
Cambridgeshire
Cambridge	25·6	128	9·2	86
East Cambridgeshire	39·7	57	9·6	80
Fenland	26·1	126	9·9	77
Huntingdonshire	29·2	112	18·5	19
Peterborough	30·0	107	18·7	17
South Cambridgeshire	17·5	184	7·7	124
Cheshire
Chester	35.0	79	10.2	71
Congleton	35·9	74	5·4	177
Crewe and Nantwich	10·8	229	3·8	215
Ellesmere Port and Neston	17·0	188	7·2	139
Halton	32·9	88	18·4	20
Macclesfield	11·0	228	3·1	226
Vale Royal	22·4	153	4·6	189
Warrington	54·6	18	15·0	34

	(a) 1981-82 to 1988-89		(b) 1985-86 to 1988-89
	per cent. change	Rank in class	per cent. change	Rank in class
Cleveland
Hartlepool	32·4	93	13·0	51
Langbaurgh	3·6	267	−6·1	295
Middlesbrough	45·9	36	24·7	5
Stockton-on-Tees	28·0	118	16·2	27
Cornwall
Caradon	32·5	91	4·6	190
Carrick	17·0	187	6·4	154
Kerrier	18·1	178	8·0	118
North Cornwall	21·1	160	5·3	179
Penwith	16·6	189	13·7	45
Restormel	25·2	132	9·2	87
Cumbria
Allerdale	13·5	211	−6·2	296
Barrow in Furness	27·7	119	16·1	28
Carlisle	41·8	49	8·9	91
Copeland	22·8	144	3·0	229
Eden	16·6	190	4·1	207
South Lakeland	9·0	244	3·5	222
Derbyshire
Amber Valley	0·3	276	3·7	218
Bolsover	4·5	264	3·0	230
Chesterfield	38·4	63	8·4	106
Derby	58·3	15	15·8	30
Erewash	17·7	179	6·6	150
High Peak	10·3	237	4·4	196
North East Derbyshire	18·6	174	−1·4	285
South Derbyshire	10·7	231	1·8	255
Derbyshire Dales	−4·9	289	0·5	265
Devon
East Devon	22·0	157	2·2	251
Exeter	50·4	28	11·9	59
North Devon	13·7	209	7·8	121
Plymouth	45·0	39	28·5	2
South Hams	5·4	260	7·9	120
Teignbridge	15·8	193	4·8	185
Mid Devon	30·6	103	6·0	160
Torbay	45·9	35	19·0	14
Torridge	2·9	269	2·0	252
West Devon	−1·1	278	−0·9	279
Dorset
Bournemouth	50·9	24	25·5	4
Christchurch	39·0	60	5·9	164
North Dorset	39·6	58	4·1	208
Poole	37·3	66	14·0	44
Purbeck	31·1	100	7·5	129
West Dorset	15·2	196	4·1	206
Weymouth and Portland	57·3	16	19·6	12
Wimborne	5·6	259	2·8	239
Durham
Chester-le-Street	6·5	251	6·7	148
Darlington	33·0	85	4·3	201
Derwentside	32·6	90	2·2	250
Durham	42·3	45	5·7	167
Easington	−6·6	293	8·7	95
Sedgefield	−7·0	294	3·0	231
Teesdale	23·6	139	−0·5	277
Wear Valley	3·9	266	7·5	133
East Sussex
Brighton	31·5	98	8·7	99
Eastbourne	48·1	32	8·8	92
Hastings	53·8	21	26·8	3
Hove	41·4	50	19·0	15
Lewes	10·4	235	−2·2	289
Rother	26·9	123	1·4	260
Wealden	1·7	272	0·1	273
Essex

	(a) 1981-82 to 1988-89		(b) 1985-86 to 1988-89
	per cent. change	Rank in class	per cent. change	Rank in class
Basildon	1·2	274	−2·8	291
Braintree	14·8	200	2·9	232
Brentwood	8·8	246	3·1	228
Castle Point	28·3	114	7·0	141
Chelmsford	60·6	12	5·8	165
Colchester	55·3	17	7·6	128
Epping Forest	53·8	20	9·4	83
Harlow	22·4	152	9·3	84
Maldon	12·4	216	5·5	174
Rochford	9·6	242	2·9	235
Southend-on-Sea	31·4	99	15·6	31
Tendring	36·8	67	7·8	122
Thurrock	4·8	262	12·7	52
Uttlesford	−5·2	290	0·4	268
Gloucestershire
Cheltenham	44·2	40	15·3	33
Cotswold	10·4	234	−1·0	280
Forest of Dean	−2·7	286	−3·5	294
Gloucester	52·8	22	14·5	39
Stroud	29·4	111	5·3	178
Tewkesbury	22·5	150	6·6	149
Hampshire
Basingstoke and Dean	65·1	9	7·5	130
East Hampshire	−2·3	283	4·2	203
Eastleigh	42·3	44	7·7	123
Fareham	22·6	146	8·7	98
Gosport	35·9	75	13·3	48
Hart	16·5	191	8·0	119
Havant	22·8	145	8·4	107
New Forest	15·2	198	4·3	198
Portsmouth	11·7	221	22·7	7
Rushmoor	22·5	151	12·0	58
Southampton	50·1	29	22·1	8
Test Valley	14·7	201	5·5	173
Winchester	17·3	186	3·3	223
Hereford and Worcester
Bromsgrove	22·4	154	3·1	225
Hereford	87·7	3	15·6	32
Leominster	25·5	129	1·7	256
Malvern Hills	10·7	230	2·3	249
Redditch	40·9	52	15·0	35
South Herefordshire	20·8	162	2·7	240
Worcester	60·7	11	16·9	24
Wychavon	14·0	207	2·6	245
Wyre Forest	7·8	249	5·2	180
Hertfordshire
Broxbourne	−5·7	291	18·0	21
Dacorum	76·6	5	7·4	134
East Hertfordshire	35·0	80	11·3	61
Hertsmere	17·6	182	9·1	88
North Hertfordshire	40·6	54	7·2	137
St. Albans	42·8	43	6·0	162
Stevenage	28·1	117	10·9	66
Three Rivers	2·5	270	4·2	204
Watford	9·8	241	12·0	57
Welwyn Hatfield	50·4	27	6·1	157
Humberside
Beverley	36·2	70	−2·1	288
Boothferry	13·3	212	−2·4	290
Cleethorpes	27·3	121	−0·4	276
Glanford	41·9	48	3·9	212
Great Grimsby	32·4	94	5·7	168
Holderness	28·4	113	−2·1	287
Kingston upon Hull	60·3	13	8·3	108
East Yorkshire	18·9	172	1·3	261
Scunthorpe	−7·2	295	0·3	270
Isle of Wight
Medina	33·7	83	11·0	64
South Wight	34·2	81	17·1	23

	(a) 1981-82 to 1988-89		(b) 1985-86 to 1988-89
	per cent. change	Rank in class	per cent. change	Rank in class
Kent
Ashford	28·2	116	1·6	258
Canterbury	33·4	84	8·6	101
Dartford	−5·7	292	9·0	89
Dover	5·8	256	6·6	151
Gillingham	31·8	97	12·4	56
Gravesham	6·4	253	3·9	213
Maidstone	12·3	217	4·0	211
Rochester upon Medway	6·5	252	8·6	100
Sevenoaks	14·0	206	−0·1	275
Shepway	20·7	164	6·8	145
Swale	9·6	243	5·9	163
Thanet	24·0	137	7·5	132
Tonbridge and Malling	25·7	127	2·0	253
Tunbridge Wells	30·4	104	3·8	214
Lancashire
Blackburn	32·8	89	10·0	75
Blackpool	73·0	6	30·9	1
Burnley	15·6	194	14·9	36
Chorley	11·1	227	10·1	74
Fylde	32·1	96	8·7	97
Hyndburn	21·8	159	6·9	143
Lancaster	42·1	47	14·7	37
Pendle	16·2	192	14·5	38
Preston	51·6	23	21·8	9
Ribble Valley	2·1	271	4·9	182
Rossendale	29·6	109	9·8	79
South Ribble	9·9	240	3·5	220
West Lancashire	5·8	255	8·2	114
Wyre	18·1	177	1·9	254
Leicestershire
Blaby	18·4	175	4·5	194
Charnwood	17·3	185	6·0	159
Harborough	−2·1	280	1·7	257
Hinckley and Bosworth	24·0	136	7·2	138
Leicester	44·1	41	16·4	25
Melton	14·5	202	4·1	209
North West Leicestershire	11·4	224	3·8	216
Oadby and Wigston	36·1	71	5·4	176
Rutland	32·1	95	3·7	217
Lincolnshire
Boston	36·5	68	3·3	224
East Lindsey	24·1	135	7·5	131
Lincoln	62·0	10	13·2	49
North Kesteven	4·9	261	3·5	221
South Holland	1·6	273	2·4	247
South Kesteven	30·6	102	6·0	158
West Lindsey	−2·1	281	2·6	243
Norfolk
Breckland	10·5	232	2·6	244
Broadland	19·3	171	0·2	271
Great Yarmouth	50·8	25	8·0	117
North Norfolk	33·0	86	2·9	233
Norwich	22·5	149	20·5	11
South Norfolk	−2·2	282	−1·1	281
King's Lynn and West Norfolk	23·0	142	5·4	175
Northamptonshire
Corby	25·3	131	8·3	109
Daventry	46·4	34	3·6	219
East Northamptonshire	38·4	62	2·8	237
Kettering	5·7	258	7·0	142
Northampton	39·4	59	9·3	85
South Northamptonshire	35·5	77	−1·2	283
Wellingborough	22·5	147	8·2	115
Northumberland
Alnwick	19·4	169	−1·7	286
Berwick-upon-Tweed	50·7	26	−1·4	284
Blyth Valley	1·1	275	9·5	81
Castle Morpeth	13·2	213	0·3	269
Tynedale	−2·4	285	−3·3	293
Wansbeck	27·6	120	11·2	62

	(a) 1981-82 to 1988-89		(b) 1985-86 to 1988-89
	per cent. change	Rank in class	per cent. change	Rank in class
North Yorkshire
Craven	21·9	158	0·9	264
Hambleton	18·2	176	0·2	272
Harrogate	19·8	168	5·6	169
Richmondshire	19·3	170	7·0	140
Ryedale	36·0	72	1·0	262
Scarborough	38·8	61	8·3	111
Selby	15·2	197	6·3	155
York	66·6	8	21·3	10
Nottinghamshire
Ashfield	10·3	238	10·2	72
Bassetlaw	10·4	233	8·7	94
Broxtowe	15·3	195	5·6	172
Gedling	47·5	33	13·1	50
Mansfield	−8·0	296	10·9	65
Newark and Sherwood	17·7	180	4·6	187
Nottingham	69·1	7	18·6	18
Rushcliffe	22·5	148	7·6	127
Oxfordshire
Cherwell	24·7	133	8·3	112
Oxford	40·6	55	12·7	53
South Oxfordshire	13·1	214	2·5	246
Vale of White Horse	34·0	82	4·3	197
West Oxfordshire	29·7	108	8·7	96
Shropshire
Bridgnorth	36·3	69	2·9	234
North Shropshire	30·2	105	0·4	267
Oswestry	79·7	4	1·4	259
Shrewsbury and Atcham	39·7	56	6·1	156
South Shropshire	11·3	225	4·5	193
Wrekin	11·8	220	9·8	78
Somerset
Mendip	26·4	124	5·1	181
Sedgemoor	29·4	110	6·7	146
Taunton Deane	23·9	138	5·7	166
West Somerset	11·5	223	4·5	195
South Somerset	45·3	37	4·0	210
Staffordshire
Cannock Chase	15·1	199	8·2	113
East Staffordshire	45·1	38	7·6	126
Lichfield	49·9	30	4·3	202
Newcastle-under-Lyme	36·0	73	4·9	183
South Staffordshire	17·6	181	5·6	171
Stafford	22·1	156	4·6	188
Staffordshire Moorlands	23·0	141	−1·1	282
Stoke-on-Trent	58·5	14	19·4	13
Tamworth	26·2	125	2·7	242
Suffolk
Babergh	−0·1	277	0·9	263
Forest Heath	−1·7	279	8·5	103
Ipswich	43·4	42	13·5	46
Mid Suffolk	13·5	210	2·8	236
St. Edmundsbury	30·0	106	4·9	184
Suffolk Coastal	20·7	163	4·2	205
Waveney	20·5	165	7·3	136
Surrey
Elmbridge	6·4	254	9·5	82
Epsom and Ewell	−3·2	287	8·1	116
Guildford	12·2	218	11·1	63
Mole Valley	3·4	268	7·4	135
Reigate and Banstead	18·9	173	10·1	73
Runnymede	5·8	257	12·6	54
Spelthorne	7·8	248	7·6	125
Surrey Heath	22·3	155	10·3	69
Tandridge	35·4	78	9·9	76
Waverley	10·3	239	10·3	70
Woking	11·5	222	10·5	68

	(a) 1981-82 to 1988-89		(b) 1985-86 to 1988-89
	per cent. change	Rank in class	per cent. change	Rank in class
Warwickshire
North Warwickshire	−4·6	288	0·5	266
Nuneaton and Bedworth	4·5	263	8·4	104
Rugby	25·3	130	4·3	199
Stratford on Avon	20·4	166	−0·7	278
Warwick	14·5	203	5·6	170
West Sussex
Adur	21·1	161	8·9	90
Arun	14·3	204	4·5	192
Chichester	7·6	250	2·4	248
Crawley	54·1	19	11·9	60
Horsham	20·1	167	6·9	144
Mid Sussex	10·3	236	4·6	191
Worthing	37·8	65	16·3	26
Wiltshire
Kennet	31·0	101	2·7	241
North Wiltshire	17·5	183	4·7	186
Salisbury	24·6	134	6·0	161
Thamesdown	27·1	122	13·4	47
West Wiltshire	8·9	245	3·1	227
All purpose authority
Isles of Scilly	62·4	1	26·3	1

Rate Support Grant

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost to his Department of administering the rate support grant in each year from 1979-80 to 1987-88.

Mr. Ridley: An approximate estimate for the financial year 1986-87 based on the costs of staff effort and of printing, computing and so on is £1·4 million. The cost in 1987-88 may be about £1·2 million. These estimates do not include certain other costs, such as accommodation, which cannot easily be attributed to particular functions. Consistent figures for earlier years are not available.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the rate poundage implied for each authority at taxpayer level by the rate support grant for 1988-89, assuming that each authority meets his Department's spending assumption, with no additions to or withdrawals from funds or balances, and assuming 1987-88 penny rate products; and if he will list, on a class and ranked basis, each authority's 1987-88 rate poundage, showing the difference between 1987-88 poundage and the implied one for 1988-89 and showing the resulting percentage change.

Mr. Ridley: I have today placed the information in the Library.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes were made to the method of calculating grant-related expenditure in each rate support grant settlement from 1981-82 to 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: Changes to the method of calculating grant related expenditure assessment in each rate support grant settlement are as follows:

1982-83

Changes to GRE components for:

Education

increase the weight given to additional educational needs double the weighting of ethnic minorities within the additional educational needs indicator to introduce a component for the young u to be distributed on youth unemployment to distribute debt charges arising from p capital expenditure on past years' actual de

Personal social services, miscellaneous to base the assessed need for provision on a estimation against an indicator of housing conditions in place of the previous distribution

Passenger transport

to distribute debt charges arising from p capital expenditure on a past year's actual de and introduction of a new GRE compone negative central total) for:

Interest receipts

to be distributed on all other assessed GRE

1983-84

Changes to GRE components for:

Education

to widen the scope of adult education GRE non-release part-time day courses in ac evening-only courses; but to leave the distribution unchanged;
to replace, in the component for school meal
the indicator of numbers of pupils receiving meals with a new indicator of pupils in fami
head is in receipt of supplementary benefits

Passenger transport revenue support to allocate a proportion solely to metropolita and to distribute this between them on th loaded train miles.

Sports and parks and parish precepts to amalgamate into a single GRE c ('recreation'); and to omit the visitor right from the assessment.

Rate collection

to omit the rateable values indicators assessment.

Coast protection

to change the basis of distribution from pop coastal authorities to length of protected co and introduction of a new explicit GRE compo building regulations — to be distributed number of building regulation applications d

1984-85

Changes to GRE components for:

Education
a change to the sparseness of population indicator need in the component for secondary education to remove school size.
Personal social services
complete change to the methodology.
Probation
removal of the population density indicator.
Housing outside the HRA to include an indicator of numbers in private rented accommodation.
Economic development
to distribute on the basis of numbers of unemployed.
Building control
to divide the control total initially between inner London, including GLC and other authorities on the basis of past spending to reflect the different responsibilities in inner London.
Interest receipts
to divide the negative control total initially between the classes of authority on the basis of past levels of interest receipts.

1985-86
Changes to the GRE components for:
Passenger transport revenue support
distributed on a public transport demand factor and loaded train miles; Normal road maintenance, winter maintenance and street lighting distributed on road lengths, road usage and severity of winter weather; Contribution to the housing revenue account change to the methodology to take into account more recent information for various items and to project separately each major HRA item.
Recreation
to introduce a new methodology based on the product of numbers in need of recreational facilities and the unit cost of providing them;
Cemeteries and crematoria to distribute on numbers of deaths.
Enhancement of the method of adjusting for higher labour costs in and around London differentiating by groups of services according to the share of costs nationally relating to direct manpower expenditure and the local labour content of non-labour costs in each service grouping.

1986-87
Changes to GRE components for:
Concessionary fares
to change the basis of distribution from numbers of elderly to a client group assessment of the numbers in need of public transport and its availability;
Local authority support for local rail networks to take account of all rail services rather than just those British Rail services supported under s.20 of the Transport Act 1968, and change the basis of distribution from loaded train miles to a combination of rail route mileage and network infrastructure costs in each metropolitan area:
Education
to distribute debt charges arising from pre 1981-8 capital expenditure on the basis of all other educatio assessed GREs; and to sub-divide the sparseness population indicator into two indicators reflecti differing degrees of sparseness;
Personal social services
to change the basis of distribution of costs of soci workers and social services central management an administration to assessed social services GRE fo children and the elderly;
Refuse collection and waste disposal to modify the density of population indicator in eac case.
1987-88
Changes to GRE components for:
The police service
to change the basis of distribution to polic establishments;
Personal social services
to combine the PSS categories for children aged unde 5 and aged 5 to 17;
Education
to include fully the cost of pupils, not belonging to th area of any authority in the 'no area' pool and t exclude them from the numbers of school pupil indicators;
Roads maintenance (winter)
to substitute air frost for grass frost in the weathe adjustment factor; Housing revenue account to modify the treatment of an earlier assessed rer increase;
and
Introduction of new GRE components for Airports debt charges
Public transport pension payments both to be distributed on the basis of authorities' actua expenditure.

1988-89
Changes to GRE components for:
Non-advanced further education to include all YTS students in the indicator for non advanced further education students; Housing benefits to modify the proportion of certificated and non certificated housing benefits qualifying for GRE, t reflect changes to be made to the financing of housin benefits by DHSS from 1 April 1988;
Building regulations to change the basis of distribution from number o building regulation applications determined to num bers of domestic and non-domestic properties.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for th Environment if he will list the total of grant-relate expenditure, by service and in total, at rate support gran settlement and at estimated outturn, in each year fron 1981-82 to 1988-89, by class.

Mr. Ridley: The available information is as follows:

Table 1: Grant-related expenditure by class of authority, 1981-82 to 1988-89

£ millio

	1981-82		1982-83		1983-84		1984-85		1985-86
	Sett.	Final SR	Sett.	Final SR	Sett.	Final SR	Sett.	Final SR	Sett.	3rd S
Shire districts	1,243	1,267	1,400	1,374	1,470	1,468	1,414	1,436	1,462	1,46
Shire counties	8,300	8,378	8,934	8,906	9,287	9,276	9,770	9,826	10,442	10,47
Metropolitan districts	3,489	3,528	3,762	3,729	3,891	3,873	3,978	3,997	4,187	4,19
Metropolitan counties	786	802	864	862	927	927	996	1,005	1,186	1,19
City of London	11	13	16	16	17	17	16	16	17	1
Inner London boroughs	573	583	643	628	678	664	661	664	729	73
Outer London boroughs	1,437	1,452	1,562	1,548	1,616	1,606	1,628	1,635	1,708	1,71
ILEA	468	468	514	509	517	513	533	532	555	52
GLC	406	427	481	457	480	464	517	525	549	54

	1981-82		1982-83		1983-84		1984-85
	Sett.	Final SR	Sett.	Final SR	Sett.	Final SR	Sett.	Final SR
Metropolitan police	268	274	338	327	346	348	367	367
Isles of Scilly	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1
England	16,982	17,194	18,515	18,357	19,231	19,156	19,882	20,003	21

	1986-87		1987-88		1988-89
	Sett.	3rd SR	Sett.	1st SR	Sett
Shire districts	1,617	1,614	1,540	1,540	1,601
Shire counties	11,059	11,150	11,628	11,909	12,894
Metropolitan districts	5,040	5,082	5,232	5,348	5,744
Joint fire authorities	152	152	167	167	173
Joint police authorities	328	328	363	363	408
Joint transport authorities	284	282	305	305	303
City of London	24	24	34	34	37
Inner London boroughs	1,112	1,107	1,149	1,149	1,190
Outer London boroughs	2,081	2,088	2,167	2,210	2,384
ILEA	545	547	559	580	631
London Fire and CD Authority	125	126	136	136	142
Metropolitan police	421	421	460	460	498
Isles of Scilly	2	2	2	2	2
England	22,790	22,924	23,742	24,202	26,006

Table 2: Grant-related Expenditure by Service, 1981-82 to 1988-89

	1981-82		1982-83		1983-84		1984-85
	Sett.	Final SR	Sett.	Final SR	Sett.	Final SR	Sett.	Final SR
Education, arts & libraries	9,367		10,217		10,349	10,329	10,624	10,650	11
Personal Social Services	1,643		1,943		2,085	2,081	2,205	2,208	2
Law and Order	1,479		1,649		1,785	1,789	1,890	1,893	2
Transport	1,286		1,373		1,398	1,387	1,487	1,497	1
Employment and Consumer Protection	100		107		110	110	115	115
Housing	509		591		536	561	514	538
Environment Services	2,176		2,405		2,507	2,470	2,520	2,558	2
Financing items	423		230		461	430	527	544
Total	16,982	17,194	18,515	18,357	19,231	19,156	19,882	20,003	21

	1986-87		1987-88		1988-89
	Sett.	3rd SR	Sett.	1st SR	Sett.
Education, arts and libraries	11,618	11,729	12,576	13,036	13,939
Personal Social Services	2,553	2,553	2,757	2,757	2,913
Law and order	2,152	2,152	2,363	2,363	2,555
Transport	1,929	1,929	2,045	2,045	2,024
Employment and Consumer Protection	127	127	148	148	159
Housing	826	829	825	825	816
Environment Services	2,926	2,945	3,000	3,000	3,137
Financing items	660	660	29	29	464
Total	22,790	22,924	23,742	24,202	26,006

Notes:

1. Outturn figures for 1985-86 onwards are not yet available so latest supplementary report figures have been used. For 1983-8 1986-87 the latest data are as in the consultation papers issued by the Department of the Environment to each local authority 1987.
2. Service breakdowns of the final 1981-82 and 1982-83 GREs are not available.
3. Figures may not sum due to rounding.

Homes Insulation

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to introduce the new homes insulation scheme announced by the then Minister for Housing and Construction, the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten) on 19 December 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: A new homes insulation scheme has today been laid before Parliament. Nearly 90 per cent. of accessible loft spaces are now insulated and available resources need to be concentrated o in need of assistance with loft insulation wo scheme therefore withdraws the rate of gra cent. available to eligible householders in extends the availability of 90 per cent. grants householders who are in receipt of hou supplementary benefit—income support fro —or family income supplement—family April 1988. The grant available will be 90 pe costs of work up to a ceiling of £137, which is a substantial increase over the maximum grant previously available. The new scheme applies to England, Scotland and Wales and will come into effect on 1 February 1988.

Advisory Comittees

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the names of his advisory committees, together with an indication of those whose members are required to sign a declaration under, or who have otherwise had drawn to their attention, the provisions of section 2 of the Officials Secrets Act.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1987, c. 787]: The list of advisory bodies for which I am responsible should also have included the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution.

Sheltered Workshops

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether local authorities will still be able to use the priority suppliers scheme if the Local Government Bill is passed in its present form; and if he will make a statement regarding the relationship between the local authorities' sheltered workshops in light of the proposals on competitive tendering.

Mr. Chope: The effect of the Bill's provisions on the priority suppliers scheme is currently under consideration. Any additional costs incurred in the employment of local authority disabled employees who are involved in activities affected by the competition provisions of the Bill, whether in sheltered workshops or otherwise, will be taken into account by the Secretary of State in deciding whether to act against any failure to meet the financial objectives provided for by the Bill.

Wimpey No-fines Dwellings

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when the Walsall metropolitan borough council will be notified of his Department's decision regarding expenditure for 1988-89 on improvements to the Wimpey no-fines dwellings;

(2) what submissions have been made by the Walsall metropolitan borough council regarding the improvements to the Wimpey no-fines dwellings in the next financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Walsall metropolitan borough council was notified on 18 December 1987 that it would receive an HIP allocation of £6·9 million for 1988-89. This allocation took full account of the most recent submissions by Walsall metropolitan borough council on the repair and improvement of Wimpey no-fines houses, which were made during the preceding HIP round. HIP allocations do not differentiate between separate items of expenditure, and it will be for Walsall metropolitan borough council to determine its own expenditure priorities during the coming financial year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mr. Jeremy Warner

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will invite the inspectors investigating allege dealing by civil servants not to take out an appli punishment of Mr. Jeremy Warner, business c dent of The Independent; and if he will make a s

Mr. Maude: The inspectors applied to the Hi in March 1987 for the court to inquire into the Mr. Warner to answer certain questions put to h inspectors. The House of Lords has now decided Warner did not have a reasonable excuse for his answer. By order of the House of Lords the m now be remitted to the High Court. It will be for to decide how to deal with the matter. It is no inspectors to make any recommendatio punishment.

British Steel Corporation (Monopolies and M Commission Report)

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the L Lancaster when he received and when he ex publish the Monopolies and Mergers Commissi following its investigation of the British Steel Cor

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The report was comm under section 11 of the Competition Act 1 delivered in August 1986.

The long delay in publication has been cause need to consider very carefully a request by th Steel Corporation that the Secretary of Stat exercise his powers under section 17 of the Act t number of excisions to the published report in avoid prejudicing the interests of the corporation publish the report as soon as possible.

Gallows (Export)

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the L Lancaster if he will take steps to prohibit the e United Kingdom firms of gallows and other eq whose sole purpose is use in the carrying out of t sentence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. I understand that gall related equipment may be constructed from items for other purposes and the export of which it w impractical to control.

Nissan

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Chancellor of the L Lancaster what grants have been made available t over the past three months in relation to its ex plans in the north-east.

Mr. Atkins: The Government have offered assistance to Nissan of up to £25 million in respe company's plans to produce a second mode Sunderland plant.

Clothing Industry (Morpeth and Ashingto

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Chancello Duchy of Lancaster what has been the total regional aid granted to the clothing industry Morpeth and Ashington employment areas since regional development grant, regional selective a and northern selective assistance to date.

Mr. Atkins: Identifiable regional aid grante clothing and knitwear industry in the Castle Mor Wansbeck local authority districts since 1975 amounted to £0·1 million. However this does not include aid under the original regional development grant scheme for which sufficiently detailed information is not available.

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what grants have come from the European Economic Community since 1979 for the clothing industry in the Morpeth and Ashington employment areas.

Mr. Atkins: There have been no grants from the European Community since 1979 for the clothing industry companies in this area.

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the estimated number of jobs created or saved by regional or European Economic Community grant aid since 1979 in the Morpeth and Ashington employment areas.

Mr. Atkins: It was estimated that around 2,650 jobs would be created or safeguarded as a result of regional aid granted in the Castle Morpeth and Wansbeck local authority districts since 1979. This does not include aid under the original regional development grant (RDG) scheme which was not job-related and for which sufficiently detailed information is in any case not available.

Note:

Aid from the European regional development fund (ERDF) may be payable in respect of companies in receipt of RDG and/or regional selective assistance. Such ERDF support does not go to companies, but is instead retained by the Government to increase the total level of assistance to industry.

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what clothing companies in the Morpeth and Ashington employment areas have received European Economic Community aid since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: The following clothing companies in the Castle Morpeth and Wansbeck local authority districts have been granted regional aid since 1979:

Hadrian Fashions Ltd.
P. Shapira Ltd.

There have been no grants from the European Community since 1979 for clothing industry companies in these districts.

Note:

For Regional Development Grants detailed records are only available for the revised scheme introduced in November 1984.

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of total grant aid to the Morpeth and Ashington employment areas the grant aid to the clothing industry has represented since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: Since 1979, identifiable grant aid to the clothing and knitwear industry in the Castle Morpeth and Wansbeck local authority districts was 1 per cent. of total aid granted by my Department to the area under the same schemes.

Note:

The schemes referred to are the revised regional development grant scheme, regional selective assistance, support for major projects, innovation linked investment scheme, and support for innovation. Sufficiently detailed information is not available for the original regional development grant scheme.

Clothing Industry (Blyth and

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Duchy of Lancaster what has been regional aid granted to the clothing in and Cramlinton employment areas sinc development grant, regional selectiv northern selective assistance.

Mr. Atkins: Identifiable regional clothing and knitwear industry in authority district since 1975 amounte However, this does not include aid regional development grant scheme fo detailed information is not available.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Duchy of Lancaster what grants ha European Economic Community si clothing industry in the Blyth and C ment areas.

Mr. Atkins: There have been no European Community since 1979 for th companies in this area.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion o the Blyth and Cramlinton employment the clothing industry has represented s

Mr. Atkins: Since 1979, identifiabl clothing and knitwear industry in the authority district was 8 per cent. of to my Department to the area under the Notes:—The grant schemes referred regional development grant scheme, assistance, support for major projects, investment scheme, and support for inno detailed information is not available for t development grant scheme.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Duchy of Lancaster which clothing com and Cramlinton employment area European Economic Community aid si

Mr. Atkins: There have been no European Community since 1979 for th companies in this area.

Job Creation (Blyth and Cra

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the of jobs created or saved by regio Economic Community grant aid since and Cramlinton employment areas.

Mr. Atkins: It was estimated that would be created or safeguarded as a res granted in the Blyth Valley local auth 1979. This does not include aid under th development grant scheme which was n for which sufficiently detailed informat not available.

Notes:—

(1) The above information includes bot assistance (RSA) and the revised regional (RDG) scheme introduced in Novembe RDG are sometimes both granted in re project. There may therefore be an el counting in the jobs figure quoted.

(2) Aid from the European regional development fund (ERDF) may be payable in respect of companies in receipt of RDG and/or RSA. Such ERDF support does not go to companies, but is instead retained by the Government to increase the total level of assistance to industry.

Shipbuilders

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to what extent his Department has subsidised shipbuilders in Great Britain in each of the last five years; if he will publish a list of British shipyards and the subsidy allocated to each; and how much money is presently committed further to subsidise each shipyard in Great Britain.

Mr. Atkins: State aid has been provided to British Shipbuilders in the form of contract-related support through the shipbuilding intervention fund and by the injection of public dividend capital as follows:

	£ mill
1982-83	11
1983-84	30
1984-85	20
1985-86	9
1986-87	29
Total	1,02

The current year forecast is for total payr million. An estimate of £80 million has b 1988-89.

Payments of shipbuilding intervention fu sector shipbuilders have been as set out in current year forecast is for total payments An estimate of £2·47 million has been mad

	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Richards (Shipbuilders) Ltd.	1·19	0·34	0·16	0·88	0·54
Cochrane (Shipbuilders) Ltd.	1·20	1·07	0·79	2·21	1·19
Richard Dunston Ltd.	1·43	0·55	0·03	0·25	0·79
McTay Marine Ltd.	0·14	0·43	0·99	0·42	1·01
James Cook Ltd.	Nil	Nil	Nil	0·20	Nil
Cubow Ltd.	0·09	0·02	Nil	Nil	Nil
G. & O. Brown Ltd.	0·06	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil
Totals	4·11	2·41	1·97	3·96	3·53

International Tin Agreement

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what have been the costs to date of defending the various legal actions brought against the Government following the collapse of the international tin agreement in 1985.

Mr. Atkins: Payments in respect of legal costs by the Treasury Solicitor acting for the Government Departments concerned in various actions in the courts in England arising out of the cessation of the buffer stock operation of the International Tin Council totalled £219,096 at 31 December 1987.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contribution the United Kingdom has made to the International Tin Council since the collapse of the international tin agreement in 1985.

Mr. Atkins: The Government's contribution to the administrative account of the International Tin Council for the years ended 30 June 1986 and 30 June 1987 was £55,071 and £76,117 respectively, and is £73,458 for the current year.

Patent Office (Relocation)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Members for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) and for Harrogate (Mr. Banks), Official Report, column 239, he will reconsider his decision on Patent Office relocation in the light of the decision of the Trustee Savings Bank to relocate to Newport.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As I have stated on previous occasions, the location of the Patent Office close to other large DTI establishments in Cardiff or Newport would yield significant operational and financial ad officials are currently examining the feasibi move and I have no plans to look else moment.

Furniture (Polyurethane Foam

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of Lancaster how many representations he about the fire hazard arising from the use of foam in upholstered furniture; if he will int on the use of such material for that purpose he has received about the availability of al safer materials; and if he will make a staten

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Gentle statement I made on this subject this aftern

Advisory Committees

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Cha Duchy of Lancaster if he will list in the Offic names of his advisory committees, toget indication of those whose members are requ declaration under, or who have otherwise their attention, the provisions of section 2 Secrets Act.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 18 December in the table my Department's advisory bod of those in list A are required to sign a decla or have otherwise had drawn to their a provisions of section 2 of the Official Members of those in list B are not. Membe list C may be asked to sign a declaration unc the event of information with a natio classification coming before them.

List A
British Overseas Trade Board
Export Guarantees Advisory Council
Industrial Development Advisory Board
Overseas Projects Board Production Statistics Advisory Committee
Regional Industrial Development Boards

List B
China Clay Council
Focus Committee on Information Technology Standards
Joint Optoelectronics Research Scheme Assessment Committee
Joint Optoelectronics Research Scheme Displays Assessment Committee
Standing Advisory Committee on Patents
Standing Advisory Committee on Trade Marks Technology Transfer Services Advisory Committee

List C
Technology Requirements Board
Sectoral Advisory Committees:
Advanced Manufacturing Technology
Applied Electronics
Aviation
Biotechnology
Computing, Software and Communications
Electrical Technology
Electronic Devices and Materials
Maritime Technology
Mechanical Engineering
Metals, Minerals and Reclamation
Standards, Quality and Measurement
Non-Metrallic Materials and Chemicals
Process Plant
Textiles and Other Manufactures
Vehicle

TRANSPORT

Motorway Cones

4. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of motorway were coned on 10 January.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: About 30 miles of motorway at 16 sites were subject to lane closures for major maintenance works; there may also have been some closures for minor and emergency works; we do not keep records of these.

Vehicle Mileage

5. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the percentage change in vehicle mileage on roads in England since 1982.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: 22 per cent.

London Underground (Rodents)

6. Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the extent of rodent infestation on the London Underground system.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. This is entirely a matter for London Underground Limited.

London Underground Ltd.

7. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to put any of the work of London Underground Ltd. out to competitive tender; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I are responsible for putting work out to tender.

Parliament has placed on London obligation to see that tenders appropriate.

Drink-Drivin

8. Mr. John Marshall: To ask th
Transport if he will make a staten campaign against drinking and dri

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Christ round campaign stressed the impo avoid drinking and driving, an providing non-alcoholic drinks to g
The July and October phases of th a considerable impact on public att will continue throughout 1988.

British Rail (Electrif

9. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the S Transport if he will make a furt discussions with British Rail on th
Edinburgh-Fauldhouse-Glasgow
Edinburgh-Linlithgow-Glasgow lin

Mr. David Mitchell: British R
whether there is a case for electrifyi

Roadbuilding Prio

10. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To State for Transport if he has any priorities in roadbuilding.

Mr. Channon: My objectives
Britain remain the reduction of tra economic growth, the removal of unsuitable roads in towns and enhancement of road safety. All the programme meet one or more of the them achieve all three, and I have no

Aircraft Noise

11. Mr. Higgins: To ask the S
Transport when next he plans to mee
Civil Aviation Authority to discuss

Mr. Channon: I frequently mee discuss a whole range of topics with

Motorways (Hazard War

12. Mr. Pike: To ask the Sec Transport what improvements he ex hazard warning lights on the motor

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Improvem design, operation and provision a made. In 1988 trials will be underta detect incidents and operate signals a signals will be installed throughout control system.

Manchester Internationa

13. Mr. Hind: To ask the Sec Transport what level of developmen for Manchester International airpor eight years.

Mr. Channon: Approvals have been given which have allowed capital expenditure by Manchester airport totalling £89·9 million over the eight years ending in 1986-87. A table showing the annual figures is being printed in the Official Report.

Approvals have been given which have allowed the following levels of capital expenditure by Manchester International airport:

Financial year	Expenditure £ million
1979-80	8·4
1980-81	7·0
1981-82	10·5
1982-83	7·1
1983-84	10·2
1984-85	11·5
1985-86	17·8
1986-87	17·4

Sources:
1979-80 to 1985-86: Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy "Local Authority Airports and Statistics".
1986-87: Monopolies and Mergers Commission Report "Manchester Airport plc".

British Rail

14. Mr. A. J. Beith (Berwick upon Tweed): To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Channon: I last met the chairman on 3 December and discussed a wide range of matters of current interest.

British Rail Engineering Ltd

15. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the investment in new machinery in British Rail Engineering Ltd. workshops at Crewe for each year from 1985-86 to 1987-88.

Mr. David Mitchell: BREL has provided the following figures for investment in new machinery and associated reorganisation programmes at Crewe:

Year	£ Million
1985-86	2·0
1986-87	4·0
1987-88 (Forecast)	1·6

Figures are rounded to the nearest £100,000.

Investment Finance

16. Mr. Corbyn To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much investment finance his Department has provided for London Regional Transport and British Rail's Network SouthEast for each of the last three years.

Mr. David Mitchell: Investment by London Regional Transport and British Rail's Network SouthEast has been as follows:

			£ Million
	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
NSE	[1]125	125	129
LRT	[1]192	226	241

[1] Adjusted from 15 month figure January 1985—March 1986.

British Rail (Electrification)

17. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretar Transport when he expects the first stretch Edinburgh electrification scheme to becom

Mr. David Mitchell: A full electric servic to Huntingdon and Peterborough has been May 1987. Services to Leeds are now expe August 1988, a year earlier than originally

London Regional Transport

19. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secreta Transport what is his policy towards fu revenue subsidy for London Regional Tra

Mr. David Mitchell: It is not expected need further revenue support after the end financial year, but substantial grants will made to finance capital investment.

20. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretar Transport if he will make a statemen investment in London Regional Transport's in the current and the next financial y particular reference to plans for capital expe Northern line.

Mr. David Mitchell: Capital expenditur the underground is expected to be £199 mi in excess of £200 million next year. Curren Northern line include an additional eight tr and investment of £45 million over the next continuing station modernisation, lifts a signalling and better communications information systems.

Foreign Lorries

21. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary Transport, when the surveillance of for increased by 50 per cent., what percentag number of foreign lorries will be checked fo at ports and elsewhere.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The 8,800 forei expect to weigh this year are about three p total number of inward journeys. Many carried out by regular visitors whose cumu of being weighed during the year are highe

Civil Aviation (Competition)

22. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary Transport what representations he has re level of competition in civil aviation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received r from several hon. Members, airlines, ot parties and members of the public about va policy issues.

Manningtree Station

23. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary Transport if he will pay an official visit to station.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have no plans to

Freight Transport

24. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in connection with the charges made for transporting freight on the rail network in the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Mitchell: None recently.

National Dock Labour Scheme

25. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of the national dock labour scheme employers; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. David Mitchell: The chairmen of the British Ports Association and the National Association of Port Employers met my right hon. Friend on 10 July 1987 and expressed their concerns about the workings of the dock labour scheme.

European Air Fares

26. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further steps he is taking to encourage moves towards the liberalisation of European air fares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The EC liberalisation package came into force on 1 January this year. It is an important step in opening up aviation in the EC to market forces. It gives airlines the opportunity to introduce lower fares, to decide for themselves what capacity to operate, to open up new routes and to compete more vigorously on routes already served, within a framework of fair competition.

It is only a first step. The Council is committed to bringing in further measures during 1990 as part of the process of completing the internal market by 1992.

We have already negotiated even more liberal arrangements with Germany and the Benelux countries. We shall be seeking to build on this in further bilateral discussions with other member states.

Saltash Tunnel

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost of the Saltash tunnel now under construction; and what is its design traffic flow.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimate cost of this 410m long tunnel is £4·2 million and its traffic capacity is 4,500 vehicles per hour.

Hatfield, Waltham Cross and Holmesdale Tunnels

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the total costs of the construction of the Hatfield, Waltham Cross and Holmesdale tunnels, respectively.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest estimate of the final cost of the A1(M) Hatfield tunnel is £30 million. The two M25 tunnels at Holmesdale near Waltham Cross and Bell common, south of Epping, cost £19·45 million and £14·82 million respectively. These figures are for the civil engineering, mechanical and electrical works. They exclude land-compensation costs and the costs of the actual carriageways through the tunnels.

Rochester Way and Sidcup Bypass

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the design traffic flows in the A2 Rochester Way relief road and the A20 Sidcup bypass.

Mr. Channon: The Rochester Way relief road was designed by the Greater London council which estimated in 1980 that the busiest section of the road, when opened, would carry 3,900 vehicles per hour (westbound) in the morning peak and that off-peak and eastbound morning peak figures would be approximately 1,500 vehicles per hour.

The A20 Sidcup bypass improvement scheme was designed for 41,000 vehicles two-way per 16-hour day including a maximum of 4,200 vehicles per hour during the morning peak (1991 figures) on the busiest section between Frognal corner and Crittalls corner.

London River Crossing

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the design traffic flow for the A406 London river crossing.

Mr. Channon: The Thames bridge section of the proposed East London river crossing has forecast traffic flows of 5,700 (low growth) and 6,200 (high growth) vehicles per hour in the morning peak in 1991.

Enfield (Bounds Green—Halls Lane Improvements)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total estimated cost of the three improvements to the A406 in the London borough of Enfield between Bounds Green and Halls lane; and what are the average 16 hour peak traffic flows on these sections of the road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are four improvement schemes in preparation or under construction on the A406 North Circular road in the London borough of Enfield. The total estimated cost, including works, land and fees, at December 1987 prices for each scheme is:

Scheme	Cost £ million
Bounds Green—Green Lanes (in preparation)	76·72
Great Cambridge (A10) junction (under construction)	28·13
Silver Street—A1010 (in preparation)	39·68
Dysons Road—Hall Lane (in preparation)	64.54

The average 16-hour traffic flow along the length of the A406 in the London borough of Enfield varies between 35,000 and 45,000 vehicles.

M3 (Sunbury-Popham)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost of construction of the M3 motorway between Sunbury and Popham.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This section of the M3 was constructed between 1968 and 1974. The total cost at outturn prices, including ancillary works and land, was £46·332 million.

Ferries (Passenger Restraints)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals regarding the carriage of passenger restraints on United Kingdom registered passenger ferries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The master is provided with powers for keeping order on passenger ferries under section 287 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1984. It is for ferry operators to decide whether to provide passenger restraints.

Aircraft (Passenger Restraints)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department has recently held with the Civil Aviation Authority regarding the carriage of passenger restraints on all United Kingdom commercial passenger aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None.

Drivers (Accident Records)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has carried out into the accident records of drivers in the first year of holding a full driving licence.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Past work has focused on the age of the driver rather than the period that has elapsed since passing the driving test. A project over the next two years is identifying the training and driving experience of a sample of L-drivers and reviewing their driving history 12 months later.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to announce allocations arising from bids for the additional £19 million supplementary transport allocation for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Sixty-nine of the 108 local highway authorities in England submitted bids for supplementary capital allocations for 1987-88. These bids have been carefully scrutinised.

Additional allocations of £18 million for capital expenditure on local roads will help local authorities to carry out additional minor improvements to their roads in this financial year, including accident investigation and prevention measures. They will make possible acceleration of some authorities' programmes, maintenance of progress in the face of cost increases on important major schemes such as the north-south route in Enfield and the Penzance primary distributor road and the bringing forward of urban traffic management schemes in Birmingham, Newcastle and Camden.

It has also been agreed that Colchester borough council will be allocated an additional £242,000 for public transport. The allocation of the remainder of the £19 million is still under consideration.

Details of the additional allocations to local highway authorities are set out in the table. Local authorities are being informed individually of their own additional allocations. No authority gets a larger allocation than Lancashire.

The Distribution of Supplementary Capital Allocations for Local Roads 1987-88

Authority	Supplementary Allocation (£'000)
Berkshire	350
Cheshire	150
Cleveland	40
Cornwall	400
Cumbria	750
Derbyshire	700
Devon	600
Dorset	560
Durham	340
East Sussex	450
Essex	400
Gloucestershire	90
Hampshire	350
Hereford & Worcester	120
Humberside	650
Isle of Wight	160
Kent	320
Lancashire	1,000
Lincolnshire	120
Northamptonshire	580
Northumberland	200
Oxfordshire	400
Shropshire	200
Somerset	220
Staffordshire	200
Suffolk	400
Warwickshire	280
Wiltshire	170
Total Shire Counties	10,200
Bolton	100
Bury	90
Manchester	520
Oldham	100
Rochdale	80
Tameside	80
Knowsley	100
Liverpool	400
St. Helens	80
Wirral	100
Gateshead	200
Newcastle	980
Barnsley	260
Doncaster	260
Sheffield	400
Calderdale	180
Kirklees	160
Leeds	100
Wakefield	70
Birmingham	730
Dudley	160
Solihull	120
Walsall	200
Wolverhampton	500
Total Metropolitan Districts	5,970
Bexley	180
Camden	300
Enfield	1,000
Hackney	200
Newham	30
Tower Hamlets	120
Total London	1,830
Total England	18,000

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received following the announcement of the 1988-89 transport supplementary grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have received eight letters from hon. Members or direct from local authorities. Most are about Lancashire's capital allocation, the third largest of any shire county.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report details of the capital allocations for road schemes for 1988-89 made in the transport supplementary grant and give details in each case of the bid submitted by each authority and the allocation expenses as a percentage of that bid.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information for the 108 local highway authorities in England is set out in the tables. The relationship between each local authority's bid and the capital allocation provided is determined by the relative merits of each authority's proposed programme as described in the transport policies and programme documents submitted to the Department and the total capital allocations available.

Capital allocation for roads 1988-89

Authority	Bid £ million	Allocation £ million	Allocation as percentage of bid Per cent
City of London	1·792	0·650	36·3
Barking and Dagenham	8·749	6·100	69·7
Barnet	2·201	1·040	47·3
Bexley	3·619	2·750	76·0
Brent	1·935	1·210	62·5
Bromley	10·671	8·820	82·7
Camden	4·075	0·360	8·8
Croydon	2·696	0·730	27·1
Ealing	15·115	6·360	42·1
Enfield	33·088	22·850	69·1
Greenwich	6·085	3·390	55·7
Hackney	6·389	1·700	26·6
Hammersmith and Fulham	0·285	0·280	98·2
Haringey	10·482	8·320	79·4
Harrow	11·599	9·590	82·7
Havering	2·895	1·280	44·2
Hillingdon	16·610	10·460	63·0
Hounslow	3·267	1·750	53·6
Islington	1·697	0·410	24·2
Kensington and Chelsea	1·653	1·120	67·8
Kingston upon Thames	6·502	5·630	86·6
Lambeth	1·783	0·780	43·7
Lewisham	4·545	2·410	53·0
Merton	8·146	6·750	82·9
Newham	7·434	2·650	35·6
Redbridge	2·829	1·910	67·5
Richmond upon Thames	1·410	0·700	49·6
Southwark	6·848	4·350	63·5
Sutton	7·155	2·580	36·1
Tower Hamlets	1·763	0·560	31·8
Waltham Forest	2·670	1·670	62·5
Wandsworth	7·150	2·420	33·8
Westminster	13·403	1·490	11·1
Bolton	4·780	4·030	84·3
Bury	3·369	2·280	67·7
Manchester	15·554	7·780	50·0
Oldham	9·368	5·240	55·9
Rochdale	4·266	1·300	30·5
Salford	12·250	7·990	65·2
Stockport	2·650	0·940	35
Tameside	3·125	1·040	33
Trafford	4·431	1·760	39
Wigan	5·342	4·760	89
Knowsley	1·909	0·720	37
Liverpool	7·680	3·510	45
St. Helens	2·036	1·550	76
Sefton	2·111	1·160	55
Wirral	3·833	2·870	74
Barnsley	3·399	1·550	45
Doncaster	3·553	1·890	53
Rotherham	2·549	1·190	46
Sheffield	12·009	2·780	23
Gateshead	5·740	4·300	74
Newcastle upon Tyne	9·750	5·480	56
North Tyneside	1·600	1·000	62
South Tyneside	4·522	1·720	38
Sunderland	6·673	3·790	56
Birmingham	19·861	9·570	48
Coventry	7·749	4·600	59
Dudley	6·561	2·360	36
Sandwell	4·692	2·280	48
Solihull	2·216	1·260	56
Walsall	6·548	4·770	72
Wolverhampton	10·267	7·830	76
Bradford	7·615	4·280	56
Calderdale	3·455	1·120	32
Kirklees	6·311	3·450	54
Leeds	7·745	4·460	57
Wakefield	6·568	1·320	20
Avon	14·300	10·450	73
Bedfordshire	8·479	6·710	79
Berkshire	13·420	9·240	68
Buckinghamshire	5·582	2·740	49
Cambridgeshire	12·695	6·670	52
Cheshire	9·870	4·410	44
Cleveland	12·738	8·720	68
Cornwall	9·571	6·560	68
Cumbria	4·030	3·410	84
Derbyshire	8·805	5·190	58
Devon	17·446	9·780	56
Dorset	18·210	10·190	56
Durham	8·237	4·550	55
East Sussex	15·084	6·300	41
Essex	23·756	18·990	79
Gloucestershire	7·340	4·070	55
Hampshire	16·569	10·450	63
Hereford & Worcester	7·270	4·620	63
Hertfordshire	10·699	8·760	81
Humberside	12·642	10·420	82
Isle of Wight	4·082	1·940	47
Kent	40·695	21·610	53
Lancashire	27·421	13·520	49
Leicestershire	18·239	13·420	73
Lincolnshire	6·140	3·010	49
Norfolk	9·880	5·090	51
Northamptonshire	12·440	10·390	83
Northumberland	3·981	1·590	39
North Yorkshire	9·361	5·210	55
Nottinghamshire	12·204	5·520	45
Oxfordshire	10·777	4·440	41
Shropshire	7·897	5·110	64
Somerset	13·713	8·920	65
Staffordshire	13·815	7·570	54
Suffolk	7·650	4·710	61
Surrey	11·681	8·030	68
Warwickshire	7·556	4·080	54
West Sussex	9·444	7·330	77
Wiltshire	6·429	2·280	35

M6—Heysham Link

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he proposes to give trunk road status to the M6—Heysham link; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are prepared to consider financial support through the transport supplementary grant system. Its construction is a matter for Lancashire county council. We concluded last year that there is no compelling case for building the link as a trunk road.

M66 (Stockport)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions are taking place about providing a motorway service station on the M66 in Stockport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. A maintenance compound is proposed at Brinnington and has been discussed with Stockport borough council as the planning authority.

Essex Road—Old Street Stations (Fire)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the cause and circumstances surrounding a fire between Essex Road and Old Street stations on the Finsbury Park to Moorgate line on 16 December 1987; if any inquiry is to be held; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: There was no fire on the railway between Essex Road and Old Street stations on 16 December 1987. Trains were stopped, passengers were detrained and the fire brigade examined the tunnels as a precaution after smoke was reported. However, no source for the smoke was found and it was considered most likely that smoke had been drawn into the system from the surface down a ventilation shaft.

Piccadilly Line (Fire)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the circumstances in which an underground train drove through a fire on the Piccadilly line near Knightsbridge on 12 December 1987; if any inquiry is to be held; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: On 12 December 1987 at about 11.35 an incident, which was not statutorily reportable, occurred on the Piccadilly line at Knightsbridge station. A small quantity of rubbish on the track at the end of the platform was seen to be smouldering. It was dealt with by the station staff without it being necessary to close the station or to stop the running of trains. The fire brigade was not called.

Reprocessed Plutonium (Japan)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 8 December, Official Report, column 120, from which airport British Nuclear Fuels intends to fly reprocessed plutonium to Japan.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We understand that British Nuclear Fuels' current preferred option is to use Prestwick airport for this traffic, which will not however take place for several years.

London Underground (Defect Reports)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many engineering insurance company defect reports were received by the Health and Safety Executive for London Underground lifts and escalators in 1986 and in 1987; and how many were acted on by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. David Mitchell: None. The Offices, Shops and Railway Premises (Hoists and Lifts) Regulations 1968 require that lifts shall be examined every six months by a "competent person". The use of an engineering insurance company is not mandatory and London Underground Ltd. uses suitably qualified members of its own staff as competent persons. If the examiner makes the continued use of a lift conditional upon specified defects being remedied, a copy of the report must be sent to the enforcing authority. During 1986 and 1987, one such defect report was forwarded to the railway inspectorate as agents of the Health and Safety Executive. There are no corresponding statutory provisions for escalators.

Settle-Carlisle Railway Line

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on the Settle to Carlisle railway line.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am consulting the relevant local authorities to discover how important they consider the restoration of the Ribblehead viaduct and what contributions towards it they are prepared to make.

Transport Joint Boards

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the budgeted and estimated outturn where available of total expenditure of each transport joint board in 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. David Mitchell: Those total current expenditure figures which are presently available are shown in the table.

£ million

	Greater Manchester	Merseyside	South Yorkshire	Tyne and Wear	West Midlands	West Yorkshire
1986-87
Original budgets[1]	74·5	81·5	59·3	63·9	58·1	61·3
Revised estimates[2]	74·9	81·5	59·6	62·2	59·5	62·4
Outturns[3]	74·6	—	—	61·6	59·6	—
1987-88
Original budgets[1]	78·8	66·95	46·1	56·8	56·0	59·3

Sources:
1 Rate and Expenditure Return 1987.
2 Rate and Expenditure Return 1988.
3 Rates Fund Services Summary and Block Grant Claim Form 1986-87.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the original and financial expenditure levels underlying precept limits, and the original and final precept limits set, for each transport joint board in 1986-87, 1987-88, and 1988-89.

Mr. David Mitchell: The relevant figures are sho the table.

£

	Greater Manchester	Merseyside	South Yorkshire	Tyne and Wear	West Midlands	West Yo
1986-87
Original EL (£)	74·3	75·2	50·5	60·0	54·2
Final EL (£)	83·5	81·3	59·3	63·9	58·1
Proposed PL (p)	19·99	44·88	44·07	24·27	10·3
Final PL (p)	19·99	44·38	44·07	24·27	10·32
1987-88
Original EL (£)	74·1	67·7	45·7	56·6	55·1
Final EL (£)	75·528	69·054	46·614	57·732	56·202
Proposed PL (p)	12·9	28·5	34·28	14·52	7·82
Final PL (p)	12·96	28·49	34·28	14·51	7·81
1988-89
Original EL (£)	80·0	58·5	41·5	53·5	59·5
Final EL (£)	80·0	64·1	41·5	53·5	65·0
Proposed PL (p)	15·58	26·5	30·35	9·58	10·74

Final precept limits for 1988-89 have not yet been set.

Bus Deregulation (Cumbria County Council)

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the saving made by Cumbria county council as a result of bus deregulation.

Mr. David Mitchell: Cumbria county council's spending on revenue support for passenger transport in 1985-86, the last full year before deregulation, was £1·26 million. In 1987-88 it has budgeted to spend £500,000, a reduction of £760,000 or 60 per cent.

Drink-Drive Casualties

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what private sector initiatives he has supported to reduce drink-drive casualties.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We support and welcome the growing number of private sector initiatives aimed at reducing the appalling toll of death and injury on our roads caused by drinking and driving.

The key initiative is the Brewers' Society's "Wheelwatch" promotion. This encourages publicans to take a more responsible attitude towards discouraging drinking and driving by encouraging drivers and riders to choose non or low alcoholic drinks, offering to order a taxi if alcohol has been drunk, and so on.

Among other imaginative and important initiatives of which we are aware are:

Courage ran TV advertisements over the Christmas period against drinking and driving. Also offered customers free public transport home on new year's eve.

Whitbread launched new low-alcohol beer in December.

General Accident sponsored Gallup poll survey of drinking and driving.

Everards brewery has launched its own versio "Wheelwatch".

Youngs brewery offered free bus passes to custo between 21-31 December.

Shell Oil UK — "travellers' check" shops on f forecourts selling low or non alcoholic beers and wines

Ford Motor Co. Ltd. — "good driving" talks to employees in liaison with Essex police. Planning adva driving courses for company drivers.

Sponsorship of public transport by Fosters lager or year's eve.

Distribution of cards, menus, posters or le highlighting non-alcoholic drinks, by Trust House F Dairy Crest; CPM/Marketing Week; Clausthaler; Licence News; Orangina.

Manchester International Airport (US Carrier Acc

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of Stat Transport what was the outcome of the recent mee between his Department and representatives of the Un States State and Transportation Departments' tea terms of expediting United States carrier access Manchester International airport; and if he will ma statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There has been no formal mee between the Department and representatives of the Un States State and Transportation Departments to dis wider access to Manchester International airport United States airlines. A letter was handed to them January setting out details of a five-year development with a view to providing opportunities for United St passenger airlines to serve Manchester on a sched basis. The plan was developed in consultation interested parties including Manchester Internati airport authority. It is intended to form a basis discussion.

The United States Government will consider these proposals and respond as soon as possible.

Officials of the Department have indicated that (in exchange, as a quid pro quo) we would be seeking enhanced opportunities for United Kingdom airlines to serve parts of the United States market which are not currently open to us.

SCOTLAND

Rural Transport

43. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the availability and quality of rural transport (a) in the Strathclyde area and (b) in the Clydesdale area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Over the past 12 months, two representations have been received about bus services in the rural areas of Strathclyde including one representation about bus services in the Clydesdale area. I have also received one representation about rail services in the Clydesdale area.

Post Mortems

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of post mortems done under fiscal licence for each year since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is only available from July 1984 and, so far as can be ascertained, is as follows:

	Number
1984 (July—December)	2,622
1985	5,317
1986	5,239
1987 (January—October)	4,342

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of post mortems done under fiscal licence in National Health Service hospitals for each year since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I regret that the information is not available.

"Birds, Bogs and Forestry"

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he proposes to make to the Nature Conservancy Council's report "Birds, Bogs and Forestry"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I am currently considering the report and I hope to make a statement early in the new year.

Education Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much each education authority in Scotland spends per pupil per year on (a) textbooks, (b) materials and supplies, (c) computers, (d) video recorders, (e) video cameras, (f) television sets and (g) paper and reprographics.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not held centrally in the precise form requested. The information set out in the table, which has been compiled from local authority financial returns, gives information on expenditure p primary and secondary pupil on (a) text and library boo and (b) educational tools, equipment and materials 1985-86, the latest year for which this information available.

Expenditure per pupil (primary and secondary) 1985-86
£s at out-turn pric

Region	Text and library books	Educational too equipment a materi
Borders	15·64	0·
Central	[1]33·72	[1]n.
Dumfries and Galloway	9·45	25·
Fife	8·81	30·
Grampian	7·94	24·
Highland	[1]37·53	[1]n.
Lothian	7·22	19·
Strathclyde	8·24	19·
Tayside	7·22	15·
Orkney	10·81	36·
Shetland	12·60	14·
Western Isles	12·60	9·

[1] In recording their expenditure these authorities do n distinguish between amounts spent on books and on equipmen materials. In other cases the recording of expenditure on these tw items is not necessarily consistent between authorities.

Cataract Operations

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State fo Scotland how many cataract operations were carried ou in (a) Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland withi the last five years; and what is the approximate cost o such operations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cost of cataract operation is not available. The number of operations carried out as follows:

	Greater Glasgow	Strathclyde	Scotland
1981	1,385	2,320	5,115
1982	1,129	2,003	4,373
1983	1,857	3,136	6,633
1984	1,836	3,026	6,904
1985	1,737	2,992	6,882

Barlinnie Prison

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State fo Scotland if he will give the optimum figure for prison officers and inmates at Barlinnie prison and the actua number of prison officers and inmates at the present time

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: 387 is the approved complement for grades VI-VIII (the former prison office grades)—which will be adjusted as implementation o the fresh start initiative proceeds. The number of grade VI VIII staff assigned to Barlinnie prison on a permanen basis was 388 at 1 January 1988. Because of unusually high levels of sickness, a further 29 staff had been temporarily assigned to Barlinnie from other establishments. At tha date, 21 civilian staff were also occupying specialist prison officer posts.

The design capacity is 983 (excluding segregation and hospital facilities). The number of inmates on 5 January 1988 was 1,015.

Greater Glasgow Health Board Area (Nursing Staff)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the ratio of nursing staff to patients in the Greater Glasgow health board area for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available centrally, but the following table shows the average number of whole-time equivalent nursing staff[1] per occupied bed in each year to 30 September:

	Ratio
1979	1:1
1980	1:2
1981	1:2
1982	1:3
1983	1:3
1984	1:3
1985	1:3
1986	1:3
[2]1987	1:3

[1] Includes qualified, unqualified and learner nurses.
[2] 31 March 1987.

Children in Prison

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he plans to take on the recommendations contained in the report of Her Majesty's inspector of prisons regarding children in prison.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In "Children in Prison" published on 17 July 1986, Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons for Scotland recommended a procedure to monitor the number of children placed in penal custody and to publish annually the information which was obtained. My right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger) accepted this recommendation in his response to the report.

It is our policy that the use of penal establishments for detaining children should be kept to a minimum. We have made substantial grant aid available to local authorities and voluntary school managers to provide additional secure accommodation as an alternative to penal establishments for remand and assessment of children. We are also encouraging local arrangements to reduce the use of unruly certificates by courts under the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975 to commit young people to prison. In 1986 the number of children under unruly certificates fell to less than half that for 1985.

Children subject to residential training orders under sections 206 and 413 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975 are now only exceptionally placed in penal establishments. In recent years no child has been so detained under a section 413 order and under th Justice (Scotland) Act 1987, such placement un 413 orders is abolished with effect from 1 Apr

Information on numbers of children receiv held in custody on remand or on sentence is now in the statistical bulletin "Prison Statistics Scotla is available in the Library.

Remanded Children

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of Scotland how many children under the age o were held on remand in each of the last five yea these, how many were subsequently given sentences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The nu children aged 14 or 15 received into prison un certificates made by the courts under sections 2 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975

	Number
1983	144
1984	138
1985	133
1986	50

No information is available on the number of were subsequently given custodial sentences.

Figures for 1987 are not yet available.

Galloway (Radioactive Contaminatio

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of Scotland what plans he has to initiate a radioactive contamination in Galloway.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Regular s Dumfries and Galloway are included in the prog monitoring of environmental radioactivity in organised on behalf of the Secretary of Stat Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate. recent summary of the findings is in the Development Department statistical bulletin No. which is in the Library.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of Scotland if he will give the name of the membe Forestry Commission regional advisory c appointed primarily to represent the envir interest.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The informa follows:

Committee	Name of Member	Nominating Body or Bodies
North England	Lady Elizabeth Kirk	Countryside Commission
East England	C. Stratton	Council for the Protection of Rural England
West England	R. Jarman	Royal Society for Nature Conservation
		Royal Society for the Protection of Birds
	D. W. Hildred	Ramblers Association
Wales	Mrs. D. M. Raikes	Countryside Commission
		Council for the Protection of Rural Wales
		Royal Society for Nature Conservation
North Scotland	Professor C. Gimingham	Scottish Wildlife Trust

Committee	Name of Member	Nominating Body or Bodies
Mid Scotland	B. S. Brookes	Nature Conservancy Council
South Scotland	T. Croft	Countryside Commission for Scotland Royal Society for the Protection of Birds

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the dates in 1987 when the director general of the Forestry Commission met the following groups (a) Countryside Link and Wildlife Link, (b) Forestry Industry Committee of Great Britain and (c) Timber Growers United Kingdom.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

(a) 27 January

(b) 18 March, accompanying the Secretary of State for Scotland, and 1 December at the launch of the committee's report "Beyond 2000".

(c) No meeting has taken place specifically with Timber Growers United Kingdom. The director general has, however, been present at a number of meetings during the year at which they were represented, along with other bodies.

Scottish Fire Service Training School, Gullane

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the report of the inquiry carried out by Her Majesty's inspector of fire services regarding allegations of humiliation and degradation at the Scottish Fire Service Training School in Gullane.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. The report was private and contained information which was given to Her Majesty's inspector of fire services on the understanding that confidentiality would be observed. However, the findings and recommendations of the report were contained in a very detailed Scottish Office news release published on 16 September 1987, copies of which have been placed in the Library. Subsequently, Lothian and Borders fire board was given a detailed resume of the inquiry and I shall be meeting representatives of the board on 22 January to discuss the matter further.

Hypothermia

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in Glasgow for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Deaths mentioning hypothermia, Glasgow city, 1979 to 1986

	Number
1979	66
1980	30
1981	48
1982	36
1983	37
1984	42
1985	35
1986	52

Fine Defaulters

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will respond to the Association of Directors of Social Work document on fine defaulters.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We shall consider what, if any, action to take on the recommendations contained in the report of the Association of Directors of Work on fine defaulters once we have the results current study of the effectiveness of the 15 fines o appointed to work in the sheriff courts.

We expect the results of the study to be available spring of this year.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of Sta Scotland what proposals he has to reduce the num fine defaulters in prison.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The imposition imprisonment in case of fine default is a matter f courts. The Government have created 15 posts o officers in the sheriff courts and a research study progress into the effectiveness of fines officers in red the number of fine defaulters sent to prison.

Intermediate Treatment Provisions

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of Sta Scotland if he plans to extend intermediate trea provisions for over 18s in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The equivalent to many o services provided for those under 18 and describe "intermediate treatment" is available to offenders ov age of 18. These include supported accommoda assistance to offenders and their families, in associ with non-custodial disposals available to the courts.

It is the Government's intention to develop and ex the range and extent of non-custodial disposals. We reduced the minimum period of a probation order t months and enabled a requirement as to compensatio be included as a condition of a probation order. We also indicated our willingness to change the fundin community service so that local authorities will receiv per cent. funding for agreed expenditure.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State Scotland what proposals he has to reduce the numbe remand prisoners in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The decision to rem in any particular case is a matter for the courts; and number of persons on remand is governed by the co decisions. The results of a pilot study on remands wi published shortly. The Scottish Office is about undertake a detailed study of bail and remand decis and is funding a feasibility study into the provision of accommodation for those who might otherwise remanded in custody because they have no fixed addr

Parole

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State Scotland whether he has any proposals to amend parole regulations for Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan) on Wednesday 16 December 1987.

Mentally Ill People (Prisons)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to reduce the number of mentally ill people in prison.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The initial disposal of individuals on remand or sentence is a matter for the courts. There is now a wide range of disposals, other than prison, open to the courts in dealing with individuals who may be mentally ill or mentally handicapped. In addition, the courts can decide to obtain a psychiatric assessment, in a mental hospital or in a penal establishment, before deciding on the most appropriate disposal.

A number of schemes have been developed locally under which offenders may be diverted to psychiatric assistance rather than to prosecution in the courts. The largest such scheme is in Glasgow and the operation of this scheme is being evaluated in a research study funded by the Scottish Home and Health Department.

The courts have powers to remand individuals, in appropriate cases, to hospital rather than to prison pre-trial or awaiting sentence. The powers to remand untried individuals to hospital have existed in Scotland for many years. A new "interim hospital order", appropriate to certain convicted offenders, was introduced in 1983 and is regularly being used by the courts. Decisions on individual cases, however, need to be taken on the evidence and reports available to the court.

For those individuals who are sent to prison either on remand awaiting trial or sentence or after sentence, appropriate medical care, including the services of visiting consultant psychiatrists, is available. Visiting psychiatrists will advise the medical officer of the establishment on any cases which are drawn to their attention and the facilities or treatment which might be available elsewhere.

The process of transfer from prison to a mental hospital depends on clinical judgment in individual cases. Closer liaison has been developed between the Scottish prison service and the State hospital Carstairs, and with other mental hospitals on cases where transfer to such a hospital might be appropriate.

There are many forms of short-lived emotional stress or more persistent behavioural disorders which would not necessarily benefit from transfer to a mental hospital. Any individual who has a mental disorder which appears to require assessment or treatment ina psychiatric hospital will be carefully assessed. All requests to transfer a prisoner to psychiatric hospital are now monitored centrally to see whether there are recurrent difficulties or any general issues which need to be addressed.

In 1986, 63 inmates in penal establishments were diagnosed as suffering from psychosis. In the same year there were 35 transfers of prisoners to mental hospitals, 18 of these to the State hospital, Carstairs and 17 to other mental hospitals. This is a significant increase in the number of transfers which took place in 1985 and earlier years as a result of the closer liaison which has been developed in the assessment and consideration of individual cases.

Offenders (Alcoholism)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary Scotland if he will introduce alternatives to i for those offenders with drink problems.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am s offenders with drink problems can, upon co dealt with appropriately through the existi disposals available to the courts, both custo custodial. Some may, in place of pro appropriate cases, be diverted from the cri system in a number of ways including refer work or psychiatric assistance or to a designa similar facilities.

Airport (Rates)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary Scotland what information he has on (a) values of and (b) the rates paid by Scottish ai the British Airports Authority in each year s

Mr. Lang: This information is not held suggest that the hon. Member contacts concerned direct for the information.

Road Accidents (Gordon)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary Scotland (1) how many people have been seric in road accidents in the Gordon constituency i last five years;

(2) how many people have been killed in ro in the Gordon constituency in each of the la

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The figures constituency are not available. However, the Gordon local authority district are as follows

	Killed	S
1982	14
1983	18
1984	15
1985	23
1986	15

The figures for 1985 and 1986 have been the annual "Road Accidents, Scotland" series

Motoring Offences (Gordon)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary Scotland how many prosecutions there hav alcohol-related motoring offences in th constituency in which persons have been kille in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I regre information requested is not available.

Paisley College (Lady Lane Proper

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary Scotland why he has refused Paisley college permission to borrow money required in resp property in Lady lane, Paisley.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The proposal submi governors of Paisley college of technology property development at Lady lane entailed a loan from a bank secured by a mortgage on property acquired from public funds. Such a loan would have constituted a contingent liability on the Exchequer which the Government were not prepared to accept.

Student Accommodation

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in the light of increased demand for privately rented accommodation, he will give the provision of student accommodation a high priority in the coming year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Capital expenditure on student accommodation at the centrally funded colleges will continue to be considered against other priority proposals for educational capital expenditure.

Dinoseb

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the use of the product Dinoseb in raspberry production in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In December 1986 it was announced that all approvals except for storage of the use of Dinoseb and chemically related products were to be suspended on evidence of birth defects in experimental animals.

In the spring of 1987 and on the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, the responsible Ministers agreed that the suspension should be relaxed to allow the use of Dinoseb only in Scotland on the raspberry variety Glen Clova for a limited period from 20 April to 29 May 1987 under strict and tightly supervised conditions. Dinoseb treatment is the only known means of controlling excessive cane vigour in Glen Clova, a variety which occupies some 75 per cent. of the total area of raspberry production in Scotland.

Since December 1986 the Advisory Committee on Pesticides has carried out a full review on Dinoseb and its recommendations are now being considered by Ministers; an announcement as to future use of the chemical will be made shortly.

Health Spending

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of Scottish gross domestic product is spent on health in Scotland; and if he will publish what information he has on the proportion of gross domestic product spent on health in (i) England, (ii) EEC member states, (iii) Norway, (iv) Sweden, (v) Denmark and (vi) Finland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The gross NHS expenditure on health services in Scotland in the year 1984 represented 8·2 per cent. of gross domestic product calculated at factor cost. The comparable figure for England was 6·2 per cent. These figures exaggerate, however, the difference in health expenditure levels in the two countries because they omit private sector expenditure on health and because gross domestic product per head of population is larger in England.

These figures are not comparable, however, with the normally-quoted international comparisons which are calculated on a different basis. In addition, different countries have different systems of providing and financing health care, and different procedur classifying and accounting for the expenditure. Su these substantial qualifications, the calculations Organisation for Economic Co-operation Development of the proportion of gross domestic at market prices spent on all health care in the countries listed in 1984 are as follows:

	Percentage
Belgium	6·2
Denmark	6·3
France	9·1
Germany	8·1
Greece	4·6
Ireland	8·0
Italy	7·2
Luxembourg	6·4
Netherlands	8·6
Portugal	5·5
Spain	5·8
United Kingdom	5·9
Finland	6·6
Norway	6·3
Sweden	9·4

Education Staff (Exchanges)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of St Scotland what proposals he has for the interchange at a professional management level between authorities, educational institutions and the S Education Department.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The advantages to be from the interchange of staff at professional mana levels are recognised, but have to be set against th to preserve continuity in such senior posts. There formal interchange scheme particular to this proposals are considered on their merits taking acc the nature and level of the posts and the can available on both sides.

Further Education Lecturers (Pay)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of Sta Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that add funding will be made available to ensure th management side of the Scottish Joint Nego Committee (Further Education) is able to fund an to lecturers of an equivalent value to that given re to school teachers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The level of pay awa lecturers in further and higher education in Scotla matter for the Scottish joint negotiating com (further education), and it is for the management negotiate within limits of what can be afforded. December 1987, my right hon. and learned announced an increase in resources for additional ru costs at the centrally funded Colleges in 1988-89 understand that a settlement was reached for that at the SJNC meeting on 8 January. For local aut expenditure we have already announced a realisti support grant settlement for 1988-89 which provid a 9 per cent. increase in resources over the settleme 1987-88 and, on 8 January, a formal offer was made management side which the teachers' side is considering.

Loch Trool Forest Trail

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who authorised the closure of Loch Trool forest trail on 15 November 1987; and under what powers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Loch Trool forest trail was not closed to the public on 15 November 1987. A military exercise was taking place in the area and this may have put some pressure on car parking facilities, but I have had no reports of members of the public being denied access to the trail.

Bennan Hill (New Building)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the scope and purpose of the new building on Bennan hill in Glentrool.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The site has been leased from the Forestry Commission by Dumfries and Galloway regional council. The building and associated mast have been erected by the council for the purpose of radio communication.

Community Care

Dr. Mooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many lump sums or continuing payments have been made by each health board to enable people to move out of hospital into care in the community, since the publication of circular (Gen) 18 in 1985.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of payments made by health boards in terms of the 1985 circular to enable people to move out of hospital into care in the community as notified to my Department is as follows:

Health Board	Number of lump sum payments	Number of continuing payments
Argyll and Clyde	—	1
Ayrshire and Arran	4	1
Borders	5	—
Dumfries and Galloway	2	—
Fife	8	8
Forth Valley	4	2
Grampian	—	—
Greater Glasgow	1	4
Highland	—	—
Lanark	6	6
Lothian	12	25
Orkney	—	—
Shetland	—	1
Tayside	3	—
Western Isles	—	—

In addition, health boards make payments to enable dependent people to remain in the community rather than be admitted to hospital. Payments also continue to be made in respect of projects approved before April 1985.

Common Services Agency

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the separate functions carried out by the Common Services Agency and the capital and revenue allocations in respect of each such function.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the table:

Scottish Health Service Common Serv
Allocations 1987-88

(a) Revenue allocations
Ambulance Service
Blood Transfusion Service
Health Education Group
Dental Estimates Division
Prescription Pricing Division
Central Legal Office Supplies Division
Communicable Diseases Unit
Management Development Group
Hospital Advisory Service
Antibody Production Unit
Hospital Catering School
Central Administration
Directorate of Health Service Information Syst
Computer Centre
Information and Statistics Division
Total revenue allocation
(b) Capital allocations
Building Division
Other capital expenditure (not attributed to specific functions)
Total Capital allocation
Total Revenue and Capital allocations

Family Planning (Young Pe

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of S what is the conception rate for people u Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The known conception r 1986 was 49·6 per thousand women age

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of S how many health boards in Scotland family planning services for young peop

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This informatio available. It is for individual health boa the pattern of provision of these services which designated facilities are provided.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of S what support his Department gives to Brook Advisory Centre and to other ag family planning advice and supplies to y

Mr. Rifkind: In the current financial Edinburgh Brook Advisory Centre is from the Scottish Home and Health Dep the administrative costs of its all-Sco activities, and £2,834 from the social wor for a study of the help which the Brook staff may be able to give to social workers are HIV positive or suffering from AIDS

Grant is also provided to the F Association, National Family Planni Scottish Catholic Marriage Advisory Co bodies do not concentrate specifically o Most family planning services are pro boards, some of which make special pro people.

	£000
	31,208
	15,426
	3,232
	1,402
	2,728
	1,051
	1,732
	411
	950
	191
	376
	179
	2,402
s	1,879
	841
	991
	64,999
	5,765
	7,034
	12,799
	77,798

ole)

te for Scotland
der 20 years in

e in Scotland in 15-19 years.

te for Scotland
provide special is not centrally s to determine d the extent to e for Scotland

he Edinburgh
cies providing ng people.

ar 1987-88 the ceiving £5,000
tment towards nd education services group dvisory Centre ith clients who

nily Planning Group and ncil, but these young people.
ded by health
ion for young

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to what proportion of people under 20 years received contraceptive help and advice from their general practitioners in the Lothian health area.

Mr. Rifkind: This information is not available centrally.

AIDS

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the agencies his Department is supporting for their work with AIDS and young people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In addition to the general level of support given to local authorities and health boards, the Scottish Office is providing grant in the present financial year in connection with services related to AIDS and HIV infection to the Scottish AIDS Monitor, Network (Scotland) Limited, the Edinburgh Brook Advisory Centre, the Scottish Drugs Forum and the West of Scotland HIV advisory group. These services are available to the public generally, including young people. Additionally, grant support is being provided to the drugs training project at Stirling University, the alcohol studies centre at Paisley college of technology and six local drug projects, all of which undertake work related to the problem of HIV infection and AIDS among drug misusers.

The Scottish Education Department is collaborating with Strathclyde regional council on a project to develop curricular material on AIDS for use in schools within a health education framework.

Brook Advisory Centre

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the level of funding provided by his Department to the Brook Advisory Centre for each of the past five years.

Mr. Rifkind: The grant awarded is as follows:

	£
1982-83	4,000
1983-84	4,000
1984-85	4,200
1985-86	4,400
1986-87	5,000

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State f how many health boards fund young peo planning services through arrangements with Advisory Centre.

Mr. Rifkind: One—Lothian health board.

Abortions

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State f how many abortions were carried out on wom years old in Scotland for each of the past five

Mr. Rifkind: The information is as follows

	Number
1982	2,541
1983	2,521
1984	2,891
1985	2,841
1986	2,819

Examination Results

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State f whether he will give the proportion for each 1979 of (a) girls and (b) boys takin mathematics, craft, design and technology, a who obtained grades A and B.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: From 1986, ordinary been awarded on a numeric, 1-5, basis which is comparable with the previous A-E awards. Par table gives the information requested on A an for the period 1979 to 1985. Part (b) of the information on the percentages obtaining gra in 1986 and 1987.

Percentage of those presented[1] obtaining given Ordinary Grade awards

(a)	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Girls
Mathematics
A	25·7	27·1	27·2	24·1	24·4	24·8	24·1
B	16·9	18·4	15·9	17·3	17·6	15·8	17·3
Craft and Design[2]
A	0·0	0·0	37·5	29·4	13·3	18·8	23·7
B	18·2	0·0	25·0	17·6	40·0	24·8	19·9
Physics
A	38·0	33·7	34·9	36·4	30·6	34·8	36·1
B	20·7	19·7	21·0	19·0	20·2	19·8	19·0
Boys
Mathematics
A	30·8	31·5	30·6	30·9	29·7	29·1	28·2
B	16·8	17·2	15·8	17·6	17·6	16·8	17·0
Craft and Design[2]
A	20·9	24·4	25·7	23·0	23·4	24·0	24·3
B	18·3	20·1	13·8	23·8	20·8	20·6	22·1
Physics
A	31·5	30·1	29·9	31·2	31·1	31·9	32·4
B	17·6	16·8	18·5	16·4	17·7	16·3	16·6

[1] School candidates only.
[2] Craft and Design was introduced in 1984; prior to that the subject was classified as Integrated Craftwork and presentations w to approved pilot schools. Fewer than 20 girls were presented for this subject in any of the years 1979-1983.

(b)	1986	1987
Girls
Mathematics
1	13·7	16·6
2	18·0	16·5
Craft and Design
1	14·8	13·9
2	19·4	22·5
Physics
1	28·6	27·3
2	23·8	22·5
Boys
Mathematics
1	18·8	19·5
2	18·6	17·1
Craft and Design
1	16·0	15·1
2	19·2	19·9
Physics
1	23·0	22·4
2	19·4	19·1

Student Awards

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will amend the student awards regulations so that married women are no longer dependent on their husband's income for grant purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. The spouse contribution (from husband or wife, as appropriate) reflects the principle that a family should contribute to the cost of the higher education of its members, according to its ability to do so. The same principle underlies the requirement for a parental contribution in respect of dependent children undertaking higher education; it is a basic element of the present awards system.

National Assessment (Sex Bias)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to ensure that any programme of national assessment in state schools is free from sex bias; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Avoidance of gender bias is fundamental to our education policy. Care will be taken to ensure that the programme of national assessment will reflect this policy.

Women Teachers

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines his Department issues to education boards to encourage back into teaching those women who have taken a career break; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The recruitment of individuals to teaching posts is entirely a matter for individual education authorities as employers.

Women Inspectors for Schools

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of Her Majesty's inspectors for schools and colleges are women in Scotland; and what proportion of the total this represents.

Mr. Malcolm Rifkind: Thirteen of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools in Scotland are women. This represents 11·9 per cent. of the total.

Rating Refo

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secreta
(1) if, pursuant to his reply of Report, column 815, he will lis determination of age that an adul put to in respect of the poll tax;

(2) why, pursuant to his reply o
Report, column 815, a statement years is not sufficient in order to charge register.

Mr. Lang: Section 13(1)(d)
Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) dates of birth to be included in register in order to assist commun officers in clearly identifying establishing their community cha

NHS (Tender

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secreta if he will publish in the Official Re board managers on tendering a statement on the response.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have copy of the official letter of 11 implementing the programme th undertake.

Mobility Allow

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Scotland how many people in applied for mobility allowance in years; and how many of those ha

Mr. Scott: I have been asked
I regret that this information i

Mentally Handicapped People
Allowances

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretar
what representations he has rece increase in board and lodging allo handicapped.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked
The residential care home limit handicapped persons is to be inc from next April at the time of the
The increase has been welcomed
National Council for Voluntary O

General Practitioners (A

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Scotland if he will (a) list the nu time equivalents in each main cat general practitioners are entitled for part of their salaries under the
(b) give the average cost per whol reimbursement to unrestricted practice for each category of breakdown of these figures for ea
he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 17 December 1987]: The information on the numbers of staff in whole-time equivalents for whom general practitioners are entitled to claim reimbursement under th scheme is set out in the table. Informatio held centrally.

Number of staff for whom reimbursement may be claimed: 1 April 1987 whole-time equivalents

	Secretary	Other Administration Staff	Receptionist	Secretary Receptionist	Dispenser	Nurse	Combin
Health Board
Argyll and Clyde	19·3	—	191·8	21·2	—	12·4
Ayrshire and Arran	49·7	—	80·9	91·5	0·3	17·4
Borders	14·4	—	26·9	11·9	—	0·1
Dumfries and Galloway	11·1	—	48·0	35·9	0·5	2·2
Fife	14·7	—	97·1	90·2	—	13·2
Forth Valley	33·5	—	69·9	59·1	0·4	3·0
Greater Glasgow	41·7	—	458·1	111·5	—	22·9
Grampian	32·8	—	105·6	123·6	0·8	23·6
Highland	22·6	—	43·8	52·6	—	16·8
Lanarkshire	15·1	8·5	239·0	34·7	—	16·5
Lothian	96·6	—	251·7	161·5	—	21·0
Orkney	1·3	—	—	9·8	—	—
Shetland	—	—	—	3·9	—	—
Tayside	36·9	—	97·2	36·6	1·0	16·0
Western Isles	7·4	—	6·0	5·1	0·4	3·4
Scotland	397·1	8·5	1,716·0	869·1	3·4	170·5

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each year since 1979, the total health board expenditure (a) under the ancillary staff scheme and (b) on providing premises und rate scheme, with an indication of the co general price inflation, in each health boa

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answe 1987]: The information is set out in the t

(a) Ancillary staff scheme

£

Health Board	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	198
Ayrshire and Arran	639,534	693,069	757,359	791,997	887,968	922,393	997,
Borders	172,054	187,116	195,475	204,419	237,548	247,009	239,
Argyll and Clyde	708,706	804,783	904,756	1,020,779	1,071,999	1,119,152	1,168,
Fife	702,763	658,641	729,856	714,109	792,665	903,366	916,
Greater Glasgow	1,764,299	1,850,283	1,966,220	2,144,672	2,314,645	2,384,467	2,576,
Highland	372,907	404,411	466,792	514,939	571,649	595,277	651,
Lanarkshire	817,527	937,852	966,472	1,024,439	1,087,768	1,154,300	1,150,
Grampian	885,746	1,016,912	1,087,069	1,094,927	1,222,123	1,319,725	1,374,
Orkney	49,419	48,096	52,638	57,764	58,144	62,967	68,
Lothian	1,571,116	1,757,196	1,793,327	1,859,997	1,998,926	2,129,490	2,158,
Tayside	822,069	937,422	957,375	990,157	1,043,624	1,110,477	1,110,
Forth Valley	464,315	512,429	548,657	599,917	675,847	711,814	733,
Western Isles	62,922	66,905	85,889	98,574	104,934	117,058	124,
Dumfries and Galloway	258,294	283,014	320,378	333,857	363,967	374,838	383,
Shetland	41,040	44,273	62,597	61,612	64,635	62,271	72,
Totals	9,332,711	10,202,402	10,894,860	11,512,159	12,496,442	13,214,604	13,725,

(b) Rent and rate scheme

£

Health Board	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985
Ayrshire and Arran	236,099	242,158	268,633	321,539	326,154	318,609	389,
Borders	87,567	86,413	101,242	106,202	159,872	185,529	188,
Argyll and Clyde	408,641	415,897	496,268	574,190	591,968	587,624	596,
Fife	277,658	303,101	299,735	383,299	438,146	386,865	408,
Greater Glasgow	717,708	770,276	852,966	1,007,801	1,182,155	1,232,859	1,254,
Highland	245,669	278,927	305,532	329,789	393,546	383,257	389,
Lanarkshire	349,445	445,490	558,094	672,548	668,374	750,548	739,
Grampian	563,755	620,114	656,648	686,862	784,309	862,412	864,
Orkney	14,335	12,612	12,555	14,779	17,937	15,912	13,
Lothian	582,146	762,297	914,917	886,850	999,810	1,173,327	1,264,

Health Board	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Tayside	345,289	384,672	421,703	473,035	537,190	544,187	549,953	593,877
Forth Valley	167,215	176,384	182,292	220,230	246,227	249,283	259,391	319,913
Western Isles	33,689	36,840	51,038	52,264	52,471	51,228	69,489	59,768
Dumfries and Galloway	82,692	99,854	108,610	117,988	138,873	141,738	160,613	201,462
Shetland	5,705	10,993	21,321	20,809	18,206	14,659	16,217	16,856
Totals	4,117,613	4,646,028	5,251,554	5,868,185	6,555,238	6,898,037	7,168,010	8,115,999

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give, for each year since 1979, the average number of whole-time equivalent ancillary staff employed per unrestricted principal in general practice, for each health board in Scotland;

(2) if he will give the total, and a breakdown for each health board, for the last full year for which figures are available, of (a) the average number of whole-time equivalent ancillary staff per unrestricted principal in general practice and (b) the number of unrestricted principals in general practice who employ less than their full entitlement under the ancillary staff scheme of two whole-time equivalent ancillary staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answers 17 December 1987]: The average numbers of ancillary staff per unrestricted principal are given in the table:

Average number of ancillary staff employed per unrestricted principal whole-time equivalent

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Argyll and Clyde	0·7	0·7	0·7	0·8	0·8	0·8	0·9	0·9
Ayrshire and Arran	1·0	0·9	0·8	0·9	1·0	0·9	0·9	1·0
Borders	0·7	0·7	0·7	0·8	0·9	0·9	0·9	0·9
Dumfries and Galloway	0·8	0·7	0·8	0·8	0·8	0·8	0·8	0·9
Fife	0·8	0·7	0·8	1·0	0·9	1·0	1·1	1·1
Forth Valley	0·9	0·8	0·8	0·8	0·8	0·8	0·9	0·9
Grampian	0·9	0·6	0·6	0·6	0·7	1·1	1·1	1·1
Greater Glasgow	0·8	0·8	0·7	0·9	0·8	1·1	1·2	1·0
Highland	0·7	0·8	0·8	0·8	0·9	0·9	0·9	0·9
Lanarkshire	1·0	1·0	0·9	1·0	0·9	1·0	1·0	1·1
Lothian	0·8	0·8	0·8	0·9	1·0	1·0	1·0	1·0
Orkney	0·6	0·6	0·6	0·6	0·6	0·6	0·7	0·7
Shetland	0·7	0·6	0·6	0·7	0·7	0·8	0·9	1·1
Tayside	0·9	0·9	1·0	1·0	1·1	1·0	1·0	1·1
Western Isles	0·6	0·5	0·6	0·6	0·8	0·9	1·0	0·9
Scotland	0·8	0·8	0·8	0·9	0·9	1·0	1·0	1·0

Information on the numbers of unrestricted principals employing less than their full entitlement of ancillary staff is not held centrally.

General Practitioners

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for the last year for which figures are available, the total and a breakdown for each health board, of (a) the number of general practice premises and (b) the amount directly reimbursed to unrestricted principals in general practice for the cost of providing premises under the rent and rates scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 17 December 1987]: Information on the number of general practice premises is not held centrally. The information requested on the amount directly reimbursed to unrestricted principals in general practice for the cost of providing premises under the rent and rates scheme is as follows:

Health board	1986-87 £
Argyll and Clyde	698,594
Ayrshire and Arran	439,215
Borders	205,656
Dumfries and Galloway	201,462
Fife	432,400
Forth Valley	319,913
Grampian	947,645
Greater Glasgow	1,346,205
Highland	414,668
Lanarkshire	868,997
Lothian	1,553,867
Orkney	16,876
Shetland	16,856
Tayside	593,877
Western Isles	59,768
Total	8,115,999

Penal System

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set up an independent inquiry to make recommendations on all aspects of the penal system in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1987]: No. Appropriate action is being taken on a number of issues of concern. For instance, we have announced a thorough review of parole, and other forms of early release, under the chairmanship of Lord Kincraig.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Nurses

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing both the actual number and the whole-time equivalent number of nurses employed in each pay grade.

Mr. Newton: The table shows the information requested for selected pay grades of nursing and midwifery staff employed in England at 30 September 1986:

Numbers and whole-time equivalents of nursing and midwifery staff employed[1] in selected pay grades at 30 September 1986: England

	Numbers[2]	Whole-time equivalents[2]
Regional nursing officer	10	10
District nursing officer	150	150
Director of nursing services	920	920
Senior nurse 6 (clinical managerial)	940	930
Senior nurse 8 (clinical managerial)	3,780	3,760
Health visitor	10,240	9,070
Nursing sister II	65,770	61,820
Staff nurse/senior enrolled nurse	109,440	86,340
Enrolled nurse	86,530	71,520
Nursing auxiliary	114,840	89,930
Students	48,130	48,100
Pupils	10,250	10,230
Director of nurse education I	30	30
Senior nurse (education) 4	420	420
Tutor	2,460	2,390
Clinical teacher	3,140	3,040
Total	457,040	388,660

Source: DHSS Annual census of NHS non-medical manpower.
[1] Excludes agency staff.
[2] All figures are independently rounded to the nearest ten (10).
[3] The information given relates to staff in the pay grades shown, therefore, for example, district nurses are included in the figures shown for Nursing Sister II.

Social Security Tribunals

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) of the unsuccessful appeals in social security tribunal cases in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986, in what proportion of cases the claimant was represented;

(2) of the successful appeals in social security tribunal cases in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986, in what proportion of cases the claimant was represented.

Mr. Portillo: The table gives the available information. Prior to April 1984 appeal statistics on representation were kept only for supplementary benefit appeal tribunals.

Social security appeal tribunal statistics are now published annually in "Social Security Statistics". The 1986 edition contains information on social security tribunal statistics from April 1984 to December 1985, and the 1987 edition contains information on social security tribunal statistics from January 1986 to December 1986.

Social security appeals in Great Britain—1980-86

Year	Number of appeals heard and decided (1) Successful	(2) Unsuccessful	(3) Total	Appeals at which claimant was represented (4) Successful as percentage of column (1)	(5) Unsuccessful as percentage of column (2)
1980	10,914	38,441	49,355	44·9	20·4
1981	8,862	41,002	49,864	49·7	22·2
1982	10,195	45,889	56,084	48·7	22·5
1983	11,828	48,739	60,567	48·8	22·7
1984 (first quarter)	3,314	13,557	16,871	46·2	20·4
1984 (April to December)	15,745	58,797	74,542	44·1	16·7
1985	26,689	87,861	114,550	43·8	16.0
1986	31,675	94,163	125,838	41·2	15·1

Notes:
Figures for period 1980 to 1984 (first quarter) relate to supplementary benefit only.
Figures for period 1984 (April to December) to 1986 relate to all social security benefits.

Social Fund

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will announce his decisions relating to the detailed provisions under the Social Security Act 1986 section 34, dealing with the new internal review procedure, indicating how many days an applicant will have in which to seek a review of a decision made by a social fund officer, how many days an applicant will have in which to appeal to a social fund inspector subsequent to initial review being rejected and how many days his Department will have in which to inform claimants of decisions relating to the social fund.

Mr. Scott: The Social Fund (Application for Review) Regulations will be laid before Parliament shortly. They will provide that applications to a social fund officer or social fund inspector for review of a social fund officer's decision shall be made within 28 days of the decision in question being issued. These time limits may be extended if the social fund officer or social fund inspector considers there are special reasons for doing so.

Paragraphs 3052 and 6041 of the social fund manual, a copy of which is in the Library, advise social fund officers that decisions on applications for budgeting loans and community care grants respectively should, where practicable, be decided within 28 days. Paragraph 4043 advises that when all the necessary information has been obtained applications for crisis loans should be decided without delay.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what amounts of money have been allocated to the offices of his Department in Greenock and Port Glasgow from the social fund in the first and second year and each subsequent year for which projections are available.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the social fund allocation for Sunderland for 1988-89 as a percentage of supplementary benefits single payments in 1986-87.

Mr. Scott: Information on the allocations for 1988-89 was contained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November at columns 774-81. Allocations for future years have not yet been decided. Information on expenditure on single payments in 1986-87 is in the Library.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many local offices of his Department have responded either to regional or national headquarters of his Department on the level of their social fund budget; and how many expressed concern about the level of their social fund allocation.

Mr. Scott: About 25 local offices have raised operational questions relating to their budget allocation.

Information Technology Staff

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the trainees for professional information technology posts within his Department are (a) female and (b) more than 30 years of age.

Mr. Portillo: Statistical information on the number of civil servants wholly employed on information technology tasks—as specified in Treasury—Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency guidelines — who are trainees and are (a) female and (b) more than 30 years of age is not kept by this Department.

Detailed information of this sort could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the professional information technology staff in his Department, including programmers, systems analysts and managers, are (a) female and (b) more than 30 years of age.

Mr. Portillo: Statistical information on the number of civil servants wholly employed on Information Technology tasks — as specified in Treasury — Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency guidelines— who are (a) female and (b) more than 30 years of age is not held. Detailed information of this sort could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action is being taken to provide to all those employed in the public service at risk appropriate free vaccination against hepatitis B.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 13 November at columns 361-62 and to my hon. Friend the Member for Warwick and Leamington (Sir D. Smith) on 18 December at columns 932-33.

Centralised Services

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total cost of centralised services provided by his Department to the regional health authorities in England and Wales.

Mrs. Currie: The estimated cost of the central health and miscellaneous services in 1987-88 is £285,966,000. Details of these services are shown in sections B to F of Class XIV, Vote 3, as published in Supply Estimates 1987-88 (HC 227-XIV, XV of 1986-87) as amended by Supply Estimates 1987-88 Summer Supplementary Estimates (HC 16 of 1987-88). These services are not provided specifically to regional health authorities.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what have been the costs of the blood products laboratory at Elstree; and what proportion of those costs have been charged to the blood transfusion service in each of the last five years.

Mr. Newton: Figures for the revenue cost of the blood products laboratory at Elstree are not separately available. The revenue costs of the Central Blood Laboratories Authority as a whole, the major part of which relate to the blood products laboratory, for the past five years have been:

	£ million
1982-83	3·1
1983-84	4·6
1984-85	5·6
1985-86	4·5
1986-87	8·3

These costs are not recharged to the blood transfusion service.

Withdrawal of Drugs

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has as to on how many occasions since 1979 withdrawals of drugs or medically related devices in the United States of America have been followed by immediate withdrawal in Britain, and vice versa; and on how many occasions and for which products there has been a delay;

(2) if he will list the names and number of drugs and medically related devices that have had approval withdrawn since 1979; and if he will give for each, information available to him on the period of time for which they were on such list in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the United States of America.

Mr. Newton: The licensing authority does not routinely hold information about marketing status in the United States of America, though some specific information will be available on particular licence files. A complete search through all such files would involve disproportionate cost. In the United Kingdom 105 medicinal products have had their licences withdrawn, that is suspended or revoked, since 1 January 1979. A list of these products will be placed in the Library shortly. In addition, for a variety of reasons, 15,645 product licences have been surrendered by companies or have lapsed since that date. These include cases where licences were surrendered voluntarily after concern about safety. Licence holders are not required to give a reason for surrendering or failing to renew a licence. A list of products where safety was identified by the licence holder as a reason for product withdrawal could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Claimants

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to place in the Library the remaining information referred to in his answer, Official Report, 18 November, column 573, relating to the number of claimants in receipt of supplementary benefit and the number of single payments made to various categories of claimants.

Mr. Portillo: The information on the number of claimants in receipt of supplementary benefit is not held centrally and is being collated from a number of sources. It will be placed in the Library as soon as possible. Information on the number of claimants receiving single payments is not kept and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The remaining information has been placed in the Library today. I apologise to the hon. Member for the delay in providing this information.

HIV Infection

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what prevalence rates of HIV infection have been detected amongst bisexual and homosexual men attending sexually transmitted disease clinics in London.

Mr. Newton: It is not possible to establish accurately the prevalence rates. Information on the type of clinic at which a blood sample is taken for HIV testing and the total numbers of homosexual and bisexual men is not available. Individuals attending sexually transmitted disease clinics may not admit to being homosexual or bisexual. However, among known homosexuals attending such clinics in London, published work describes rates of HIV infection between about 10 per cent. and 30 per cent. The detected rates among known bisexuals are lower.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information his Department has on the dominant mode of infection by HIV in Africa.

Mr. Newton: Almost all cases of identified HIV infection in Africa are reported to be in heterosexually active adults or in babies. Some cases of infection in all age groups can be linked to therapeutic injections or infusions including blood transfusions. The dominant modes of infection of HIV in Africa are thought to be heterosexual intercourse and vertical transmission (mother to baby).

Pensions (Cash Cards)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration is being given to introducing plastic cards for use in cash dispensing machines in place of the old age pension book; and what assessment has been made of the effect of this proposal on the economics of small post offices.

Mr. Portillo: We have no plans to introduce plastic cash cards as a replacement for retirement pension books.

Health Authorities (Overspending)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations were reviewed by his Department regarding the overspending of health authorities and health cutbacks prior to his announcement of extra funding on 16 December.

Mr. Newton: A considerable number.

Thames Regions (Allocations)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will express the sums of money allocated to the four Thames health regions in his announcement of 16 December 1987, excluding the moneys allocated (a) for AIDS, (b) for storm damage, (c) for the reduction of waiting lists and (d) any other specially allocated moneys.

Mr. Newton: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the additional funds announced for 1988-89. The information requested is as follows:

	£ million
North West Thames	39·6
North East Thames	48·9
South East Thames	44·4
South West Thames	37·6

Lewisham and North Southwark Health Authority

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will advise the South East Thames regional health authority to allocate sufficient money from the increase he announced on 16 December 1987, to meet the currently estimated shortfall of £1·9 million within the Lewisham and North Southwark district health authority;

(2) what advice he is giving to the four Thames health regions as to how the increase in funds to meet the current shortfall, announced on 16 December 1987, should be distributed amongst the district health authorities.

Mr. Newton: Within broad guidelines it is for regional health authorities to decide how resources are allocated between district health authorities.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available to his Department on (a) the number of AIDS cases and (b) the number of HIV carriers currently in the world.

Mr. Newton: The number of cases of AIDS reported globally to the World Health Organisation by 9 December 1987 was 72,004. It should be noted that the completeness and accuracy of reporting vary from country to country. Some countries do publish estimates of the number of people infected with HIV, but the inevitable inaccuracies and the lack of complete data make it impossible to arrive at meaningful worldwide figures.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will direct the health departments covering England, Wales and Northern Ireland to project the total number of AIDS cases to the same date to which the Scottish Office projects such figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland said in his reply to my hon. Friend on 15 December at column 450, the projections of future numbers of cases of AIDS contained in the report of the working party on Health Service implications of HIV infection in Scotland—the Tayler report—were made on a very limited base and are being kept under review. The Government look to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre and the Communicable Disease (Scotland) Unit for advice on these matters. Their current view is that it is not possible, on the evidence currently available, to make reliable estimates of the numbers of cases of AIDS after this year, as I stated in my reply to my hon. Friend on 20 November at column 708.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if any of the additional £10 million to be allocated to the three Thames regions in further recognition of the particular pressures in these areas arising from the number of AIDS patients has been earmarked for the London Lighthouse.

Mr. Newton: The North West Thames regional health authority has approved a capital grant of £500,000 to London Lighthouse following the announcement on October last year of extra allocations for the three Tha regions which have been facing special additio pressures as a result of the large number of people v AIDS they are having to treat. The additional £10 mil allocated to these regions for AIDS-related services, result of my statement to the House on 16 December, not earmarked centrally for specific purposes.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for So Services what has been the increase in cash terms si 1980 in the weekly retirement pension for (a) a mar couple and (b) a single person, with the 1980 s expressed as 100.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is as follows. dates shown are those when upratings of retirem pension took effect.

	Married couple		Single person
	Cash Amount £	Index (Nov 80 = 100)	Cash Amoount £	Index (Nov 80 = 100)
November 1980	43·45	100	27·15	100
November 1981	47·35	109·0	29·60	109·0
November 1982	52·55	120·9	32·85	121·0
November 1983	54·50	125·4	34·05	125·4
November 1984	57·30	131·9	35·80	131·9
November 1985	61·30	141·1	38·30	141·1
July 1986	61·95	142·6	38·70	142·5
April 1987	63·25	145·6	39·50	145·5
April 1988	65·90	151·7	41·15	151·6

Private Health

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how often he publishes statistics on private health provision.

Mrs. Currie: The Department prepares three prime sources of information on private health provision:

i. SBH212 — details on places registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984—published annually.
ii. SH9 — contractual arrangements between the National Health Service and private sector — compiled annually and being placed in the Library.
iii. SBH211—private patients treated in National Health Service hospitals—compiled annually and available in the Library.

The implementation of the Körner recommendations will result in data being collected on a financial year basis. This may affect publication targets. The Department also contributes private medical insurance data to an annual Central Statistical Office publication, "Social Trends".

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence he has on the effect on waiting lists of private health care.

Mr. Newton: National Health Service waiting lists consist primarily of people waiting for elective surgery, and the majority of operations carried out in the private sector are also for elective procedures, but it is not possible to quantify the inter-action between the two.

Benefit Disqualifications

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a breakdown of the number of cases in 1986, and separately for cases so far in 1987, of benefit disqualification under section 20(1) of Social Security Act 1975 and associated legislati showing disqualifications due to (a) leaving voluntar (b) misconduct and (c) other reasons.

Mr. Portillo: The table shows the number disqualifications for benefit imposed under section 20 of the Social Security Act 1975 during 1986 and the f nine months of 1987 — the latest period for wh information is available.

Disqualifications for unemployment benefit under s20(1) of Soc Security Act 1975

Reason for disqualification	1986	Janu September 1
Leaving voluntarily	310,976	231,
Dismissal for misconduct	98,938	73,
Others	9,532	7,
Total	419,446	311,

Source: 100 per cent. count of decisions by adjudication offic

Hospital Beds

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Soc Services how many beds were available for patients duri the years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87, in Drybu hospital, Durham, Sunderland district general hospit Sunderland Royal infirmary, Hartlepool district gene hospital, Ryhope general hospital, the County hospit Durham, Cherry Knowle, Ryhope and Winter hospital, Sellafield.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in t table.

Average daily number of available beds, 1984-1986

Health authority and hospital	Year 1984	1985	1986
Durham
Dryburn hospital	420	427	433
County hospital	60	60	60
Hartlepool
Hartlepool general hospital	449	446	449
South West Durham
Winterton hospital	952	945	938
Sunderland
Royal infirmary	253	247	254
Sunderland district general hospital	708	701	710
Ryhope general hospital	427	396	362
Cherry Knowle hospital	663	672	680

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for the year 1978 and for each of the last five years the total number of hospital beds for each of the following services (a) general medical, (b) general surgical, (c) non-psychiatric acute, (d) geriatric, (e) maternity, (f) mental illness, (g) mentally handicapped and (h) young chronic sick; and what is the total of these and the number of nurses employed in the counties of Devon and Somerset.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the tables.

Average available beds in National Health Service hospitals

Specialty or specialty group and county	1978	1982	Year 1983	1984	1985	1986
General medicine[1]
Devon	439	460	484	463	471	454
Somerset	177	165	159	148	173	166
General surgery
Devon	539	569	538	505	494	513
Somerset	172	151	172	158	157	158
Other acute specialties
Devon	2,126	2,100	2,105	2,122	2,114	2,129
Somerset	670	716	719	748	707	725
Geriatric
Devon	1,357	1,374	1,361	1,342	1,349	1,351
Somerset	515	513	508	511	506	479
Maternity specialties
Devon	352	345	345	344	342	330
Somerset	137	134	135	135	120	129
Mental illness specialties
Devon	1,697	1,423	1,427	1,306	1,319	1,180
Somerset	1,271	1,120	1,108	1,103	1,076	1,055
Mental handicap
Devon	1,303	1,226	1,179	994	808	748
Somerset	553	523	513	497	454	384
Units for the younger disabled
Devon	50	56	56	56	54	53
Somerset	26	26	26	26	26	26
All specialties
Devon	7,863	7,553	7,495	7,130	6,951	6,755
Somerset	3,520	3,347	3,339	3,326	3,219	3,121

[1] Figures for 1978 are not comparable with those for later years, due to a change of specialty definitions in 1979.

Note: For the county of Devon figures for Exeter, North Devon, Plymouth and Torbay DHAs have been used. (Devon AHA figures used for the 1978 figures). As regards Somerset, figures for Somerset DHA (Somerset AHA for 1978) have been used.

Nursing and midwifery staff in post-Devon and Somerset counties 30 September

	Whole time equivalent[1] Devon[2]	Somerset[2]
1978	7,400	2,890
1982	8,530	3,190
1983	8,630	3,220
1984	8,490	3,230
1985	8,870	3,270
1986	9,010	3,270

Source: DHSS annual census of NHS non-medical manpower.

[1] All figures are independently rounded to the nearest ten (10) whole-time equivalents.

[2] Figures for 1978 relate to the Devon and Somerset area health authorities respectively. Figures for 1982-86 are as follows:

Devon county comprises the sum of the North Devon, Plymouth, Torbay and Exeter district health authorities.
Somerset county comprises Somerset district health authority.

Drug Centres (Durham)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures he is taking to establish drug advice centres in the county of Durham.

Mrs. Currie: Local health authorities are responsible for the provision of services for drug misusers. Since 1986-87, regional health authorities have been allocated an extra £5 million a year specifically for the development of these services. Funds from this allocation have been used to set up advice and counselling services in South West Durham, North West Durham and Darlington health authorities; a limited advice and counselling service is also available in Durham health authority. for more information, the hon. Member may like to contact the chairmen of these authorities.

Hospital Car Services

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will recommend to health authorities that they should reimburse drivers in the hospital car service at rates at least equal to the rates notified annually by his Department, based upon those agreed by the General Whitley council for National Health Service staff;

(2) if he will list those health authorities which reimburse drivers in the hospital car services at rates below those agreed by the General Whitley council.

Mrs. Currie: Each year the Department recommends to health authorities mileage rates for volunteer hospital car service drivers comparable to those agreed for health service staff. The rates adopted are a matter for authorities to decide in the light of local circumstances. Information about the amount per mile paid by individual authorities is not collected centrally.

Conception Rate (Young People)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Service, what is the conception rate for people under 20 years in England and Wales.

Mr. Newton: During 1985 there were 61·7 conceptions to women aged under 20 per 1,000 women aged 15 to 19 resident in England and Wales. This figure includes conceptions leading to maternities or to abortions under the 1967 Act, but excludes conceptions leading to spontaneous abortions.

Unemployed Councillors

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of successful appeal by Councillor Mike Hannon of Warrington borough council to the social security appeal tribunal in September 1987, he will introduce legislation to provide that expenses allowed to unemployed councillors should include those incurred in the course of their duties outside official council meetings.

Mr. Portillo: No. It is a matter for the independent adjudication authorities to interpret the regulations in individual cases.

Community Programme

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State fo Services what plans he has to seek to change the l to allow his Department to withhold benef claimants who refuse offers of places on the co programme.

Mr. Portillo: There are no plans to change 20(1)(b) of the Social Security Act 1975 under person may be disqualified for receiving unemp benefit if, without good cause, he refuses an suitable employment.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State fo Services whether, in the light of the judgmen European Court in the Clarke case, he will now claims to severe disablement allowance from mar cohabiting women who fulfilled the conditions contributory invalidity pension in 1984, other household duties test, but were wrongly denie disablement allowance as from 22 December 198 discriminatory provisions of the transitional reg (b) make extra-statutory payments to such wom making new claims to severe disablement allow compensate them for non-payment of that benefit December 1984, (c) exercise his discretion regulation 9(6) of the Claims and Payments Reg to treat all claims for non-contributory invalidity received from such women in 1984 and 1985 as cl severe disablement allowance, and (d) exer discretion under regulation 9(1) of the same regul treat all claims for (i) unemployment benefit, (ii) benefit, (iii) invalidity benefit and (iv) maternity a received from such women in 1984 and 1985 as cl severe disablement allowance; and if he will statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my rep on 5 November 1987 at column 869. We in discharge our legal obligation to pay women entitlement to severe disablement allowan established by the judgment of the European Justice in the case of Mrs. J. B. Clarke. I am adv this applies to married women who had a claim founded on entitlement to non-contributory i pension, between the earliest date for claimi (10.9.84) and the latest date for claiming NCIP (and the claim failed because of the household d or has awaited decision pending the judgment. Th include claims to NCIP treated as claims to SD regulation 9(6) of the Claims and Payments Reg 1979. Central records indicate that there were so to 4,000 such women.

Claims to unemployment benefit, sickness invalidity benefit and maternity allowance whi during this period would have been treated also to SDA where appropriate in accordance with re 9(1) of the same regulations. If, because of the h duties test these SDA claims also failed, they been included within the 3,000 to 4,000.

Because the women who may benefit fr judgment are identifiable from central records, being contacted individually which obviates the a wider invitation to submit claims. Inquiries wil made to establish whether any payment is due, both currently and for any periods since 22 December 1984. Extra-statutory payments will be made where necessary.

Income Support Regulations

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the reasons for each of the differences between the provisions of the Income Support (Transitional) Regulations 1987 and the draft which was made available at the beginning of November 1987.

Mr. Scott: After the draft version of the Income Support (Transitional) Regulations 1987 had been placed in the Library on 3 November, legal advice led to a number of technical and drafting changes to ensure that the regulations more accurately reflected the original policy intentions.

Yorkshire RHA (Allocation)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much of the recently announced additional £4·7 million for the Yorkshire regional health authority will be allocated to (a) the designated new liver transplant centre, (b) the child cancer unit at St. James's hospital and (c) the current Leeds Western budget deficit.

Mrs. Currie: It is for the Yorkshire regional hea authority to decide how the £4·7 million will be allocat within the region. I understand that an announcement h not yet been made by the regional health authority. T hon. Member may wish to approach the regional chairm for the information he is seeking.

The hon. Member may wish to know, however, that from 1 April 1988 the liver transplant centre will be designated supra-regional service. As such it will rece central funding of £287,000 for 1988-89 in addition to current district allocation of £287,000 in 1987-88, a to therefore of £574,000 for 1988-89.

Illegitimate Babies

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Soc Services if he will give, for each year from 1975 onwar the numbers of livebirths of jointly registered illegitim babies in England and Wales with fathers wh occupations were classified as (a) social class I, (b) soc class II, (c) social class III non-manual, (d) social cl III manual, (e) social class IV, (f) social class (g) armed services and (h) students, unoccupied and occupations not included in (a) to (g).

Mrs. Currie: The figures are shown in the table.

Jointly registered illegitimate live births by social class of father 1975-86
England and Wales

Year	All classes	I	II	IIIN	IIIM	IV	V	Armed Forces	Othe includi not stat
1975	26·9	0·8	2·8	1·6	11·8	6·1	2·7	0·4	0
1976	27·4	0·6	3·1	1·6	12·7	5·8	2·8	0·3	0
1977	29·3	0·8	3·5	1·4	12·9	6·7	3·2	0·4	0
1978	32·8	0·8	4·0	1·9	14·8	7·0	3·2	0·4	0
1979	38·3	0·8	4·7	2·3	17·0	7·2	5·2	0·4	0
1980	44·2	1·0	5·0	2·7	19·6	8·6	6·1	0·4	1
1981	47·1	1·0	5·2	3·0	20·6	8·7	6·9	0·5	1
1982	53·4	1·0	6·1	3·5	22·6	10·1	8·1	0·6	1
1983	60·8	1·0	7·2	3·7	25·4	11·7	9·3	0·8	1
1984	69·9	1·3	7·9	4·6	29·3	13·2	10·3	0·7	2
1985	81·8	1·5	9·1	5·0	34·6	15·3	12·2	0·7	3
1986	93·5	2·0	11·3	5·8	38·3	18·2	13·6	0·8	3

Note: Figures are based on a 10 per cent. sample of birth registrations.

Mental Hospital Admissions

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the comparative rates of admission to mental hospital for black and white people in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that statistics on admissions to mental illness hospitals subdivided into categories by race are not collected centrally.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the rates of admission to mental hospital for (a) men and (b) women.

Mrs. Currie: In 1986 the rates of admission into National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units in England were 364 male admissions per 100,000 male population and 468 female admissions per 100,000 female population.

Specialist Advisory Staff

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State Social Services how many specialist advisory staff at Department's headquarters have a background in (a) physical health and (b) mental health.

Mrs. Currie: The following table shows the numbers specialist advisory staff at the Department's headquart who have backgrounds in either physical or mental hea

Civil Servants	Physical Health	Mental He
Doctors	103
Dentists	36
Nurses	30
Therapists	6

In addition, the chief medical officer is able to call u 47 consultant advisers, two of whom have background mental health.

NHS (London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the resource allocation working party formula at national and each regional level in respect of the four Thames regions, further to his statement of 16 November 1987.

Mr. Newton: The allocation formula devised by the resource allocation working party is described in its report "Sharing Resources for Health in England", a copy of which is in the Library.

Target allocations are arrived at by reference to regional health authority populations weighted to take account of age and sex distribution and the geographical incidence of different conditions requiring health care resources. The pace of change towards targets is decided by Ministers each year, in the light of the additional resources available.

In 1988-89 the Thames regions will again benefit from the £15 million special fund; and they will also receive the bulk of the additional funds made available in recognition of the special pressures arising from AIDS and HIV infection.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, by district, the allocations for AIDS, general funding and storm damage for each London health authority following his announcement of 16 December 1987.

Mr. Newton: Allocations to districts are a matter for regional health authorities. The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairmen of the four Thames regional health authorities for this information.

Great Ormond Street Hospital

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to how many patients from the Trent health authority have in the last three years been treated at Great Ormond street hospital.

Mrs. Currie: Reliable estimates cannot be made from the sample data held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Hospitals for Sick Children Special Health Authority for the information.

West Midlands RHA

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the additional sum for the West Midlands regional health authority which he announced on 16 December, Official Report, column 1104, will be paid to the regional health authority; and if there are any restrictions on its use.

Mrs. Currie: The West Midlands regional health authority was informed on 16 December that its share of the additional funds available this year was £6·7 million. Formal notification that the region's cash limit had been increased by this amount was issued on 4 January.

It is for the regional health authority to determine how the funds available should be distributed. We are, however, requiring it to ensure that the additional resources are used where necessary to maintain established services, to assist where hospital services are being reorganised for the future, and to secure a sound financial base on which to build plans for 1988-89.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of S Services how many persons according to th had been waiting (a) nought to two month five months, (c) six to eight months, ( months, (e) 12 to 14 months and 15 mont admission to hospital in each of the mai each district health authority.

Mr. Newton: A copy of the September 19 booklet will be placed in the Library as available.

Census Information

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of S Services what is the estimated number of p in the United Kingdom who were born in ( Latvia and (c) Lithuania; and why the i country of birth of such residents is recor purposes.

Mrs. Currie: The information requ recorded. All people enumerated in the c state the present name of their country of who recorded that they were born in Eston Lithuania were given the same code as pers USSR.

Pregnancy Testing

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of S Services what representations he has receiv the proposal by Cambridge health authority pregnancy testing service at Addenbroo Cambridge.

Mrs. Currie: We have received one letter an hon. Member.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of S Services (1) what is his policy on the pro pregnancy testing by health authorities; make a statement;

(2) which health authorities provide f testing services; and which health authoriti to provide this service in the last 12 month

Mrs. Currie: Information on free preg services is not held centrally.

Where health authorities offer general direct access to pathology facilities, then th exists for the provision of pregnancy te charge, if the practitioner feels this is appro authorities may also offer free pregnanc patients of family planning clinics, and are importance of facilities being readily ava prompt confirmation of pregnancy, and a of care. This was recommended by the firs Maternity Services Advisory Committee stressed the need for each woman to be a thoroughly, with those who will be respo care, any medical or social factors which course of the pregnancy, and agree a suita care. We have commended this report to hea for their consideration as to the action wh should be taken locally to improve service

Leukaemia Clusters (Cumbria)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent any studies he has commissioned into leukaemia clusters in Cumbria have taken account of any possible effects from the consumption of radioactive milk or other substances after the Windscale fire of October 1957.

Mrs. Currie: The independent expert Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment reported in 1986 on the incidence of cancer in West Cumbria. This report was based on evidence — both published and unpublished — of estimated radiation doses to the public from all sources, including radioactive milk, over the period 1951 to 1982 including the effects of the Windscale fire of 1957.

Cancer

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of the fact that the request for funding in respect of the "Quest for a Test for Cancer" is to cover improved cytology, he will reconsider his decision to delay responding to this application; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No. The reasons for deferring a decision were set out in my reply to the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) on 17 December 1987 at columns 712-73 and they still apply. Decisions will be made as soon as possible.

Hospitals and Extensions

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all new hospitals and new hospital extensions built during the past five years which are not yet fully in use because of staff shortages.

Mrs. Currie: I regret we do not routinely collect such information centrally.

Wealth and Poverty (Report)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what response he intends to make to the report of the Family Policy Studies Centre on wealth and poverty in Britain.

Mr. Portillo: We will study the report with interest.

Dental Examinations and Eyesight Tests

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many letters he has received supporting his proposal to introduce charges for (a) dental examinations and (b) the eyesight test.

Mr. Newton: About 900 representations have been received on the proposals to restrict the NHS sight test to certain groups and to introduce a charge for the NHS dental examination, subject to numerous exemptions in line with those for other dental charges. They are generally opposed to the proposals, but do not appear to oppose also the substantially increased expenditure on family practitioner services, including the many improvements proposed in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health", which the dental and sight test proposals will help to finance.

Radiotherapy Units (Southend and Oldchurc

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Services what representations he has received proposals to close the Southend and Old radiotherapy units; what discussions he has had w North East Thames regional health authority abo proposals; and upon what basis the level of provi radiotherapy services is determined.

Mrs. Currie: We have received tens of thous representations from members of the public abou proposals. Following local opposition to the closur Southend radiotherapy unit, the North East T regional health authority has now put the matter right hon. Friend for his final decision.

Health authorities are expected to provide radio services on the basis of what best serves the patie Department's guidance on ways in which such should be organised is currently under review.

Community Charge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State fo Services whether, in calculating personal incor board and lodging provided as part of the support time volunteers will be disregarded in assessing and eligibility for rebates of community charge.

Mr. Scott: The details of the community charg scheme have yet to be decided, but the present in is that the procedures for calculating entitlement to should follow as closely as practicable the provisio Housing Benefit (General) Regulations 1987. Re 35(5) of these regulations provides that the proced assessing notional income shall not apply in the c person claiming housing benefit who is engage charitable or voluntary body, or who is a volunte appropriate authority is satisfied that it is reason him to provide his services free of charge.

Benefit Rates

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State fo Services if he will give for single adult ma supplementary benefit or national assistance a sickness or unemployment benefit as a percen average weekly earnings for the last 30 years fo figures are available.

Mr. Portillo: The information required is ava sections 5 and 6 of the "Abstract of Statistics for Retail Prices, Average Earnings, Social Security and Contributions," published by the Department of which is in the Library.

Overseas Visitors (NHS Treatment)

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State fo Services whether he has any plans to ame regulations which govern National Health treatment for overseas visitors; and if he will statement.

Mr. Newton: Under the National Health (Charges to Overseas Visitors) Regulations 1982, a range of visitors who are exempt from charges. F subject to charge, treatment at or following any r from a special clinic for the treatment of transmitted diseases is nevertheless exempt from

We have concluded this exemption is too widely defined. Regulations being laid today redefine the exemption as being for treatment at such a special clinic or treatment for a sexually transmitted disease following a reference from such a clinic. They also restrict the exemption, in the case of infection with any human immunodeficiency virus, to diagnosis and counselling only and introduce a specific charge for any drug or medicine designed to treat such a virus and supplied to non-exempt overseas visitors as out-patients. Equivalent regulations are being laid for Scotland.

Consultants

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, by specialty and for each regional health authority in England and Wales, what was (a) the number of consultants employed on full-time contracts, (b) the number of consultants employed on part-time contracts, (c) the number of hours worked by full-time consultants and (d) the number of hours worked by part-time consultants.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information in the precise form requested is not available, since we do not hold information on hours worked by consultants. However, such information as is readily available is given in two tables which I have placed in the Library. The first shows for each specialty and for each of the English regional health authorities and for Wales, the numbers of consultants at 30 September 1986 in the following categories:

i. Whole-time;
ii. maximum part-time;
iii. other part-time, distinguishing between those with nine sessions, those with less than nine sessions, and those on the doctors' retainer scheme; and
iv. doctors with honorary consultant contracts.

The second gives, again for each specialty and region, the average number of sessions for which consultants are contracted, distinguishing between thos or maximum part-time contracts and part-time or honorary contracts.

Contaminated Blood Prod

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secre Social Services when he will answer the hon. Member for Birkenhead on 17 concerning the date Ministers were firs dangers of HIV infection from con products and asking for details of pr given to haemophilia centres regarding 1983.

Mr. Newton: I am replying to the ho

Babies (Birthweight)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secre Social Services if he will list the numb below 2,500 g for each of the last 10 years this data as a percentage of all births; an the social class of these babies by the c

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 9
Information on birthweight from ann DHSS form LHS 27/1 is given in table 1 not identify the social class of baby or

Information on birthweight from the births was first collected by the Offic Censuses and Surveys in 1975. The lev recording rose, and data were first pu when 87 per cent. of live births had a s Table 2, therefore, shows figures for li from 1980 to 1985, the latest year avail

Information on social class for illegiti shown as this is not collected on a compa for legitimate births. The social class d are derived from a sample of live births

Table 1
Number of live and still births of 2,500 grams and under birthweight and percentages of all births. England and W

Year	Livebirths 2,500g and under	Percentage of all livebirths	Stillbirths 2,500g and under	Percentage all stillbirt
1976	37,463	6·4	3,524	62
1977	36,917	6·5	3,462	65
1978	39,146	6·6	3,302	63
1979	43,028	6·7	3,316	65
1980	44,764	6·8	3,152	66
1981	43,079	6·8	2,751	66
1982	42,726	6·8	2,418	62
1983	42,568	6·8	2,282	63
1984	43,132	6·8	2,291	63
1985	44,531	6·8	2,282	63
1986	45,473	6·9	2,225	62

Source: DHSS, annual summaries of LHS 27/1 returns.

Table 2 Legitimate livebirths by birthweight and social class 1980-85
Live births England and Wales

Social class	All births	Birthweight (grams) Total stated birthweight	Under 2,500	Percentage under 2,500
1980
I-V	558,938	480,895	30,330	6·3
I	40,803	35,473	1,882	5·3
II	123,586	107,857	5,680	5·3
IIIN	61,902	52,595	3,025	5·8
IIIM	212,279	181,843	11,991	6·6
IV	87,669	74,946	5,468	7·3
V	32,669	28,181	2,284	8·1
Other	19,924	16,758	1,031	6·2
1981
I-V	53,376	508,347	31,194	6·1
I	41,064	39,252	2,149	5·5
II	122,249	116,317	5,542	4·8
IIIN	60,394	57,554	3,026	5·3
IIIM	198,234	188,871	12,299	6·5
IV	79,880	76,220	5,639	7·4
V	31,555	30,133	2,539	8·4
Other	20,150	19,267	1,209	6·3
1982
I-V	516,946	492,446	30,526	6·2
I	40,894	39,022	2,091	5·4
II	118,383	113,148	6,206	5·5
IIIN	58,021	55,289	3,113	5·6
IIIM	189,654	181,087	11,550	6·4
IV	79,278	74,545	5,225	7·0
V	30,716	29,355	2,341	8·0
Other	20,128	19,367	1,151	5·9
1983
I-V	509,133	508,513	31,135	6·1
I	39,249	39,199	1,951	5·0
II	116,979	116,849	6,393	5·5
IIIN	57,138	57,068	3,071	5·4
IIIM	188,184	187,994	11,536	6·1
IV	76,368	76,258	5,713	7·5
V	31,215	31,145	2,471	7·9
Other	20,150	20,710	1,480	7·1
1984
I-V	504,190	503,710	32,760	6·5
I	39,640	39,630	2,190	5·5
II	115,180	115,020	6,270	5·5
IIIN	57,610	57,560	3,280	5·7
IIIM	185,480	185,300	12,530	6·8
IV	76,380	76,320	6,080	8·0
V	29,910	29,870	2,420	8·1
Other	22,160	22,010	1,310	6·0
1985
I-V	504,800	504,140	32,630	6·5
I	40,000	39,930	2,100	5·3
II	118,380	118,240	6,670	5·6
IIIN	56,210	56,140	3,210	5·7
IIIM	184,320	184,120	12,740	6·9
IV	75,380	75,250	5,550	7·4
V	30,520	30,470	2,370	7·8
Other	25,330	25,240	1,650	6·5

Note: Rounded figures may not add exactly to totals.

Legitimate stillbirths by birthweight and social cla
England and Wales
Stillbirths

Social class	All births	Birthweight (grams) Total stated birthweight	Under 2,50
1980
I-V	3,933	3,363	2,21
I	204	170	11
II	745	621	40
IIIN	387	328	20
IIIM	1,576	1,352	88
IV	708	619	41
V	313	273	19
Other	144	102	6
1981
I-V	3,364	3,066	1,98
I	190	169	10
II	681	610	39
IIIN	335	308	18
IIIM	1,302	1,196	79
IV	576	529	33
V	280	254	16
Other	146	131	8
1982
I-V	3,149	2,792	1,73
I	177	158	9
II	599	518	31
IIIN	334	298	18
IIIM	1,200	1,061	68
IV	590	533	31
V	249	224	14
Other	132	122	8
1983
I-V	2,820	2,777	1,75
I	166	163	9
II	560	552	34
IIIN	279	276	15
IIIM	1,059	1,042	67
IV	535	527	33
V	221	217	14
Other	93	92	5
1984
I-V	2,699	2,658	1,62
I	157	155	9
II	507	503	30
IIIN	267	260	14
IIIM	997	979	60
IV	515	509	32
V	256	252	15
Other	126	120	6
1985
I-V	2,618	2,581	1,57
I	162	160	8
II	485	480	29
IIIN	291	288	18
IIIM	982	970	58
IV	477	468	28
V	221	215	14
Other	155	150	9

Hospital Closures

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of Sta Services if he will list all those hospitals in E

have been (a) closed or (b) partially closed without having been referred to him, and where local consultation has not taken place:

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 14 December 1987]: Provision is made for urgent temporary closures to be implemented without consultation. We do not routinely collect statistics about hospital closures for which statutory consultation has not been necessary.

Medical Records

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has begun discussions with the medical profession with a view to encouraging greater access by patients to their medical records on a non-statutory basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 14 December 1987]: Medical records are maintained for patient care and are used by doctors, nurses and other health professionals to help them in the diagnosis and treatment of patients. The primary purpose remains to record what is in the best interests of patients. We consider that as a matter of principle patients should have the right to know what has been recorded about them, subject to appropriate safeguards to protect those individuals who might otherwise be harmed by the uncontrolled disclosure of their personal health information.

Discussions have already taken place between officials and representatives of certain medical bodies and meetings with others are being arranged. When these discussions have been completed officials will rep for achieving substantive and timely up medical records further on a non-

Breast Cancer

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary
Services what are the latest figures breast cancer in women.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 D nearest available information on the is the registration of newly diagnosed provisional number of registrati neoplasm of female breast ca
Classification of Diseases 9th revisio and Wales in 1984 is 21,474; 13,641 disease in 1986 in England and Wale

"You and Your Dent

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretar
Services what was the cost of produ
"You and Your Dentist", and whethe
a revised edition.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 understand that the copy for the boo the National Consumer Council w budget at £3,000. Her Majesty's published the booklet on its normal no cost to the council. The revision matter for the council. (ISBN 0 1 £2·50.)

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 12 January 1988

WALES

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names of all the people appointed to public bodies by his Department who are currently in office, giving for each the office concerned and the date of appointment.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Hedgerows

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many miles of hedgerows have been lost in Wales during the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information is not available over this time scale. Results from the monitoring landscape change survey conducted by Huntings Technical Services and published in 1986 indicated that hedgerow length in Wales fell from approximately 77,688 miles in 1969 to approximately 70,850 miles in 1985.

Bistre Nursery School, Buckley

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what extra funds he will make available to the Clwyd local eduction authority in order that Bistre nursery school, Buckley, Clwyd, neither suffers cuts in its provision to the Buckley community nor faces the prospect of closure.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is for the Clwyd local education authority to determine its own priorities within the resources available to it. No statutory proposals for the future of the Bistre nursery school have been published by the authority.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit the Bistre nursery school, to meet members of staff, county councillors and parent governors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have no plans to visit Bistre nursery school.

Rating Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if poll tax will be levied against the sisters of the Poor Clare's monastery, Ty Mam Duw, Aston Hall lane, Hawarden, Deeside, Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The position of members of religious communities in relation to their liability for the community charge is under consideration. A decision will be announced in due course.

Assistance to Industry

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his plans for assistance to industry in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall publish a statement entitled "Enterprise Wales"/"M and will place copies in the Library of the H describe my plans for increasing expenditur Office on industry in Wales in the next fin will set out changes to the industrial including the ending of regional developm the introduction of a number of new grant s no plans to change the geographical cover areas and regional selective assistance will available in these areas. I shall also be ma resources available for development agenc confident that the new programme w enterprise spirit and achieve significant im the competitiveness of Welsh industry.

PRIME MINISTER

Polish Foreign Minister

Q16. Mr. Madel: To ask the Prime matters she discussed with the Polish Forei 8 December; and if she will make a statem

The Prime Minister: My meeting wi Foreign Minister on 8 December was constructive. We discussed bilateral and matters, and the internal situation in Polan recent referendum. As the House kno Orzechowski renewed his authorities' invit visit Poland, which I accepted. I hope the place during the first half of this year.

RAF Greenham Common

Q56. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Min next expects to pay an official visit to R Common.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no

Yorkshire

Q112. Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Pr she will pay an official visit to Yorkshire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no

Registration of Deaths

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Mi system for registration of deaths in Englan that in Scotland.

The Prime Minister: The death registrat England and Scotland are governed by sep provisions which arise from differences in th of the two countries and from the different f office of coroner and procurator fiscal.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Prime M information she has about regional variatio wholesale prices charged by major companies, with particular reference to Northern Ireland; what is her estimate of the effect of higher prices in Northern Ireland on the level of public expenditure there; what account is taken of these factors in determining social, employment and other policies in the Province; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Price indices are not compiled on a regional basis. The level of public expenditure in Northern Ireland is determined by a wide range of factors which take into account the Province's particular circumstances including, where appropriate, prices and also wider national policies. The needs of Northern Ireland are reflected in the fact that public expenditure per capita on comparable programmes is substantially higher than elsewhere in the United Kingdom. Social, employment and other policies are similarly framed to take all relevant factors into account, including prices where appropriate, within the framework of national policy.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the names of all the people appointed to public bodies by her who are currently in office, giving for each the office concerned and the date of appointment.

The Prime Minister: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nigeria

Mr. Parry: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent visit to Nigeria.

The Prime Minister: I paid a visit to Nigeria on 7 and 8 January at the invitation of President Babangida. In the course of this I had a long and very useful talk with the President, which covered all aspects of our bilateral relations as well as regional and international questions. I took the opportunity to express our strong support for Nigeria's economic recovery programme. I also put on record publicly the very positive practical contribution which Britain is making in southern Africa. I believe that the visit has contributed to strengthening our relations. I am particularly grateful for the very warm and friendly welcome which I received from many thousands of ordinary people.

Engagements

Mr. Butler: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 12 January.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 12 January.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 12 January.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will li her official engagements for Tuesday 12 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings wi ministerial colleagues and others. In additicn to my duti in the House I shall be having further meetings later toda

HOME DEPARTMENT

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Hon Department (1) what special features and factors are tak into account by the Commissioner of Police of t Metropolis in the staffing allocation formula referred in the annual report for 1986;

(2) what criteria are used by the Commissioner of Poli of the Metropolis as the basis for the formula for t allocation of police amongst the Metropolitan police are referred to in his annual report for 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from t Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that t manpower allocation formula is used as a means allocating the number of uniformed police constabl available between the eight areas of the Metropolit police district on an equitable basis. The formula tak account of the general demands on divisions includi calls for police assistance, the level of crime, the deman of crime prevention and traffic control, and the number traffic accidents. It covers also commitments not direct related to local demand such as the need to provide an and divisional support staff, mounted officers, d handlers, courts' staff and coroners' officers, and speci factors such as airports, the Palace of Westminster an major housing estates.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Hon Department what indicators are used by t Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to assess t demand for police staffing levels other than the formu referred to in his annual report for 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of t Metropolis takes account of a number of factors assessing the manpower requirements of the force. The include specific demands such as reported crime, traff accidents, public order and requests by the public f police assistance; and the extent to which t commissioner considers it necessary to undertake a varie of policing activities including the provision of a visib presence on the streets, involvement in communi projects and measures against, for example, stre robberies and organised crime. Within the framework the programme of annual manpower increases which m right hon. Friend announced in May 1986, manpow requirements are assessed in an annual manpower revie which examines the use being made of existing manpow and future manpower needs.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of all the people appointed to public bodies by his Department who are currently in office, giving for each the office concerned and the date of appointment.

Mr. Hurd: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Party Conferences (Policing Costs)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to make any changes in Government funding for the policing cost of annual party political conferences in 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to do so.

Police Manpower (Leicester)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representation he has received requesting additional police for Leicester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have not recently received an application by the police authority for an increase in the authorised police establishment of the Leicestershire constabulary. My right hon. Friend will be prepared to consider any such application that may be put to him, in the light of advice from Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there are any plans to extend further the number of neighbourhood watch schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There are already over 42,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales. They provide clear and welcome evidence of the public's willingness to help the police to prevent crime. We are sure that there is scope for the further development of the neighbourhood watch concept and for the establishment of new schemes. The Home Office is therefore preparing a further guidance note on neighbourhood watch which will draw examples of good practice from across the country to help and encourage those who are thinking of setting up new schemes or of expanding the range of activity within existing ones.

Charities

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many charities have been investigated by the Charities Commission in each of the past three years on the issue of whether the charities concerned were incurring expenditure on non-charitable purposes; and what was the outcome of these inquiries.

Mr. John Patten: Information in the form requested is not available. However, I understand from the Charity Commission that of 1,000 complaints received by the charity commissioners in the 12 months to 31 July 1987 180 arose from allegations of dishonesty or fraud on the part of trustees, their agents or employees, or of trustees benefitting improperly from their trust. A further 80 complaints alleged inadvertant or deliberately improper political activities including the expenditure of charitable monies on such activities. In nine of these latter cases action was taken following investigations. In eight cases advice was given to trustees about campaigning. In the remaining case the commission required the cost of advertisements judged to be political in nature to be repaid to the charity. Similar information is not available for previous years.

Ministerial Visit (North Africa)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his recent visit to North Africa.

Mr. Hurd: I visited Tunisia from 3-6 January and Morocco from 6-10 January at the invitation of the Ministers of the Interior in both countries. With the object of further strengthening bilateral cooperation, our discussion centred upon combating international terrorism, organised crime and drug trafficking.

A joint communiqué on these matters was issued on 6 January on behalf of the British and Tunisian Governments. The Minister of the Interior of the Government of the Kingdom of Morocco and I signed a memorandum of understanding between our two Governments on 7 January. Texts of both documents will be placed in the Library. During my visit I had the honour to be received by His Majesty King Hassan II of Morocco and by President Zine el Abidene Ben Ali of Tunisia.

I believe that these visits illustrated the increased and specific openings which now exist for reinforcing in practical ways our traditional friendships with Tunisia and Morocco.

Local Radio

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about split frequency broadcasting on local radio.

Mr. Hurd: As noted in our Green Paper "Radio: Choices and Opportunities", published in February 1987, local radio services normally broadcast the same programme on medium wave and VHF/FM frequencies. Approval has, however, been given from time to time to the broadcasting of separate programmes on the two frequencies for a limited period to meet local needs, and in 1985 the Government approved an experiment in which selected BBC and independent local radio (ILR) stations undertook split frequency broadcasting for up to 10 hours a week. The experiment enabled the stations to address specialist or majority audiences, to provide alternative speech or music services and to offer a different emphasis in their programmes.

The experiment has been successful in achieving these aims, and listeners have welcomed the enhanced range of choice that it allowed. In the light of the experiment, the BBC and IBA have suggested that local radio stations should be able to split frequencies at any time at the discretion of the broadcasting authorities. This approach would be consistent with the proposals in our Green Paper, which were that simulcasting — the automatic broadcasting of the same programme on two frequencies — should be phased out. I have therefore given my approval to the proposals from the BBC and IBA, and invited them to proceed with split frequency broadcasting.

ENVIRONMENT

Land Disposal

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department issues to local authorities on tendering to get the best price when disposing of land assets.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. Except where special provisions apply, as in the case of disposals pursuant to the right to buy, a local authority may dispose of land held by it in any manner it wishes, but it must obtain the Secretary of State's consent for any disposal for a consideration less than the best that can reasonably be obtained. It is for the local authority to consider what professional advice it should receive when it contemplates the sale of a particular site.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times in the last 12 months he has used his powers to direct councils to dispose of any land held by them.

Mr. Chope: Under section 98 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, the Secretary of State may direct certain public bodies to dispose of the interest held by them in any land entered on the register, compiled by him under section 95 of that Act. He has used that power 25 times in the past 12 months in respect of land owned by local authorities.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of all the people appointed to public bodies by his Department who are currently in office, giving for each the office concerned and the date of appointment.

Mr. Ridley: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the undertakings given by the deputy chairman of the London Docklands Development Corporation in his letter to the Docklands Forum of 24 September 1987 still apply, following his removal from office.

Mr. Trippier: Yes.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the name of the new deputy chairman of the London Docklands Development Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Soon.

London City Airport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if any discussions have taken place between his Department and the London Dockl Development Corporation on the use of London airport by jet aircraft; and if he will make a statemer

(2) if any consideration is being given by the Aviation Authority or his Department to the use of 146-200 aircraft at London City airport; and if he make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No proposals have been put to Department about the use of jets at London City airp The Department has, however, on a contingency b sought and received assurances from LDDC that planning applications concerning future uses of the air will be drawn to the Department's attention. The discussions which have taken place have concer safeguarding arrangements.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State the Environment what plans he has to make availabl Department's publications "Grant-Related Expendi 1988-89" and "The Technical Handbook of Gr Related Expenditure 1988-89".

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has today pla copies of these documents in the Library of the Ho Copies have also been sent to every local authorit England, and to the local authority associations.

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 15 Decem Official Report, column 458, and 16 December, Off Report, columns 521-22, he will give details of calculations used to assess the contribution to l services via the grant system from national taxation of 10 per cent. of households with the highest inco compared to that of the 10 per cent. with lowest incor

Mr. Howard [holding answer 11 January 1988]: U a sample of households grouped into deciles of g income, the calculations involved the following stages

(i) Calculate the amount of local spending funded national taxation as a multiple of income f domestic rates (less rebates).

(ii) Taking the figure produced by (i), calculate the amo of national taxation accounted for by centrally fun contributions to local taxation.

(iii) Calculate the amount produced by (ii) as a propor of total national taxation.

(iv) Assuming that the proportion at (iii) applied equall all households, estimate the amount of nati taxation paid as a contribution to local autho spending by the top and bottom deciles of househ by income.

Water Industry

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment (1) what steps he intends to take to en consumers in the water industry to charge suppliers in event of unsatisfactory service;

(2) what arrangements will be taken to ensure water public limited companies replace and update m in order to minimise flooding, interruptions of supply the potential for pollution;

(3) what powers he plans to seek to ensure that necessary levels of capital expenditure are spent on water and sewage infrastructure in the final years of a water public limited company's licence period;

(4) what legal sanctions will be available against those water public limited companies which fail to provide a wholesome or adequate water supply; who will be able to employ such sanctions; and who will define whether or not a supply is adequate;

(5) what duties there will be on water public limited companies to make interim arrangements for alternative supplies and to provide appropriate information to consumers in the event of mains repairs, bursts or other interruptions of normal supply;

(6) what arrangements will be made to provide compensation for householders for damage arising from faulty or leaking mains in the event of water privatisation;

(7) whether, in the event of privatisation of the water industry, water public limited companies will have a similar duty to that now exercised by the water undertakers to provide, wherever possible, supplies of water for fire-fighting purposes; and whether the existing mains in tall buildings such as tower blocks will be fitted with water meters to assist in fire fighting;

(8) how the privatisation of the water industry will affect the maintaining and regulatory functions of local authorities with regard to water and sewage in pipes and drains, ponds, cesspools, and so on;

(9) what arrangements are being made for the control of rats in sewers and the proper maintenance and repair of sewers in the event of water privatisation.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 11 January 1988]: The privatised water utility companies will have obligations towards their customers identical in most respects to those of the water authorities at present. However, consultation papers issued in 1986 proposed changes in water and sewerage law and in the law relating to drinking water quality. The legislation to privatise the authorities will take those changes into consideration. Local authority responsibilities in respect of non-mains drainage and drinking water quality will be unchanged. The legislation and the system of regulation will ensure that water utility companies provide an effective service to customers throughout the period of their appointments. The legislation to privatise the water authorities, which will be introduced as soon as possible, will take those changes into consideration.

Housing White Paper

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will put copies of the responses to the consultation exercise on the housing White Paper in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1987, c. 419]: I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of responses we have so far received to the housing White Paper and related consultation documents from those respondents who have indicated that they are content for their views to be made public.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hedgerows

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 4 November, Official Report, column 723, if he has any proposals to make the 60 per cent. grant for the provision, replacement or improvement of hedgerows available to local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no powers to pay grant to local authorities.

Fish

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total tonnage of fish landed in (a) Scotland, (b) England, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland in each of the past five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The following shows the total tonnage of fish caught by British vessels and landed in Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland over the years 1982 to 1986 (information for 1987 is not yet available).

Country	1982 tonnes	1983 tonnes	1984 tonnes	1985 tonnes	1986 tonnes
Scotland	498,187	499,121	543,312	592,570	551,290
England	237,130	220,676	163,940	137,891	136,332
Wales	14,040	9,819	7,851	9,005	9,603
Northern Ireland	25,278	18,806	18,549	22,587	20,481

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names of all the people appointed to public bodies by his Department who are currently in office, giving for each the office concerned and the date of appointment.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

EC (Free Food)

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has yet completed his consideration of the implications of the European Community free food scheme; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The scheme provides for member states to make available to designated organisations food from intervention stores for distribution to the most needy. The Government continue to believe that such a scheme is an inappropriate way of dealing with the surpluses, but do not wish to deprive these United Kingdom citizens of having the possibility of arrangements available to consumers in the Community as a whole.

The Government have therefore considered how the scheme could be applied in this country. We have decided to make butter and beef available, subject to Commission authorisation, in response to specific applications received from charitable or non-profit-making organisations which meet appropriate conditions. Quantities made available would be limited to amounts specifically authorised by the European Commission within the finance available. The Commission has said that up to about £10 million worth of product could be authorised for distribution in the United Kingdom in 1988. I am arranging for further details of the arrangements to be sent today to the relevant representative bodies, and I am placing a copy of this information in the Library.

DEFENCE

Geo-magnetism

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use his Department makes of research conducted in the United Kingdom into problems of geo-magnetism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The sea and air charts and land maps produced by MOD show magnetic declination and its annual change. These values come from five-yearly epoch global data sets produced in part by British Geological Survey and part by the United States Naval Oceanographic Office as a joint project. The basic data come from magnetic observations worldwide.

In 1986 MOD commissioned British Geological Survey to produce a regional magnetic model for Europe.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of all the people appointed to public bodies by his Department who are currently in office, giving for each the office concerned and the date of appointment.

Mr. Sainsbury: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Air/Sea Rescue Services

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report those organisations his Department has consulted in the evaluation of air/sea rescue services; and if he is yet in a position to make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The study into proposals put forward by Bristow Helicopters Ltd., suggesting that the search and rescue helicopter service currently provided by the RAF and RN should be put to commercial contract, has been conducted within the Ministry of Defence. A number of external organisations have made representations to my Department, and these are being fully taken into account in our consideration, which is continuing.

International Military Supplies Office, Tehran

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 16 December, Official Report, column 536, regarding the International Supplies Office in Tehran; what is the purpos office; how many people are employed in Tehra Iranian citizens; and what is the address.

Mr. Sainsbury: IMS (Iran) Ltd. was set up i has its office in Tehran (PO Box 19395/1695). Its before the revolution were limited to mai ministrative arrangements in Iran in support of th contracts between International Military Services the Iranian Government. Following the revol office was kept open with a skeleton staff to processing the negotiation and settlement of contracts. This office remains open, although present it is on a care-and-maintenance basis, one member of staff, an Iranian citizen. The posit office is reviewed by IMS regularly.

Defence Contracts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of Defence, pursuant to his reply of 26 Novem Official Report, column 281, if he will give deta the eight companies prosecuted since 1979 ove contracts and (b) names of the companies s investigation.

Mr. Sainsbury: The eight prosecutions wer individual directors or employees of defence co not the companies.

Chieftain Tank

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of Defence what are his Department's plans replacement of the Chieftain tank.

Mr. Sainsbury: Following a re-examination developments in future tank technology the M Defence has been considering the time scale in might need to replace the Chieftain tanks whic service in BAOR in the middle and late 1960s. reviewing possible overseas options the M discussing with Vickers Defence Systems possibility of adopting an improved versio Challenger tank. This would be attractive in commonality and interoperability within the Br fleet. No decisions have, however, yet been tak timing of a Chieftain replacement and the M continuing seriously to examine both the Challenger and other possible options.

Service Hospitals

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State fo if he will provide in the Official Report full lists Royal Navy, Army and Royal Air Force hospita all service establishments which contain in-patien facilities, listing in each case the number established, the number of beds occupied on a convenient date, the nursing establishment and t number of nurses currently employed.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 17 Decem c. 655]: The additional information for Military in the United Kingdom is as follows, reflecting th at 1200 on 6 January 1988:

		RNH Haslar	RNH Plymouth	BMH Aldershot	BMH Catterick	BMH Woolwich	RAF(H) Ely	RAF(H) Halton	RAF(H) Wroughton	T
Number of Beds
Complemented	(1)	305	133	309	150	482	170	170	280	1,
Available	(2)	228	98	261	130	427	170	170	238	1,
Occupied	(3)	194	84	146	67	292	149	116	179	1,
Nurses
Complement	(4)	338 (156)	172 (52)	240 (21)	114 (21)	382 (60)	170 (28)	149 (0)	226 (25)	1, (3
Available for wards	(5)	185	92	255	64	309	136	127	167	1,
On duty on day or wards	(6)	143	62	131	26	160	68	79	93

Notes:
1. The figures in brackets at line 4 show the number of trainee posts included in the establishment.
2. Line 5 includes 42 agency staff working 1 shift on the day.
3. Line 6 shows the total nursing staff on the wards in three shifts.
4. At the stated time there were 34 trainees temporarily attached to RNH Haslar and 67 trainees temporarily attached to BMH Alder from overseas hospitals which were additional to the United Kingdom establishments. This is partly reflected in the imbalance of fig for the BMH Aldershot in lines 4 and 5.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the names of all the people appointed to public bodies by the Law Officers' Departments who are currently in office, giving for each the office concerned and the date of appointment.

The Attorney-General: I make no appointments to public bodies. A list of the names of those appointed by the Lord Chancellor and his Department could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Expenditure

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State Education and Science if he will list all local educat authorities in England in rank order of expenditure secondary pupil per year, starting with the hig spending authority, together with their position in table of examination results for school leavers achie five or more O-levels at grades A to C or CSE grade the latest year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is as follo

Secondary Schools—England 1985-86

	Expenditure[1] Per pupil £	Examination results[2] Percentage of leavers achieving defined results	Ranking
1 ILEA	2,085	16·2	86
2 Haringey	1,710	21·3	61
3 Brent	1,590	17·8	78
4 Waltham Forest	1,540	12·2	95
5 Ealing	1,460	15·9	87
6 Manchester	1,425	17·6	80
7 Croydon	1,355	24·4	39
8 Newcastle-upon-Tyne	1,345	15·4	88
9 Harrow	1,340	43·1	1
10 Barnet	1,330	40·1	3
11 Havering	1,325	24·9	37
12 Kingston-upon-Thames	1,325	41·3	2
13 Knowsley	1,320	12·3	94
14 Hillingdon	1,315	20·7	64
15 Coventry	1,310	21·1	62
16 North Tyneside	1,295	19·4	70
17 Hounslow	1,290	20·7	65
18 Redbridge	1,290	27·3	18
19 Rochdale	1,275	18·2	76
20 Barking	1,260	10·0	96
21 Sheffield	1,260	18·1	77
22 Bromley	1,255	29·8	10
23 South Tyneside	1,255	19·7	68
24 Liverpool	1,250	16·3	85
25 Enfield	1,245	24·0	44
26 Sandwell	1,230	14·5	90
27 Wigan	1,230	29·9	9
28 Wolverhampton	1,225	13·9	92

		Expenditure[1] Per pupil £	Examination results[2] Percentage of leavers achieving defined results	Ranking
29	Nottinghamshire	1,220	18·4	72
30	Leicestershire	1,205	21·6	59
31	Richmond-upon-Thames	1,200	25·2	34
32	Salford	1,200	21·6	60
33	Bexley	1,195	25·5	30
34	Oxfordshire	1,190	23·5	48
35	Walsall	1185	18·3	73
36	Gateshead	1,185	20·1	66
37	Hertfordshire	1,180	29·2	12
38	Birmingham	1,175	17·5	81
39	Bury	1,175	26·6	24
40	Cleveland	1,175	28·1	13
41	Barnsley	1,165	15·0	89
42	Tameside	1,160	24·3	40
43	Avon	1,160	25·5	31
44	St. Helens	1,150	22·0	56
45	Sunderland	1,150	18·3	75
46	Berkshire	1,150	27·3	17
47	Doncaster	1,145	17·2	82
48	Trafford	1,140	32·2	6
49	Bedfordshire	1,140	25·4	32
50	Buckinghamshire	1,140	30·9	8
51	Sutton	1,135	27·7	16
52	Dudley	1,125	20·1	67
53	Sefton	1,125	25·7	29
54	Wirral	1,125	22·0	57
55	Derbyshire	1,125	22·5	58
56	Humberside	1,125	19·4	69
57	Shropshire	1,125	24·3	42
58	Staffordshire	1,125	24·6	38
59	Solihull	1,115	27·2	20
60	Bolton	1,115	23·7	45
61	Stockport	1,115	22·7	53
62	Essex	1,115	26·0	27
63	Calderdale	1,110	22·6	54
64	North Yorkshire	1,110	32·9	5
65	Northamptonshire	1,110	20·9	63
66	Surrey	1,110	34·1	4
67	Oldham	1,095	13·9	91
68	Cumbria	1,095	25·1	35
69	Devon	1,095	23·5	47
70	Durham	1,095	18·9	71
71	Gloucestershire	1,095	28·1	14
72	Lancashire	1,095	25·0	36
73	Norfolk	1,095	23·0	50
74	Wakefield	1,090	17·8	79
75	Cheshire	1,090	27·2	19
76	Bradford	1,085	16·5	84
77	East Sussex	1,085	25·9	28
78	Warwickshire	1,085	27·8	15
79	Northumberland	1,075	29·5	11
80	Rotherham	1,070	18·3	74
81	Hampshire	1,065	26·3	26
82	Leeds	1,060	21·9	58
83	Hereford and Worcester	1,060	26·8	23
84	West Sussex	1,060	31·3	7
85	Kirklees	1,055	25·3	33
86	Wiltshire	1,055	24·3	41
87	Cornwall	1,045	26·4	25
88	Cambridgeshire	1,040	22·9	51
89	Somerset	1,040	23·2	49
90	Dorset	1,030	27·1	21
91	Isle of Wight	1,030	16·7	83
92	Suffolk	1,030	22·9	52
93	Lincolnshire	1,025	24·2	43
94	Kent	1,015	26·9	22

Notes:

[1] The recurrent institutional expenditure per secondary school pupil (1985-86 cash) is based on LEA returns of expenditur of pupil numbers to DES.

[2] The examination results ranking is based on a departmental survey sample of 10 per cent. of all school leavers in each L special school pupils) who have attained the minimum school leaving age. The percentages quoted do not reflect pupils who GCE qualifications after leaving school, or those who achieved vocational or other qualifications either at school or rankings make no allowance for differing socio-economic factors (see DES statistical bulletin 13/84).

[3] Expenditure figures are not available for Merton and Newham, which rank 46th and 93rd respectively on examination res

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the names of all the people appointed to public bodies by his Department who are currently in office, giving for each the office concerned and the date of appointment.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Assessment and Testing (Report)

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the report of the task group on assessment and testing.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I are publishing today the report of the task group on assessment and testing. Copies are being placed in the Library of the House, made available to members of the Committee on the Education Reform Bill, and are available on request from my Department. A shorter version is being prepared for distribution to schools within the next few weeks. I am very grateful to the task group's chairman, Professor Paul Black, and his fellow members for the speed and thoroughness with which they have discharged their task. Their report will make an important contribution to the development of arrangements to underpin the national curriculum in schools, provided for in the Education Reform Bill now before Parliament.

The report recommends a national assessment system, including testing, which incorporates the main features of the Government's proposals. It provides for assessment related to clear objectives at ages 7, 11, 14 and 16 which takes account of differences in ability and maturity; for a balanced mixture of national testing and other assessment by teachers during the course of their work, and for reporting on pupils' attainments in ways which are comprehensible and helpful and which recognise the sensitivities of publishing information about the results of assessment. It lays emphasis on formative assessment of a child's positive achievements in order to help further learning as the basis of a national assessment system. It makes clear that a system along these lines could play a substantial part in the professional development of teachers, in raising standards of teaching and learning, and in improving parental and public confidence in our education system.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I welcome the broad framework proposed in the report and will be considering its detailed recommendations. We shall be happy to receive comments on those recommendations. I am asking the mathematics and science working groups, and the Kingman committee on English, to take this broad framework into account in their work on attainment targets and related assessment arrangements in their subjects. My right hon. Friend and I will be giving similar guidance, subject to refinements which may be needed in the light of comments on the recommendations, to other subject working groups which may be set up.

I am inviting the task group to continue in being for a further period, in order to undertake more detailed study of arrangements for implementing and administering the national assessment system; to discuss, with working groups and others, more specific criteria for asse arrangements in different subjects; and to offer advice as necessary in the light of the public reactio report.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFF

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the nam the people appointed to public bodies by his Dep who are currently in office, giving for each th concerned and the date of appointment.

Mrs. Chalker: I regret that this information c provided only at disproportionate cost.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of S Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will pu the Official Report a statement of forthcoming bu the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposite House last week. At present, only two meeting Council of Ministers are planned for January.

The Agriculture Council meets on 18/19 Janu is expected to discuss preparations for the E Council, beef balance sheets and quotas, and the e of Greek national measures for table olives.

The Foreign Affairs Council will meet o January. Discussion will cover the Community's situation and progress made in negotiations with on a trade and co-operation agreement.

Iran (Exports)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of S Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he proposals for changes in the guidelines issued t manufacturers to further limit exports to Iran include non-lethal equipment ancillary to lethal equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Subject to any United Natio embargo resolution to enforce SCR 598, we have to change the guidelines on the sale of military eq to Iran and Iraq. These already prohibit the exp defence-related equipment that could significa hance the capability of either side to prolong or ex the conflict. We continue to urge other countries similar stringent measures.

Iranian Arms Procurement Agency

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of S Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of staff formerly employed by the Irania Procurement Agency at 4 Victoria street, Lond left the United Kingdom since his Department an that it was to be closed.

Mr. Mellor: Following our decision to close th Military Procurement Offices, all 34 Irani previously employed there have left the United K

SCOTLAND

Abortions

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what proportion of late abortions carried out in Scotland are to women aged under 20 years.

Mr. Rifkind: There is no universally accepted definition of late abortion. The number of notifications of abortions performed under the Abortion Act 1967 on women aged under 20 years resident in Scotland in 1986 carried out at 21 completed weeks gestation and over is five, which represents 20 per cent. of all abortions at this gestational age carried out in Scotland.

Nursery Education

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by sex, the number of children in each local education authority in Scotland who receive nursery education.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provisional number of children in education authority nursery schools at September 1987 is as follows:

Authority	Boys	Girls	Total
Borders	202	195	397
Central	1,255	1,250	2,505
Dumfries/ Galloway	227	208	435
Fife	2,242	2,037	4,279
Grampian	1,445	1,256	2,701
Highland	348	276	624
Lothian	4,157	3,860	8,017
Strathclyde	9,019	8,711	17,730
Tayside	1,253	1,149	2,402
Orkney	43	42	85
Shetland	54	56	110
Western Isles	—	—	—
All Scotland	20,245	19,040	39,285

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of St
if he will list the names of all the peopl public bodies by his Department who a office, giving for each the office concerned appointment.

Mr. Rifkind: I have today placed in the of the letter I have sent to the hon. M information requested.

Traffic Statistics

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of St what are the latest traffic figures recorded of the following roads: (i) A74, (ii) A75, (i and (v) M8.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Traf
these roads vary at different locations. T illustrative annual daily averages for differ 1986:

A74 (south) 14,000-20,000
(central) 15,000-30,000
A75 (Dumfries-A74) 8,000-12,000
A76 (Dumfries-New Cumnock) 3,00
(New Cumnock-Kilmarnock) 5,
A77 (Girvan-Maybole) 5,000-7,000
(Maybole-South Ayr) 5,000-10,
(South Ayr-A78) 10,000-20,000
M8 (Newbridge-Newhouse) 25,000-

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of S what are the figures for all road accidents serious injury and those involving fatalitie
A75, (iii) A76, (iv) A77 and (v) M8 for eac to 1986; and what are the monthly figure available month for 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: T requested is as follows:

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
A74
Total	215	185	163	164	169	180	198	196
Fatal	15	6	13	13	12	10	14	17
Serious	67	70	54	70	60	56	55	64
A75
Total	129	136	135	110	106	103	112	120
Fatal	14	13	9	4	8	7	8	9
Serious	26	25	37	31	40	36	37	46
A76
Total	93	87	88	95	78	73	78	95
Fatal	6	5	6	4	9	1	2	2
Serious	36	30	33	25	25	18	20	17
A77
Total	300	299	302	262	254	288	299	280
Fatal	9	15	13	14	15	8	13	14
Serious	80	80	90	87	76	85	78	64
M8
Total	182	158	147	158	146	126	151	152
Fatal	5	9	5	9	8	7	4	6
Serious	53	51	49	51	37	38	49	31

1987 (provisional)

	January	February	March	April	May	June
A74
Total	8	16	9	9	25	12
Fatal	1	2	—	—	—	—
Serious	4	4	3	3	8	2
A75
Total	5	9	7	2	7	10
Fatal	1	1	—	—	—	1
Serious	3	1	2	1	4	4
A76
Total	11	3	5	8	8	7
Fatal	—	—	—	—	—	—
Serious	4	1	1	2	2	4
A77
Total	14	19	15	18	14	19
Fatal	—	—	—	—	1	—
Serious	3	7	7	2	6	7
M8
Total	8	9	11	11	8	8
Fatal	1	—	—	2	—	1
Serious	1	2	4	3	2	1

Regional Aid

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much he has paid out in the current year in (a) regional development grant and (b) regional selective assistance; and how much he expects to pay in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 December 1987]: Gross expenditures on regional development grant (RDG) and regional selective assistance (RSA) under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 in the period April to November 1987 were £40 million and £19 million respectively. As my right hon. and learned Friend has announced, net provision for his industry, energy, trade and employment programme, which includes regional assistance, for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 is £266 million, £260 million and £260 million respectively. Further detail will, as usual, be published in the annual "Scottish Commentary" on public expenditure. In addition full details of my right hon. and learned Friend's proposals for 1988-89 will appear in the Supply Estimates.

Cunninghame, North (Grants)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give total amounts paid in Cunninghame, North constituency by the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board since 1979 in cash terms and also at 1987 prices.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 30 October 1987]: As a result of changes in constituency boundaries the information in respect of the Scottish Development Agency is available only from 1983-84 and relates to all recognised schemes of agency financial assistance. The information is set out in the table.

Scottish Development Agency Expenditure

	Cash Terms £000	Percentage Change	1986-87 Prices £000
1983-84	475	—	542
1984-85	394	−17·1	430
1985-86	438	+11·2	451
1986-87	333	−24·0	333

Highlands and Islands Development Board Expen

	Cash Terms £000	Percentage Change	1986-87 Prices £000
1979	154	—	256
1980	193	+25·3	271
1981	233	+20·7	298
1982	374	+60·5	446
1983	443	+18·4	505
1984	385	−13·1	421
1985	672	+74·5	692
1986	326	−51·5	326

Note: The HIDB operates only in the Arran and Cumb the constituency. The figures, which are only available include approved expenditure by HIDB (net of known on grants, loans and shares for economic projects and and board project expenditure. Board expenditure surveys and publicity is not allocated to geographical a

Aberdeen (Grants)

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary o Scotland if he will publish in the Official Repo amount of grant to industrial projects in constituency of Aberdeen, North and (b) Aberd Scottish Development Agency or the Depa Trade and Industry for each year since 1979 terms and (ii) real terms in 1986-87 prices, sh percentage changes in payments between years

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1987]: of changes in constituency boundaries the info respect of the Scottish Development Agency i only from 1983-84 and relates to all recognised schemes of agency financial assistance. The information is set out in the table below:

Scottish Development Agency Expenditure

	Cash terms £ thousand	Percentage change	Real terms £ thousand	Percentage change
Aberdeen North
1983-84	53	—	60	—
1984-85	261	+392·5	285	+375·0
1985-86	59	−77·4	61	−78·6
1986-87	64	+8·5	64	+4·9
Aberdeen City
1983-84	146	—	167	—
1984-85	405	+177·4	442	+164·7
1985-86	1,332	+228·9	1,372	+210·4
1986-87	198	−85·1	198	−85·6

Information on expenditure by th Trade and Industry is not available in th

OVERSEAS DEVELOPM

Charitable Bodies

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secr Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs charitable bodies which his Departm provide tables showing the amounts de recent five years for which figures are general purposes for which the grants

Mr. Chris Patten: The information

Overseas Development Administration

	1982-83 £'000	1983-84 £'000	1984-85 £'000	1985-86 £'000
(i) Joint Funding Scheme
OXFAM	1,200	1,200	1,450	1,650
Christian Aid	330	330	700	900
Save the Children Fund	—	—	—	675
CAFOD	100	100	300	375
Other[1]	760	885	1,379	1,281
(ii) Volunteers
British Volunteer Programme	4,027	5,071	6,045	7,049
British Executive Service Overseas	283	284	259	246
(iii) Other grants to specified charities[2]
British Red Cross	15	15	20	19
League of Red Cross Societies	50	1,070	2,945	1,707
International Red Cross	1,150	4,225	3,295	5,220
Disasters Emergency Committee	—	—	1,000	—
Christians Abroad	5	6	10	7
Royal Commonwealth Society for the Blind	13	—	—	—
Women's Corona Society	32	49	29	27
Plunkett Foundation	6	7	7	7
Co-operative Union Ltd.	10	—	—	—
Other grants for refugee relief and development projects	167	374	231	810
Diplomatic Wing
British Atlantic Council[3]	44	45	47	49
British Youth Council[4]	42	44	44	43
United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service (Bangladesh)	12	13	13	14

[1] Includes Save the Children Fund figures for 1982-83 to 1984-85.
[2] Excludes disaster relief and food aid channelled through charities.
[3] To assist in the promotion of and knowledge and understanding of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.
[4] Support for the council's international activities and to enable it to carry out a programme of activities in pursuan the final act (Helsinki 1975) of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of all the people appointed to public bodies by his Department who are currently in office, giving for each the office concerned and the date of appointment.

Mr. Stanley: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Standard Capital Grants

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Se Northern Ireland if he will make a stat of the standard capital grants scheme

Mr. Viggers: This scheme, which is Ireland, provides automatic grant ass rate of 12·5 per cent. on capital expen manufacturing sectors of industry. It creation criteria or conditions.

Recent reviews of the scheme, including a major survey of firms claiming standard capital grant, have shown that it contains substantial deadweight — in most cases the investment would have proceeded without Government financial assistance — and has the effect of distorting competition within Northern Ireland. These and other shortcomings have led me to conclude that the scheme no longer constitutes an effective means of stimulating economic activity in Northern Ireland, nor does it provide good value for public money.

For these reasons the Government have decided to abolish the standard capital grant scheme and to concentrate the industrial development effort on the wide range of selective assistance available from the Industrial Development Board and the local enterprise development unit. I am convinced that available resources should be targeted much more selectively if they are to have the maximum beneficial effect in strengthening the economy. this underlines the Government's policy to encourage enterprising firms in developing quality products, seeking out new markets and improving their competitiveness.

I shall shortly be publishing a proposal for an Order in Council to terminate the scheme in respect of expenditure incurred after 31 March 1988. Applications for such assistance will, however, continue to be accepted by the Department of Economic Development until 31 March 1990.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Steel Corporation (Rates)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are (a) the rateable values and (b) the rates payable for the British Steel Corporation's integrated steelworks; and on what basis they are levied.

Mr. Atkins: The rateable values and rates payable for the British Steel Corporation's integrated steel works are as follows:

Integrated works	Rateable values £	Rates payable £
England
Teeside	4,600,000	14,091,640
Scunthorpe	4,078,000	10,884,998
Wales
Llanwern	3,552,120	8,227,588
Port Talbot	3,292,000	8,757,707
Scotland
Ravenscraig	7,320,000	5,892,600

These figures relate to the 1987-88 rate year which ends on 31 March 1988. The rates are levied on the rate in the pound adopted for other non-domestic properties in the particular area of the rating authority. The works are assessed in accordance with general rating law and not under any special statutory formula.

Acrylic Yarn

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the import in tonnes of acrylic yarn from Turkey in each of the last three years.

Mr. Alan Clark: United Kingdom imports of acrylic yarns from Turkey were: 1984 — 44·7 metric tonnes; 1985 — 611·0 metric tonnes; and 1986 (provisional) — 3,227·4 metric tonnes.

Military Equipment (Exports to Ir

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of t Lancaster what exports for non-lethal militar have been authorised for export to Iran since 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the practice Governments not to make public information

Imports

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor o of Lancaster what is the value (a) by cash tonnage of imports for each year since 1980.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information on imports and so on is not available. For information of imports I refer the hon. Member to t Abstract of Statistics 1986 edition" and "Ov Statistics Annual 1985" and December 19 copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor o of Lancaster what is the value of imports of c the EEC, (b) Japan, and (c) other world sou United Kingdom annually since 1980 giving value and (ii) number of units.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is g following table:

United Kingdom imports of cars 1980 to 1

	EEC		Japan		Res
Year	Value	Number	Value	Number
1980	1,647·7	626,785	308·4	187,833
1981	1,717·3	597,638	343·2	164,403
1982	2,328·9	706,544	401·8	173,655
1983	2,968·6	825,669	515·6	186,176
1984	2,876·7	763,618	619·3	198,904
1985	3,362·9	813,456	569·6	191,496
1986	3,765·5	718,780	818·3	214,452

Notes:
1. Cars defined as Standard International Trade (Revision 2), sub-group 781.0
2. EEC includes all Member States as at 1 throughout.
3. 1986 figures provisional.

Source: Overseas Trade Statistics.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor o of Lancaster what is the amount by cash, f since 1980, annually of imports of textiles int Kingdom from (a) the EEC and (b) from th world.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is g following table:

United Kingdom imports of textiles 1980-1

	EEC
1980	891·8
1981	1,072·6
1982	1,248·8
1983	1,523·5
1984	1,797·0
1985	2,033·1
1986	2,122·5

Source: Overseas Trade Statistics.

Notes:

1. Textiles defined as Standard International Trade Classification (Revision 2) Division 65: Textile yarn, fabrics, made-up articles nes and related products.
2. EEC includes all Member States as at 1 January 1988 throughout.
3. 1986 figures provisonal.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is (a) the cash value and (b) the numbers of, aeroplane imports into the United Kingdom from (i) the EEC (ii) the United States of America and, (iii) other world sources, (c) annually since 1980.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is given in the following table:

United Kingdom imports of aeroplanes 1980-1986

Value: £ million

	EEC		USA		Rest of World
	Value	Number	Value	Number	Value	Number
1980	279·3	491	633·4	324	470·8	385
1981	49·0	183	121·9	333	15·8	81
1982	44·5	140	124·1	202	79·2	77
1983	12·8	96	290·5	44	68·1	55
1984	106·3	95	378·1	173	101·4	95
1985	19·2	110	701·6	106	146·8	58
1986	50·7	73	166·9	165	145·3	141

Source: Overseas Trade Statistics.

Notes:

1. Aeroplanes are defined as Standard International Trade Classification (Revision 2) sub-groups 792.2, 3 and 4.
2. The EEC includes all Member States as at 1 January 1988 throughout.
3. 1986 figures provisional.

Council of Industry Ministers

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a report on the outcome of the Council of Industry Ministers' meeting on 22 December 1987.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Following the meeting of the Council of Industry Ministers on 8 December, on which I reported to the House in my reply on 9 December, at column 163, I attended a further meeting of the Council in Brussels on 22 December. The Council determined arrangements to apply to the steel market following the end of the previous quota arrangements on 31 December 1987. The House of Commons Select Committee on European Legislation recommended these arrangements for debate, but regrettably it was not possible to arrange for parliamentary debate prior to their agreement of the 22 December Council. I shall, of course, make efforts to arrange a debate as soon as practicable.

The Commission reported on the consultations it had undertaken with member states, at the request of the 8 December Council, concerning the reduction of excess capacity in each of the product categories Ia and Ib (hot rolled strip and cold reduced sheet), II (plate) and III (heavy sections). In respect of categories II and III the Commission judged that sufficient indications of willingness to reduce capacity had been obtained for it to seek guaranteed undertakings to reduce capacity in these categories. The Commission proposed that if such undertakings were secured by 10 June 1988, quotas for those categories should continue until the end of 1990. In respect of category I, however, the Commission considered that insufficient indications of willingness to reduce capacity had been received, and accordingly proposed the continuation of quotas in that category only until 30 June 1988.

As at the previous Council considerable discussion took place, particularly concerning the timetable over which quotas for category I products should be removed. Eventually, the following conclusions relating to quotas were agreed unanimously:

"The Council gave its assent, in accordance with Article 58 ECSC, to the Commission proposals relating to the extension of the steel regime beyond 1 January 1988, as follows:

> With regard to categories I (a) and (b), the production quota regime will come to an end on 30 June 1988.
>
> With regard to categories II and III, the production quota regime will continue up to 30 June 1988, and should be extended until the end of 1990 if, by 10 June 1988, the Commission has received guaranteed undertakings to reduce production capacity by means of closure by at least 75 per cent. of the surplus the Commission deems to exist. In the case of these conditions not being fulfilled for one of these categories, quotas will end for that category on 30 June 1988.
>
> The Commission will allocate to firms quotas for the second quarter of 1988 some 2·0 per cent. higher than would correspond to a market assessment to prepare for the return to the free market.

The Council notes that there is agreement in the Council to accept a Commission proposal extending the quotas for category I products beyond 30 June 1988 on condition that guaranteed undertakings on reduction of capacity of at least 7·5 million tonnes by means of closure in category Ia are obtained before 10 June 1988.

The Council notes that the Commission is ready to reconsider its present position on category I products provided the conditions of the treaty are fulfilled and the commitments set out above are obtained."

The Commission made no proposals for the continuation of quotas on categories IV and VI (wire rod and merchant bar), so quotas on these categories lapsed on 31 December. Quotas on other categories had been removed previously. The Commission has also raised the production reference levels which determine whether individual producers are subject to quotas. The effect of these changes is that the British Steel Corporation is now the only United Kingdom steel producer subject to production quotas.

The conclusions of the Council provide a clear framework for a steady return to free market conditions. Specific and demanding targets have been set for closure commitments to be obtained by 10 June, and the Council has concluded unanimously that quotas should end on 30 June if such commitments are not forthcoming. I believe these conclusions represent a good outcome for steel producers and consumers in the United Kingdom, and for the preparations for the privatisation of the British Steel Corporation which I announced on 3 December.

Major Projects

Mr. Favell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will make a statement about support for major projects.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I presented to the House today the White Paper "DTI — the Department for Enterprise". The White Paper announced substantial changes in DTI's role and its policies and programmes. A number of major new initiatives to encourage enterprise are being launched. My statement to the House today outlined these, together with those existing schemes which we believe are less effective and are being closed. The details of the latter are as follows.

From today, a limited number of both research and development projects and investment projects likely to yield exceptional national benefits will be eligible for support under a unified facility — assistance for exceptional projects.

Support for major projects, under which investment projects likely to yield exceptional national benefits have been eligible for assistance, has been closed from 6 pm today (12 January) to further applications as a separate facility.

The automatic regional development grant (RDG) scheme, which currently operates in the development areas, is to be terminated and no new applications will be accepted after 31 March 1988. Legislation is being introduced into the House today to terminate the scheme. New applications for project approval will be considered provided they are received on or before 31 March 1988. The transitional arrangements proposed in the Bill reflect the fact that RDG may be applied for before a project is started, while it is in progress or after it has been completed. Applications for project approval received on or before today, and applications received on or before 31 March in relation to projects started on or before today, will not be affected by the legislation. Applications received after today in relation to projects not yet started will be considered for grant only to the extent that relevant jobs or assets are provided (or, in the case of assets, expenditure is defrayed) within two years of the project application being approved by the Department. Grants will not be payable in relation to such projects unless a claim is received within three years of the project approval, or such shorter period as may be prescribed in an individual case. Further details of the transitional arrangements are available to companies from DTI regional offices and from the Industry Department for Scotland and the Welsh Office Industry Department.

Requests for single company support for innovation and for projects under the microelectronics industry support programme, support for software products and the fibreoptics optoelectronics scheme will be considered against the existing criteria for these schemes provided that formal applications are received by DTI before 6 pm today (12 January).

The major expansion of support for the use of DTI consultancy services by small and medium-sized firms incorporates many existing DTI consultancy services. Except for those business improvement services schemes which still have allocated unused funds, all existing consultancy services will be ended from noon on 14 January 1988. These include the advanced manufacturing technology consultancy scheme, the microelectronics applications consultancy scheme and business and technical advisory services.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of his Department; and what is the number planned to be employed at this point in 1988.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 17 December 1987]: The latest figures for the number of staff posts in the press and public relations office of my Department are:

at present in 1987-88	1988-89
[1]51	[1]51

[1] Including 17 on clerical and other support duties.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1987-88 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what are the estimated expenditures in each area for 1988-89.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 17 December 1987]: Information is not readily available to distinguish between advertising in newspapers and in the press generally, nor for expenditure other than centrally by my Department.

The estimated media expenditure for 1987-88 by my Department is as follows:

	£
Television advertising	5,342,000
Radio advertising	20,000
Press advertising	2,985,000
Other promotional publicity	3,869,000
Total	12,216,000

Detailed decisions on expenditure by media have not yet been taken for 1988-89.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations for (a) 1987-88 and (b) 1988-89.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 17 December 1987]: The latest estimated expenditure by my Department on press and public relations is as follows:

	£
1987-88	1,123,000
1988-89	1,508,000

EMPLOYMENT

Open Tech

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the principal achievements of the Open Tech project since its inception;

what is the current operating status of the project; and what are (a) the total costs to date, (b) the total contributions by employers, (c) the total contributions by other organisations, (d) the total contributions by local authorities and (e) the number of students and trainees enrolled per year, by region, employer, local authority, other organisation, employment status, gender, whether disabled, racial origin and by subject studied.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission's Open Tech programme was a four-year developmental programme which concluded on 31 March 1987. An evaluation by the Tavistock Institute will be available shortly and its report will be placed in the Library.

The aims of the programme were to extend the training opportunities available to adults, mainly employed, at technician, supervisory and management levels, to improve access to that training, and to provide an exemplar structure of open learning materials and services. Employers, local authorities, colleges and other training providers, trade unions, industry training boards, and others participated through 140 projects. These were required by their contracts to become self-sustaining.

The principal achievements of the programme include the creation of about 35,000 learning hours of self-study packages and the establishment of a range of producers and suppliers of open learning materials and trainee support services. The packages continue to be available for sale on a commercial basis and almost all the projects are continuing to deliver open learning materials.

Total costs of the programme to the MSC were some £51 million. Additional resources contributed by sponsors during the life of the programme are estimated at £8·8 million in cash and in kind. I regret that it is not possible to allocate this between types of sponsor.

The Open Tech programme did not enrol students directly, but made open learning materials available to organisations and individuals alike. Packages purchased by employers, colleges and others will generally have been made available to several students. An accurate breakdown of the beneficiaries of Open Tech materials and the subjects they studied has not been possible therefore. The MSC's best estimate of the trainees known to have received help from the programme is as follows:

	Number
1983-84	6,000
1984-85	12,000
1985-86	32,000
1986-87	65,000

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the names of all the people appointed to public bodies by his Department who are currently in office, giving for each the office concerned and the date of appointment.

Mr. Lee: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

British Nuclear Fuels, Sellafield

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will make a statement on the report published by the Health and Safety Executive on 14 December on the implementation of safety changes at British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., Sellafield, arising from the Health and Safety Executive safety audit Sellafield, published in December 1986;

(2) if he will make a statement on the implementation of the report of the Health and Safety Executive, published on 14 December, arising from the Health and Safety Executive safety audit on Sellafield published in December 1986; and if he will make a statement on the present state of containment of nuclear wastes at Sellafield and on levels of radiation exposure to workers at the Sellafield site.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

I welcome the HSE's recent report which acknowledges the good progress made by British Nuclear Fuels plc in meeting the requirements specified in the HSE's initial audit report. The company's plans for dealing with waste on site are well advanced and it aims to keep worker dose as low as reasonablly achievable consistent with practice throughout the nuclear industry.

TRANSPORT

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the names of all the people appointed to public bodies by his Department who are currently in office, giving for each the office concerned and the date of appointment.

Mr. Channon: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Chauffeurplan Limited

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications for his campaigns against drinking and driving of the advertising material from Chauffeurplan Ltd. which offers to provide a chauffeur service for disqualified drivers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We view with distaste insurance schemes which provide alternative road transport for those disqualified from driving following conviction for road traffic offences, even though such schemes cannot adequately compensate for loss of entitlement to drive. We shall look again at such insurance schemes in the light of the report of the review of road traffic law, which we expect very shortly.

Companies or department stores considering circulating details of such schemes, may wish to consider carefully the number of complaints which we have received about such proposals.

London Underground (Escalators)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many escalators were, at the latest available date, out of service and undergoing repairs on the London underground system.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that on 4 January 1988, 37 of the Underground's 276 escalators were out of service either for repair or planned replacement, including those damaged in the King's Cross fire.

London Couriers (Accidents)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give for each year since 1979 the number of accidents in London involving bicycle and motor cycle couriers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I regret that the information is not available.

Horne Committee

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he is planning to implement the recommendations of the Horne committee following its review of the Public Utilities and Street Works Act 1950.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We recognise the importance of the Horne report particularly for securing better quality reinstatements. The Government's response to the report, published in July 1986, accepted the great majority of its recommendations. The Department is pressing ahead with implementation. We shall continue to look for a suitable opportunity to introduce the necessary primary legislation.

London City Airport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total cost to the Civil Aviation Authority associated with the operation of the London City airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Air traffic approach control is provided under contract by the Civil Aviation Authority to London City airport. The cost is a commercial matter which is confidential to the airport and the authority. The costs for the provision of en route air traffic services are recovered from aircraft operators through charges. The proportion of these costs attributed to flights using a particular airport are not readily available.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what charges were made on, or contributed from, public funds for the planning, construction and operation of London City airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: London City Airport is owned and financed by the private sector. No contribution has been made from public funds to its planning, construction and operation. Some costs fell on public funds in respect of the planning inquiry and in providing services such as customs and immigration facilities. It is not possible to estimate such costs without disproportionate expenditure.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes are being considered to the height of the east London river crossing bridge towers; and what is the reasoning behind the considered change.

Mr. Channon: Representations about the design of the proposed bridge were made at the public inquiry into the east London river crossing. These will be taken into account by myself and my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, in considering the inspector's report on the inquiry which has just been received.

Advisory Committees

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the names of his advisory committees, together with an indication of those whose members are required to sign a declaration under, or who have otherwise had drawn to their attention, the provisions of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1987, c. 776]: The list of advisory committees for which I am responsible should also have included the recently formed Street Works Advisory Committee. Its members have their attention drawn to the Official Secrets Act.

ENERGY

British Nuclear Fuels, Sellafield

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the future of Magnox reprocessing at British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., Sellafield, following the publication on 14 December by the Health and Safety Executive of the report on safety revision at Sellafield arising from the Health and Safety Executive safety audit at Sellafield, issued in December 1986.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Reprocessing is a proven and safe technology which keeps open the possibility for recycling valuable uranium and plutonium as fuel.

BNF plc, of course, like any other licensed nuclear operator, must continue to meet the requirements of the independent Health and Safety Executive.

Nuclear Fusion

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the total annual expenditure on the Joint European Torus fusion project by all contributing partners since its inception up to 1987-88, broken down into contributions by individual countries.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The table gives full details of the annual contributions for Euratom and each member country of the JET (Joint European Torus) joint undertaking from its inception in June 1978. There are no figures yet available for the contributions from Spain and Portugal which became members of the undertaking in June 1987.

JET income from Euratom and participating countries in European currency units

	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	Draft budgets for 1987	1988
Euratom	9,600,000	32,000,000	40,712,751	43,464,000	80,993,900	95,000,000	84,505,600	52,500,000	68,250,200	79,859,700	83,201,500
Belgium	21,960	72,160	96,413	105,910	204,990	274,685	295,400	132,800	135,500	139,800	234,000
Denmark	8,640	28,280	37,537	39,100	70,200	75,600	77,000	72,600	93,800	83,300	78,700

	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	Draft budgets 1987
France	247,320	814,520	912,161	1,040,400	1,935,500	2,168,566	2,107,300	1,846,325	2,095,500	2,297,000	2
Germany	558,600	1,839,640	2,074,192	2,370,700	4,363,800	4,570,441	3,699,200	2,444,175	3,298,200	3,963,300	3
Greece	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Ireland	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Italy	95,760	315,560	573,881	500,200	844,400	853,211	963,800	770,675	872,900	1,028,000	1
Luxembourg	—	—	—	4,890	6,910	2,300	5,100	4,625	5,600	3,900
Netherlands	69,360	228,080	215,202	254,800	499,800	702,242	545,600	365,550	426,400	438,200
Sweden	23,760	78,160	48,728	77,100	134,100	151,185	173,600	98,500	119,600	157,500
Switzerland	—	48,360	337,468	181,400	311,000	352,528	396,400	343,800	407,900	422,900
United Kingdom	1,374,600	4,575,240	5,882,605	6,291,500	11,877,700	14,599,242	12,863,000	7,045,950	9,607,200	11,431,000	11
Total	12,000,000	40,000,000	50,890,938	54,330,000	101,242,300	118,750,000	105,632,000	65,625,000	85,312,800	99,824,600	104

Notes:
1. United Kingdom contribution includes 10 per cent. as host.
2. Estimated income from Spain and Portugal is not available.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the current range of estimates assumed by his Department for (a) the likely achievement of a sustained fusion reaction and (b) the economic viability of nuclear fusion reactors;

(2) what specific criteria his Department uses to assess the economic viability of nuclear fusion and in particular the Joint European Torus programme; and if he will name any consultants, other than those associated with the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority/Joint European Torus programme who have provided advice to his Department on the economic viability of nuclear fusion.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The JET (Joint European Torus) project at Culham is the centrepiece of European investigations into the potential of harnessing the energy released by nuclear fusion. The immediate aim of the programme is to establish the scientific feasibility of fusion power. If successful, this could lead to the demonstration of sustained, controlled fusion reactions in a follow-on NET (Next European Torus) project. The economic viability of fusion power could only be confirmed thereafter by experience with a power generating demonstration reactor. A report by the energy technology support unit (Report R-43 published in February 1987) concluded that extremely demanding materials, engineering, irradiation, fuel injection and waste treatment requirements would need to be satisfied before reaching the point, perhaps by 2050, where commercial power reactors would be a realistic proposition. The economic viability of nuclear fusion is therefore extremely uncertain.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the proposed annual budget for the research and development of nuclear fusion for the period 1987-88 to 1990-91;

(2) what was the annual expenditure for the research and development of nuclear fusion in the years 1970-71 to 1986-87.

Mr. Michael Spicer: With the exception of the JET project and some minor research in universities, United Kingdom fusion research is carried out entirely by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority. Its expenditure is funded partly by the Department of Energy Vote and, since 1973, partly by Euratom under a contract of association. The cost of fusion research by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority is set out with the contribution from Euratom shown in brackets. United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority expenditure fu by the Department on the Joint European Torus p (JET), is given separately in my reply today to the Member for Truro.

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority fusion researc

	Total £ million	of which Euratom £ million
1970-71	4·1	—
1971-72	4·4	—
1972-73	4·0	—
1973-74	4·3	(1·3)
1974-75	5·8	(1·5)
1975-76	7·7	(2·0)
1976-77	8·5	(1·9)
1977-78	9·6	(2·3)
1978-79	11·5	(3·2)
1979-80	14·6	(4·1)
1980-81	17·9	(6·5)
1981-82	21·5	(4·2)
1982-83	17·8	(5·3)
1983-84	18·9	(4·8)
1984-85	23·2	(4·3)
1985-86	21·7	(5·0)
1986-87	19·6	(5·5)
1987-88	19·5	1

[1] Provisional.

Departmental funding for the years 1988-89 1989-90 has yet to be agreed. Provisional figures, include funding for JET, of £21·45 million and £ million respectively, are published in the "Cabinet 1987 Annual Review of Government-funded R Figures for 1990-91 are not available.

Electricity Disconnections

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of Sta Energy what information he has recently received re to violations of the code of practice relati disconnections by area electricity boards.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Monitoring of the code of pr on paying electricity bills is a matter for the Elec Consumers' Council. I believe that generally the c operating satisfactorily.

Research and Development

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for E if he will list the actual and projectd research development expenditure from public funds under the heading nuclear in each of the years from 1979-80 to 1989-90, at 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The following table gives the Department's expenditure with the UKAEA on nuclear R and D and related programmes (including the decommissioning of old plant and radioactive waste management) during the period 1979-80 to 1989-90. The figures in brackets represent estimated expenditure on nuclear R and D alone. Figures on the same basis for the earlier years are not available.

	£ million (1986-87 prices)
1979-80	242·2
1980-81	261·4
1981-82	262·7
1982-83	256·2
1983-84	232·4
1984-85	214·3
1985-86	195·3
1986-87[1]	183·9 (158)
1987-88[2,3]	165·3 (134)
1988-89[4,5]	165·2 (131)
1989-90[4,5]	159·6 (130)

[1] This figure represents roughly eleven twelfths of the Department's expenditure under the programme letters for 1986-87 following the change to payment monthly in arrears from 1 April 1986. Figures for later years are based on 12 monthly payments.
[2] Estimate.
[3] "Supply Estimates 1987-88", March 1987.
[4] Projected.
[5] "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1987-88 to 1989-90", January 1987. "Cabinet Office Annual Review of Government-funded R and D 1987".

The above figures do not include expenditure on nuclear R and D by other Government departments, the electricity supply industry and BNF plc either within the organisations themselves or with other organisations, including the AEA.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the actual and projected research and development expenditure from public funds on energy efficiency in each of the years 1979-80 to 1989-90, at 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Research and development expenditure figures for 1979-80 are not readily available, since expenditure in that year was not allocated in a comparable way with subsequent years. Figures for expenditure by my Department on energy efficiency research and development (including Demonstration) for the other years, in pounds million at 1986-87 prices, are as follows:

	£ million
1980-81	1·97
1981-82	5·24
1982-83	8·11
1983-84	7·98
1984-85	7·21
1985-86	8·55
1986-87	9·00
[1]1987-88	11·6
[2]1988-89	12·2
[2]1989-90	11·7

[1] Provision.
[2] Figures for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are taken from the "Government's Expenditure Plans 1987-88 to 1989-90". January 1987.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the actual and projected research and development expenditure from public funds on coal technology in each of the years from 1979-80 to 1989-90, at 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Research and development expenditure figures for 1979-80 are not readily available, since expenditure in that year was differently categorised. Figures for expenditure by my Department on coal technology for the other years, in pounds million at 1986-87 prices, are as follows:

	£ million
1980-81	3·79
1981-82	5·88
1982-83	3·58
1983-84	3·42
1984-85	0·76
1985-86	0·62
1986-87	1·60
[1]1987-88	1·20
[2]1988-89	1·30
[2]1989-90	1·40

[1] Provision.
[2] Figures for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are taken from the "Government's Expenditure Plans 1987-88 to 1989-90". January 1987.

In addition, British Coal also has a substantial research and development programme. In 1986-87 this programme cost over £24 million.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the actual and projected research and development expenditure from public funds on renewable energy sources in each of the years 1979-80 to 1989-90, at 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Research and development expenditure figures for 1979-80 are not readily available, since expenditure in that year was differently categorised. Figures for expenditure by my Department on renewable energy sources for the other years, in pounds million at 1986-87 prices, are as follows:

	£ million
1980-81	15·73
1981-82	22·12
1982-83	16·94
1983-84	12·89
1984-85	15·29
1985-86	13·08
1986-87	11·60
[1]1987-88	13·10
[2]1988-89	12·60
[2]1989-90	12·10

[1] Provision.
[2] Figures for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are taken from the "Government's Expenditure Plans 1987/88–1989/90". — [January 1987.] The provision for these years has been revised upwards and will be published in the 1988 public expenditure White Paper.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the names of all the people appointed to public bodies by his Department who are currently in office, giving for each the office concerned and the date of appointment.

Mr. Parkinson: The information is as follows:

British Coal Corporation
Sir Robert Haslam—Chairman—September 1986
Sir Kenneth Couzens, KCB—Deputy Chairman—October 1985
Mr. M. H. Butler—Full-time Member—April 1986
Mr. M. J. Edwards, CBE—Full-time Member—April 1986
Mr. K. Moses—Full-time Member—April 1986
Mr. J. H. Northard, CBE—Full-time Member—April 1986
Sir Melvyn Rosser—Non-Executive Member—July 1983
Mr. C. Barker—Non-Executive Member—February 1984
Dr. D. V. Atterton, CBE—Non-Executive Member—September 1986
Dr. T. J. Parker—Non-Executive Member—September 1986

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority
Mr. J. G. Collier—Chairman—January 1987
Dr. B. L. Eyre—Full-time Member—August 1987
Dr. G. G. E. Low—Full-time Member—April 1986
Mr. R. N. Simeone, CBE—Full-time Member—April 1987
Mr. J Bullock—Non-Executive Member—November 1981
Professor Sir P. Hirsch—Non-Executive Member—April 1982
Mr. M. J. B. Parker—Non-Executive Member—April 1985
Mr. R. E. J. Roberts, CBE—Non-Executive Member—September 1981
Mr. R. Sanderson, OBE—Non-Executive Member—January 1987

Electricity Council
Sir Philip Jones, CB—Chairman—April 1983
Mr. D. G. Jefferies—Deputy Chairman—February 1986
Mr. R. W. Orson, CBE—Full-time Member—January 1976
Mr. R. A. Farrance, CBE—Full-time Member—November 1979
Dr. D. G. C. Gronow—Full-time Member—October 1985

Central Electricity Generating Board
Lord Marshall of Goring, Kt, CBE—Chairman—July 1982
Mr. G. A. W. Blackman, CBE—Deputy Chairman—April 1986
Mr. J. W. Baker—Full-time Member—September 1980
Mr. D. A. Davis—Full-time Member—June 1984
Mr. F. Ledger, OBE—Full-time Member—April 1986
Mr. R. V. Giordano—Non-Executive Member—July 1982
Mr. W. H. N. Wilkinson—Non-Executive Member—November 1986
Sir Terence Beckett, KBE—Non-Executive Member—January 1987
Mr. D. A. Walker—Non-Executive Member—May 1987

London Electricity Board
Mr. J. J. Wilson—Chairman—March 1986
Mr. K. G. Harvey—Deputy Chairman—May 1984
Mr. C. A. Prendergast, CBE—Non-Executive Member—August 1983
Baroness Garner of Parkes, JP—Non-Executive Member—November 1984
Mr. L. W. G. Priestley—Non-Executive Member—October 1983
Mr. R. J. Horne—Non-Executive Member—May 1980
Mr. M. Young—Non-Executive Member—January 1987
Mr. R. B. Yearsley—Non-Executive Member—September 1984

South Eastern Electricity Board
Mr. G. A. Squair—Chairman—June 1983
Mr. D. A. Lovesey—Deputy Chairman—April 1987
Sir Ian G. McLeod, JP—Non-Executive Member—August 1983
Mr. R. A. Cox, CBE—Non-Executive Member—June 1983
Mr. A. Ferry, MBE—Non-Executive Member—April 1987
Mr. N. J. Hawkins—Non-Executive Member—September 1980
Dame Margaret Weston, DBE—Non-Executive M
February 1981
Mr. M. J. Calvert, JP—Non-Executive Member—1985

South Western Electricity Board
Mr. A. W. Nicol—Chairman—April 1987
Mr. J. J. Seed—Deputy Chairman—June 1986
Mr. M. E. Kelsey—Non-Executive Member—S
1983
Mr. M. J. L. Sayers—Non-Executive Member—1978
Mr. J. O. Gough, MBE—Non-Executive M
October 1980
Mr. J. R. W. R. Carew-Pole—Non-Executive M
June 1981
Mr. P. W. Gregory—Non-Executive Member—Ap
Miss V. E. Arrowsmith-Brown—Non-Executive M
May 1986

Eastern Electricity Board
Mr. J. C. Smith—Chairman—C[illegible]ber 1982
Mr. W. Waring—Deputy Chairman—July 1983
Mr. C. T. Muddiman—Non-Executive Member—1980
Dr. K. W. Humphreys—Non-Executive Membe
1982
Mr. I. D. Coutts, CBE—Non-Executive Membe
1982
Mr. R. C. G. Chesterman, OBE—Non-Executive
—September 1984
Professor R. J. Eden, OBE—Non-Executive M
June 1985
Mr. B. C. Stanley—Non-Executive Member—S
1986

East Midlands Electricity Board
Mr. J. F. Harris—Chairman—October 1982
Mr. D. W. Cowe—Deputy Chairman—November
Mrs. A. Noskwith—Non-Executive Member—July
Mrs. D. J. Parker—Non-Executive Member—July
Mr. W. B. Morgan—Non-Executive Member—July
Mr. G. H. Boyle—Non-Executive Member—June
Mr. G. N. Corah—Non-Executive Member—Marc
Mr. A. G. Schroeder—Non-Executive Member—1986

Midlands Electricity Board
Mr. B. S. Townsend—Chairman—April 1986
Mr. R. K. Young—Deputy Chairman—July 1987
Mr. P. B. G. Williams—Non-Executive Member—1984
Dr. Barbara E. Marsh—Non-Executive Member—1984
Mr. D. F. Harper—Non-Executive Member—June
Mr. F. C. Graves, OBE—Non-Executive Me
October 1980
Dr. M. D. Skillicorn—Non-Executive Member—1981

South Wales Electricity Board
Mr. J. W. Evans—Chairman—April 1984
Mr. W. Kerss—Deputy Chairman—August 1983
Mr. C. J. Beynon—Non-Executive Member—Se
1983
Mr. E. Rea, OBE—Non-Executive Member—Janua
Dr. B. K. Davison, OBE—Non-Executive Membe
1980
Mr. J. Foley, MBE—Non-Executive Member—
1984
Mr. P. J. Phillips, OBE—Non-Executive Membe
1984
Mr. T. C. A. Horn—Non-Executive Member—Apri
Mrs. V. Pollard—Non-Executive Member—January

Merseyside and North Wales Electricity Board
Mr. B. H. Weston—Chairman—September 1985
Mr. R. T. Gales—Deputy Chairman—March 1978
Mr. D. L. Boult—Non-Executive Member—August
Mr. R. B. de Zouche, OBE—Non-Executive Me

April 1984
Dr. R. H. Cummings, OBE — Non-Executive Member — January 1980
Mr. J. M. Griffiths, OBE, JP — Non-Executive Member — January 1981
Mrs. S. M. N. Garston — Non-Executive Member — March 1981
Mr. J. A. Hooson — Non-Executive Member — August 1984

Southern Electricity Board
Mr. D. A. Ross — Chairman — April 1984
Mr. H. R. Casley — Deputy Chairman — October 1986
Mr. R. W. Gurney — Non-Executive Member — November 1978
Mr. M. H. Vogel — Non-Executive Member — July 1980
Mr. A. G. Stoughton-Harris — Non-Executive Member — February 1981
Mr. R. J. Cowley — Non-Executive Member — December 1986
Mr. R. D. Margesson, JP — Non-Executive Member — May 1986
Mr. N. G. L. Timpson — Non-Executive Member — January 1987

Yorkshire Electricity Board
Mr. J. Porteous — Chairman — November 1984
Mr. J. S. Tysoe — Deputy Chairman — September 1985
Mrs. M. E. L. Wood — Non-Executive Member — September 1983
Mr. J. M. T. Ross — Non-Executive Member — May 1983
Mr. D. B. Clark, CBE — Non-Executive Member — November 1980
Mr. P. A. Smith — Non-Executive Member — June 1981
Mr. J. P. M. Denny — Non-Executive Member — March 1984

North Eastern Electricity Board
Mr. T. Rutherford, CBE — Chairman — May 1977
Mr. J. A. Harmsworth — Deputy Chairman — January 1978
Mr. M. Dumbrell — Non-Executive Member — September 1983
Mrs. A. Matthews — Non-Executive Member — October 1980
Mr. J. R. Holdsworth — Non-Executive Member — April 1981
Mr. R. C. Spoor, RD — Non-Executive Member — April 1981
Professor J. L. J. Machin — Non-Executive Member — June 1984
Mr. P. D. Nicholson — Non-Executive Member — December 1985

North Western Electricity Board
Mr. B. R. Hastings — Chairman — September 1985
Mr. A. Crowder — Deputy Chairman — January 1983
Mr. J. C. Seddon — Non-Executive Member — August 1983
Mr. J. Brown, MBE, JP — Non-Executive Member — February 1984
Mr. J. V. Parsons — Non-Executive Member — January 1984
Mr. N. D. Root — Non-Executive Member — April 1984
Professor G. W. Ashworth, CBE — Non-Executive Member — November 1985

Oil and Pipelines Agency
Mr. G. W. Dunkerley — Chairman (part-time) — December 1985
Mr. K. J. Vaughan — Chief Executive — December 1985
Mr. C. G. Finch — Non-Executive Member — December 1985
Mr. O. H. Heald — Non-Executive Member — December 1985

British Nuclear Fuels plc[2]
Mr. C. G. F. Harding — Chairman (part-time) — April 1986
Mr. L. N. Chamberlain — Chief Executive — April 1986
Dr. W. L. Wilkinson, CBE — Deputy Chief Executive — March 1981
Mr. A. Johnson — Full-time Member — September 1979
Mr. H. E. Bolter — Full-time Member — June 1984
Mr. J. M. Hayles — Full-time Member — September 1981
Mr. R. L. Pilling — Full-time Member — March 1981
Dr. T. N. Marsham, CBE — Non-Executive Member — September 1979
Mr. J. R. Wills, OBE — Non-Executive Member — September 1984
Mr. R. M. Dantzic — Non-Executive Member — April 198
Mrs. J. Denton — Non-Executive Member — May 1987
Dr. N. S. Wooding, CBE — Non-Executive Member — September 1987

Advisory Council on Research and Development for Fuel a Power (ACORD)[3]
Mr. M. A. W. Baker[4] — Member — January 1988
Professor J. I. G. Cadogan — Member — February 1987
Mr. G. Clerehugh[4] — Member — April 1983
Mr. D. A. Davis[5] — Member — July 1986
Dr. B. L. Eyre — Member — September 1987
Dr. A. Fish[4] — Member — July 1986
Dr. C. Gronow[4] — Member — October 1985
Mr. J. Houlder — Member — October 1987
Dr. D. Lindley — Member — November 1986
Prof. S. C. Littlechild — Member — October 1987
Mr. R. J. Margetts — Member — October 1987
Prof. L. Maunder, OBE — Member — May 1981
Prof. E. W. J. Mitchell, CBE[4] — Member — October 1985
Mr. K. Moses[4] — Member — May 1986
Dr. H. Rose, CBE — Member — March 1975
Prof. J. Swithenbank — Member — October 1987
Dr. R. D. Tyler — Member — October 1987
Dr. W. L. Wilkinson[4] — Member — October 1985

Offshore Energy Technology Board (OETB)[3]
Mr. G. C. Band — Member — March 1985
Mr. W. E. Bell — Member — March 1985
Mr. K. A. Bray OBE — Member — September 1986
Mr. C. J. Burnett Jnr. — Member — September 1986
Mr. B. Butler — Member — February 1985
Mr. R. H. Campbell — Member — February 1985
Mr. P. Everett — Member — December 1986
Mr. A. Gormly — Member — February 1985
Mr. J. M. Houlder, CBE — Member — March 1985
Dr. H. W. D. Hughes — Member — March 1985
Mr. R. Kingdon — Member — July 1987
Mr. D. Morris — Member — July 1987
Professor T. Patten, CBE — Member — March 1985
Mr. K. H. Taylor — Member — September 1986
Mr. D. B. Walker — Member — March 1985
Mr. I. C. Wood, CBE — Member — February 1985

Offshore Safety and Technology Board (OSTB)[3]
Mr. D. Lennard — Member — January 1988
Mr. S. Clinton — Member — September 1985
Mr. P. S. Godfrey — Member — September 1985
Professor P. Holmes — Member — September 1985
Mr. D. C. Hurden — Member — September 1985
Mr. P. D. Irwin — Member — September 1985
Dr. C. Jones — Member — September 1985
Mr. N. A. Rendall — Member — September 1985
Mr. A. G. Senior — Member — September 1985
Mr. N. A. Townsend — Member — September 1985
Mr. W. J. Winkworth — Member — September 1985

Renewable Energy Advisory Committee (REAC)[3]
Mr. G. Leach — Member — January 1985
Mr. A. Pearson — Member — January 1985
Dr. P. Surman — Member — December 1986
Mr. A. Tweedale — Member — January 1985
Dr. T. G. Walker — Member — January 1985
Mr. S. Woolley — Member — August 1987
Dr. J. K. Dawson — Member — January 1985

[1] The chairmen of the Electricity Consultative Coun who are appointed by the Secretary of State for Tr and Industry after consulting my Department, are ex-officio members of the area electricity boards.

[2] I approve these appointments which are made by B plc.

[3] The Minister of State chairs OETB. The chairmen of ACORD, OSTB and REAC are members of my Department: these and other Civil Service participants are not included in the above lists.

[4] These members of ACORD sit as representatives of their respective organisations and not in their personal capacities.

Note: In addition to the bodies shown above I invite some 18 organisations, covering a wide variety of oil industry interests, to participate in meetings of the Offshore Industry Liaison Committee.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Trusts

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the first year and full year cost of abolishing the additional rate of income tax on trusts.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue cost of abolishing the additional rate of income tax on trusts is estimated to be about £10 million in the first year and about £50 million in a full year at forecast 1988-89 levels of income. These estimates do not allow for any possible behavioural effects nor any consequential change in the liability of beneficiaries to tax on distributed income.

National Insurance

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the additional yield of class 1 national insurance contributions in 1988-89 if the upper earnings limit on employees' contributions were (a) abolished or (b) increased to the earnings level at which a single-earner married couple would start to pay income tax at 40 per cent. on the assumptions that the couple had the average amount of investment income, taxable benefits in kind and mortgage interest relief for a single-earner couple at that income level and that there was statutory indexation of the 40 per cent. tax threshold in the 1988 Budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue yield in a full year at 1988-89 levels of income of (a) abolishing the upper earnings limit on employees' national insurance contributions and (b) increasing the upper earnings limit to £410 per week is estimated to be about £1,400 million and £500 million respectively. The estimates otherwise assume the national insurance rate structure for 1988-89 set out in chapter 3 of the 1987 Autumn Statement and indexation of the current income tax bands and allowances to 1988-89 levels as in table 4.1 of the Autumn Statement. They make no allowance for possible changes in taxpayers' behaviour.

Earnings

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of real take-home pay for a married man on male average earnings since 1978-79.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply which I gave the hon. Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley), on 18 December 1987, at column 843.

Private Health Insurance

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the he will make it his policy to make all con private health insurance allowable against in

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have no plans to

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of th if he will list the names of all the people public bodies by his Department who are office, giving for each the office concerned an appointment.

Mr. Brooke: This information could be p at disproportionate cost.

Trade Balance

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the C the Exchequer (1) if he will publish estimates on the trade balance of (a) a reduction in the s of income tax to 25 per cent. and (b) an upra benefit requiring the same increase in purcha

(2) if he will publish an estimate of the trade balance in a full year of the reduction in rate of income tax to 27 per cent. in 1987-88

Mr. Major: It has not been the practic estimates of the economic effects of chang benefit rates.

EC (Budgetary Regime)

Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Chanc Exchequer if he will outline the arrangement apply in respect of the European Community expenditure under the provisional twelfth regime.

Mr. Brooke: In the absence of an agreed 1988, the Community has, since 1 January, be under a provisional twelfths budgetary accordance with article 204 of the treaty.

This means that expenditure in each mon to one-twelfth of the total appropriation chapter by chapter, in the previous year's bu Council's draft budget, or, in the absence of a —as is currently the case—the preliminary d whichever is lower. The Council may, acting majority, authorise expenditure of additi provided that the 12-month totals are not ex

As regards revenue, traditional own agricultural levies and customs duties—are Community in the normal way. But member contributions are limited to the amounts pai previous year's budget. In accordance with this Kingdom's monthly VAT payment, after ab 259 million ecu. The corresponding sterling fi month's payment, made on 4 January was £17

Withheld Tax (Conscientious Object

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the with whom during the last 18 months the Inla has discussed the issue of individuals and withhold or divert tax on the grounds of co objection to paying for military expenditure th taxes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 11 January 1988]: There has been correspondence between the Inland Revenue and such individuals and groups.

No part of any individual's taxes can be said to fund a particular item of public expenditure. Thus, the general obligation to pay taxes should not involve an issue of conscience for the individual taxpayer. In any event, parliamentary sovereignty would be undermined if individuals were able to choose whether or not to accept Parliament's decision on the overall public expenditure programme.

Subsidised Meals

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated amount of money lost to the Exchequer each year by tax allowances available to the private and public sectors subsidising meals at staff canteens and restaurants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 11 January 1988]: Costs incurred by employers in running staff canteens and restaurants are allowable in the usual way in computing business profits. Information on which to base an estimate of the effect of this on tax revenue is not available.

Value Added Tax

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the supply of water, the provision of ancillary equipment such as valve gear and meters, and the maintenance and repair of equipment, machinery and mains will continue to be zero-rated for value added tax purposes.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 January 1988]: The zero rating by the United Kingdom of water supplied to industry has been challenged by the Commission of the European Communities before the European Court of Justice. Until the court's judgment is delivered the consequences cannot be assessed.

The provision on their own of the other items referred to, and the repair of equipment, machinery and mains is currently subject to tax at the standard rate.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average value added tax paid per household on all goods and services in 1979 and in 1986-87, at (a) current prices, (b) 1979 prices and (c) 1987 prices.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 December 1987]: The latest year for which information is available is 1985.

Average value added tax paid per household (£ per year)

	1979 £	1985 £
(a) Current prices	304	651
(b) 1979 prices	304	390
(c) 1987 prices[1]	547	701

[1] June.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the impact on the retail prices index of imposing value added tax at 15 per cent. on (a) rail and bus fares and (b) all travel fares including air, bus, coach and rail.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 December 1987] impact effect on the retail prices index of imposing added tax at 15 per cent. on rail and bus fares wo to increase the index by 0·2 per cent. Imposing value tax at 15 per cent. on all travel fares including ai coach and rail would also raise the index by 0·2 pe

714 Tax Exemption Certificates

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exch what consideration he has given to the diffi encountered by participants in the enterprise allo scheme in obtaining 714 tax exemption certificates; he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 11 J 1988]: The subcontractors scheme was designed to widespread tax evasion in the industry. Its rules hav relaxed over the years to make it easier for those history of unemployment to obtain a certi Participants in the enterprise allowance scheme w not meet the criteria for a full certificate may be e for a limited certificate, or many work under dedu

11 Downing Street (Rates)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exch if domestic rates are payable in respect of any part Downing street.

Mr. Major [holding answer 11 January 1988]: the hon. Member to the answer given by my righ Friend the Prime Minister on Monday 11 January column 1.

Uncertified Subcontractors

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exch what was the amount of payments to unce subcontractors before deducations on account of tax lastest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 11 J 1988]: No record is kept of the total payme contractors to uncertificated subcontractors in resp which deductions have to be made, but it is estimat it amounted to about £1,350 million in the year en March 1987.

BP Shares

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor Exchequer what information he has as to the total n of partly paid BP shares sold back to the Bank of En and what the cost of the purchase has been to the

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exc if he will indicate the number of British Petroleum purchased by the Bank of England as at 6 Januar under the special arrangements; and if he will m statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 11 J 1988]: Approximately 39 million shares, at a cost o £27 million.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exc what is the estimated full-year revenue effect of ap mortgage interest tax relief to the residence rather than the individual; and what is the estimated effect on the mortgage interest tax relief ceiling if the change is revenue-neutral.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 December 1987]: The direct revenue yield, in 1987-88, of a restriction in mortgage interest relief to a loan of up to £30,000 per residence is estimated to be about £25 million. If this were combined with an increase of £1,000 in the ceiling for mortgage interest relief, the change would be approximately revenue-neutral. These estimates make no allowance for any consequential changes to the distribution of outstanding mortgages.

Personal Allowances

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the C Exchequer what is the estimated full yea and in 1988-89 of replacing the ma allowance on a no-loser basis with (a) a personal allowance and (b) a half-transf specifying in each case the level of the a

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answ 1987]: The information given in the t projections from the 1984-85 survey of and is therefore provisional.

Replacement of married man's allowance with:	1987-88		1988-89
	Cost[1] £ billion	Level of allowance £ per annum	Cost[1] £ billion	Level of allowan £ per annu
Fully transferable personal allowance	6·0	3,110	6·5	3,2
Half-transferable personal allowance	3·5	3,110	4·0	3,2

[1] Full year cost measured on a no-loser basis.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Nurses

12. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to review the current level of nurse staffing; and if he will make a statement.

78. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to review the current level of nurse staffing; and if he will make a statement.

87. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to review the current level of nurse staffing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: Health authority plans for levels of nurse staffing are constantly under review. Nationally the number of nursing and midwifery staff continues to increase. Action is being taken centrally where appropriate to improve the recruitment and retention of such staff.

34. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the current and planned levels of nurses' pay.

Mr. Newton: The pay of nurses, midwives and health visitors is determined in the light of recommendations of the independent Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives and Health Visitors. The review body is currently taking evidence from the Health Departments, trades unions and professional associations with a view to reporting to the Prime Minister in the spring of this year.

The Government have implemented all four reports of the independent review body since it was established in 1984. As a result, nurses' pay has risen by some 16 per cent. in real terms during this period and by nearly 30 per cent in real terms since 1979.

79. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received concerning nursing staff levels in the South East Thames health region.

Mrs. Currie: Concerns about the effects of nursing sraff shortages, particularly in specialist areas and in inner London, are reflected in letters rece Members and members of the public. I chief executive of the NHS Managem representatives of the three inner Londo in South-East Thames region to discuss produced on recruitment and retention of December, at the ministerial review of So region, the availability of nursing and m enable services to be sustained and dev region's proposals to maintain recruitm retention, were key issues during the dis

Severe Weather Payment

13. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary o Services if he proposes to review the sc weather payments when sufficient ex operation during the current winter is av will make a statement.

15. Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secret Social Services if he will make it his poli operation of the scheme for severe weat the light of the current winter's experienc make a statement.

50. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary o Services if he intends to review the operati for severe weather payments in the light its operation during the winter; and if statement.

88. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secret Social Services if he will make a statement so far during the current winter of the weather payments.

Mr. Portillo: The Social Security provision for help to continue to be given of heating in cold weather from next win details of the new arrangemens will be dec of experience this winter.

Care in the Community

14. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about his policy on care in the community.

Mr. Newton: We continue to receive a considerable number of representations from time to time. Those received recently include one from the Herefordshire Society for the Mentally Handicapped. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has written to my hon. Friend today.

Residential Homes

16. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the policy of his Department on the carrying out by police, at the request of local authority social services departments, of checks on owners and managers seeking the registration of residential homes, in the light of the vulnerability of residents of such homes.

Mrs. Currie: We share the hon. Gentleman's concern at possibly unsuitable persons running homes. Arrangements to enable local authorities to obtain information from police about any criminal record of people they propose to employ are being assessed by the Home Office, and we understand consultations are in progress about the possibility of extending the existing arrangements.

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the results of the study of local authorities' costs on registering and inspecting private residential homes will be announced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: It is important that the local authorities' duties of monitoring and inspecting private and voluntary residential care homes are properly carried out to ensure that these homes have acceptable standards. When the new arrangements for registering and inspecting residential care homes were introduced in 1985, we made it clear that the fees should cover local authorities' costs on this work. A report by the Department's social services inspectorate and the Welsh Office's social work service shows that fees are not doing this.

The report of the study has been issued today with a covering letter to interested bodies inviting views on proposals for increases in the level of fees for 1988-89 and on certain other proposed changes in the regulations. The study found that significant increases would be required to enable local authorities to meet the full cost of an adequate registration and inspection service from fees, as intended. It suggests various options for achieving this.

The Government's preference is for an increase in the initial registration fee from £550 to £1,000 to cover full costs to the authority, including the cost of dealing with the numerous inquiries which do not result in an application for registration and accompanying fee, and an increase in the annual inspection fee from £15 to £26 per place to meet the cost of adequate inspection arrangements. It is also proposed that the registration fee for a change of owner should in all cases be £500 and the registration fee for a manager should increase from £100 to £150. It is intended that any fee increases decided following consultation should be introduced from 1 April 1988.

Consultation is also taking place on other amendments to the regulations including an increase in the minimum number of times a home must be inspected fr twice every 12 months and that at least one i year is to be without notice. It is proposed to b punishment for children and young people in th in line with the Government's commitment to p use of that form of punishment in residentia ments where children and young pe accommodated. In this context we propose also shortly on draft "Children's Homes (Co Discipline) Regulations."

Resource Allocation Working Party For

17. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask th of State for Social Services whether he has an revise the resource allocation working party fo

Mr. Newton: The National Health Management Board has been undertaking a re resource allocation working party formula to scope for improving the way in which th measures relative need for health care across th The review's programme of analysis and resea almost complete, and any recommendations emerge will then be carefully considered.

Hospital Closures

18. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary o Social Services what is his latest estimate of the beds in National Health Service hospitals cl permanent or temporary basis since January 1

Mrs. Currie: Figures for 1987 are not yet Information on urgent temporary closures is no centrally.

38. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State Services what is his estimate of the number National Health Service hospitals closed on a or temporary basis since January 1987.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information on bed closures is not collected centrally.

Figures for permanent bed closures in 1987 available.

Invalid Care Allowance

19. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State Services if there has been any increase in the n his Department's staff involved in processing a for invalid care allowance as a result of the Court judgment against the United Kingd extended the eligibility of invalid care allo married women; and if he will make a stateme

Mr. Scott: The number of staff processing i allowance claims was increased when the allo extended to married women.

In mid-1986, 34 staff were employed in the i allowance unit but during the second half of numbers were built up rapidly so that throughou staff or more were in post. The new complement for the unit is 304 posts.

30. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary o Social Services what support he proposes will b for those caring for sick dependants at home fol passage of the Social Security Bill.

Mr. Scott: The existing provisions for carers within the social security system are not affected by passage of the current Bill. Invalid care allowance, supplementary benefit (income support from April 1988), and home responsibilities protection will continue to be available as at present to those who satisfy the qualifying rules.

Nurses and Midwives

20. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses and midwives were working in Wessex (a) in May 1979 and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available.

67. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses and midwives were working in Wessex (a) in 1979 and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: The number of nurses and midwives working in Wessex was 19,660 at 30 September 1979, and 23,060 at 30 September 1986.

Leicestershire

21. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he next plans to pay an official visit to Leicestershire to examine National Health Service hospital provision there.

Mrs. Currie: We have no plans to do so in the near future.

Royal Victoria Infirmary, Newcastle

23. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many doctors in the children's cancer unit at the Royal Victoria infirmary, Newcastle, are paid from funds provided by charities.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that medical charities provide funding for three of the junior doctors who work in this unit. Such co-operation between certain charities and the National Health Service works to their mutual benefit, as the NHS provides opportunities for research which, in turn, brings benefits to patients.

"Child Care and Family Services"

24. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be in a position to announce a decision on legislation to give effect to the proposals in the White Paper on "Child Care and Family Services."

25. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be in a position to announce a decision as to whether he intends to introduce legislation on the proposals in the White Paper on "Child Care and Family Services."

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) on 28 October at columns 307-8. I said then that we would review the proposals in the White Paper in the light of recommendations in Mrs. Justice Butler-Sloss's report of the Cleveland inquiry when this is received. Subject to that, we intend to introduce a Bill as soon as parliamentary time is available.

Income-related B

26. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secr Services in what respects he expe income-related benefits to differ fr

Mr. Scott: The main changes supplementary benefit and family i income support and family credit a housing benefit. The new system improve work incentives and will e focused on those in greatest need.

Privatisatio

27. Mr. David Davis: To ask th Social Services what proportion of catering services in the northern r to competitive tendering.

32. Mr. Porter: To ask the Secre Services what proportion of la catering services in the East Ang subject to competitive tendering.

33. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask for Social Services what proportion and catering services in the South W subject to competitive tendering.

55. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Social Services what proportion of catering services in North East Th subject to competitive tendering.

70. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secre Services what proportion of lau catering services in the Yorkshire re to competitive tendering.

71. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Social Services what proportion of l catering services in the South Wes been subject to competitive tenderin

75. Mr. Rost: To ask the Secreta Services what proportion of lau catering services in the Trent regio competitive tendering.

76. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Social Services what proportion of l catering services in the North Wes been subject to competitive tenderin

77. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask t for Social Services what proportion and catering services in the Wessex re to competitive tendering.

81. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Se Social Services what proportion of la catering services in the West Midla subject to competitive tendering.

Mr. Newton: The most recen centrally is for the quarter ended Services put out to tender, as a per given in the table.

Region	Laundry	Domesti
Northern	100	10
Yorkshire	81	8

Region	Laundry	Domestic	Catering	Total
Trent	63	99	83	90
East Anglian	100	100	75	89
North West Thames	91	93	63	81
North East Thames	91	78	37	63
South West Thames	93	93	70	84
Wessex	100	100	100	100
South Western	100	94	62	80
West Midlands	90	98	87	92

Rating Reform

28. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the amount of provision for community charge that it is intended to include in income support payments.

46. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he will take to ensure that claimants in receipt of income support and family credit will have access to funds to make their liability to pay a community charge when it becomes eligible.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) and the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 16 December at columns 599-601.

North-West Region

29. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met the chairman of the North Western regional health authority to discuss present and future funding of health services in the north-west.

Mr. Moore: This subject arose as part of general discussions with Sir John Page during my visit to the regional health authority headquarters on 30 October 1987.

Handicapped Children

31. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received about provisions for caring for handicapped children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Representations have been received recently on a range of subjects relating to the care of handicapped children of which the major issues raised concern the provision of conductive education and implementation of sections 5 and 6 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Our position on conductive education was set out in the reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 24 November 1987 at columns 180-81 and I announced that implementation of sections 5 and 6 of the 1986 Act would take effect on 1 February 1988 in my reply to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 4 November 1987 at column 783.

Pensioners (Incomes)

37. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of those persons retiring now have a second or third income.

Mr. Scott: The latest figures available are for 1985. At that time, over 85 per cent. of recently-retired pensioner households had income from sources benefits—such as occupational pensions earnings.

48. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary o Services what increase there has been in a incomes since 1979.

Mr. Scott: The average net income income unit (a single person over pensio where the husband is 65 or more) rose b 2·7 per cent. per year, in real terms betwee twice as fast as that of the population as (Source: Family Expenditure Survey.)

Maternity Allowances

39. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of Services what plans he has to amend cu in respect of maternity allowances.

Mr. Portillo: We have no immediate these regulations.

Electricity, Gas and Water (Disco

41. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary o Services what steps he takes to ensure tha (b) gas and (c) water are not cut off from of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Scott: People on supplementary threatened with disconnection of mains may have their fuel paid directly if the adj considers it is in the interests of the famil scheme is the product of an agreement (kn statement of intent on direct payment for f DHSS and the fuel industry. Provided t agrees, deductions are made from supplementary benefit and paid directly t cover both current consumption and to r

Similar direct payment arrangements n water rates to prevent disconnection of addition, the fuel industries' code of practi the supply of gas and electricity to pensi should not be disconnected between 1 March.

Family Credit Scheme

43. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secret Social Services how many more low-inc expects to benefit when the new family introduced.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that abou families will receive family credit than wou family income supplement had that schem

47. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Se for Social Services how much more will new family credit scheme than is currently income supplement and associated benefi

Mr. Scott: On the basis of a case lo 470,000, spending on family credit from A over £200 million more than is currently family income supplement and free schoo welfare foods for family income supplem

Community Care (Physical Abuse)

45. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the physical abuse of persons in community care over the last four weeks.

Mrs. Currie: None that we are aware of. If the hon. Member has a particular representation in mind, I should welcome his assistance.

Hospital Building

51. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many major hospital building schemes have been started and completed since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Information held centrally shows that in England some 250 hospital building schemes, each costing over £1 million, have been started and completed since 1979.

Health Authorities (Income Generation)

52. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimates his Department has prepared of the amounts which health authorities could raise over the next few years as a result of income generation schemes.

Mr. Newton: Until health authorities have fully evaluated the possibilities for generating income and have drawn up plans, it is difficult to forecast with any precision what amounts they will raise. However, we believe that health authorities should be capable of generating net additional income of £10 million to £20 million in 1988-89, £40 million to £50 million in 1989-90, and £60 million to £70 million in 1990-91.

Attendance Allowance

53. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the numbers of under-twos otherwise eligible for attendance allowance but currently excluded by virtue of their age.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that there may be up to 3,000 children under the age of two years who might satisfy the medical criteria for an attendance allowance at either the lower or higher rate.

Missing Girocheques

54. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants in 1986 reported to his Department that they did not receive their Girocheques; and how many received payment to cover their loss.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Deaf People (Specialised Telephone Exchange)

56. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent discussions he has had with the Royal National Institute for the Deaf on the subject of financial support for the institute's specialised telephone exchange; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Discussions have been held involving representatives of the RNID and British Telecom, and officials of the Government Departments concerned. Following these discussions RNID has made a formal application for help, including revised costings, under the Government's concerned technology programme. This application is receiving urgent consideration.

Hospital Beds

57. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the number of beds in National Health Services hospitals closed on a permanent or temporary basis since January 1987.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information for 1987 is not yet available.

Competitive Tendering

60. Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings have been made to the most recent available date through the implementation of the competitive tendering initiative.

Mr. Newton: As at the end of September 1987 estimated annual savings of some £103 million had been generated. For further information I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 8 December 1987 at column 141.

Elderly and Disabled Persons (Alarm Systems)

63. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the community care budget will cover the costs of dispersed alarm systems for the elderly and disabled who live in their own homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Decisions about the priorities for social services and housing provision, including dispersed alarm systems, are for the local authorities concerned to take in the light of local needs, circumstances and plans. The funding of alarm systems is certainly part of the wider question of funding community care. We have drawn this to the attention of Sir Roy Griffiths, who is reviewing the way public funds are used to support community care policy, and we will give further consideration to this issue in the light of his report.

Shropshire District Health Authority

65. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Shropshire district health authority to discuss the state of the authority's finances.

Mr. Newton: I recently met the chairman of Shropshire health authority. No further meetings are currently planned.

Housing Benefit (War Widows)

66. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to make special arrangements to enable local authorities to continue to disregard war widow's income in assessing housing benefit entitlement.

Mr. Portillo: The Housing Benefit (General) Regulations 1987 increase the amount of war widows' pensions that all local authorities are required to disregard from £4 to £5. In addition, under the Social Security Act 1986 individual local authorities continue to have discretion to disregard for housing benefit purposes up to the full amount of any war widow's pension. Any other income which war widows may have is treated in the same way as the income of other claimants.

NHS Expenditure

69. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of gross domestic product National Health Service expenditure currently represents; and what comparable information he has for France, West Germany and Italy.

Mr. Newton: In 1984 (the latest year for which comparable figures are available), public spending on health care as a percentage of gross domestic product was as follows:

	Percentage
United Kingdom	5·3
France	6·5
Germany	6·4
Italy	6·1

These figures relate to financial inputs. It is more difficult to compare outputs, but, as medical costs are known to vary greatly between different countries, it is likely that the value obtained from public spending on health care also varies. Medical costs are relatively low in the United Kingdom.

AIDS

72. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice and assistance his Department has given to the Haemophilia Society in administering the special trust fund for haemophiliacs with the AIDS virus.

Mr. Newton: Officials are working closely with officers of the Haemophilia Society on the arrangements to establish a special trust fund from which financial assistance can be given to those haemophiliacs infected with HIV and to their dependants.

I hope that this work will be completed shortly and so enable the Government to pay to the trust fund the £10 million I announced in my statement to the House on 16 November.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will meet the president of the Royal College of Physicians for the purpose of discussing measurement of the prevalence of HIV infection.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so at the moment.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest figures for the number of AIDS cases in (a) the North West regional health authority and (b) the Mersey regional health authority.

Mr. Newton: The number of AIDS cases reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre at the end of December 1987 was published by the Department yesterday. A copy of the figures is in the Library.

Personal Pensions

73. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what incentives will be provided for people to join a personal pension scheme as a result of the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Portillo: From 1 July 1988 it will be possible to contract out of the state earnings-related pension scheme through a personal pension from a scheme approved by the Occupational Pensions Board. Personal pensions will attract minimum contributions paid by the Department. These will be made up of a partial rebate of national insurance contributions and, until April 1993, a special incentive payment. In most cases the payments by the Department will include tax relief on the employee's share of the minimum contribution. People taking out a personal pension before 6 April 1989 will be able to backdate membership to 6 April 1987 and claim an extra year's minimum contributions, including the incentive.

NHS (Revenue)

74. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate for 1988-89 of the total revenue of the National Health Service which will come from the various charges for services; and how this figure compares with five and 10 years before.

Mrs. Currie: Estimated revenue from charges for National Health Service services in England is as follows:

£ million

	Cash	At 1987-88 prices
1978-79	144	292
1983-84	394	468
1988-89	[1]520	498

[1] As estimated in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1987-88 to 1989-90" January 1987 (Cm. 56-II).

Unemployment and Poverty Traps

82. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures he intends to take to reduce the effect of the unemployment and poverty traps.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 30 June 1987 at column 76.

Child Abuse

84. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he plans to combat child abuse.

Mr. Newton: In my reply to my hon. Friend on 27 October, at columns 243-44, I referred to the programme of work that the Government had in hand. This includes the new guidance and circular on multi-agency working which was issued in draft last year; the special training initiative for professional staff, of which two stages have already begun and plans for a third stage are in hand; and the preparation of practice guidelines for social workers and for nurses and of guidance for doctors on the clinical diagnosis of sexual abuse. All this work will be published when we have considered the report from Mrs. Justice Butler-Sloss on Cleveland.

Paediatric Nursing

85. Mr. Budgen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses are trained in paediatric intensive care now; and how many were so trained in 1979.

Mr. Newton: A post-basic course for paediatric intensive care nursing was introduced in England in the year ended March 1987. Prior to that there was a post-basic course for special and intensive care of the newborn which was introduced in 1983. The numbers entering that training during the years ended March 1985, 1986 and 1987 were:

	Number
1985	287
1986	278
1987	393

Blood Glucose Testing Strips

86. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he now expects to be able to make blood glucose testing strips available on prescription to diabetics.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 24 November 1987 at column 174. Discussions with manufacturers about supply arrangements and price will take place during January and February.

Community Care Services

89. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what additional resources he proposes to make available to enable the care in the community strategy to work effectively.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Members for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) and for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) on 24 November 1987 at columns 160-61.

Royal College of Nursing

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met representatives of the Royal College of Nursing.

Mrs. Currie: My right hon. Friend met the general secretary of the Royal College of Nursing on 21 July.

Family Doctors

35. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures he intends to take to increase competition between family doctors.

64. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what effect the proposals in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" will have on competition in the family practitioner services.

Mr. Newton: The proposals in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cm. 249) will stimulate competition within the family practitioner services in a number of ways. These include plans to increase the proportion of a doctor's income which is derived from capitation fees in order to encourage doctors to practise in ways which meet patients' needs. We will seek to relate doctors' pay more closely to individual performance and to the range of services they provide to patients, for example through incentive payments for reaching targets in preventive medicine. Procedures for changing doctor will be simplified. The Government will also be discussing with the dental profession the possibilities for change in the general dental practitioners' remuneration system with a view to introducing new incentives both for high efficiency and high standards of care.

The White Paper set out measures to improve information to patients so that they are able to make an informed choice of family doctor and dentists. Family practitioner committees will be required to improve information about local practitioners on their lists and to make the lists more widely available. Practices will be encouraged to provide informative leaflets to their patients. Among the proposals for a revised contract for general dental practitioners recently put to the profession was a requirement for dentists to explain proposed treatment plans and their probable cost to patients.

The Government will be discussing the reduction of restraints on advertising by doctors with the General Medical Council and welcome the steps taken by the Director General of Fair Trading to consult interested organisations on the terms of a proposal to refer the restrictions on dental advertising to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

In respect of opticians, the principle of greater competition which already applies for the sale of spectacles will be extended to the provision of sight tests.

Family Practitioner Services

36. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has to make family practitioner services more responsive to the consumer.

Mr. Newton: The proposals in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cm. 249) to extend and increase competition in the family practitioner services, to provide more information about services and to simplify the complaints procedures will make services more responsive to the needs and wishes of consumers. Tighter qualifications for the receipt of basic practice allowance will encourage a greater basic commitment from family doctors to work in general practice. An increase in the proportion of their income which is derived from capitation fees will encourage doctors to practise in ways which meet patients' needs.

A number of further measures, for example incentives to reach targets in preventive medicine, seek to relate doctors' pay more closely to their performance. Proposals for a revised contract intended to improve the quality and availability of NHS dental services and to secure a greater contractual commitment have also recently been put to the dental profession.

The Government will further be discussing with the medical and dental professions amendment to their contracts to clarify the role of general medical and dental practitioners in prevention and health promotion, thus helping to meet the growing demand from consumers for advice and information on this important aspect of health care. Some of the additional resources released by the changes proposed in the White Paper will be devoted to training dentists in ways of making their practices more attractive to those who do not attend the dentist regularly. We will also make available funds to assist in the provision of health promotion material for display in pharmacies and will encourage an extended use of pharmacists' skills.

In order that consumers should become better informed about services in their areas the Government will require family practitioner committees to provide more information on their lists published of local practitioners, and will encourage the wide dissemination of practice leaflets. The Government will be discussing the reduction of restraints on advertising by doctors with the General Medical Council and welcome the steps taken by the Director General of Fair Trading to consult interested organisations on the terms of a proposal to refer the restrictions on dental advertising to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. As further steps to improving standards and consumer choice in the general medical services, we shall be making it easier for patients to change doctor and will be requiring family practitioner committees to carry out consumer surveys in their areas and to act on the results.

With regard to the general ophthalmic services the Government have already taken a number of steps to increase competition while retaining adequate safeguards to protect consumers. We are now seeking powers through the Health and Medicines Bill to extend the principle of increased competition to sight testing while protecting the consumer's freedom to purchase spectacles where they choose.

Benefits (Disabled Claimants)

40. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what further protection he proposes for disabled claimants who will have a reduced entitlement in April.

44. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to announce the provision of a further top-up benefit for those severely disabled after April 1988 when the new income support system comes into effect.

68. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what further protection he proposes for disabled claimants who will have a reduced entitlement in April.

83. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what further protection he proposes for disabled claimants who will have a reduced entitlement in April.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Members and my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) earlier today.

Drugs (Research)

42. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the annual cost to the National Health Service of the additional investigations and extra time spent by patients in hospitals for research carried out on behalf of drug companies.

Mr. Newton: The level of research activity varies widely between health authorities and it is not possible to estimate the overall cost to the National Health Service.

NHS Patients (Private Care)

49. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in the area of the Sheffield district health authority have had operations in private hospitals under the scheme to cut down waiting lists for operations in National Health Service hospitals since the scheme's inception.

Mr. Newton: As at 31 December 1987, 20 patients from NHS waiting lists had had operations in private hospitals as part of the waiting list initiative, at a cost of £20,000. It is likely that this number will increase by some 100 by the end of the financial year. The Sheffield health district's initial waiting list fund allocation of £411,700 is planned to treat over 1,900 additional in-patients and some 2,660 extra out-patients in 1987-88.

General Practitioners

58. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average annual increase in the number of general practitioners between (a) 1973 and 1978 and (b) 1978 and 1986.

Mr. Newton: The average annual increase in the number of general medical practitioners (unrestricted principals) in England between 1973 and 1978 was 209 compared with 428 between 1978 and 1986.

NHS (Charges)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on the proposals for additional charges for National Health Service patients.

59. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received in support of his proposals to introduce charges for eye tests and dental examinations; and how many he has received expressing opposition.

61. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received in support of his proposals to introduce charges for eye tests and dental examinations; and how many he has received expressing opposition.

62. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received in support of his proposals to introduce charges for eye tests and dental examinations; and how many he has received expressing opposition.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 11 January.

Regional Health Authorities (Staff)

80. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the change in the number of administrative staff employed by regional health authorities since 1979 by region.

Mr. Newton: The numbers of whole-time equivalent administrative and clerical staff employed by regional health authorities in September 1979 and September 1986 were as follows:

Regional Health Authorities	1979	1986
Northern	510	450
Yorkshire	630	510
Trent	720	940
East Anglian	300	330
North West Thames	370	290
North East Thames	430	540
South East Thames	450	590

Regional Health Authorities	1979	1986
South West Thames	450	550
Wessex	460	310
Oxford	370	530
South Western	520	430
West Midlands	1,050	1,060
Mersey	510	490
North Western	830	790
Total	7,610	7,820

The figures given for each RHA are not necessarily comparable, since the effects of developments since 1979, including the NHS reorganisation of 1982 and centralisation in such areas as supplies and stores, have varied between regions. The figures are rounded to the nearest 10 whole-time equivalents.

Reform

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much extra will be spent on low-income families as a result of the changes to income-related benefits in April 1988.

Mr. Scott: Comparisons between the new income-related benefit schemes and what might have happened under the old schemes must be hypothetical. However, on an annual basis, and using the assumptions underlying the structural tables in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits" (published at the time of the uprating statement on 27 October), the disposable incomes of all those receiving income-related benefits and caring for dependent children will be some £200 million higher once housing costs have been met.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of claimants, together with the number of dependants, who will not receive any increase in benefit when income support comes into effect; and if he will subdivided these data according to whether the claimant is (a) a pensioner, (b) sick or disabled, (c) unemployed, and (d) a single parent.

Mr. Scott: Using the assumptions underlying table 1A of the "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits" (published at the time of the uprating statement on 27 October) the information is as follows:

	Number of claimants (thousands)	Number of dependants (thousands)
a. Pensioners	820	185
b. Sick or disabled	80	30
c. Unemployed and others	790	325
d. Single parents	230	390
Total	1,920	930

General Practitioners (New Technology)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will further review his policies with regard to the use of new technology by general practitioners.

Mr. Newton: The Government continue to support such developments in general practice and recently announced in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" that they will encourage the continued development of information and communication technology and puterisation in primary care, especially with reg health promotion and prevention of ill health.

Mobility and Attendance Allowances

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Services what is the average length of time that between an application for mobility or atter allowance, and its final decision by him after all appeal procedures have been exhausted.

Mr. Scott: Decisions, including the final decisio claims for attendance allowance and mobility allo are made by independent adjudicating authorities. I that information is not kept in a form from whi average time for claims to go fully through the a procedures can be calculated.

Information Technology Staff

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of Sta Social Services what proportion of the profes information technology staff in his Department, incl programmers, systems analysts and managers, is ba London and the south-east.

Mr. Portillo: Of those civil servants in DHSS v employed on information technology tasks (as speci Treasury—Central Computer and Telecommunica Agency guidelines) in grades from executive offic unified grade 7, 26 per cent. work in London an south-east.

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of Sta Social Services how many professional level inform technology staff are employed by his Depart including programmers, systems analysts and mana and how many trainees there are for such posts.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information is not ava in the form requested. The Department does not mai separate statistics for programmers, systems ana managers or trainees and such detailed information be provided only at disproportionate cost. Howeve total number of civil servants in the DHSS, w employed on information technology tasks (as specif Treasury—Central Computer and Telecommunica Agency guidelines) in grades from executive offic unified grade 7 is 1,494.

Hospices

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of Sta Social Services what support his Department gives t hospice movement; in what form it is given; and if h make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The level and form of support individual hospices is a matter for local health autho who were given detailed guidance on this earlier in the in circular HC (87)4, a copy of which is in the Library. stated:

"Where a voluntary group provides a service represents an essential element in a health authority's ov plans for terminal care, the health authority should agree them a contribution to the costs of that service".

Patients in independent hospices may be eligibl supplementary benefit to help with charges up to £23 week. Specialist in-patient, home care and hospital support services for the terminally ill are also provided directly by a number of health authorities.

The Department has approved direct grants of £600,000 to the London Lighthouse which is building the first hospice specifically for people with AIDS, and £200,000 to the Mildmay Mission hospital towards the cost of adapting one ward into a unit to provide hospice care for people terminally ill with AIDS.

Operations (Costs)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the relative costs of operations and other treatments in different district health authorities; and if he will make a statement on any research currently being undertaken.

Mrs. Currie: Information on the costs of specific operations and other treatments in district health authorities is not routinely collected. The Department is not currently funding research as such on this subject. However, as part of the resource management initiative, information systems are being developed which, used in conjunction with patient classification systems, will enable comparisons to be made of resources used to treat patients suffering from similar types of illness or requiring similar treatment procedures. We hope to have the first results of the new system available in April.

Young Claimants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about his policy towards 17-year-olds who are not still in education and also choose to remain on social security rather than take a job, or accept a training place.

Mr. Scott: Up to 8 January we have received a total of 53 letters concerning the Government's proposal to withdraw the general entitlement to income support from 16 and 17-year-olds. Most of these expressed concern about particular groups such as the disabled and the homeless and the representations made will be fully considered when the regulations exempting certain groups from the general provision are framed.

Cancer Screening

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether all district health authorities are still expected to meet the target of 31 March 1988 for the introduction of cervical cancer screening; and whether this screening will cover all women at risk.

Mrs. Currie: The team led by Sir Roy Griffiths is monitoring progress and present indications are that all district health authorities should meet the target date for the introduction of computerised call and recall systems for cervical cancer screening.

All women aged 20-64 will be invited for screening within five years of implementation of the system, unless their general practitioners have indicated that they should be excluded.

Revised guidance to health authorities and family practitioner committees on the organisation of cervical cancer screening services has been issued today and copies placed in the Library.

Health Education Authority (Publicity)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the advertising, marketing and public relations consultants currently retained by the Health Education Authority and the criteria by which these consultants are chosen and their performance assessed.

Mrs. Currie: The Health Education Authority currently retains two advertising agencies—Abbott Mead Vickers and TBWA. In appointing and assessing the performance of such agencies, the authority employs the criteria normally used by public and commercial bodies.

Fish Oils

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make it his policy to promote the consumption of the fish oils containing docosohexaenoic and eicosapentaenoic acids in the prevention of coronary disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have no plans to do so. The Government are concerned that people should eat healthy, balanced diets, which can be done without promoting the consumption of any particular food or food component.

Maxepa capsules and liquid, which contain eicosopentaenoic acid and docosohexaenoic acid, are available for prescription under the National Health Service, but their licensed indication is

"the reduction of plasma triglycerides in patients with severe hypertriglyceridaemia, and who are judged to be at special risk of ischaemic heart disease and/or pancreatis".

They are not licensed for general use in the prevention of coronary heart disease.

Perinatal Mortality

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage change in perinatal mortality between 1978 and the latest available year in (a) the north-west region and (b) England as a whole.

Mrs. Currie: The information is given in the table.

Perinatal mortality rates for England and North West Standard Region 1978 and 1986; percentage decrease from 1978 to 1986

Area of usual residence	[1]Perinatal mortality rates 1978	1986	Percentage decrease 1978-86
England	15·45	9·53	38·3
North West Standard Region	17·00	9·95	41·5

[1] Still births and deaths under one week per 1,000 total live and still births.

Dentists (Compensation)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his reply of 7 December, Official Report, column 34, he will make a statement on his discussions with the British Dental Association, on compensation for dentists who may be obliged to sell their businesses at depressed prices as a result of proposals in the Health and Medicines Bill.

Mr. Newton: Officials of the Department held the first of a series of meetings with the British Dental Association on 8 January, to discuss the proposals in the Bill relating to the retirement of dentists. No conclusions have yet been reached.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names of all the people appointed to public bodies by his Department who are currently in office, giving for each the office concerned and the date of appointment.

Mr. Portillo: I regret this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost, since the Department is responsible for 133 public bodies with appointments totalling over 10,000.

Social Work Diploma

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department is yet in a position to make a statement on funding for the proposed diploma of qualification in social work, in the light of the training recommendations of the recent Blom-Cooper report.

Mr. Newton: The Government are currently considering the proposals for the qualifying diploma in social work and hope to make an announcement shortly.

Drug Damage Compensation

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will start preparing legislation to establish a no-fault scheme for drug damage compensation which would provide for appropriate and prompt payments to be made by the pharmaceutical industry to established victims;

(2) what estimates are known to his Department of the cost of providing a no-fault compensation scheme for drug-damaged victims.

Mr. Newton: The Government have no plans to introduce legislation to establish a no-fault scheme of this kind and have no reliable estimates of the costs involved. From 1 March 1988 when the relevant provisions of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 come into force, people who can establish that they have suffered damage from using a defective medicinal product will no longer have also to prove negligence before they can establish liability.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about establishing a no-fault compensation payment scheme for victims of drug damage; and what was the thrust of the views expressed.

Mr. Newton: None, other than those put forward in the House by the right hon. Member himself.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has of the amount pharmaceutical companies now pay for insurance cover against drug damage compensation payments.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information of the kind referred to is not held by the Department.

Broadmoor (Outside Visits)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any proposals to alter the procedures operating over the past 12 months at Broadmoor relating to outside visits for shoppi purposes for convicted prisoners; and if he statement.

Mrs. Currie: Officials from the Departme Home Office are currently reviewing the ar under which special hospital patients, inclu transferred to the hospitals from prisons, are go on outings into the community. It is our i issue updated guidance to all the special hosp

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary c Social Services how many convicted persons h from Broadmoor whilst taking part in expeditions or public house visits during t months; what criteria are applied to permissi visits; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: One patient absconded durin from the hospital during the 12-month perio November 1987. He had not been transfe hospital from prison. Before a special hospit allowed to go on an outing, approval must be or her responsible medical officer, the clinical t medical director. In the case of patients restrictions under sections 41 or 49 of the Me Act 1983 the consent of the Home Secret required. The arrangements in relation to the ing staff must be approved by a senior nurse the hospital.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary c Social Services on how many occasions durin months inmates of Broadmoor have been allo public houses; and of these how many wer prisoners.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that such records are

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary c Social Services on how many occasions durin months inmates of Broadmoor have been allo part in shopping expeditions; and of these how convicted prisoners.

Mrs. Currie: During the 12-month perio November 1987, 26 male patients and 14 fem took part in 40 and 30 shopping expeditions r some patients were involved in more than on Two of the male patients had been transfe hospital from prison.

Worth House Children's Home

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State Services when he expects to receive the report c services inspector into allegations of further poor supervision at the Worth house childr Herne Bay; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I have now received from services inspectorate a report on Worth Ho children's home, Herne Bay. The inspection standards of care at Worth House were adequate. The Department will continue to d the London boroughs' children's regiona committee the wider issue of the placement of accommodation which is, as far as practicab their home area.

London Couriers (Accidents)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1979 the cost to the National Health Service in London of treatment to victims of accidents involving bicycle and motor cycle couriers.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Recovery of Benefits

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking to pursue the recommendations made by the Public Accounts Committee in its report of 19 November 1987 that the Department should recover social security benefits when awards of damages in tort are made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Following consideration of the report, we have appointed management consultants Touche Ross to establish how much would be recoverable to DHSS if 100 per cent. of social security benefits were recovered from awards paid in consequence of an injury. The consultants will also assess the administrative implications of an effective recovery scheme for insurance companies and DHSS. We expect a report in April 1988 and will consider its findings before deciding whether and, if so, how to proceed with a recovery scheme.

Public Health Laboratory Service

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the revenue cost of the public health laboratory service in each of the last five years.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 11 January 1988] revenue expenditure of the public health laboratory in each of the last five years was:

	£ million
1982-83	28·6
1983-84	30·8
1984-85	32·3
1985-86	35·9
1986-87	38·7

These figures are taken from the board's annual acc

NHS (Youth Training Scheme)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Services if he will list the organisations he inte consult about the proposal to employ young peo YTS schemes within the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 11 January 1988] recently published feasibility study on the extended youth training schemes in the National Health Se currently being considered by the four bodies sponsored it—the Department, the Manpower S Commission, the United Kingdom Central Coun Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting and the Training Authority. If certain ideas in the study w be pursued—such as a national framework for t outcomes from YTS—there will need to be co tions with the staff side (to which copies of the repo already been sent) and others. The many health auth which already run YTS programmes are subject normal YTS rules regarding consultation; local co tion will continue to be required for any new progra in line with MSC requirements.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 13 January 1988

HOME DEPARTMENT

Data Protection Act

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number and percentage of firms who should have registered under the Data Protection Act and have not yet done so.

Mr. Renton: The Data Protection Registrar originally estimated that approximately 300,000 applications should be received from those required to register under the Data Protection Act. By 31 December 1987 there were 135,149 entries on the register and some 18,000 applications were still being processed. The registrar now considers that the original estimate was on the high side and that the current shortfall in registrations is no more than 100,000. He is continuing his drive to secure more registrations.

Road Accidents (Sentences)

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish an inquiry into the range of sentences available to the courts in cases relating to road accidents and into the legal rights of victims' families in such cases.

Mr. John Patten: A review of offences and penalties in road traffic law, under the chairmanship of Dr. Peter North, is nearing completion. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport expects to receive the report shortly.

The rights of victims' families, which are outside the review's remit, include a right to damages recoverable in civil proceedings, and normally paid by the offender's insurers or the Motor Insurers Bureau; and in England and Wales the same right as other citizens to bring prosecutions for criminal offences. The Government are doing much to assist victims of crime in general and their families—for example, through the financial help we are giving to victim support schemes — in England and Wales, £9 million over three years from 1987-88. I have no plans for a separate inquiry in relation to victims of road traffic offences.

Crown Properties (Fire Services)

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current establishment of the Fire Services Inspectorate covering Crown properties in England and Wales; how many of these posts are at present occupied; when the occupants are due to retire; and what arrangements are being made to fill vacancies caused by retirement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The complement of Crown inspectors in the premises and inspection group of the fire service inspectorate is one grade II inspector and 10 assistant inspectors; two posts are presently occupied; the grade II inspector is due to retire at the end of Vacancies are being advertised in the national press 21 January.

Sexual Equality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State fo Home Department what representations he has rec from the chairman of the Equal Opportu Commission on amending the Sex Discrmination A place a duty on local authorities (a) to eliminate unl discrimination between the sexes and (b) to pro equality of opportunity between the sexes.

Mr. John Patten: In 1986 the Equal Opportu Commission published a consultative docu "Legislating for Change?" which proposed that a du imposed on all bodies carrying out a servic undertaking of a public nature to work towards elimination of discrimination on grounds of se marriage and to promote equality of opportunity bet men and women generally. The commission's proposals for amending the Sex Discrimination Act are expected shortly.

Departmental Staff (Ethnic Groups)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State fo Home Department what positive action he has take increase the proportion of employees of his Depart who are drawn from ethnic minority groups; and if he make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: We are committed to equal opportuniti employment, and keen to attract ethnic minority rec into the Home Office. A number of measures have taken to encourage suitable applications for those gr recruited directly by the Department. Advertisem emphasise our commitment to equal opportunities have, where it is likely to be productive, been placed i ethnic minority press or in local papers in areas with ethnic minority populations. Links have been establi with some local communities. In addition, all membe departmental recruitment boards receive training desi to ensure that all candidates, of whatever ethnic group treated fairly.

About 10 per cent. of respondents to a recent surv new entrants to the Department stated that they were f ethnic minorities. But these groups are under represe in certain areas of work, and particular attention is b paid to possible ways of remedying this. For example prison service aptitude tests have been revised and designed to ensure that they are free from cultural bias departmental recruitment schemes are now subjec ethnic monitoring, and we shall be using the informa gathered to consider what further action may be nee

Citizen Registration Fee

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State fo Home Department what representation he has rece from the Association of London Authorities regarding citizen registration fee; whether he intends to reply; if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend received a l dated 4 November 1987, from the association's race po adviser, asking that the £60 fee for registration under British Nationality Act 1981 should be waived and seeking a meeting. His private secretary replied on 8 December explaining that there is no power to waive the fee, and in consequence a meeting to discuss the request was not considered useful.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the statement by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on his strategy for the coming year.

Mr. Hurd: I am today placing copies of the commissioner's strategy statement for 1988 in the Library. I am also sending a copy to all right hon. and hon. Members whose constituencies fall wholly or partly within the Metropolitan police district. I hope to meet London Members soon to discuss the statement.

I have discussed the commissioner's statement with him. The force goal for 1988 is to continue to improve the quality of service to the public by:

(a) The reduction of criminal opportunity through crime prevention, public contact, involvement and co-operation.

(b) (i) The enhanced detection of specific criminal offences (for example, robbery, burglary, drug misuse, racial attacks, sexual offences against women and vandalism) in accordance with locally or centrally identified priorities.

(ii) A concerted attack on organised crime and the elimination of resulting profits.

(c) The enhanced support, care and concern for victims of crime including the victims of domestic violence.

(d) Improved effectiveness both in the preservation of public tranquility through closer community-police relations and in the policing of public disorder through better tactical control, communications, equipment and training.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Wildlife Conservation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the financial and technical assistance given by Her Majesty's Government each year since 1979 to countries and organisations for the purpose of wildlife conservation.

Mr. Chris Patten: Aid statistics are not collated on a basis which would enable us to identify aid for wildlife conservation. The Overseas Development Administration is currently co-funding under the joint funding scheme with the World Wildlife Fund and other non-governmental organisations a number of projects which include wildlife conservation amongst their aims. It also supports other activities under the bilateral aid programme, such as a communal areas wildlife monitoring unit in Zimbabwe.

Sugar Producers (Diversification)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds have been allocated by his Department to sugar producing countries in each of the past five years to assist them to diversify into the production of other foodstuffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. M answer I gave the hon. Member for Bi Field) on 24 November at column 118.

WALES

Arts Council of Wales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretar Wales if he will list the income in real ter Council of Wales for each of the years from extra allocations of cash he will make to T Mold; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is a

Year	£ mi
1979-80	8
1980-81	7
1981-82	7
1982-83	8
1983-84	7
1984-85	8
1985-86	7
1986-87	8
1987-88	8

The Department does not directly pr Clwyd, Mold with any financial assistance

EMPLOYMENT

Nuclear Installations Inspector

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secreta Employment what is the current breakdo Installations Inspectorate staffing in the f areas: long-term safety reviews of Mag Sizewell B and Hinckley C, spent fuel currently operating Magnox reactors, curre advanced gas-cooled reactors, other nuclea radioactive waste and other areas.

Mr. Nicholls: Information currently avai that the approximate amount of time spent nuclear installations inspectors on different is as follows:

Long-term safety review of magnox reactors
Sizewell B and Hinckley Point C
Spent fuel reprocessing
Operational magnox reactors
Operational advanced gas-cooled reactors
Other nuclear installations
Radioactive waste
Other work

Nuclear Installations, Factory and Ag Inspectorates

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary Employment what are the current staffing Nuclear Installations Inspectorate, Factory and Agricultural Inspectorate; and what are levels for 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 January 1988 the inspectors in each inspectorate was as follo

	Number
Nuclear Installations Inspectorate	114
Factory Inspectorate	554
Agricultural Inspectorate	150

Following an increase in the provision for 1988-89, the Health and Safety Executive plans to increase during 1988-89 the number of nuclear installations inspectors to 120, the number of factory inspectors to about 585 and the number of agricultural inspectors to about 160. Final decisions on staffing levels for later years have not yet been taken.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the number of persons unemployed for less than six months, six mo year, over one year, over two years, over thre over five years in each year since 1979; and latest estimates.

Mr. Cope: Direct comparisons of unemp duration since 1979 are not possible because the method of compilation. The following is information. Table A shows the average unemployed registrants in the United Kingd year from 1979 to 1982, who had been unempl durations requested, except for those unem five years, for which figures were not separate Table B shows the average number of claiman been unemployed for all durations requested from 1983 to 1987, and table C shows the n October 1987, the latest date for which available.

Table A
Average number of unemployed registrants in the United Kingdom

	Unemployed less than 6 months	Unemployed 6 months to 1 year	Unemployed over 1 year	Unemployed over 2 years	Unemployed over 3 years
1979	810,099	237,121	359,651	n/a	n/a
1980	1,085,364	284,233	368,651	190,233	116,177
1981	1,369,155	619,856	595,708	234,964	137,660
1982	1,424,433	681,917	1,034,891	377,101	173,464

Table B
Average number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom

	Unemployed less than 6 months	Unemployed 6 months to 1 year	Unemployed over 1 year	Unemployed over 2 years	Unemployed over 3 years	Unemployed over 5 years
1983	1,348,688	639,082	1,110,898	521,559	324,513	n/a
1984	1,318,098	610,779	1,229,378	671,596	396,149	90,097
1985	1,341,881	607,263	1,332,260	793,514	494,469	149,180
1986	1,352,052	606,079	1,354,252	845,019	570,050	227,656
1987	1,206,243	549,276	1,260,030	796,948	562,964	272,087

Table C
Number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom—October 1987

Unemployed less than 6 months	Unemployed 6 months to 1 year	Unemployed over 1 year	Unemployed over 2 years	Unemployed over 3 years	Unemployed over 5 years
1,136,008	443,140	1,172,236	756,238	537,865	276,454

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wheelchair Users

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council what arrangements currently exist for members of the public who are wheelchair users who wish to lobby hon. Members or attend the business of the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The arrangements which exist within the Palace of Westminster for the assistance of wheelchair users are set out in the leaflet "Visits of Disabled Persons" obtainable from the Serjeant at Arms. I am arranging for a copy to be sent to the hon. Member. In the event of mass lobbies by disabled persons it is usual for special arrangements for the reception of wheelchair users to be made. These arrangements vary depending upon the size of the lobby.

Turtle Soup and Veal

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord Presi Council if he will take steps to exclude turtle so from restaurant menus within the Palace of W and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: Turtle soup is not avail House of Commons restaurants and cafeterias turtle soup is served. Veal will continue to be all veal supplied to the House is humanely ki

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-Gen he will make a statement on the Crown Service proposal to use civil servants wit qualifications to review charge and evidence in order to determine whether a case will be prosecuted after police investigation; and whether there will be any cases that will not go before a legally qualified person before determination.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service has for some time relied upon certain members of its staff who may have no legal qualifications to carry out an initial screening of a range of less serious cases referred to the CPS by the police, and it is intended that this practice should continue.

Those concerned have all received a period of relevant training and work under the supervision of a Crown prosecutor. The screening which they conduct is for the purpose of ensuring that there are no deficiencies in the evidence or other matters arising, including matters which may be relevant to questions of public interest, which might prevent the case proceedings to a first hearing before a magistrates' court. If their screening discloses no such obstacle, then that prosecution will proceed to its first hearing, where it will be presented before the court by a qualified lawyer. Should the defendant then plead guilty, that case will thus be disposed of. But should he not do so, so that the case is adjourned to a later date, then it will be referred to a Crown prosecutor who will conduct his or her own review.

If, on the other hand, on the initial screening it should appear that the case cannot or should not proceed, then again it will be referred to a Crown prosecutor for further consideration. In particular, no proceedings may be discontinued by a member of staff who is not a Crown prosecutor and at all times it is the Crown prosecutor who is responsible for the process of review.

The Crown Prosecution Service regards this system as a useful and efficient deployment of its staff which presents no risk whatsoever to the interests of justice; and considers that it does not represent any failure by the service to fulfil the responsibilities imposed on it by the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985.

Compensation Settlements

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Attorney-General if he will initiate legislation, in consultation with the Law Society, to prevent companies from making it a condition of a compensation settlement that the solicitors involved do not act for other claimants.

The Attorney-General: The Government do not at present consider that legislation would be appropriate. The Law Society is giving consideration to the matter as a question of professional practice, and the Government will await the outcome of its deliberations.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Departmental Responsibility (Scotland)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report those areas of his departmental responsibility which extend to Scotland.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The Education (Fees and Awards) Act 1983 extends to Scotland; the regulations made under it by the Secretary of State for E apply so far as universities are con well as to England and Wales.

My right hon. Friend also make eight Scottish universities on the ad Grants Committee.

My right hon. Friend has respons of research through the science b expenditure by the research council

City Technology Co

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary and Science what steps he will take t have equal chances of a place at a ci

Mrs. Rumbold: CTCs, as indep come under section 22 of the Sex Di will be required as a condition o balanced intake of boys and girls. T funding agreements which those run into, on an annual basis, with my rig opportunity provision is a firm obje

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary and Science if the Medical Research to fund research into HIV2; and statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Resear supporting studies of HIV-2 infectio supported through the Tropical Board, a joint board of the MR Development Administration. I unde laboratories in The Gambia are wor in close collaboration with the Gambi council is also aware of a proposal to spread of HIV-2 to the United King

Corporal Punishm

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of and Science whether he will seek p corporal punishment will be illega colleges; and if he will make a state

Mrs. Rumbold: The provisions (No. 2) Act 1986 covering corporal p may be applied under section 47(5) independent schools which are main a Minister of the Crown. My right h lay regulations before Parliament to colleges within the scope of this sect

Education Refor

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the S Education and Science what recent re received concerning the proposals Reform Bill to enable London bor Inner London education authority c

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Frien receive representations on this matte of organisations and from many me Copies of responses, other than tho have been placed in the Libraries of

School Meals

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many local education authorities charge more than 60p for school meals.

Mr. Dunn: In June 1987, which is the latest date for which figures are available, 58 of the 97 local education authorities in England charged more than 60p for school meals.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in respect of the assisted places scheme, he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since the inception of the scheme (a) the number of pupils for whom fees have been paid and (b) the mean and median amounts of these fees, per pupil, and for the latest available year (i) the lowest and highest fees paid and (ii) the number of pupils who have had fees paid in each band of £100.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: This information is either not available in the form requested or could only be produced at disproportionate cost. I will write to the hon. Member with available data.

Teachers

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information his Department has on the numbers of teachers recruited by local education authorities, in the latest period for which he has information, in the Greater London area, who obtained their qualifications (a) in the United Kingdom but not in England and Wales and (b) in overseas countries; and whether he has any plans for revising the arrangements for granting recognition of such qualifications.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of full-time qualified teachers appointed to maintained nursery, primary or secondary schools in Greater London, excluding those teachers from other public sector posts, during the year ending 31 March 1986 was as follows:

	Number
Trained in United Kingdom but not in England and Wales	99
Trained in overseas countries	76

My right hon. Friend has no plans to alter the principle that those who apply for qualified teacher status in England and Wales on the basis of a course completed elsewhere should be awarded that status only if their course is comparable with courses approved in England and Wales.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research his Department has conducted, commissioned or otherwise supported on the subject of the relationships between schools, local education authorities and teacher training establishments in so far as they affect trainee teachers on training practice and the subsequent recruitment of such trainees; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department has commissioned a number of research projects on various aspects of teaching practice within initial teacher training c have not investigated subsequent recrui Teaching practice experience is just on factors relevant to a qualified teacher's to seek a post.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secre Education and Science whether, i responsibilities for the training and supp is seeking to redress shortages in Lond make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department t Teaching as a Career Unit has a sub publicity programme aimed at boostin initial teacher training and entry t programme is already having some succe the 13 per cent. increase in recruitment training courses this academic year. programme is directed towards recruit and the south-east. As a special measur and TASC are planning to mount a caree aimed at attracting more people into teac in the shortage areas, in London and th are in close touch with both the associations and with individual auth about the specific recruitment probl London.

Minority Groups (Teaching Pr

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secre Education and Science what action hi taking to encourage members of ethnic m enter the teaching profession.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department is acti the development of a number of ne training courses specially designed students from the ethnic minorities. This Department's teacher recruitment public the remit of the Teaching as a Career U up in April 1987. The collection by authorities of statistics on the ethnic teachers, announced by my right hon. Fr a question from my hon. Friend the Me North (Mr. Greenway) on 28 October, at help us monitor progress.

Universities (Academic Free

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secreta Education and Science what steps the Go taking prior to the current Education Ref the statute book to ensure that indivi statutes give sufficient protection to aca

Mr. Jackson: We believe that the Ed Bill will ensure that individual universi protection to academic freedom in the fo

i. by specifying the grounds on whi to provide for dismissal; namely, good cause;
ii. by requiring the commissioners t appeals machinery for staff who a should ensure that all academi effective measure of protecti victimisation by their colleagues o views;
iii. by requiring the commissioners t modifications to, amongst othe representing the staff concerned, affording such organisations an opportunity to make representations on those modifications, and to take those representations into account;

iv. by providing for all instruments made by the commissioners to be subject to the approval of Her Majesty in Council who may remit them to the commissioners for reconsideration. It will be for the Privy Council, in considering whether to recommend to Her Majesty that amendments to university statutes put forward by the commissioner should be confirmed, to satisfy itself that the Government's objective of protecting academic freedom has been properly met.

In addition, the Bill requires the commissioners, in exercising their functions, to have regard to the need to apply the principles of justice and fairness. Further, the Bill will strengthen the protection academic staff have in another important respect: it will remove the exclusive jurisdiction of the visitor in cases of the dismissal of academic staff, and so will enable staff to bring actions in the courts for wrongful dismissal, which they cannot now do. This right of access to the courts will be in addition to the access that academic staff like other employees already have to industrial tribunals over claims for unfair dismissal.

PRIME MINISTER

Government Data Network

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if she is satisfied with the co-ordination between the Home Office, the Department of Health and Social Security, the Treasury, the Inland Revenue, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and the development of the Government data network;

(2) what plans Her Majesty's Government has for handling tax, national insurance, passports, criminal records, value added tax returns, and welfare benefits on a computer network; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I am satisfied with the co-ordination between Departments, who on 11 January finalised memoranda of agreement with the consortia who will be invited to tender for the provision of the Government data network. The memoranda are based on plans for some of the data used for tax, national insurance and welfare benefits, but not currently for passports or criminal records, to be carried on the network. There are no plans to set up a central computing capability to link any of these applications; the proposed Government data network is intended to support each Department in meeting its own business needs for data transmission.

Honesty in Government

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what action she is taking to maintain and promote standards of honesty in Government; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: There are rules governing the general principles of conduct by Ministers and civil servants.

Public Record Office Documents

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister for what reasons the sealed envelope and papers headed "Leader of the Opposition," the existence of which in the Public Record Office became known on 1 January have been subjected to a 75-year rule; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A file from my office dating from 1957, listed in the Public Record Office under the heading "Leader of the Opposition", has been closed for 75 years under section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958. The file was closed in accordance with the criteria set out in paragraphs 26-27 of the White Paper "Modern Public Records", Cmnd 8531, March 1982.

Rating Reform

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what she estimates would be the uniform business rates payable on the following Government buildings compared with the commercial rates in 1987-88 (a) the Department of the Environment, (b) the Treasury, (c) No. 10 Downing street, (d) the Foreign Office, (e) the Department of Trade and Industry, (f) the Scottish Office, (g) the Welsh Office, (h) the Ministry of Defence and (i) the Ministry of Agriculture.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 11 January at column 1. Information on the contributions in lieu of rates made by the Treasury, and the effects of the introduction of the uniform business rate on those contributions, is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

"Inside Intelligence"

